[7] Ver. 16. Ὁ πιστεύσας καὶ βαπτισθείς, σωθήσεται· ὁ δὲ ἀπιστήσας, κατακριθήσεται, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.] He shall be saved, i. e. he shall by virtue of that faith and baptism be put into a state of salvation; so that, if he continue in that faith, and do not wilfully recede from his baptismal covenant, he shall actually be saved: of which import of the phrases, "salvation" and being "saved," see note on Eph. ii. 8. Note also, that they who hence conclude that infants are not capable of baptism, because they cannot believe, must also hence conclude they cannot be saved; faith being here more expressly required to salvation than to baptism. Note, thirdly, That in the second clause baptism is omitted, because it is not simply the want of baptism, but the contemptuous neglect of it, which makes men guilty of damnation; otherwise infants might be damned for the mistakes or the profaneness of their parents.

[8] Ver. 17. Σημεῖα δὲ τοῖς πιστεύσασι ταῦτα παρακολουθήσει, And these signs shall follow them that believe, &c.] Of the casting out devils, the healing diseases, the speaking with new tongues, see the general preface to the Epistles, §. 17—19. Of the drinking of deadly poisons, I find but four instances recorded in history; that of Barsabas,* who, saith Papias, drank of it without hurt; that of the Cecilian soldier, mentioned by Ado in his Martyrology; that of Sabinus, bishop of Canoso, mentioned by Gregory of Tours: and that of Joshua Ben Levi, who, having drunk a deadly poison, was, saith the Jewish Talmud, "cured by pronouncing the name of Jesus." Of taking up serpents without hurt, though venomous, we find in scripture only the instance of St. Paul, Acts xxviii. 5, and in church history we find but few of any credit, though the words of Tertullian† seem to intimate, that "the faith of Christians not only preserved themselves, but helped even heathens." And miracles of this nature being more liable to exceptions than those which were performed upon unbelievers, it being easy to imagine they might have some antidotes against the venom of those beasts, or the pernicious operations of those draughts, it seemed good to Providence to be more sparing in affording them.

By way of appendix to this chapter, it may be noted, that St. Jerome hath long since told us, that "this chapter was rarely to be found in this gospel, and that scarce any of the Greek copies had it:" but notwithstanding these words of Jerome, it is evident, that this chapter was owned in the

---

* Tempora duo cùm inter se opposita sunt, atque ita cohærentia, ut alterius finis cum alterius initio misceatur, non refert utrùm per extremitatem prioris, an per initium sequentis, locus ipse confinis demonstretur, lib. vii. cap. 21.

† Si angelus Petrum non nominâsset, venire inter discipulos non auderes: vocatur ergò ex nomine ne desperet ex negatione. Hom. 21 in Evang. Ἐπείδη ἠρνήσατο ὁ Πέτρος, Theoph. in locum. Hieron. et Beda in Gloss. Ord.

* Euseb. Eccl. Hist. lib. iii. cap. 39, p. 112.

† Nobis fides præsidium, si non et ipsâ percutitur diffidentiâ signandi statim et adjurandi et urgendi bestiæ calcem, hôc denique modo etiam ethnicis sæpè subvenimus, donati à Deo eâ potestate quam apostolus dedicavit quum morsum viperæ sprevit. Scorp. cap. 1.

19 ¶ So then after the Lord had spoken (thus) unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

20 And they went forth (after the Holy Ghost had come upon them), and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen (i. e. So it was).

---

times of Irenæus,* who cites the nineteenth verse of it, and says, that St. Mark, "in the end of his gospel, tells us that Christ ascended into heaven," &c. The Apostolical Constitutions† cite these words, ver. 16, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." They also fully cite the seventeenth and eighteenth verses.‡ This chapter is also to be found in all the versions, and, as Beza testifies, in all the old MSS. Nor doth Theophylact, in his notes upon it, take notice of any Greek copies where it had been wanting.

And as for the seeming opposition betwixt what is recorded in this chapter, and in the other evangelists, which St. Jerome§ tells us, "was the occasion why this chapter was by some rejected," I shall first enumerate them, and then endeavour to return a sufficient answer to them.

Obj. 1. St. Matthew and St. Mark make mention only of one angel appearing to and speaking with the women which came to the sepulchre; whereas St. Luke and St. John mention two angels.

Ans. I cannot here approve the solution of Vossius, that one angel only is mentioned by St. Matthew and St. Mark, because one only spake to the women; seeing St. Luke saith in the plural, εἶπον πρὸς αὐτὰς, "The angels said unto them," xxiv. 15, St. John, λέγουσι αὐτῇ ἐκεῖνοι, "They said to Mary Magdalene," xx. 13, besides, the place of their appearance and the words they speak differ from the place and words of the first angel.

I answer, therefore, that one only is mentioned by St. Matthew and St. Mark, because the women standing without the inward sepulchre, or being only on the floor or pavement of it, saw but one angel, who said unto them, "He is not here, he is risen; come, see the place where the Lord lay;" and then "go tell his disciples and Peter of it" (Matt. xxviii. 6, Mark xvi. 6); but when, in obedience to the words of this angel, they proceed to look into the cave, or inward sepulchre, where the Lord lay, they see two other angels, one sitting at Christ's head, another at his feet, where his body was laid (John xx. 12, Luke xxiv. 5), and saying words the other did not, but giving them no intimation that they should tell these things to Christ's disciples; and this seems to be a plain account of this matter, from the very words of the evangelists.

Obj. 2. St. John and St. Matthew say, the women stood "without the sepulchre," when they saw the angel or angels; St. Mark and St. Luke, that they had this vision when they were come "within the sepulchre."

Ans. That the truth of the matter of this objection may be justly questioned. For, first, as St. John saith of Mary Magdalene, she stood πρὸς τὸ μνημεῖον, "at the sepulchre," which may signify either within or without, ver. 11, so ver. 1, he saith, she came εἰς τὸ μνημεῖον, "into the sepulchre;" and that she was upon the pavement, or in the outward sepulchre, when she is said to stand at the sepulchre, is evident from this, that only by stooping down she looked down into the cave, or inward sepulchre, where the angels stood at the place where his body had been laid (ver. 11, 12). St. Matthew saith nothing directly of the place where the women were when they saw the angel; but because he saith, that the angel sat upon the stone which he had rolled from the sepulchre, hence they conclude that the angel sat without the sepulchre; but the stone being rolled to the mouth of the cave, or inward sepulchre, where Christ's body lay (Matt. xxvii. 60), the angel might sit upon it thus rolled away, and yet sit in a part of the outward sepulchre, or pavement, as St. Mark saith he did, ver. 5, when he bid the women come, and see where the Lord lay. In a word, they were without the cave, or sepulchre, according to St. Matthew; but within the pavement, outward fence, sept, or wall of the outward sepulchre, when they saw the single angel, as St. Mark saith; being invited, Mary Magdalene stoops down into the cave, or inward sepulchre, of which St. Luke and St. John speak, and sees two angels present there, in a quiescent posture represented in scripture sometimes by sitting, sometimes by standing.

Obj. 3. St. Mark saith, ver. 8, the women "said nothing to any man;" the other three evangelists that they told these things to the apostles, or disciples.

Ans. And so saith St. Mark expressly, that "they went and told these things, τοῖς μετ' αὐτοῦ, to those who belonged to Christ," and were usually with him (ver. 10, 11). And he saith only (ver. 8), that during their flight from the sepulchre, and amazement, before Christ's appearance to Mary (ver. 9), they said nothing to any whom they met about the sepulchre.

Obj. 4. St. Matthew, Mark, and Luke say, that the women came first to the sepulchre; saw the angel or angels; yea, and Christ too, say Matthew and Mark, before they came to the apostles; St. John saith, Christ was seen of Mary, after St. John and Peter had been at the sepulchre.

Ans. I answer here again, the matter of fact seems not exactly related in this objection; for John saith expressly, as the other evangelists did, that Mary Magdalene came first to the sepulchre, and saw the stone rolled away (ver. 1), and that she ran and told Peter and John of it (ver. 2); he therefore doth not, or could not say, that Peter and John came before Mary to the sepulchre. Moreover, it is plain from all the other evangelists, and especially from St. Luke, that Peter and John went to the sepulchre after she had told these things to the apostles; for having said this, ver. 10, he adds, ver. 12, that "Peter rising up, ran to the sepulchre:" and ver. 22, 23, he introduces two disciples speaking thus to Christ, "Some women of our own being early at the sepulchre, made us astonished; for they came, saying they had seen a vision of angels, who told them that he was alive." Vain here seems the imagination of some, who say, St. John speaks here of Peter and John first, because their testimony was to be preferred before the testimony of women; for they neither saw Christ, nor had a vision, telling them that he was risen, as the women had and did, but only saw his body was not there, which the Jews denied not. The words therefore of St. John, ver. 11, Μαρία δὲ εἱστήκει, may be rendered thus, "Mary had stood at the sepulchre, and, stooping down, had seen;" and then there is no word of any difference in the order of this narration among the evangelists, though nothing is more slight than that; or else it may be said, that St. John thus postpones the story of Mary Magdalene, because he having a particular thing to say of her (ver. 15), which all the other evangelists had omitted, he would put her whole story together.

Obj. 5. St. Matthew saith, the women "held Christ's feet," (ver. 9), but St. John, that Christ said to Mary Magdalene, "Touch me not" (ver. 17).

Ans. True it is that St. John saith, Christ spake thus to her: but he saith not that Christ said this before she had touched him; and therefore he saith nothing in opposition to St. Matthew. Besides, the meaning of those words, "Touch me not," is only this, Be not so solicitous to hold me, as if I was immediately to go hence, and thou shouldest see me no more; thou mayest have time sufficient for that, for "I do not yet ascend" (see the note on John xx. 17).

Obj. 6. Here it is said, ver. 12, 13, that the two disciples returning from Emmaus "told these things (concerning our Lord's resurrection) to the residue, neither believed they them:" but Luke xxiv. 34, it is said, that at

---

* In fine autem evangelii ait Marcus, Et quidem Dominus Jesus postquam loquutus est eis, receptus est in cœlos, et sedet ad dexteram Dei. Lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 257.

† Lib. vi. cap. 15. ‡ Lib. viii. cap. 1.

§ Hujus quæstionis duplex solutio est, aut enim non recipimus Marci testimonium, quod in raris fertur evangeliis, omnibus Græciæ libris penè hoc capitulum in fine non habentibus, præsertim cum diversa atque contraria evangelistis cæteris narrare videatur. Ep. ad Hedib. Qu. 3. Greg. Nyssen. Orat. 2 in Resur. Euthymius.

their return they heard them, saying, "The Lord is risen again, and hath appeared to Simon."

Ans. They said this indeed, but none with a firm faith, excluding doubting; for after this Jesus himself appearing to them, "doubtful thoughts arose within them" (Luke xxiv. 38), and when our Lord hath shown them his hands and his feet, "they believed not yet for joy, and wondered," ver. 41 (see Dr. Lightfoot on Luke xxiv. 34).

APPENDIX

TO CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the day on which our Lord did eat the passover with his disciples.

For resolution of this question, let it be noted:

First, That the paschal lamb was to be killed in the evening of the fourteenth day of the month Nisan; for so we read, Exod. xii. 6, "And the whole congregation shall kill it in the evening," or "between the two evenings," saith the Hebrew: so also Lev. xxiii. 5, "In the fourteenth day of the first month at even (Hebr. between the two evenings) shall be the Lord's passover." Now hence we learn, that though the day of the Jews began and ended at the evening, yet was it the latter even, on the fourteenth day, in which the passover was to be killed; because the Jews had not two evenings in the morning, but only in the close of the day, the latter evening beginning at the setting of the sun: and (2.) because the fifteenth day, or "first day of unleavened bread," began immediately after the eating of the paschal lamb; and therefore, ver. 7, is called the day "when they did sacrifice the passover," and the seven days of it were accounted from that day to the twenty-first day of the same month (Exod. xii. 17, 18); whereas had they been reckoned from the beginning of the fourteenth day, there would have been not seven only, but eight days of unleavened bread. Accordingly Josephus* doth inform us, that they did kill the paschal lambs ἀπὸ ἐννάτης ὥρας μέχρι ἑνδεκάτης, "from the ninth hour to the eleventh." Note,

Secondly, That the paschal lamb was to be killed and offered at a set time, and the whole congregation was never to transfer it to another season: for it is expressly said, Exod. xii. 14, "This day (of the passover) shall be to you for a memorial, and ye shall keep it (i. e. this same day) as a feast by an ordinance for ever;" and, xiii. 10, "Thou shalt keep this ordinance (of the passover, and of the feast of unleavened bread) לְמוֹעֲדָהּ in its set time from year to year:" and Lev. xxiii. 5, "On the fourteenth day at even shall be the Lord's passover:" whence it is evident, there could be no translation of either of these feasts to another day, time, or season, without plain violation of the law of Moses.

Moreover, The reason of the translation assigned by those who hold the Jews did thus translate it when our Saviour suffered, is this, viz. That this was done, that the first day of unleavened bread, being as a sabbath, might fall upon a sabbath day, lest two sabbaths should succeed each other: whereas it is evident, that, upon this translation, two sabbaths must succeed each other; for the seventh day of unleavened bread, being a sabbath as much as the first, Exod. xii. 16, must then fall upon the Friday following, and so two sabbaths must succeed each the other.

Thirdly, That Christ did eat the last passover with his disciples at the day and time accustomed, and did not anticipate the day, seems evident from the concurrent testimony of three evangelists, and from the reason of the thing. For,

First, St. Matthew saith, xxvi. 17, that the first day of unleavened bread Christ's disciples did prepare, and at the even of that day Christ with them did eat the passover; St. Mark, xiv. 12, that the first day of unleavened bread the Jews killed the passover; St. Luke, that then came, or was coming, the day of unleavened bread, "in which the passover ought to be killed," Luke xxii. 7. He therefore did eat the passover, ὅτε ἔθυον, "when the Jews killed it;" and in the day, ἐν ᾗ ἔδει θύεσθαι, "in which it ought to be eaten;" and on the first day of unleavened bread, which was contemporary with the passover, according to those words of St. Mark, "After two days was the passover, and the feast of unleavened bread" (Mark xiv. 1). Whereas both could not have been on the same day, had not the feast of unleavened bread begun on the fourteenth of Nisan: and therefore Maimonides and others, on Exod. xii. 15, Deut. xvi. 4, say, that the fourteenth of Nisan is called "the first day of unleavened bread;" it being said, Exod. xii. 15, at even, "the first day," ye shall put leaven out of your houses, and yet they did this on the fourteenth after mid-day: and, Deut. xvi. 4, "There shall no leavened bread be seen with thee seven days; neither shall any of the flesh (of the paschal lamb), which thou sacrificedst the first day at even, remain till the morning." Whence it appears, that though the fifteenth of Nisan was "the first day of unleavened bread," as to the holy convocation, yet was the fourteenth the first day as to the separation of leaven from their houses: and therefore, in relation to this computation, Josephus saith,† ἑορτὴν ἄγομεν ἐφ' ἡμέρας ὀκτὼ τὴν τῶν ἀζύμων λεγομένην, "We celebrate the feast of unleavened bread eight days." And again that† ἐνστάσης τῆς τῶν ἀζύμων ἑορτῆς θύσαντες τὴν λεγομένην πάσχα, "when the feast of unleavened bread was come, they, sacrificing the passover in the days of king Josias, offered other sacrifices, ἐφ' ἡμέρας ἑπτὰ, for seven days following." He therefore who did eat it "on the first day of unleavened bread," did eat it on the fourteenth day of Nisan, and on the day when the Jews did so. Vain therefore is the observation, that Christ is said not θύειν, "to kill or sacrifice," but only ποιεῖν and φάγειν, to celebrate and eat the passover, seeing he did it at the time ὅτε ἔθυον, "when the Jews killed the passover," and sent his disciples to prepare, i. e. to kill and dress it for him, as usually (saith Dr. Lightfoot) servants did for their masters, that he might eat of it. And vainer still is the argument from the word ποιῶ "with thee do I eat;" not ποιήσω, "I will eat" the passover, Matt. xxvi. 18, for seeing the disciples went to prepare it, that he might eat of it, Mark xiv. 12. 14, seeing they prepared it at the time when the Jews did and "ought to kill the passover," and seeing he comes "in the evening" of that day to eat it, according to the commandment, with the twelve, Mark xiv. 17, it is evident these words are well rendered, "I will keep" the passover at thy house when my disciples have prepared it.

Arg. 2. Secondly, Christ saith to his disciples, "Ye know that after two days is the passover," Matt. xxvi. 2; and Mark xiv. 1, "The passover and the feast of unleavened bread was after two days;" or, as St. Luke hath it, "The feast of unleavened bread, called the passover," xxii. 1, and that Christ did not eat it till the first day of unleavened bread, hath been proved already, therefore he did not eat it till after those two days, when the disciples and the Jews knew the passover was by them to be eaten.

Arg. 3. Thirdly, The day following, i. e. the day on which Christ suffered, was a feast day, for Barabbas was released "at the feast," Matt. xxvii. 15, Mark xv. 6, Luke xxiii. 17. Now the feast of unleavened bread, in which a holy convocation was held, was the day after the passover, as we read, Lev. xxiii. 4—6, "In the fifteenth day of the first month is the Lord's passover; and on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread; in the first day ye shall have a holy convocation."

Fourthly, If Christ had celebrated the passover by an anticipation on the thirteenth of Nisan, he had violated the law which expressly requires the celebration of it on the fourteenth day, and upon that account might have been justly liable to the censure of the Jews; nor would his disciples have come to him before the time appointed by the law, and by the rulers of the Jews, with that question, "Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?" (Matt. xxvi. 17, Mark xiv. 12) nor would they, without scruple, have eaten with him against the letter of the law, or the custom of their nation: and that they did not so is plain, because they put this question to him only "on the first day of unleavened bread," in which the passover ought to be eaten, saith St. Luke.

* De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 45.

* Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 5, p. 65, D.

† Ibid. lib. iii. cap. 14, p. 324, B.

Fifthly, It is confessed on all hands, that our Lord suffered on Friday; and also, that at the same time that he did eat the passover, he instituted the holy sacrament of the Lord's supper; and yet, that he did this the same night that he was betrayed, St. Paul informs us, 1 Cor. xi. 23. Now all the evangelists inform us, that in the morning following he was led bound to Pilate, at the "sixth hour" was crucified, at the "ninth hour" expired; therefore he must be crucified the day after he instituted the sacrament, and so the day after he celebrated the passover: the day of his crucifixion being therefore Friday, he must have celebrated the passover on Thursday, or on the fourteenth of Nisan, according to the law.

Lastly, The paschal lamb could not be slain out in the place which God had chosen to put his name there (Deut. xvi. 6), that is the temple. Now this the priests would never have done for any contrary to the law, which appointed the slaying of it on the "fourteenth day betwixt the two evenings" (ibid.). Now this, if it were not done by the priests, as Josephus intimates, but, as Philo saith,* "on a set day of every year, every one was then a priest for himself;" yet would not the apostles have either done it or have asked to do it on any other day than that which by the law and by the practice of the nation was appointed for that work. And whereas, to take off the force of this argument some learned persons have invented a distinction betwixt πάσχα θυτικὸν, i. e. "a passover in which a lamb was sacrificed" according to the law, and μνημονευτικὸν, or "a commemoration of it without a sacrifice," and say our Saviour only did the latter, this is a novel and absurd imagination: it is new; for though some of the Greek church from the fifth century have held that Christ anticipated the day, I find not one of them who says he did not eat the paschal lamb. It is also without precedent among the ancient Jews, who in the times of their captivity and dispersion never celebrated any such commemorative passover, nor could do it without a sin like that of Jeroboam, by devising a celebration of it on their own heads against the tenor of the law; but, as Mr. Ainsworth notes, were then contented to keep the feast of unleavened bread, which being not confined to one place might be observed in their captivity and their dispersions. Moreover, admit that such an uncommanded memorial of the passover had been kept by them, when, their temple being burnt, they could not offer sacrifice, and in their dispersions at such distance from it they could not repair to it; yet is there no one instance nor any semblance of a reason, that this was ever done by any present at Jerusalem, where Christ was at that very time, in which, saith St. Luke, "they ought to sacrifice the passover."

Obj. 1. But on the contrary it is objected, (1.) that it is plainly said that our Lord ate that supper in which he said, "One of you shall betray me," and in which he gave the sop to Judas πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα, John xiii. 1, "before the paschal feast;" and yet that supper seems to be the same with that mentioned in the other evangelists. To this I answer,

Ans. First, That it neither was the same, nor indeed could be the same, and for the very reason assigned in the objection, because it was held "before the feast of the passover;" whereas it is already proved, our Saviour kept the paschal feast on the first day of unleavened bread, when the Jews did and ought to kill the passover, and when the feast of unleavened bread, called the passover, was come, Luke xxii. 1. 7. (2.) Because, when Christ said at this supper to Judas going out from it, "What thou doest, do quickly," some of the disciples thought that our Lord had bid him "prepare those things which they had need of against the feast;" viz. the paschal feast: whereas Christ keeping the feast but one night, they could not have so conceived of his words, had they then celebrated the paschal supper; nor was Judas ever employed by Christ in making preparation for the paschal supper, but Peter and John, Luke xxii. 8. (3.) The devil entered into Judas after our Lord had given the sop to him at this supper (John xiii. 2. 7), and yet this is evident from St. Luke, xxii. 1. 3, that Satan entered into Judas when the passover was only near, but not yet done (ver. 8). And (4.) had the supper mentioned here by St. John been the paschal supper, Judas must have made his agreement to betray Christ after that supper; whereas it is plain from all the other evangelists, that he did that before the paschal supper (see Matt. xxvi. 14, Mark xiv. 10, Luke xxii. 4).

Ans. 2. And (2.) there is a great difference betwixt the circumstance relating to him that should betray him here and at the paschal supper; for here Christ privately tells John who it was that should betray him (John xiii. 25, 26), but at the paschal supper he makes him known to them all (Matt. xxvi. 25, Luke xxii. 21). Here he makes him known to St. John, by giving him a sop which he himself had dipped in the dish (John xiii. 26), but in the paschal supper he makes him known by this, that he had his hand with him in the dish (Matt. xxvi. 24, Mark xiv. 20).

Obj. 2. Secondly, It is objected, that the Jews the day our Saviour suffered would not enter into the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled, and so unfit to eat the passover, John xviii. 28, whereas Christ ate of it the night before he suffered.

Ans. To this I answer, that by the passover mentioned John xviii. 28, we are to understand, not the paschal lamb, but the chagigah, or peace-offering, the sheep and oxen offered all the seven days of the feast, and which are expressly called the passover, as the whole feast of unleavened bread was, Luke xxi. 1. So Deut. xvi. 2, "Thou shalt sacrifice the passover to the Lord, of the flock and of the herd;" where the note of the Jewish doctors is, "The flocks signify the lambs and kids of the passover: the herd, the offerings for the chagigah." Now the lamb, say they, was eaten on the fourteenth day, but the chagigah on the fifteenth. So 2 Chron. xxxvii. 7—9, where it is twice said, that "the king and the princes gave to the people and the priests, oxen as well as sheep, lepesachim, εἰς τὸ φασέκ, for the passover." And the apocryphal Esdras saith, i. 8, "Helkias, Zacharias, and Suelus, governors of the temple, gave to the priests εἰς πάσχα, for the passover, two thousand and four hundred sheep, and three hundred calves." So here the rulers of the Jews would not go into the judgment-hall, that they might not be defiled, but be fit to eat the passover; i. e. those paschal-offerings of the herd, which were holy things, of which none might eat in their defilement. Mr. Whiston takes the passover here in the strict sense, but then he thinks that it was on the same night that the rulers would not go into the judgment-hall lest they should be defiled, and that they afterward did eat the paschal lamb betwixt two and four in the morning; which they might do: for though the paschal lamb was to be killed "betwixt the two evenings" (Exod. xii. 8), and to be killed "at night," so that "none of it was to be left till the morning;" yet I find not any precise time of night limited, beyond which they might not delay the eating of it; but yet it is certain that in this instance it could not be so, for Pilate, in compliance with their scrupulosity, goes out of the judgment-hall to them three times successively, John xviii. 29. 31, xix. 4, then he brings out Christ to them, and saith, "Behold your king;" and then it was Friday at the sixth hour, or at noon; so that they who stayed without the hall that they might eat the passover, stayed there till Friday at noon, Pilate still going out to them, because they durst not go in to him.

Obj. 3. Thirdly, It is objected, that the day on which Christ was crucified is styled παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα, "the preparation of the passover," therefore the passover could not be eaten (John xix. 14); for as the παρασκευὴ of the sabbath is said to be προσάββατον, "the day before the sabbath" (Mark xv. 42, Luke xxiii. 54), so the paraseeve of the passover must be the day before the passover.

Ans. 1. But (1.) according to this exposition of the words, the Jews must have eaten their passover on the sabbath-day, our Lord being crucified on the Friday; so that if that day was the day before the passover, Saturday must be the paschal day, and so they must have eaten it at least two days after our Saviour did.

* Πάσχα ἐν ᾗ θύουσι πανδημεὶ αὐτῶν ἕκαστος, τοὺς ἱερεῖς αὐτῶν οὐκ ἀναμένοντες, ἱερωσύνην τοῦ νόμου χαριζομένου τῷ ἔθνει παντὶ μίαν ἡμέραν. De Decim. p. 591.

Secondly, To answer therefore positively to this objection; as παρασκευὴ, absolutely put, or with relation to the sabbath, is always Friday, so here παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα is only the paschal Friday, or the Friday in the paschal festival, as Dominica paschæ, or Pentecostes, is the day of those festivals.

THE

GOSPEL OF ST. LUKE,

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

§. 1. All that I have to offer touching this gospel, from church history, hath been delivered in the preface to the gospel of St. Mark; where it hath been observed,

First, That this gospel was received by the whole church of Christ as genuine,* and an authentic record, fit to be owned as a rule of faith, and that the Spirit of God assisted and stirred up St. Luke to indite it.

Secondly, That this gospel was praised by St. Paul, and was approved by the apostle St. John: the first consideration is a ground sufficient to believe this gospel to be a true and authentic record of all things contained in it; but I confess I am not so well satisfied of the truth and certainty of this second proposition, as to lay the foundation of the divine authority of this evangelist upon it: I therefore shall endeavour to establish the authority of St. Mark and of this evangelist upon a better, and, in my apprehension, a more sure foundation.

§. 2. First, therefore, it is certain, that our Lord had not only twelve apostles, but seventy or seventy-two of his disciples to attend upon him: for, after he had sent forth the twelve to preach the kingdom of God (Luke ix. 1, 2), he sends out seventy others to go in pairs before him, and to preach in every city to which he was about to come, saying, The kingdom of God is come near to you (Luke x. 1. 9).

Secondly, note, That they were both sent forth to preach the kingdom of God, and therefore sent on the same errand; both sent to preach immediately from the same Lord, to preach in his name, with the same power to heal diseases, and to cast out devils (Luke ix. 1. 17, x. 1. 10): that as he said to the apostles, "I send you forth as sheep among wolves," Matt. x. 16, so also saith he to the seventy, Luke x. 3; as he said to the apostles, "He that receiveth you, receiveth me," Matt. x. 40, so saith he to the seventy, "He that heareth you, heareth me," Luke x. 16. As therefore I have proved, that these things were said to the apostles, not so much with relation to their first mission whilst Christ was with them upon earth, as with relation to their second mission, which was to begin after our Lord's ascension, and the falling of the Holy Ghost upon them (see note on Matt. x. 8); so may we rationally conceive, that the like words spoken to the seventy relate to the farther commission to be given to them; and therefore, when they were returned to Christ after their first mission, as he speaks to them thus, I beheld Satan falling as lightning from heaven before you, as he was to do after our Saviour's death, John xii. 31, so doth he add, Luke x. 18, 19, "Behold, I give you power to tread upon scorpions and serpents, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you:" which words seems plainly to give a new commission to the seventy, relating not, as their former, to their preaching before him to the cities of Israel only, but to their preaching among other nations; as we may gather, by comparing these words with the commission given by Christ to his apostles, sent into the world to preach the gospel to all nations (Mark xvi. 15—18). As then the apostles were to execute this second mission by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and upon that account are bid to stay at Jerusalem till they received this power from on high by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them, Luke xxiv. 49, 50, Acts i. 4. 8, so may we reasonably believe, the seventy were to be endued with the same power for the execution of their mission. Note,

Thirdly, That both St. Mark and St. Luke were of the number of the seventy disciples, as we learn from the testimonies of Origen* and Epiphanius: for when Origen† had said, that the disciples of Christ, John and Matthew, Mark and Luke, γεγραφήκασιν τὰ εὐαγγέλια, "writ the gospels," he proves this, because Christ first sent his apostles, and after them the seventy-two, εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, "to evangelize;" and that therefore Mark and Luke preached the gospel with Paul the apostle, St. Luke being mentioned as an attendant on St. Paul (see note on Acts xvi. 10), and St. Mark as one of the circumcision, who was συνεργὸς αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, "his fellow-worker unto the kingdom of God" (Col. iv. 10, 11). Epiphanius‡ having told us, that Mark εἷς ἐτύγχανεν ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο, was one of the seventy-two, adds, that the work of writing was committed to Luke, ὅντι καὶ αὐτῷ ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο,§ he also being one of the seventy-two." But against this it is objected, Obj. 1. That St. Luke confesses that he was not from the beginning an eye-witness and minister of the word (Luke i. 1, 2), and therefore is thought to have his gospel from the information of St. Paul, and other of the apostles; so Jerome and others, ancient and modern, have conjectured from these words.

Ans. The words of the evangelist are so far from giving any ground to this assertion, that they plead fairly for St. Luke's personal knowledge of all the things written in his gospel, even from first to last: for, saith he,

Ver. 1. "Forasmuch as others have undertaken to set forth in order a narrative of those things which are most surely believed among us (Christians),

Ver. 2. "Even as they who, from the beginning, were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, have delivered them to us (Christians);

Ver. 3. "It seemed good to me, who have had a perfect knowledge of all things (performed among us in Judea), from the very first (rise of them, in the vision made to Zacharias concerning the birth of his son, John the Baptist), to write to thee in order (of them)." Now here I say,

First, That these words do not affirm, that any of those men who set forth these narratives did it from the instruction they received from these eye-witnesses, or ministers of the word, but only that they pretended to do it agreeably to what these eye-witnesses said; much less do they give us the least hint that St. Luke received his instructions from them.

Secondly, They, saith he, declare their narrative agreeably

---

* Dico itaque apud illas, nec solas jam apostolicas, sed apud universas quæ illis de societate sacramenti confœderantur, id evangelium Lucæ ab initio editionis suæ stare. Tertull. contr. Marc. lib. iv. cap. 5.

Ἀναγκάζει τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα, καὶ ἐπινόητι τὸν ἅγιον Λοῦκαν. Epiph. Hær. 51, p. 428.

* Μάρκος οὖν καὶ Λουκᾶς ἐκ τῶν οβ΄ ὄντες, Παύλῳ τῷ ἀποστόλῳ εὐαγγελίζοντο. Dial. de Rectâ Fide, p. 8.

† Ibid. p. 7. ‡ Hær. 51, §. 6, p. 428. § P. 433.

to what is delivered by those who were eye-witnesses from the beginning, and the ministers of the word. It therefore seemeth good to me, who have had a certain knowledge of the same things, ἄνωθεν, from the first rise of them (as these eye-witnesses had), to write to thee in order of them; and then he begins his narrative from a higher rise than either St. Matthew or St. Mark hath done; not giving the least hint that he received his knowledge of these things from any other. It is true, that Irenæus* saith, that Luke, ἐν βιβλίῳ κατέθετο, writ in a book the gospel which St. Paul preached; but he saith not, he did this in his gospel, and not in the Acts of the Apostles: his gospel also contains in substance the same great things which St. Paul preached for the conversion of the Jews and gentiles; as also doth the gospel of St. Matthew: but hence it doth not follow, that the one rather than the other is to be ascribed to St. Paul. Yea, it is certain, that St. Luke could not receive his gospel from St. Paul, as an eye-witness of it; because we know St. Paul was no eye-witness of it, but a convert to Christianity, after all that Luke had written was accomplished.

Obj. 2. We are told, that Luke was converted by St. Paul at Thebes.

Ans. But this we have only from Nicephorus; and it is the less credible, not only because it comes to us so late, but because it appears not from any credible author that St. Paul was ever there. It is more probable, from the silence of St. Luke and St. Paul, who never calleth him his son, that he was a Christian, or a believer, long before; and having, as Theophylact observes, Ἑβραϊκὴν παιδείαν, "His instruction in the Jewish religion" at Jerusalem, he might be so from the beginning of Christ's preaching. Note,

Fourthly, That the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost came down upon all that were then assembled with the apostles; for being ἅπαντες, all together with one accord, ver. 1, they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, ver. 4, even all the one hundred and twenty, mentioned Acts i. 15, as it is proved in the note on Acts ii. 1. And again, the apostles being dismissed by the high-priest and his council, they go to their own company, that is, to the one hundred and twenty, Acts iv. 24 (see the note there): and when they had prayed for ability to preach the word with boldness, and that God would confirm it by signs and wonders done in the name of Jesus, they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake the word with boldness, ver. 29—31. Note, Fifthly, That it is highly reasonable to conceive, the seventy were part of the one hundred and twenty that were then present, and assembled with the apostles: not only from the tradition of the church,† that Matthias, and Joseph called Barsabas, were chosen out of the seventy, but also from the nature of the thing itself. For St. Peter saith, an apostle must be chosen out of those that had been with them all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among them, to succeed in the place of Judas, and be a witness of our Lord's resurrection (Acts i. 21, 22). Now, whence should they choose such men but from the seventy? And St. Paul speaks of men coming up with Jesus, after his resurrection, from Galilee, who were his witnesses to the people, Acts xiii. 31, and sure the seventy must be of this number. Moreover, What was become of the seventy, if they came not up with their raised Saviour to Jerusalem? Can we think that men so full of hopes that he would now restore the kingdom to Israel (Acts i. 6), would stay behind in Galilee? and if they came up to Jerusalem, would they not consort as formerly with the apostles? Can we think, that one hundred and twenty other persons should adhere thus closely to them, and yet the seventy should absent themselves, especially at the feast of Pentecost, when they had so much reason to expect the promise of the Father?

Moreover, it is certain from St. Luke, that Christ had made them labourers in his harvest (Luke x. 2), and so far ministers of his gospel, as to declare, that he who heard them, heard him; and he that despised them, despised him (ver. 16), and also given them commission to work miracles, and cast out devils in his name (ver. 9. 17). And I have shown that after their return to Christ they received a new commission like to that given to the apostles, when they were sent to preach to all nations, and which, as far as we can learn from the evangelists, they never executed till after our Lord's resurrection, when we are sure that all who by Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. lib. i. cap. 12, and by Epiphanius* in the heresy of the Herodians, are mentioned as belonging to the seventy, did it. Now, if the seventy disciples had a commission from our Lord to preach to other nations; if, after he was seated at the right hand of his Father, he sent not only the twelve, but, as Epiphanius there expressly saith, the seventy-two, to be κήρυκας εἰς ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην, "preachers throughout all the world," and, among them, as he there saith, St. Mark and Luke; they also must be enabled by the Holy Ghost to speak with tongues and prophesy, that so they might be able to preach to those nations whose languages they understood not: and hence Eusebius† reckons among those who were enabled, as St. Paul was, to write μύρια καὶ ἀπόῤῥητα "a thousand mysteries," the twelve apostles, and the seventy disciples: and therefore Origen‡ says well, that Christ having such disciples, it is more reasonable to think he should commit the writing of his gospel to them, rather than to those who were not his disciples.

If then St. Mark and St. Luke were of the number of those men who had a commission from Christ to preach the gospel after his ascension, not only to the Jews, but to other nations also; if the Holy Ghost, which fell on the apostles, fell on them in like manner also for that end; if the universal church of Christ had held, that they as well as the apostles did indite their gospels by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and upon that account received them as a rule of faith, as much as the gospels written by St. Matthew and St. John, who were undoubtedly apostles of our Lord, and were by his Spirit assisted to indite their gospels; then we have equal reason to receive the gospels of St. Mark and St. Luke as the oracles of God, and so as a most certain rule of faith, as we have to receive the gospels of St. Matthew and St. John under that character.

As to the time of writing this gospel, I find it most uncertain; Irenæus§ is positive that it was written after the death of the apostle Paul; for, speaking of St. Peter and St. Paul, he saith, that "after their decease, St. Mark and St. Luke writ their gospels:" whereas Theophylact‖ saith expressly, μετὰ πεντεκαίδεκα ἔτη τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἀναλήψεως συνεγράψατο, "it was written within fifteen years after our Lord's ascension," that is, about ten years before the death of the apostle Paul; and so also saith the Synopsis, attributed to Athanasius. And, could we depend on the opinion of Origen,¶ and others of the ancients, that those words of St. Paul, "whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches," did belong to the Gospel of St. Luke, we might conclude from the writing the second epistle to the Corinthians, that St. Luke's gospel, writ before it, must be written at or before the time assigned by Athanasius and Theophylact: but Theodoret being positive, that St. Paul in these words meant not St. Luke, but Barnabas, who travelled with St. Paul, and preached the gospel throughout all the churches, Acts xiii. 2, xvi. 36, and who was chosen by the churches about Antioch to travel with St. Paul, to bring their charity to the brethren in Judea, Acts xi. 30, we must be content to leave the time when St. Luke writ this gospel still uncertain: only, because it is certain, from the beginning of the Acts, that it was writ before that trea-

* Apud Euseb. H. Eccl. v. cap. 8.

† Euseb. H. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 12.

* Hær. 50, §. 4.

† Οἱ λοιποὶ τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν φοιτηταὶ, δώδεκα μὲν ἀπόστολοι, ἑβδομήκοντα δὲ μαθηταί. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 24.

‡ Ἔχων μαθητὰς ὁ Χριστὸς, οὐ μᾶλλον τούτοις ἐνεγχείριζεν ἢ τοῖς μὴ οὖσι μαθηταῖς. L. de Rectâ Fide, p. 7.

§ Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τούτων ἔξοδον, Μαρκὸς τὰ ὑπὸ Πέτρου κηρυσσόμενα ἐγγράφοις παραδίδωκε· καὶ Λουκᾶς ὁ ἀκόλουθος Παύλου τὸ ὑπ' ἐκείνου κηρυσσόμενον εὐαγγέλιον ἐν βιβλίῳ κατέθετο. Lib. iii. cap. 1. Euseb. H. Eccl. v. cap. 8. Pseud. Ambrosius in procem.

‖ Præf. in Luc. ed. Coteler. p. 300.

¶ Τινὲς μὲν τὸν Λουκᾶν, τινὲς δὲ τὸν Βαρνάβαν· Chrys. Pro Lucâ faciunt, Interp. Ep. Ignat. ad Ephes. §. 15. Sophron. et Hieron. verbo Lucas.

 Τὸν τρισμακάριον Βαρνάβαν τά εἰρημένα χαρακτηρίζει. In locum.

tise; and highly probable, from the conclusion of the Acts of the Apostles, that these Acts were written and finished in the ninth of Nero; we may hence probably conclude this gospel must be indited before that time; and consequently, that Irenæus must mistake, in saying it was written after the death of the apostle Paul.

CHAPTER I.

1 FORASMUCH [1] as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed (or have assuredly been performed) among us (by the Lord Jesus),

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and (who are now) ministers of the word; (or have the ministration and dispensation of the word committed to them, see Acts xiii. 5, 1 Cor. iv. 1;)

3 [2] It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order (of them), most excellent Theophilus,

4 That thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been [3] instructed.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. Forasmuch as πολλοὶ ἐπιχείρησαν, many have taken in hand to set forth a narration, περὶ τῶν πεπληροφορημένων ἐν ἡμῖν πραγμάτων, concerning the things which have mostly surely been believed and done among us, Ver. 2. Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses (of what Christ did), and ministers of the word (of the gospel).] Here note,

First, That πράγματα πεπληροφορημένα refers not only to things believed, but also to things performed by Christ and his apostles. This first treatise being designed to mention the things which Jesus himself said or did (Acts i. 1), as they were delivered by the apostles who had been with Christ from the beginning (John xv. 27, Acts i. 21), which the seventy disciples were not; his second to declare the acts of the apostles, who being sent to "preach the gospel to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem," were in that ὑπηρέται τοῦ λόγου, "ministers of the word." "Let a man so account of us apostles," saith St. Paul, ὑπηρέτας Χριστοῦ, "as the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God" (1 Cor. iv. 1). He also was himself ordained to be ὑπηρέτης "a minister," and witness of what he had seen, and of what Christ should reveal to him (Acts xxvi. 16); i. e. a witness of what he had seen, and a minister of Christ's revelations made to him. So when Barnabas and Paul were preaching the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews, they had with them John ὑπηρέτην, "a minister" of this word (Acts xiii. 5). And when St. Luke saith, they were πεπληροφορημένα ἐν ἡμῖν, he doth not only mean that they were done, but that they were performed with such circumstances as gave them πληροφορίαν τῆς πίστεως, "a full assurance of faith" (Heb. x. 22), as to the truth of these doctrines taught, and the works done by Christ and his apostles, as the word signifies continually in the Epistles; as when it is said that Abraham was πληροφορηθείς, "fully assured that what God had promised he was able to perform," Rom. iv. 21, and xiv. 5, "Let every one be fully assured, πληροφορείσθω, in his own mind;" when St. Paul wishes to his Colossians "the riches τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως, of the full assurance of his knowledge" (Col. ii. 2); when he saith his Thessalonians "received the word ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ, in much assurance" (1 Thess. i. 5), and desires the believing Jews to be careful to attain εἰς πληροφορίαν, "to a full assurance of hope to the end" (Heb. vi. 11).

Secondly, Hence note, that there is no necessity that the "many who had taken in hand to make a narrative of what was believed or done by Christians," should have done this at all by writing, rather than by word of mouth, and much less they should all be writers of gospels, rather than of the acts of the apostles; it is certain also that St. Luke is so far from blaming them for these performances, that he places himself in the rank of them, and saith, they made their narrative of these matters even as the apostles had delivered them.

Thirdly, Hence I conclude, that though St. Luke was no apostle, he might be one of the seventy mentioned Luke x.; for neither were they with Christ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, "from the beginning," nor "chosen to be the witnesses of what he did," nor, in the primary sense, ὑπηρέται τοῦ λόγου, "the ministers of the gospel." And yet, besides these words, which prove nothing to the contrary, I see not why St. Luke, who was before a proselyte to the Jewish religion, and who had, saith Theophylact, Ἑβραικὴν παιδείαν, his instruction in the Jewish religion at Jerusalem, should not see and converse with Christ, and be one of the seventy, as Origen and Epiphanius say he was (see the preface to this gospel, §. 2. n. 3).

[2] Ver. 3. It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things ἄνωθεν, from the very first, to write unto thee καθεξῆς, in order, most excellent Theophilus.] Here note,

First, That it is not certain that ἄνωθεν here signifies "from above," i. e. οὐρανόθεν, "from heaven," as it is done, John iii. 3. 7. 31, xix. 11, James i. 17, iii. 15. 17, seeing it as often signifies from the top, rise, or beginning of a thing; as when "the veil of the temple" is said to be "rent ἀπὸ ἄνωθεν, from the top to the bottom," Matt. xxvii. 51, Mark xv. 38, Christ's coat to be woven ἐκ τῶν ἄνωθεν, from the top," John xix. 24, St. Paul to be known of the Jews ἄνωθεν, "from the beginning," Acts xxvi. 5, and the evangelist here beginning his narrative higher than St. Matthew or Mark had done, even from the promise made to Zacharias of the Baptist, or forerunner of the Lord, I think it more reasonable to adhere to our translation, and not to lay the authority of St. Luke's gospel upon uncertainties.

Secondly, It being certain that St. Luke in his gospel doth not give us Christ's miracles, sermons, and journeys, in that order of time in which they were done and spoken, it remains, that when he promised to write καθεξῆς, in order, we understand this of Christ's conception, birth, circumcision, baptism, preaching, death, resurrection, and ascension, of which he truly writes in order; or that he would write to him first of what these eye-witnesses had delivered to him of Christ, and then of what these ministers had done in propagation of the gospel, as in the Acts he doth. Note, Thirdly, That the Theophilus to whom he writes seems not to be a feigned name, importing only any Christian, who was "a lover of God," as Salvian conceived; for we have no such instance in the sacred history of feigned names thus used. 2. The word κράτιστος is used in the New Testament as a title of excellency, and never otherwise (see Acts xxiii. 26, xxiv. 3, xxvi. 25). And, (3.) had he intended this only as a dedication of his work to the true lovers of God, why writes he still in the singular number, and never in the plural?

[3] Ver. 4. Ἵνα ἐπιγνῷς περὶ ὧν κατηχήθης λόγων τὴν ἀσφάλειαν, That thou mayest know the certainty of those things in which thou hast been instructed.] Κατήχησις is an instruction, not only by questions and answers, but also by a continual discourse (Acts xviii. 25, Rom. ii. 18, 1 Cor. xiv. 19). But that which is hence chiefly to be observed against the Romanists, is (1.) against oral tradition, that St. Luke thought not what was delivered by word of mouth only, even by the "eye-witnesses and ministers of the word," sufficient to give Theophilus a knowledge of the certainty of these things without writing the gospel; and this the wisdom of God showed in causing them to be written, saith Irenæus,* "to be the pillar and foundation of the Christian faith." (2.) That St. Luke held it not unlawful, or unfit for a layman, or any Christian, to read the scriptures, nor such a one insufficient by thus reading to understand the things in which he had been instructed: and seeing it is certain that he and other Christians were instructed in al;

* Lib. iii. cap. 1.

5 ¶ THERE was in the days of Herod, the king of Judæa, a [4] certain priest named Zacharias, [5] of the course of Abia (i. e. the eighth of the twenty-four courses of the priests, which ministered in the temple by their weeks): and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6 And they were both righteous before God, (as) walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

7 And they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren, and they both [6] were now well stricken in years (Gr. were aged in their days).

8 And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9 According to the custom of the priest's office, [7] his lot was (i. e. he was chosen by lot) to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

10 And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time [8] of (his burning) incense.

11 And (whilst he was doing this) there [9] appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense.

12 And when Zacharias saw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

---

things necessary to be believed and done by them to salvation, it follows that these writings must contain fully and with sufficient clearness, all that was necessary to be believed or done by him in order to his salvation, they being written for this very end, that Theophilus "might know the certainty of all those things in which he had been instructed;" and then surely the writings of the whole New Testament must be much more sufficient for that end.

[4] Ver. 5. Ἱερεύς τις, A priest named Zacharias.] That he was not, as some have imagined, a high-priest, appears, (1.) because St. Luke calls him simply ἱερεὺς a priest, not ἀρχιερεὺς, a high-priest, as he who bore that office was still called, iii. 2, ix. 22, xxii. 2. 4. 52. 54. 66, xxiii. 4. 10. 13. 23, Acts iv. 6, v. 17. 21. 24, vii. 1, ix. 1. 14. (2.) Zacharias was chosen by lot to burn incense; the high-priest did it by right of succession, and burnt it in the holy of holies, into which Zacharias entered not. (3.) Josephus* saith, that Simon son of Boethus was high-priest that year: and, lastly, Zacharias was "priest of the course of Abia," whereas the high-priest was of no course at all. Of the twenty-four courses appointed by David for the service of the temple, when it should be built, this of Abia was the eighth (1 Chron. xxiv. 10). These several courses began on the sabbath-day, and continued to serve till the next sabbath, 2 Kings xi. 7, 2 Chron. xxiii. 8, ἀπὸ σαββάτου ἐπὶ σάββατον, "from sabbath to sabbath," Joseph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 11, p. 248.

[5] Of the course of Abia.] Most chronologers that I have read agree in this, that no certain computation can be made from these courses touching the conception or birth of the Baptist. Mr. Whiston's attempt in this matter seems unsuccessful on several accounts. For,

First, Whereas he† begins that computation with the rabbinical tale, that after the return of the priests from the captivity, they were divided again into twenty-four courses, he ought to have observed, from the same tale, that the course of Jedajah‡ was then put before that of Jojarib; because he was of the high-priest's family, and so should have begun those courses not from Jojarib, but from Jedajah.

Secondly, Whereas he saith, that "it is highly probable that when Judas Maccabæus restored the daily sacrifice, and afresh appointed the courses of the priests, he would begin those courses with the first family:" it remains to be proved, that he did then appoint any of these courses at all to serve, and that all the priests did not then serve together, as at the other three great festivals. Secondly, There is no reason why he should alter the courses appointed by Solomon in the month Tisri, and that he did not do it is supposed by Dr. Lightfoot,§ who therefore in his account of these courses makes the first of them to begin in that month. In a word, if there were made any alteration at all, St. Luke cannot refer to the course of Abia as it is placed, 1 Chron. xxiv., and then, seeing the family of Abia was not then extant among the courses (there being no mention of their return out of captivity), who can tell where to place it? If he does refer to it, that course must continue in the same order in which it was before, and so was not changed by Judas Maccabæus.

Thirdly, As for this historical evidence from a Jewish rabbinical chronicle, it can be of no validity to them who know they were the worst of chronologers, as the learned have observed, and as it is evident from the chronology of David Ganz, and Vorstius's notes upon it, and his famous chronicle, Seder Olam Rabbi; with which he is not much acquainted, though it pretends to some antiquity, yet, saith Buxtorf, Videtur seipsum in fine libri prodere, dum inquit, Hamar Rabbi Jose, "He betrays himself by adding, Thus saith R. Jose."

Fourthly, His corollary from all these uncertainties, that the blessed Virgin conceived in the beginning of the sixth month from the conception of Elisabeth, is built upon a mistake, it being plain from Luke i. 36, that her sixth month was completed when the Virgin came to her (which she did presently after the angel appeared to her), for she stayed with her but almost three months, and then Elisabeth's full time was come (ver. 56, 57).

[6] Ver. 7. They were both προβεβηκότες, well stricken with age.] Here, saith Theophylact, because a Virgin was to bring forth a son προῳκονόμησεν ἡ χάρις ἵνα γραῦς τέκῃ, οὐ κατὰ νόμον φύσεως, εἰ καὶ μετ' ἀνδρός, "God provided that an old woman should bring forth a son, not according to the course of nature, though with a man, they being both aged."

[7] Ver. 9. Ἔλαχε τοῦ θυμιάσαι, His lot was to burn incense.] The law required that the priest should burn incense morning and evening upon the altar of incense, placed before the veil of the most holy (Exod. xxx. 6—8): but because they who thus served in every course were many, it was necessary they should by lot choose the man who was to perform that service for that week, and so the Jews say they did (see Dr. Lightfoot here).

[8] Ver. 10. And all the multitude of the people were praying without τῇ ὥρᾳ τοῦ θυμιάματος, at the time of incense.] When the priest went into the sanctuary, or within the first veil, to offer incense, notice was given by the sound of a little bell, that it was then the time of prayer; and every one present then offered up his prayers to God silently: and though this silent prayer was not commanded, yet there seems a manifest allusion to it in those words of John, where at "the first offering of incense with the prayers of the saints," it is said, "there was silence in heaven for half an hour" (Rev. viii. 1—3). Whether that of the high-priest Simon, mentioned Ecclus. l., belongs to this matter, or rather to the great day of expiation, I will not determine.

[9] Ver. 11. Ὤφθη δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος Κυρίου, An angel of the Lord appeared to him.] That they had former examples of their priests who had seen visions in the temple seems reasonable to conceive from the words, ver. 22, where from his silence it is said, "the people knew that he had seen a vision;" and yet, if you reject the story of Simon the Just seeing an angel going into the holy of holies yearly, on the day of expiation, you will hardly find another instance: for Hyrcanus the high-priest saw no vision, only as he was offering incense, φάσι,* "some say he heard a voice, declaring that his sons had got the victory."

Ver. 12. Καὶ ἐταράχθη, καὶ φόβος ἐπέπεσεν ἐπ' αὐτόν.] This verse is wanting only in the Ethiopic version, being in all the other versions, in Theophylact, in Hilary the deacon, in Jerome, and Chrysostom, ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 475, and yet Dr. Mills suspects hunc versum fictum esse ab aliquo ob similia quæ ad Mariam dicuntur, ver. 24, Append. p. 20,

---

* Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 12, p. 537.
† P. 156, §. 3.
‡ Lightf. Temple Serv. cap. 6.
§ Harm. par. i. p. 22.

* Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 8.

13 But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zacharias: for thy [10] prayer (for the people) is heard (God meaning now suddenly to send the Messiah); and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son (who shall be his forerunner), and thou shalt call his name John.

14 And thou shalt have joy and gladness (for the fruit of her womb); and (not only thou, but others also, for) many shall rejoice at his birth.

15 For he shall be [11] great in the sight of the Lord (as being highly favoured by him), and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink: and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb (i. e. very early).

16 And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17 And he shall go before him in [12] the spirit and power of Elias, (who turned the people from Baal to God, 1 Kings xviii. 37) to turn the hearts of the fathers to (or with) the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of (him who is emphatically styled) the just (One, Acts iii. 14; and so) to make ready a people prepared for (the reception of) the Lord.

18 And Zacharias said unto the angel, Whereby shall I know (the truth of) this (of which I have cause to doubt)? for I am an old man, and my wife (also is) well stricken in years.

19 And the angel answering said unto him, I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent (by him) to speak (this) unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

20 And, behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.

21 And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the (inner) temple.

22 And when he came out, he could not speak unto them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple: for he (only) beckoned unto them, and remained [13] speechless.

23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24 And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, and (through devotion, or to avoid discourses) [14] hid herself five months, saying,

25 Thus (graciously) hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away (that barrenness, which was) my reproach among men.

26 And in the sixth month the (same) angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, 27 To a [15] virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

---

though this suspicion be confuted by the words following, μὴ φοβοῦ Ζαχαρία.

[10] Ver. 13. Εἰσηκούσθη ἡ δέησίς σου, Thy prayer is heard.] Not that this good man was now praying for himself, that he might have a child; he is so far from any expectation of that, that when an angel appearing to him in God's temple, and so unquestionably as a messenger from God speaks to him of this matter, he believeth not his words; the meaning is, Thy prayer for the delivery of thy people, for the coming of the Messiah, and the consolation of Israel, and the remission of their sins, is so graciously heard, that from thy very loins shall now come the forerunner "to prepare his way:" and thou wilt now quickly have occasion to acknowledge, that "God hath visited and redeemed his people, and raised up a horn of salvation for them" (ver. 68, 69).

[11] Ver. 15. Ἔσται γὰρ μέγας ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου, He shall be great in the sight of (or before) the Lord.] Either before the Lord Christ, as being "the prophet of the Highest, to go before the Lord to prepare his way," as the angel saith, ver. 17, and Zacharias, ver. 76, or in the sight of God, as David "found favour ἐνώπιον Θεοῦ, in the sight of God," Acts vi. 46. It follows, "And he shall neither drink wine nor strong drink." This being the description of a Nazarite, Numb. vi. 3, Judg. xiii. 4, the words "from the womb," may refer to the same thing, as it is said of Samson, "The child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb," Judg. xiii. 5, xvi. 17 (see note on ver. 28), or if they refer to his being filled with the Holy Ghost, they must be interpreted as Dr. Hammond paraphrases them, The power of the Holy Ghost shall be discerned to be upon him very early. So Job xxxi. 18, "I have guided the widow from my mother's womb:" Ps. lviii. 3, "The wicked are estranged from the womb, as soon as they are born they go about and tell lies:" Isa. xlviii. 8, "Thou wast called a transgressor from the womb." This exposition I prefer to that of Grotius, that he is said to be filled with the Holy Ghost from the womb, because he being in the womb, was part of his mother who was filled with the Holy Ghost.

[12] Ver. 17. Ἐν πνεύματι καὶ δυνάμει Ἠλίου, In the spirit and power of Elias.] Not in his power of working miracles, for "John did no miracles" (John x. 41), but in his power of turning the people to the Lord (1 Kings xviii. 37). So the angel expounds it in the following words, cited from Mal. iv. 6, "To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the Just, and so to make ready a people prepared for the Lord;" that is, he shall turn the hearts of the fathers ל to the children, as that preposition signifies, Josh. ii. 8, 1 Sam. xxii. 11, by causing them to lay aside their discords, and unite, of what sect soever they were, in a general profession of repentance, and a free confession of their sins; and so the son of Sirach saith, "He is appointed, ἐπιστρέψαι καρδίαν πατρὸς πρὸς υἱόν, to turn the heart of the father to the son" (xlviii. 10); or else, He shall turn the hearts of the fathers, al, "with the children," as al signifies, Exod. xii. 8, 9, xxxv. 22, calling them all to a general confession of, and repentance for their sins: and so "turning the disobedient to the wisdom" revealed to them by Christ, "the Just One," as he emphatically is styled, Acts iii. 14. And this the Baptist did by preaching to all sorts, young and old, conversion and repentance, and uniting them all in one baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins (Matt. iii. 5, 6, Mark i. 5). He was sent to bear witness of Christ "that all men might believe on him" (John i. 7); and this he also did so effectually, that many, finding that all that John said of him was true, believed on him (John xiii. 41, 42). Josephus informs us that he was "a good man, who instructed the Jews by the exercise of virtue, καὶ τῇ πρὸς ἀλλήλους δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ πρὸς Θεὸν εὐσεβείᾳ, and by piety towards God, and righteousness or justice towards one another, to come to his baptism; and that hereupon there was great concourse made to him, the people being much delighted with his doctrine" (Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 7, p. 626, F, G).

[13] Ver. 22. Καὶ διέμενε κωφός, And remained speechless.] It seemeth that he was both dumb and deaf, for we read that he was σιωπῶν καὶ μὴ δυνάμενος λαλῆσαι, "not able to speak," and dumb, ver. 20, and that he was not able to hear is evident, because they nodded and made signs to him and he to them, ver. 22. 62, and therefore it was only by a sign that he asked for a writing table, ver. 63. And this was the result of infidelity, in that he believed not an angel appearing to him, in a place where evil angels durst not come, in the name of our Lord, and telling him "his prayer was heard," which evil angels could not do, and of things which tended to the glory of God, the completion of his promises, and the welfare of mankind, which they would not do.

[14] Ver. 24. Καὶ περιέκρυβεν ἑαυτὴν, And she hid herself five months.] Partly from devotion, to bless God for a mercy so singular and unexpected, and partly from respect to the child, lest she should be any way defiled, and so derive uncleanness upon the Nazarite in her womb.

[15] Ver. 27. Πρὸς παρθένον (μεμνηστευμένην ἀνδρὶ ᾧ ὄνομα

28 And the angel (of the Lord) came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art [16] highly favoured (of God), the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women.

29 And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be (or what might be the import of it).

30 And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: (for) thou hast found favour with God.

31 And, behold, thou (being a virgin) shalt (yet) conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call his name JESUS.

32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David (or that spiritual kingdom promised to the Messiah the son of David):

33 And he shall [17] reign over the house of Jacob for ever (whilst he hath any seed in being); and of his kingdom there shall be no end (as there hath and shall be of the four great monarchies).

34 Then said Mary unto the angel, [18] How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?

35 And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.

36 And, behold, thy [19] cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month (from her conception) with her, who was called barren. (Nor is this to be doubted of,)

37 For with God nothing shall be impossible (Gen. xviii. 14).

38 And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And (then) the angel departed from her.

39 And Mary arose in those days, and went into the [20] hill country with haste, into a city of Juda (named Hebron, to visit her cousin of whom the angel spake);

40 And (she) entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

41 And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost (i. e. the Spirit of prophecy):

42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou among women, and [21] blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

Ἰωσὴφ) ἐξ οἴκου Δαβὶδ, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τῆς παρθένου Μαριάμ.] Which words I would render thus, "To a virgin of the house of David, espoused to a man whose name was Joseph; and the virgin's name was Mary." For, first, of this συμπλοκὴ, or placing of words not in due order of construction, I have given many instances, note on Mark ix. 13; and I think there is an instance of it here, ver. 15, "He shall neither drink wine nor strong drink from his mother's womb, and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost." And this construction I prefer, as being most suitable to those words of the angel, "The Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David." The virgin therefore must be of the house of David, for seeing the angel had plainly told her she would not have this son by the knowledge of a man, it was not Joseph's but Mary's being of the house of David, which made David his father: see also ver. 69, where this "horn of salvation" is said to be raised up in the house of his servant David: now thus he was raised up in the house of David, not by Joseph's espousal, but by his birth of the Virgin; for from her also was it, that Christ was ἐκ καρπου τῆς ὀσφύος αὐτοῦ τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, "of the fruit of the loins of David according to the flesh," Acts ii. 30; ἀπὸ τοῦ σπέρματος, "of the seed of David," xiii. 23, Rom. i. 3, 2 Tim. ii. 8. Such reason had the evangelist here to say, rather that Mary than Joseph was of the "house of David."

[16] Ver. 28. Κεχαριτωμένη, Thou who art highly favoured.] Or, who hast found mercy, or favour with God, as it is expounded, ver. 30. It answers to the Hebrew חסד, which signifies χάρις and ἔλεος, mercy and favour. So Ps. xviii. 26, עם חסד μετὰ κεχαριτωμένου χαρίτωθήσῃ, "With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful;" or, to him that shows favour to others, thou wilt show favour; and Eph. i. 6, "To the praise of his glorious grace, ἐν ᾗ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, through which he hath dealt graciously with us," or made us favourites "by the beloved," or, in Christ Jesus. Thus χαιρεργὸς, he that doth kind and grateful offices, is in Suidas τὰ κεχαριτωμένα ἐργαζόμενος, "he that doth kind things," and χαίεντα, in Phavorinus is κεχαριτωμένα. And the son of Sirach saith, A word, i. e. a kind word, is better than a gift, but both come παρὰ ἀνδρὶ κεχαριτωμένῳ "from a kind man," to one that shows favour, Ecclus. xviii. 17. It follows, εὐλογημένη σὺ ἐν γυναιξίν, "Blessed art thou among women." So it is said of Jael, εὐλογηθείη ἐν γυναιξίν, "Blessed be Jael among women," Judg. v. 24; of Ruth, iii. 10, εὐλογημένη σὺ, "Blessed art thou of the Lord, O daughter!" and so David speaks to Abigail, 1 Sam. xxv. 33; so also, "The Lord is with thee," is said to Gideon, Judg. vi. 12. And the words, ver. 30, εὗρες χάριν παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, "Thou hast found favour with God," are also said of Noah, Gen. vi. 8, of Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 4, of David, Acts vii. 46. So that here is nothing said of the blessed virgin in this salutation, which was not before said of others.

[17] Ver. 33. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob, εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, καὶ τῆς βασιλείας αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔσται τέλος, for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.] i. e. Whilst the house and the seed of Jacob, or the world lasts; his kingdom being never to give place to any other kingdom, as the four monarchies did, Dan. vii. 14, but yet when death, the last enemy of his church, shall be dissolved, he shall give up this mediatory kingdom "to the Father" (see note on 1 Cor. xv. 28).

[18] Ver. 34. Πῶς ἔσται τοῦτο; How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?] She so inquires after the manner, as not to doubt of the fact, but she says not she was under a vow not to know a man: for, (1.) virginity amongst the Jews was not matter of praise, but reproach (Ps. lxxviii. 63); insomuch that Grotius with all his learning could bring no instance of any women who were παρθέναι δι' ἁγνείαν, or kept their virginity, but from a testimony of Philo* concerning some old women among the essenes, who were known enemies to matrimony (see the note on Col. ii. 21): and, (2.) marriage is numbered by them among the precepts of the law, Targum on Gen. i. 28, which they only were exempted from, who devoted themselves wholly to the study of the law: and, (3.) if she made this vow before her espousals, why should she marry? if after, it was void, as being not made with the consent of her husband.

Ver. 35. Διὸ καὶ τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον, Therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee] Here it is evident that our interpreters followed the other reading, viz. τὸ γεννώμενον ἐκ σοῦ ἅγιον, for which they had good reason, for so read all the ancient versions; so Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 26, Tertullian, contra Prax. cap. 20. Novat. de Trin. cap. 19. Author Quæst. et Respons. ad Orthodox. q. 46, p. 430. Epiphan. Anchor. p. 69. Chrysost. ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 476. Autor Dial. contra Marcion. p. 121, where he notes that the evangelist saith not διὰ σοῦ but ἐκ σοῦ (see Examen Millii).

[19] Ver. 36. Elisabeth thy cousin, συγγενής σου.] Though Elisabeth was of the tribe of Aaron, ver. 5, it follows not that Mary was so; for a woman might marry into another tribe, provided she was not an heiress that carried the paternal inheritance along with her, care being taken only against that by the law, Numb. xxxvi. 8, 9.

[20] Ver. 39. Mary went εἰς τὴν ὀρεινὴν—εἰς πόλιν, into a city of Juda.] i. e. To Hebron, which was situated in the hill country (Josh. xi. 21), and was given to the posterity of Aaron for an inheritance (Josh. xxi. 10, 11); it was also the city where David was anointed king over Judah (2 Sam. ii. 4).

[21] Ver. 42. Καὶ εὐλογημένος ὁ καρπὸς τῆς κοιλίας σου, And blessed be the fruit of thy womb.] These words show that

---

* De Vitâ Contemp. p. 695.

43 And whence is this (honour done) to me, that (she who is) the mother of [22] my Lord should come to me?
44 For, lo, (this so affected me that) as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe [23] leaped in my womb for (the) joy (that transported me).
45 And blessed is she that believed (the words of the angel): [24] for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.
46 And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord,
47 And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.
48 For he hath (highly) regarded the [25] low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.
49 For he that is mighty hath done [26] to me great things; and holy (and reverend) is his name (Ps. cxi. 9).
50 And (as) his mercy is (to me, so will it be) on them that fear him from generation to generation.
51 (To show that he is mighty) he (in all ages) hath shewed strength with his [27] arm; he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.
52 He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.
53 (And through his mercy to them that fear him,) he hath filled the hungry with good things; and (but) the rich he hath sent empty away.
54 He hath [28] holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy;
55 As he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed (promising them one who should be a blessing to them) for ever.
56 And Mary abode with her (cousin) about three months, and (then) returned to her own house.
57 Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.
58 And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had showed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her.
59 And it came to pass, that on the [29] eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.
60 And his mother answered and said (to them so naming him), (It shall) not (be) so; but he shall be [30] called John.
61 And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.
62 And they made signs to his father, (to know) how he would have him called.

Christ had not his body from heaven, but from the womb of the virgin, and so was truly the seed of David, according to the flesh, Rom. ix. 5 (see Matt. i. 20, Gal. iv. 6, and the note on 1 Cor. xv. 47).

[22] Ver. 43. The mother of my Lord.] She calls him, saith Woltzogenius, her Lord, as David had done, Ps. cx. 1, and in his note on Matt. xxii. 45, he saith, he was so styled by him, "because by virtue of his exaltation to the right hand of Power, or of God, he was made Lord of angels, and of all men." Now he who is Lord over all men, and angels, must have divine power and wisdom to rule and govern them, and so partake of the divine nature. Hence of him, whose name is "King of kings, and Lord of lords," Rev. xix. 16, St. John doth also say, his name is ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the Word of God," ver. 13, and in the beginning of his gospel, that "this Word was God."

[23] Ver. 44. Ἐσκίρτησεν ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει τὸ βρέφος. The child leaped in my womb.] "By reason of the joy which transported me," saith Dr. Hammond; for it was when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, that the babe leaped in her womb, ver. 41, nor is any infant in the womb capable of any joy, as having no apprehensions of good to be enjoyed, or evil to be avoided; and so he cannot be capable of that joy which results only from these apprehensions: if you object, that the angel had foretold that this child should be "filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb," ver. 15, and upon that account he might rejoice whilst he was in it, see the answer, note on ver. 15.

[24] Ver. 45. And blessed is she that believed, for (ὅτι, that) there shall be a performance of these things.] As the Hebrew כי signifies not only for but that; as Job iii. 12, כי אינק "that I might suck;" and Ps. xi. 3, the wicked bend their bow, &c. "that the foundations may be destroyed" (see note, p. 406): so doth the Greek ὅτι.

[25] Ver. 48. Ὅτι ἐπέβλεψεν ἐπὶ ταπείνωσιν τῆς δούλης αὐτοῦ, For he hath regarded (or compassionately looked upon) the low estate of his handmaid.] The word here is not ταπεινοφροσύνη, the humble-mindedness, but ταπείνωσις, the mean, low, or afflicted state of the virgin, which appeared in her offering for her purification, Luke ii. 24. So the word constantly signifies both in the Old and the New Testament: so speaks Leah, Gen. xxix. 32, "The Lord saw τὴν ταπείνωσιν, my affliction, and hath given me a child:" so Jacob, Gen. xxxi. 22, "The Lord saw my affliction:" so Deut. xxvi. 7, 1 Sam. ix. 16, 2 Kings xiv. 26, Neh. ix. 9, Ps. ix. 13, xxiv. 18, xxx. 7, cxix. 153, Lam. i. 9, Acts viii. 33.

[26] Ver. 49. For he that is mighty hath done to me μεγαλεῖα, great things;] i. e. He hath wrought a great miracle upon me; so μεγαλεῖα, and τὰ μεγάλα, often signify the miracles God wrought in Egypt and in the wilderness, Deut. x. 21, xi. 7, xxxiv. 12, Ps. lxxi. 19, Ecclus. xvii. 8, xxxvi. 8, xliii. 15.

[27] Ver. 51. Ἐποίησε κράτος ἐν βραχίονι αὐτοῦ, He hath showed strength with his arm.] Here Grotius notes, that God's great power is represented by his finger, his greater by his hand, his greatest by his arm; the production of lice was "by the finger of God," Exod. viii. 19, his other miracles in Egypt were wrought "by his hand," Exod. iii. 20, the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea "by his arm," Exod. xv. 6. The following words seem to be taken from the song of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 4—6, and need no farther explication than that which they have received in the paraphrase.

[28] Ver. 54. Ἀντελάβετο, &c. He hath holpen his servant Israel, &c.] The word ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι signifies, to hold by the hand, to sustain from falling, or to lift up when fallen, and so to afford aid or help, Jer. xxxi. 32, Zech. xiii. 13. This he hath done, saith the virgin, in remembrance of his mercy; for then God is said signally to remember his people, when, after a long oppression, in which he seemed to have forgotten them, he works a mighty salvation for them: so Ps. cxxxvi., ἐν τῇ ταπεινώσει ἡμῶν ἐμνήσθη, "The Lord remembered us in our affliction (ver. 23), and delivered us out of the hand of the enemy;" and he did this also in pursuance of his promise made to our forefathers, to send the Messiah to be an everlasting blessing to all that believed in him, and so became the seed of Abraham by faith.

[29] Ver. 59. Ἐν τῇ ὀγδόῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἦλθον περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον. On the eighth day they came to circumcise the child.] Not before that day, because the mother was unclean seven days (Lev. xii. 1, 2), and so was the child by touching her, and therefore he was not then fit to be admitted into covenant: moreover, till that time he was weak, and could not well endure the pain of circumcision (see the note on Phil. iii. 5). Note also, that the law appointed no certain place in which circumcision was to be done, nor any certain person to perform it, and therefore it was done sometimes by women (Exod. iv. 25), and here in the house of Elisabeth, as appears by her presence at it (ver. 60). The Jews did it sometimes in their schools, not out of necessity, but to have more witnesses of the fact. Then also they gave the name to the infant, because, when God instituted circumcision, he changed the names of Abraham and Sarah.

[30] Ver. 60. He shall be called John.] This she might learn from her husband, giving her in writing a relation of what the angel said to him (ver. 13). Now, "God is gracious," which is the import of that name, is a name very fit for him, who was to be the first preacher of the kingdom of grace, and who was to point out him, "from whose fulness we receive grace for grace" (John i. 16).

63 And he (by signs) asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64 And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

65 And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judæa.

66 And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be! [31] And the hand of the Lord (i. e. his favour) was with him (in a special manner to assist and prosper him).

67 And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and [32] prophesied, saying,

68 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he [33] hath visited and redeemed his people,

69 And hath raised up [34] an horn of salvation (a mighty, royal Saviour) for us in the house of his servant David;

70 As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been (successively) [35] since the world began: (promising by them)

71 That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us;

72 (And this he hath done) to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant (ver. 54, 55);

73 (And) the [36] oath which he sware to our father Abraham, (That in his seed should all the families of the earth be blessed, Gen. xxii. 18, and)

74 That he would grant (Gr. to grant) unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies

---

[31] Ver. 66. Καὶ χεὶρ Κυρίου ἦν μετ' αὐτοῦ, And the hand of the Lord was with him.] Here by the "hand of the Lord" we are not to understand the spirit of prophecy, for this is still described by "the hand of the Lord being ἐπ' αὐτόν, upon the prophet," Ezek. i. 3, iii. 22, xxxvii. 1, xl. 1; but the care, providence, and assistance of God, as Ps. lxxx. 17.

[32] Ver. 67. Καὶ Ζαχαρίας ἐπλήσθη Πνεύματος ἁγίου καὶ προεφήτευσε, And his father Zachary was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied.] Notwithstanding all that the critics here say, I know but two significations of the word prophesying, especially when it is said to be done by one "filled with the Holy Ghost;" as here; and two senses, in which any one in scripture is called a prophet. And,

First, According to the grammatical import of the word, a prophet is ὁ προφάσκων τὸ μέλλον, "one who foretells, that something future, and contingent in respect of us, shall certainly fall out:" so Phavorinus, προφήτης ἐστὶν ὁ δι' ἐνεργείας, πνευματικῆς τὰ μέλλοντα ὀηλῶν, "A prophet is one who declares things future, by the assistance of the Spirit: thus, when Ezekiel had prophesied of the desolation of Jerusalem by the sword, and by wild beasts, "When this," saith he, "cometh to pass, ye shall know that a prophet hath been among you" (Ezek. xxxiii. 27. 33): and in the time of their captivity, they thus complain, "We see not our signs; there is no prophet more, not one that can tell us how long" these calamities shall last, or when they will have an end (Ps. lxxiv. 9). And in this sense Zacharias here prophesies, foretelling what should be done by his son, and by the Messiah hereafter.

Secondly, A prophet, in the scripture language, is a revealer of the will of God. So Phavorinus, προφήτης ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος θεῖος πνευματοφόρος, "A prophet is a divine man, endued with an afflatus of the Holy Spirit." In this sense is Abraham styled a prophet, by reason of the many divine revelations made to him, Gen. xx. 7, and by him left unto posterity, xviii. 19, and John the Baptist is here styled a prophet, ver. 76, because he received his commission and doctrine from heaven, Matt. xxi. 25, John i. 6, though we read of no predictions made by either of them. And to such a prophet it was absolutely necessary that he should receive his doctrine by revelation from God; for as the things of man knoweth no man, but the spirit of man that is in him; so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God" (1 Cor. ii. 11): so that he who reveals his will must be ἄνθρωπος ὁ πνευματοφόρος, "a man inspired by the Spirit;" for, saith St. Peter, "no prophecy is of private motion or incitation, but holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i. 20, 21). Hence are they styled so often "the messengers of the Lord, the prophets who had spoken in the name of the Lord," 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, Hag. i. 13, Mal. ii. 7, 1 Pet. i. 10, 2 Pet. iii. 2. Their prophecies are called the "word" and "burden" of the Lord; and their style runs, "Thus saith the Lord." Hence, lastly, this is still the character of the false prophets, that "they run when God had not sent them, and prophesied when God had not spoken to them;" nor have these words any other sense in scripture, nor were they used any otherwise by the ancient Jews: this sense the word plainly bears, when it is said, Exod. vii. 1, "I have made thee a god to Pharaoh, and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet;" i. e. the revealer of what thou, the god of Pharaoh, shall say to him; nor does it ever signify to expound or interpret scripture, otherwise than by a divine afflatus, or gift of prophecy (see the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 6). It also signifies a divine afflatus enabling a man to compose hymns, or psalms of praise, but still "as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (see the same note). In the example of Saul, it signifies to rave in prophesying, i. e. to be, as the Septuagint hath it, Hos. ix. 7, ἐξεστηκὼς, a prophet in ecstasy and madness; but still by the afflatus of an evil spirit, according to that distinction of prophecy Phavorinus gives us, that it is either πνευματικὴ ἢ καὶ διαβολική, "by the afflatus of the good or evil spirit;" as in this instance, the evil spirit came upon Saul, "and he prophesied in his house" (see the opinion of the Jews, note on 2 Pet. i. 21)." And, lastly, when the body of Elisha is said by the son of Sirach to prophesy by raising the dead man, Ecclus. xlviii. 14, he intended not to say, it wrought a miracle, but only that it foretold a thing to come, viz. the fall of the Syrians, who, saith Elisha there, "shall be smitten three times," and the rising up of God's oppressed people, or the reviving of them; and so is to be reduced to the first acceptation of the word.

[33] Ver. 68. Ἐπεσκέψατο, καὶ ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ, He hath visited in mercy, &c.] So Ruth i. 6, Ps. lxxix. 15, cv. 4, so as to do them good; as he visited Sarah, Gen. xxi. 1, and Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 21, and his people oppressed by the Egyptians, Gen. l. 24, 25, Exod. iii. 16, when the people rejoiced, ὅτι ἐπεσκέψατο, "that God hath visited the children of Israel," iv. 31, xiii. 19, as he did then by granting them the deliverance they desired, and here by granting the Messiah they so earnestly expected, who was to save his people from their sins, and so to work redemption for them.

[34] Ver. 69. Κέρας σωτηρίας.] Either a strong or mighty salvation; the metaphor being taken from beasts, whose strength is in their horns, as Jer. xlviii. 25, Lam. ii. 3. 17. Or a royal salvation; the horn signifying royal power, Ps. cxxxii. 17, Dan. vii. 7, 8, Zech. i. 18, this relating to the setting up the kingdom of David by the Messiah, who was to reign over the house of Jacob, ver. 33. 73, so that it is eminently κέρας τοῦ Χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ, "the horn of his Christ," 1 Sam. ii. 10.

[35] Ver. 70. Τῶν ἀπ' αἰῶνος προφητῶν, Which have been since the world began.] From the beginning of ages, the promise being made to Adam, Gen. iii. 15, "that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head." So Jerusalem hath been a rebellious city, min jomath holma, ἀφ' ἡμερῶν αἰῶνος, i. e. "from time of old," Ezra iv. 15. 19, and ἡμέραι ἀρχαῖαι, the days of old, and ἔτη αἰώνια, are the same, Ps. lxxvii. 5 (see the note on Tit. i. 2).

[36] Ver. 73. To perform the oath, &c.] This oath was made to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 16, 17. Now that being "an immutable thing" (Heb. vi. 17), it could neither be hindered nor retarded by the sins of the Jews, as they say the coming of their Messiah was; and the words following, δοῦναι ἡμῖν, "that he would give us this horn of salvation," or this seed, in which all the families of the earth should be blessed, are the subject of that oath, Gen. xxii. 18, and therefore these words are rather to be joined to this verse, as in the Greek, than to be added to the beginning of the next, as it is in our translation.

(sin, death, and Satan,) might[37] serve him without fear (of them),

75 In holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life.

76 And thou, (my) child, shalt be called[38] the prophet of the Highest (God): for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord (Christ) to prepare his ways;

77 To give knowledge of salvation (i. e. of the Messiah, styled by the prophets the salvation of God: see note on ii. 30) unto his people by the remission of their sins,

78 Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the[39] dayspring from on high (or rising sun, as Christ is styled, Zech. iii. 8) hath visited us, 79 To give light (not to us only, but also) to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

80 And the child grew, and waxed strong in (the) spirit (or had the Spirit of God daily showing himself more conspicuously in him), and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing (himself) unto Israel (by the execution of his office among them).

[37] Ver. 74. Ἀφόβως λατρεύειν αὐτῷ, To serve him without fear.] That ἀφόβως here is to be joined to λατρεύειν, "to serve," is evident, as Mr. Le Clerc notes, from the harshness of the other expression, "to be delivered without fear;" and from the nature of the Christian constitution, which delivers us "from the spirit of bondage unto fear," under which the Jews were held (Rom. viii. 15), from the fear of death, the last enemy, and of Satan, who had the power of death (Heb. ii. 14, 15); God having "not now given us the spirit of fear" (2 Tim. i. 17), but that love which casts out fear (1 John iv. 18). But then, when Mr. Le Clerc adds, that at this time the Syrians, Egyptians, and other heathen nations bordering on Judea, were troublesome to the Jews; nor were they without fear of the Romans themselves, so that they could not exercise their religion ἀφόβως, without fear; and that Zacharias speaks of the Messiah as of one that was about to rescue the Jews from those dangers, in agreement with the common opinion; nor did the Spirit of prophecy undeceive him as to this matter: this is one of those bold strokes, which if that learned man could abstain from, he would give less offence to the Christians, and less advantage to the antiscripturists; for if one "filled by the Holy Ghost," and prophesying by an afflatus from him, may prophesy deceit, and promise to his fellow Jews that a temporal kingdom should be erected by the Messiah, which their common opinion made them to expect; though this opinion was not only false, but wholly opposite to the nature of Christ's kingdom, and that which chiefly hindered the Jews from receiving Christ as their Messiah: why might not others, though filled with the Holy Ghost, speak other things according to the common though false opinion of the Jews, and the Spirit of prophecy not undeceive them? And if so, where is our certainty of the rule of faith? But surely, if Christ's kingdom be spiritual, his subjects must be so, and their enemies spiritual, sin, death, and Satan; from all which we shall obtain a full deliverance by "serving God in righteousness and holiness before him all the days of our life."

[38] Ver. 76. Ὁ προφήτης ὑψίστου, The prophet of the Highest.] The God of Israel seems to have been still owned by those heathens who had any knowledge of him, as a God above all gods; by Cyrus he is styled, by way of emphasis, ὁ Θεός, "the God," Ezra i. 3, by Rahab the harlot, the God of heaven above, and in the earth beneath, Josh. ii. 11, by Cyrus, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 23, Ezra i. 2, by Darius, Ezra vi. 9, 10, by Artaxerxes, Ezra vii. 21. 23, by Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 37, by Hiram, the God that made heaven and earth, 1 Chron. ii. 12. And as in scripture he is exalted above all others, by the name of אל עליון the most high God, Gen. xiv. 18, so also he is styled by Cyrus, Esd. ii. 3, by Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 34, by Darius, Esd. vi. 31, by Artaxerxes, Esd. viii. 19. 21, by the emperor Augustus, Josephus, Antiq. lib. xvi. cap. 10, p. 561, by Tiberius, Philo, Legat. ad Caium, p. 785, E, by Tatnai and Shethar-boznai, Θεὸς ὁ μέγας, the great God, Ezra v. 8, by Artaxerxes, the highest, the greatest, and the living God, Esth. xvi. 16.

[39] Ver. 78. Ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους, The day-spring from on high hath visited us.] He who is here styled "the dayspring from on high," or rising sun, is by Zachary called, iii. 8, Ἀνατολὴ, "the rising sun, my servant;" and vi. 12, "the man whose name is Ἀνατολὴ, the rising sun:" and by Malachi, iv. 2, "the sun of righteousness," as being to arise upon the Jew and gentile, and spread his bright beams on those "who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death," Isa. ix. 2. Whence by old Simeon he is said "to be a light to lighten the gentiles," Luke ii. 32, and by the Baptist, "to be a light shining in darkness," John i. 5.—

[An addition.] It is evident to any one who inspects the Greek, that this hymn is deficient as to the full sense of it, from ver. 71 to 75, and that ποιῆσαι ἔλεος μετὰ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν, ver. 72, which we translate "to perform the mercy promised to," should rather be translated, "to perform the mercy (covenanted) with our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant;" according to the words of the blessed Virgin, "He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy (covenanted) to Abraham, and to his seed for ever:" it being therefore very usual, both in the Old and the New Testament, to supply what is defective from the preceding words, I look upon the whole following hymn to ver. 76, as a descant upon those words in the beginning, to wit, ἐπεσκέψατο, καὶ ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν, "He hath visited and redeemed his people;" and therefore fill up the sense of it thus, ἐποίησε λύτρωσιν, "He hath performed redemption to them:" viz. ver. 71, σωτηρίαν, "salvation from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us:" ἐπεσκέψατο, ver. 72, ποιῆσαι ἔλεος, "He hath visited us, to perform the mercy covenanted with our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; καὶ μνησθῆναι (ver. 73), τὸν ὅρκον, and to remember the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, τοῦ δοῦναι ἡμῖν, to give us, the heirs of the promise (Heb. vi. 17), this horn of salvation (ver. 69), this Redeemer, this deliverer out of Zion (styled ὁ ῥυόμενος, to enable us), ῥυσθέντας, thus delivered from the hands of our enemies, to serve him without fear," &c.

CHAPTER II.

1 And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, [1] that all the world should be taxed (that is, should have their names and conditions in life set down in court-rolls, according to their families).

2 (And this taxing was [2] first made (before that made) when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

3 And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἀπογράφεσθαι πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην, That all the world should be taxed.] Not only the Roman empire, but all the precedent empires were styled οἰκουμένη, "the world;" and the governors of them were said πάσης ἐπικρατῆσαι τῆς οἰκουμένης, "to rule over the whole world" (see the note on Heb. ii. 5). Hence the counsel of God against the empire of Babylon is styled his counsel, ἐπὶ τὴν ὅλην οἰκουμένην, against all the earth;" her desolation is represented as the desolation ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης, "of the whole world;" and the evil brought upon her, as evils which extended τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ὅλῃ, "to the whole world" (Isa. xiv. 17. 26).

[2] Ver. 2. Αὕτη ἡ ἀπογραφὴ πρώτη ἐγένετο ἡγεμονεύοντος τῆς

4 And Joseph also [3] went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judæa, unto [4] the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

5 To be taxed with [5] Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

6 And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7 And she brought forth her firstborn son, [6] and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

8 And there were in the same country [7] shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them (Gr. stood by them), and the [8] glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be (so) to all people.

11 For unto you is born this day in (Beth-lehem) the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you (of the truth of my words, That going thither) ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14 [9] Glory (be) to God (who dwelleth) in the highest (heavens), and (or, for by this Saviour is procured) on earth peace, (and God's) good will toward men.

15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

Συρίας Κυρηνίου, Now this taxing was first made when (or, was before that, when) Cyrenius was governor of Syria.] I dare not allow of the boldness of those critics, who for Κυρηνίου read Κυιντηλίου, or Σατυρνίνου, there being no footsteps of any such reading either in ancient writers, versions, or MSS.; and were there place for conjecture here, I would rather read πρὸ τῆς than πρώτη; as if the evangelist should say, This taxing or enrolling was before that, which was made by Cyrenius, that being so unhappy and pernicious to the Jews,* by reason of the sedition then raised, upon occasion of the tax, by Judas Gaulonites, and which, saith Josephus,* gave the rise to all their future troubles.

Now this, saith Josephus, was after Judea was made προσθήκη τῆς Συρίας, "an addition to the province of Syria;" and when Archelaus was banished, and so above ten years after that mentioned here, as done at our Saviour's birth, and fit to be thus separated from that, which was attended with those ill effects; this being in design highly salutary, that being very fatal to the Jewish nation. But neither do we need this criticism, since the words πρῶτος and πρότερος are by the LXX. oft used according to this sense: of the word πρότερον, that is beyond doubt, God saying twice ἀποστελῶ σφηκίας לפניך πρότερας σου, "I will send hornets before thee" (Exod. xxiii. 28, Josh. xxiv. 12); in which sense you will find this word above twenty times in Kircher's Concordance in the word פנה: that πρῶτος also is used in the sense of priority, we learn from these instances, πρωτότοκος ἐλῶ ἢ σύ, Heb. אני מכך "I am before thee, I am elder than thou;" καὶ ἵνα τι οὐκ ἐλογίσθη ὁ λόγος μου πρῶτος. Chald. קדימנא לי kaddemotza li, "why then was not the word first spoken to me?" cur mihi non annuntiatum est priori? 2 Sam. xix. 43; Isa. lxv. 16, "The former troubles are forgotten," Gr. ἐπιλήσονται τὴν θλῖψιν αὐτῶν τὴν πρώτην, and ver. 17, οὐ μὴ μνησθῶσι τῶν προτέρων, "They shall not remember the former:" so John i. 15. 30, ὅτι πρῶτός μου ἦν, "For he was before me;" and, xv. 18, "Know that they hated ἐμὲ πρῶτον, me before you;" 1 Cor. xiv. 30, ὁ πρῶτος, "Let the former hold his peace;" and 1 John iv. 19, "We love him, ὅτι πρῶτος, because he loved us before;" and in Aristophanes, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἂν πρώτου is interpreted ἀλλ' οὐκ ἂν πρότερον, Neph. p. 122, and so Theophylact interprets the words here, τουτέστι προτέρα ἡγεμονεύοντος, ἤγουν πρότερον ἢ ἡγεμόνευε τῆς Συρίας Κυρήνιος. As for this ἀπογραφὴ, that it was not a money tax, but an enrolling of persons according to their families and estates, see Dr. Hammond, note b.

[3] Ver. 4. Ἀνέβη δὲ καὶ Ἰωσὴφ, &c. And Joseph went up from Galilee—to the city of David called Bethlehem.] Here, first, interpreters observe, That ἀναβαίνειν, "to ascend, or go up," does not always signify to go from a lower to a higher place, but to go from one place to another, as Judg. xvi. 18. Secondly, That admirable was the providence of God in ordering this enrolment, intended by Augustus to be done before, to be deferred to this very time, that so Christ might be born in Bethlehem, according to the prediction of the prophet, Micah v. 2. And, Thirdly, That the stock and family of Christ might at that time be known and preserved in the public tables, as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Chrysostom (Hom. 8, in Matt.), testify.

[4] Εἰς πόλιν Δαβίδ, To the city of David.] That musterings and enrollings, as in other nations, so especially in Judea, were made according to their tribes, cities, and families, we learn from the sortition which Joshua made by tribes, families, and households, Josh. vii. 14. Now this could not be done, especially after their manifold dispersions, unless every one went to that city to which his family belonged.

[5] Ver. 5. Σὺν Μαριὰμ τῇ μεμνηστευμένῃ αὐτῷ γυναικὶ, With Mary his espoused wife.] She was not only espoused now, but married also to him, but is still called espoused, because Joseph used her as such, not knowing her "till she had brought forth υἱὸν αὐτῆς τὸν πρωτότοκον, her first-born son," Matt. i. 25 (see the note there). Moreover, hence it is probably collected, that the blessed Virgin Mary was also of the house and family of David, as hath been shown, note on Luke i. 27, for, if he went to Bethlehem to be enrolled because he was of the house and family of David, she must go thither for the same reason also; nam alioqui ipsa in familiæ suæ urbe profiteri debuerat;. "for otherwise," saith Grotius, "she ought to have been enrolled in the city of her own family," and not at Bethlehem: for it is said, ver. 3, "that all (men and women) went to be taxed, every one in his own city."

[6] Ver. 7. Καὶ ἐσπαργάνωσεν, &c. And she wrapped him in swaddling-clothes.] By doing this herself it is thought her labour was without the usual pangs of childbed.

[7] Ver. 8. Καὶ ποιμένες ἦσαν—φυλάσσοντες φυλακὰς τῆς νυκτὸς, &c. And there were shepherds—keeping watch over their flock, or the watches of the night over their flock.] Here note (1.) That as Abraham and David, to whom the promise of the Messiah was first made, were shepherds, so was the completion of this promise first revealed to shepherds. (2.) The watches of the night were four; the first of them is mentioned Lam. ii. 19, the second and third, Luke xii. 38, and the fourth, Matt. xiv. 25, being the morning watch, Exod. xiv. 24. These flocks being kept in the field, they watched severally in their courses, to preserve them from thieves and wild beasts, and had their little cottages erected for that purpose.

[8] Ver. 9. Καὶ ἡ δόξα Κυρίου περιέλαμψεν αὐτοὺς, And the glory of the Lord shone round about them.] i. e. Not only a great light, but such a glorious splendour as useth to represent the presence of God; of which, see note on Phil. ii. 6, Heb. i. 3, and was oft attended with a host of angels, as here, ver. 13, styled the heavenly host, 1 Kings xxii. 19, Neh. ix. 6, Ps. ciii. 20, who, as they sang together at the first creation, Job xxxviii. 7, so do they now at the redemption of the world, praising God, and saying,

[9] Ver. 14. Δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις Θεῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς εἰρήνη, ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία, Glory to God on high, and on earth peace, good-will towards men.] Here note, first, that this is not a hymn of prayer, that glory may be given to God, peace may be

---

* Κυρήνιος ἐπὶ Συρίας παρῆν ὑπὸ Καίσαρος δικαιοδότης τοῦ ἔθνους ἀπεσταλμένος, καὶ τιμητὴς τῶν οὐσιῶν γενησόμενος. Joseph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 1.

† Καὶ τῶν αὖθις κακῶν κατειληφότων ῥίζας ἐφύτευσαν. Ibid.

16 And they came with haste (thither), and found Mary, and Joseph (there), and the babe lying in a manger.

17 And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them (by the angel) concerning this child.

18 And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

19 But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20 And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard (from the angel) and seen, as it was told unto them (by him).

21 And when eight days were [10] accomplished (i. e. when the eighth day was come) for the circumcising of the child, his name was called Jesus, which was so named of (or, the name imposed on him by) the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

22 And when the days of her [11] purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord;

23 (As it is written in the law of the Lord, [12] Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;) (i. e. shall be consecrated to God, and so made holy;)

24 And to offer a sacrifice (for the woman at her purification) according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, (That he who is not able to bring a lamb, should bring) a [13] pair of turtledoves, or two young pigeons.

25 And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just (towards men) and devout (towards God, and he was) [14] waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the [15] Holy Ghost was upon him.

26 And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ.

27 And he came by (motion of) the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents (at the same time) brought in the child Jesus, to do for him (i. e. to pay the price of his redemption as being their first-born) after the custom of the law (concerning the first-born),

28 Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,

29 Lord, now lettest thou thy servant [16] depart in upon earth, &c., but rather a declaratory hymn of glory due to God for what he hath done already; for the angels are said to praise God, saying, "Glory," &c. Now praise is for what is done already. Secondly, Some, observing that καὶ is sometimes causal, and signifies for, give the sense of this hymn thus, Glory be to God; because, by the birth of this Saviour, who is our peace (Eph. ii. 14), there will be peace on earth, and the good-will of God to man is manifest. Others thus: The good-will of God to man, shown in the incarnation of our Saviour, is matter to him of the highest glory, and the foundation of our peace on earth: and because some copies read ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας, "to men of good-will;" some, following that reading, give the sense thus: Peace will be on earth to men whom God accepts. But this is less to be regarded, because all the Greek fathers (Orig. in Joh. xi. 14. Euseb. Demonst. Evang. lib. iv. cap. 0, p. 163. Epiph. Hær. 30, §. 29. Constit. Apost. lib. vii. cap. 47) read otherwise (see Examen Millii in locum).

---

[10] Ver. 21. Καὶ ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ τοῦ περιτεμεῖν τὸ παιδίον, And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child.] That is, not when the eighth day was ended, but when it was come: so ver. 22, so Acts ii. 1, ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι, "When the day of pentecost was come." Now Christ was circumcised, that he might wear the badge of a child of Abraham, and that he might be "made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law" (Gal. iv. 4), καὶ ἐκλήθη, and then was his name called Jesus. So καὶ signifies, Gen. xxiv. 41, xxviii. 21, xxxi. 8, xlii. 34. 38, Exod. vii. 9, Lev. iv. 3. 14. 23. 28, Numb. v. 15. 21, Deut. vi. 21, viii. 10, Josh. i. 15, xxiv. 20, 1 Sam. i. 11, Matt. ix. 7, Luke ii. 28.

[11] Ver. 22. Καὶ ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ αὐτῆς—αὐτῶν, And when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished.] I formerly thought that the reading "her purification," and not the purification of them both, was to be retained, that only being agreeable to the law, and to the version of the LXX., because the law of purification belonged only to the mother, who till that time remained ἐν αἵματι ἀκαθάρτῳ αὐτῆς, "in the blood of her impurity," till the days καθάρσεως αὐτῆς, "of her purifying were fulfilled" (Lev. xii. 4, 5): then, saith the text, shall she bring her offering, "and the priest ἐξιλάσεται περὶ αὐτῆς καὶ καθαριεῖ αὐτὴν, shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood: this is the law for her that hath borne a male or female" (ver. 7, 8). But I have since found cause to judge otherwise: for that the ancient reading was αὐτῶν is evident from these words of Origen,* Si scriptum esset propter purgationem ejus; i. e. Mariæ, nihil quæstionis oriretur, et audacter diceremus Mariam quæ homo erat, purgatione indiguisse post partum; nunc verò in eo quod ait, dies purgationis eorum, non videtur unum significare, sed alterum, sive plures. So also read St. Jerome, Con. Helvid. tom. ii. f. 7, lit. A, Euthymius, Theophylact, and the Syriac version; nor is there any fear of ascribing any moral impurity to the holy Jesus by allowing this reading, since this purgation imports only a compliance with a ceremonial law, in order to their admittance into the congregation of God's people, to which Christ, being "made of a woman, made under the law," was to submit, that he might "fulfil all righteousness:" on which account also he was made relatively holy, by being consecrated to the Lord, according to the law concerning every male that openeth the womb, ver. 23.

[12] Ver. 23. Πᾶν ἄρσεν διανοῖγον μήτραν, Every male that openeth the womb.] The words of the law concerning every male that openeth the womb, being here applied to the blessed virgin, bringing forth her first-born, sufficiently confirm the assertion of Irenæus,* Tertullian,† Origen,‡ and others of the fathers, cited by Petavius, that she brought forth Christ after the usual manner; and yet the contrary opinion, though built upon fables, and superstitious imaginations, and spurious authorities, prevailed almost generally in the fourth and fifth centuries (see the treatise of Traditions, par. i. cap. 1, §. 4).

[13] Ver. 24. Καὶ δοῦναι θυσίαν—ζεῦγος τρυγόνων, And to offer ——a pair of turtles.] This being the oblation appointed only for the poor (Lev. xii. 6. 9), discovers the poverty of Joseph and Mary, that they could not reach to a lamb of the first year; the offering which they who had ability were to make.

[14] Ver. 25. Προσδεχόμενος τὴν παράκλησιν τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, Waiting for the consolation of Israel.] This was the familiar phrase they used when they spake of the coming of the Messiah; to see those days being, in their way of speaking, "to see the consolation of Israel," or "the years of the consolation to come." See the Targum on Isa. iv. 3, on Jer. xxxi. 6, and 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, and they were wont, saith Dr. Lightfoot, to swear "by their desire to see this consolation."

[15] Καὶ Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἦν ἐπ' αὐτόν, And the Holy Ghost was upon him.] i. e. He had received the gift of prophecy; for that having ceased four hundred years, began to dawn again at the birth of the Messiah in some pious persons, as Zachary, Simeon, and Anna the daughter of Phanuel.

[16] Ver. 29. Νῦν ἀπολύεις, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart.] Here Grotius well notes, that ἀπολύειν and

---

* Hom. 14 in Lucam, f. 100, D.

* Fuit filius hominis purus, puram aperiens vulvam. Iren. lib. iv. cap. 66.

† Virgo quantùm à viro, non virgo quantùm à partû—— peperit enim ipsa patefacti corporis lege. Tertul. de Carne Christi, cap. 23.

‡ Matris Domini eo tempore vulva reserata est, quâ partus editus. Orig. Hom. 13, in Levit. tom. ii. f. 101.

peace, (seeing it hath been with me) according to thy word:

30 For mine eyes have seen (the Messiah, called) thy [17] salvation,

31 Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

32 [18] A light to lighten the Gentiles, and (to be) the glory of thy people Israel.

33 And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him.

34 And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary, his mother, Behold, this child is set for [19] the fall (of many through infidelity) and (for the) rising again (or up) of many in Israel (through faith in him); and for a sign which shall be spoken against (by the scribes and pharisees, and rulers of the people, who shall blaspheme his person, contradict his doctrine, and set him up as their mark to shoot at);

35 (Yea, a sword (that of martyrdom) shall pierce through thy own soul also,) (and this contradiction of him, God in his wisdom shall permit,) that the thoughts of many hearts (i. e. the inward tempers and dispositions of many) may be revealed.

36 And there was (also) one [20] Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser: (and) she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity;

37 And she was a widow of about fourscore and four years (old), which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day (at evening and morning service).

38 And she coming in that instant (that the child was there) gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and [21] spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem (as the person from whom it was to be expected).

39 And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord (and had fled into Egypt for the safety of the child, after the death of Herod), they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

40 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, (being) filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him (i. e. the favour of God was with him).

41 Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover.

ἀπόλυσις, both in sacred and profane authors, signify to depart out of this life, or to die; as when Abraham says, ἐγὼ ἀπολύομαι ἄτεκνος, "I die childless," Gen. xv. 2; ἀπελύθη Ααρὼν, "Aaron died," Numb. xx. 29. Thus Tobit prays, "Command my spirit to be taken from me, ὅπως ἀπολυθῶ, that I may be dissolved;" ἐπίταξον ἐπιλυθῆναί με, Tobit iii. 5; and Sarah saith, εἶπον ἀπολύσαί με ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, ver. 13, "I desired God to take me from the earth;" and one of the seven children saith to the tyrant, σὺ ἐκ τοῦ παρόντος ἡμᾶς ζῆν ἀπολύεις, "Thou takest away our present life." Thus, saith Lycon,* this is my testament, μετὰ τὴν ἐμὴν ἀπόλυσιν, "after my dissolution." Themistius† notes that it was customary to some to call death ἀπόλυσις, and to say of them that they did ἀπολύειν. So Theophrastus‡ calls death ἀπόλυσις; and Heraclitus§ saith, "Perhaps the soul presageth ἀπόλυσιν αὐτῆς, her dissolution;" all which expressions confirm the old traditions of the distinction of the soul from the body, and her continuance in a state of separation.

[17] Ver. 30. Ὅτι εἶδον ὀφθαλμοί μου τὸ σωτήριόν σου, For mine eyes have seen thy salvation.] So the deliverance God sent to his people is called σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the salvation of God," Ps. xcviii. 3; how much more may the salvation sent by Christ be styled, as it is emphatically, ἡ σωτηρία, "the salvation," Isa. xlix. 6, lii. 7, yea, σωτηρία παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, "salvation from God," ver. 10?

[18] Ver. 32. Φῶς εἰς ἀποκάλυψιν ἐθνῶν· A light to enlighten the gentiles.] It is wonderful that after so many clear prophecies in the Old Testament of the calling of the gentiles, the Jews should have been all so blind as to imagine God had no kindness for them (Acts x. 45, xi. 18).

[19] Ver. 34. Οὗτος κεῖται εἰς πτῶσιν καὶ ἀνάστασιν, This child is set for the fall and rising of many in Israel.] Doubtless God's first design in sending his Son into the world was that "through him the world might be saved" (John iii. 16), and he was designed especially "to save his people from their sins" and be "a horn of salvation" to them (Luke i. 69). But to persons who were worldly-minded and had no relish for spiritual things, which was the case of the generality of the Jews, who were much given to the flesh, as Tacitus observes of them, who were puffed up with a vain conceit of their own wisdom and singular piety, full of vain-glory, greedy of empire and applause, and affected with worldly pomp and grandeur, as were the scribes and pharisees, and rulers of the people, he was to be "a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence," because these things obstructed their reception of his doctrine and spiritual kingdom, so different from that which they expected; and to discover who had hearts well disposed to embrace his doctrine upon conviction, and who by those prejudices and corrupt affections would shut their eyes against the light, is here "to manifest the thoughts of men's hearts" by their actions. When Simeon adds, καὶ σοῦ δὲ αὐτῆς ψυχὴν διελεύσεται ῥομφαία, "And a sword shall pass through thine own soul;" though grief is said to pierce as with a sword, both in profane authors and in the psalmist, xlii. 10, yet, seeing this comes not up to the height of this expression, this seemeth rather to respect her martyrdom, or being taken away by death, saith Epiphanius, ὡς γέγραπται, "As it is written, A sword shall pass through her soul, or herself" (Hæres. 78, §. 32).

[20] Ver. 36, 37. Anna, a prophetess, of the tribe of Aser, a widow of about eighty-four years, καὶ οὐκ ἀφίστατο ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, and she departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.] Note, (1.) that this fourscore and four years must be reckoned, not from the beginning of her widowhood, but of her life, otherwise she must be a very decrepit woman, not able to fast after this manner; and (2.) she is said to be always in the temple, because she was so constantly there at the hours of prayer; so Aaron and his sons are bid "not to go out of the door of the tabernacle" (Lev. x. 7), i. e. not to do it during the time of their ministry.

[21] Ver. 38. Ἐλάλει περὶ αὐτοῦ πᾶσι τοῖς προσδεχομένοις λύτρωσιν ἐν Ἰερουσαλὴμ, She spake of him to all that looked for redemption in Jerusalem.] This being the time when the whole Jewish nation was looking for the "consolation of Israel," ver. 25, for "redemption" here, and even the scribes and pharisees "expected that the kingdom of God should immediately appear;" and this being, say Tacitus* and Suetonius,† "the old and constant opinion which had obtained through the east; ut eo tempore Judææ profecti rerum potirentur, that some, or rather one, out of Judea should obtain the government of the world," as Josephus hath it, we may be certain that the Jews of that age did so interpret the prophecies concerning their Messiah, as agreeing only to the time when our Christ did come, and when Simeon was assured by the Holy Ghost that this Messiah was to come. This, saith Josephus,‡ πολλοὶ τῶν σοφῶν, "many of our wise men gathered from the sacred oracles." And indeed this seemed so certain, that though they rejected our Jesus, yet the fable soon obtained among them, that their Messiah was or might be come, though for a season he lay hid, by reason of their sins; as we learn from Trypho,§ and the Targum‖ of Jonathan.

Ver. 40. Καὶ ἐκραταιοῦτο πνεύματι.] Here, saith Dr. Mills, πνεύματι adjectum est ex hujus evangelio (cap. i. 80. Proleg. p. 44), not only against the reading of Theophylact, and

---

* Apud Laert. lib. v. p. 348. † Apud Stob. serm. 119.
‡ Hist. Plant. 8. 17. § Ad Amph. ep. 1.

* Tacit. Hist. lib. v. p. 621. † Suet. in Vespas. cap. 4.
‡ De Bell. Jud. lib. vii. p. 961.
§ Χριστὸς δὲ εἰ καὶ γεγένηται καὶ ἔστι που, ἄγνωστος ἐστι, &c. Tryph. Dial. p. 226.
‖ Tu autem, Christe Israelis, qui absconditus es propter peccata cœtûs, Sion ibi venturum est regnum. In Mich.

42 And when he was twelve years old, they went up (with him) to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast.

43 And when they had fulfilled the (seven) days (of the feast), as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they, supposing him to have been in the company, (they) went a day's journey; and (then) they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him.

46 And it came to pass, that [22] after three days (the third day) they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.

47 And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers.

48 And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing.

49 And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's [23] business (Gr. in my Father's house)?

50 And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them.

51 And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart.

52 And Jesus [24] increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man.

---

all the versions, but against the fierce dispute betwixt the Arians and the orthodox about these words; the Arians objecting that he, who "increased in spirit," could not be God; some of the orthodox answering, that this related only to Christ's human nature, viz. Athanasius, Epiphanius, Ambrose, Cyril Alex., and Fulgentius; and others, that he thus waxed strong in spirit, not in his own person, but in the person of the church, or in the demonstration of the Spirit; as Origen, and many others cited by Maldonate on the place, but none of them questioning this reading; for Titus Bostrensis, the only father produced by the doctor, is by Dr. Cave proved to be spurious.

[22] Μεθ' ἡμέρας τρεῖς, After three days they found him.] i. e. The third day, for they journeyed one day, returned to Jerusalem the second, and found him the third.

Ver. 47. Ἐπὶ τῇ συνέσει καὶ ἀποκρίσεσιν αὐτοῦ, At his understanding and answers.] As the word ἀποκρίνομαι often signifies only "to speak," both in the Old and New Testament, and so is often used by the Septuagint, to answer to dabar in the Hebrew; so also doth the noun ἀπόκρισις in these words, Deut. i. 22, "They shall bring us word;" Sept. ἀπόκρισιν. Here then being no mention of any questions put to Christ, or of any answers he gave to the doctors, the words may be rendered thus, "They were amazed at his understanding and speeches."

[23] Ver. 49. Ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Πατρός μου δεῖ εἶναί με, I ought to be in my Father's house.] So Origen, Dionysius, Alexandrinus, Titus Bostrensis, Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact. See Dr. Hammond here: for as ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Διὸς, in Josephus, is, "to be in the temple of Jupiter," so to be ἐν τοῖς τοῦ Πατρός μου, must signify to be "in the temple of his Father," where they found him.

[24] Ver. 52. Καὶ Ἰησοῦς προέκοπτε σοφίᾳ, &c. And Jesus increased in wisdom, and stature, &c.] Vain hence is the conclusion of Woltzogenius, that Christ could not be God, because he cannot wax strong in spirit, either by advancing in the perfections of his mind, or by the teachings of the Spirit, as Christ did, or increase in wisdom; this being spoken of Christ according to his human nature; these being, say the fathers,* τῆς ἀνθρωπότητος διηγήματα, "the indications of humanity," and are to be understood κατ' ἀνθρωπίνην ψυχήν, "according to his human soul:" and though the Λόγος was united to the human soul from his conception, yet might the divinity, or the Holy Ghost manifest itself to the human nature as it thought fit, and by degrees insinuate into it its gifts and illuminations, as St. Luke here teacheth; so that we need not say with others, Christ did not really increase in wisdom, but only seemed to others so to do: for seeing the evangelist here joins three things together, his increase in age and stature, in favour with men, and wisdom; as he increased truly and literally in the two first, so seems he to have done also as to his wisdom, and the endowments of his mind.

* Epiph. Anchor. §. 38. Orig. tom. i. in Matt. p. 330.

CHAPTER III.

1 Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor (or procurator) of Judæa, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip (being) tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias (being) the tetrarch (i. e. governor of a fourth division of the kingdom, named) of (the city of Abyla) Abilene,

2 [1] Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests (to whom was committed the civil and ecclesiastical government of the Jews according to their laws; Annas being the ruler of the people, Acts xxiii. 5, and Caiaphas the father of the Sanhedrin), [2] the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness.

3 And he (having received this commission from

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. Ἐπ' ἀρχιερέων Ἄννα καὶ Καϊάφα, Annas and Caiaphas being high-priests.] It is a rule of the Jews, that they do not constitute two high-priests together; and yet we have not only mention in Josephus* of Jonathan and Ananias, Ananus and Jesus, as high-priests at the same time, but also of a στάσις τῶν ἀρχιερέων, "a contention of the high-priests against the priests and chief Jews;" and mention of one Jesus, as γεραίτατος τῶν ἀρχιερέων,† "the eldest of the high-priests," after Ananus. There were then doubtless many that bore that name, even all that ever had been so; as we still call them colonels and captains who once bore those offices; and especially those of them who were rulers in the great Sanhedrin, their supreme civil judicature. But then they being many, why are these two only mentioned as high-priests? to this Mr. Selden answers, That as in the first verse St. Luke had given an account of their external government by tetrarchs and procurators, so in this he gives an account of that civil and sacred government, which was left to be managed by themselves, by the Sanhedrin and high-priest; and because Annas was then their nasi, or prince of the Sanhedrin, whence he is called the "ruler of the people," Acts xxiii. 5, and Caiaphas was high-priest that year, and, as he conjectures, the "father of the Sanhedrin;" therefore they only are here named, as having the chief authority, civil and sacred, in their hands.

* De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 21, lib. iv. cap. 18.

† Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6, p. 696. De Bello Jud. lib. iv. cap. 16, p. 878.

[2] Ἐγένετο ῥῆμα Θεοῦ ἐπὶ Ἰωάννην, The word of God came to John.] These are the very words used of the prophets of the Old Testament: τὸ ῥῆμα Θεοῦ ὃ ἐγένετο ἐπὶ Ἱερεμίαν, "The word of the Lord came, or which came, to Jeremiah," i. 2, iv. 11; καὶ ἐγένετο λόγος Κυρίου πρὸς Ἰεζεκιήλ, "And the word of the Lord came to Ezekiel," i. 3, vi. 1, vii. 1, xii. 1, xiii.

God) came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for (procuring to them) the remission of (their) sins;

4 (And he came) As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying (of him, xl. 3, This is) The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight (for the coming of the king Messiah).

5 [3] Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the (ways that are) crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth (as it useth to be when great kings take a journey into any part of their dominions);

6 [4] And all flesh shall see (the Messiah, who is emphatically styled, Isa. xlix. 6, liii. 7. 10) the salvation of God (see note on ii. 30).

7 Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, (but more especially to the pharisees and sadducees, Matt. iii. 7,) [5] O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath (which is) to come (upon this nation)?

8 Bring forth therefore (if you indeed desire to escape this wrath) fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not (or be not willing, in lieu of it) to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father (and so by that have a sufficient right to the blessings of the Messiah, promised to him and his seed): for I say unto you, That (if ye repent not, you are to be cut off; and think not that you being so, no children of Abraham will be found to whom this promise can be made good; for) God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham (see note on Matt. iii. 9).

9 And (to excite you to this repentance, know that even) now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is (to be) hewn down, and cast into the fire.

10 And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then (to prevent or avert this ruin)?

11 He answereth and saith unto them, He [6] that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise (i. e. he prescribed to them an extensive charity to all that wanted what they had to spare).

12 Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do (to escape this wrath)?

13 And he saith unto them, [7] Exact no more than that which is appointed you (to receive).

14 And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? and he said unto them, Do [8] violence to no man, neither [9] accuse any (man) falsely (or, oppress no man); and be content with your wages.

15 And as the people were in expectation (of the

1, xiv. 2. 12; and so it is said of the rest. Shall we then think, that this forerunner of the Messiah spake "the word of the Lord," as did the prophets of the Old Testament; and that the prophets and apostles of the New Testament, on whom the Holy Ghost descended, to enable them to teach the mind of Christ to all future ages of the church, should not speak and write what they delivered as the rule of faith, by like divine assistance?

[3] Ver. 5. Πᾶσα φάραγξ πληρωθήσεται, καὶ πᾶν ὄρος καὶ βουνὸς ταπεινωθήσεται, Every valley shall be filled up, and every mountain and hill shall be made low.] These words refer to a known custom of great kings, who, when they travelled any whither, δδοποιοὶ, waymen were sent before them to make plain their way, by filling up deep places, and levelling those that were high, and smoothing the places that were rough, and making straight the crooked. So Josephus saith, That when Titus came to the wars,* προῆγον μὲν βασιλικοὶ, καὶ πᾶν τὸ συμμαχικὸν, ἐν οἷς δδοποιοὶ, "there went before him all the royal aids, and all the military men, and those who planed the ways." Thus the Targum upon Canticles saith, "The cloud went before the Israelites in the wilderness three days' journey, to take down the hills, and fill up the valleys before them," according to that of the psalmist, lxxviii. 4, rendered by the Greek δδοποιήσατε τῷ ἐπιβεβηκότι ἐπὶ τῶν δυσμῶν· and by Ainsworth, from the Hebrew sollu, "make a highway for him that rideth in the deserts," as the word δυσμὸς signifies, Numb. xxxiii. 48. 50, xxxvi. 13, Deut. i. 1, Josh v. 10, 2 Sam. iv. 7: and this also do they still expect, when they return from their captivity. Thus Baruch saith, "God hath commanded, or appointed, ταπεινοῦσθαι πᾶν ὄρος ὑψηλὸν, καὶ φαράγγας πληροῦσθαι εἰς ὁμαλισμὸν τῆς γῆς, that every high mountain and bank of long continuance should be cast down, and every valley filled up, that Israel may go safely in the glory of God," v. 7. So that as, when God led his people out of captivity, through the great desert to the land of promise, a highway was made for him, riding in the cloud before them; so, when Christ comes to proclaim liberty to the captives to sin and Satan, and lead them through the wilderness of this world to the heavenly Canaan, a voice is again heard in the wilderness, saying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," &c.

[4] Ver. 6. Καὶ ὄψεται πᾶσα σὰρξ τὸ σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.] These words are cited from Isa. lii. 10, in which chapter the ancient Jews allow, that the prophet is speaking of the Messiah; the Targum on the thirteenth verse saying, "Behold, my servant the Messiah shall be exalted;" and the apostle applying the seventh verse to the preaching of the gospel, Rom. x. 15.

[5] Ver. 7. Γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, O generation of vipers.] What in St. Matthew, iii. 7, is said to be spoken to the pharisees and sadducees, is here said to be spoken τοῖς ὄχλοις, "to the multitude," coming forth to be baptized; partly, because it was spoken to the pharisees mixed with the multitude, and in their audience, and agreed to them, not only as being generally of one of these two sects, but being also an adulterous generation, degenerated from the seed of Abraham to be the seed of the serpent.

[6] Ver. 11. Ὁ ἔχων δύο χιτῶνας μεταδότω τῷ μὴ ἔχοντι, καὶ ὁ ἔχων βρώματα ὁμοίως ποιείτω, He that hath two coats, let him give to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.] The Baptist doth not here make it unlawful to have two coats; for Peter had two, Acts xii. 8, and Paul likewise, 2 Tim. iv. 13, but only saith that he that hath one coat, which his brother wants, and he at present doth not, should rather give it to him, than suffer him to be in want; and he that hath βρώματα περισσεύοντα, "meats above what he himself needs," should, in like cases, feed his hungry brother with it; teaching us, that it is not lawful for us to abound in those things which our brother wants, when we have sufficient both to relieve his and our own necessities. Nor could this precept seem hard to those philosophers, who thought that ἐνὶ χρῆσθαι χιτῶνι τοῦ δεῖσθαι δυοῖν προτιμητέον, "that it was better to use one coat, than to want two" (Stob. Ser. 1. p. 18).

[7] Ver. 13. Μηδὲν πλέον παρὰ τὸ διατεταγμένον, ὑμῖν πράσσετε, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.] The office of the publicans was to collect the tribute-money, which in Greek is πράττειν φόρους as in Thucydides and Athenæus: and their name was infamous, saith Strabo, διὰ τὴν πλεονεξίαν, for their exacting more than they ought: saith Tacitus, ob illicitas exactiones, for their unjust exactions (see the note on Matt. ix. 11). And hence we see the reason and the pertinency of his exhortation; it being not to be expected, that any one should begin to be good till he ceaseth to be unjust.

[8] Ver. 14. Μηδένα διασείσετε, Do violence to no man.] This word primarily signifies to shake, and terrify by shaking, and so to force money from any, by fear of what they may suffer if they do not give it; and secondarily, calumniis insectari, to calumniate a person, as in Aristophanes, in Equit. ver. 203, which is to shake his reputation, and so to render him obnoxious to a mulct.

[9] Μηδὲ συκοφαντήσητε, Nor accuse any man falsely.] This word answers to the Hebrew פשע, and signifies not only promised Messiah), and (so) all men mused in their hearts of John, [10] whether he were the Christ, or not;

---

* De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 6, p. 907, B.

16 John answered (their surmises by) saying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water (and by that baptism call you to repentance, to fit you to believe on the Messiah, who will suddenly reveal himself); but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose (i. e. whose servant I am not worthy to be): he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire (i. e. in the symbol of fire):

17 (And he will come as one) whose fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable.

18 And many other (such) things in his exhortation preached he unto the people.

19 But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, 20 Added yet this above (them) all, that he shut up John in prison.

21 Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened,

22 And the Holy Ghost descended (hovering) in [11] a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased.

23 And Jesus himself (when he was baptized) [12] began to be about thirty years of age, being (as (it) was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli,

24 Which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi, which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Janna, which was the son of Joseph,

25 Which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Amos, which was the son of Naum, which was the son of Esli, which was the son of Nagge,

26 Which was the son of Maath, which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Semei, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Juda,

27 Which was the son of Joanna, which was the son of Rhesa, which was the son of Zorobabel, which was the son of Salathiel, which was the son of Neri,

28 Which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Addi, which was the son of Cosam, which was the son of Elmodam, which was the son of Er,

29 Which was the son of Jose, which was the son of Eliezer, which was the son of Jorim, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi,

30 Which was the son of Simeon, which was the son of Juda, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Jonan, which was the son of Eliakim,

31 Which was the son of Melea, which was the son of Menan, which was the son of Mattatha, which was the son of Nathan, which was the son of David,

32 Which was the son of Jesse, which was the son of Obed, which was the son of Booz, which was the son of Salmon, which was the son of Naasson,

33 Which was the son of Aminadab, which was the

---

to accuse falsely, but to circumvent and oppress. So Gen. xliii. 18, "We are brought in τοῦ συκοφαντῆσαι ἡμᾶς that he may oppress us;" Job xxxv. 9, ἀπὸ πλήθους συκοφαντουμένων κράζονται, "They shall cry for the multitude of oppressors:" so Ps. lxxii. 4, "He shall break in pieces, συκοφάντην, the oppressor;" Ps. cxix. 122, μὴ συκοφαντησάτωσάν με "Let not the proud oppress me;" and, ver. 134, "Deliver me ἀπὸ συκοφαντίας, from the oppression of men;" Prov. xiv. 31, ὁ συκοφαντῶν πένητα, "He that oppresseth the poor, despiseth his Maker:" so xxviii. 3. 16, and Eccles. iv. 1, "I saw πάσας τὰς συκοφαντίας, all the oppressions that are under the sun, and beheld the tears τῶν συκοφαντουμένων, of those that were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and in the hands τῶν συκοφαντούντων, of those who did oppress them, there was strength."

[10] Ver. 15. Μήποτε αὐτὸς εἴη ὁ Χριστὸς, Whether or if so be, he were the Christ.] Of this sense of μήποτε, see note on 2 Tim. 25.

[11] Ver. 22. Καὶ καταβῆναι τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα σωματικῷ εἴδει, ὡσεὶ περιστερὰν ἐπ' αὐτὸν, &c. And the Holy Ghost descended upon him in a bodily shape as a dove.] viz. As a dove uses to descend upon any thing, hovering, and overshadowing it: for that this relates not to the bodily shape, as if that had resembled a dove, but to the descent of that bodily shape, is evident from this, that had it related to the first, it should have been ὡσεὶ περιστερᾶς, "as of a dove," not ὡσεὶ περιστερὰν, "as a dove:" so Acts ii. 3, there appeared to them "cloven tongues, ὡσει πυρὸς, as of fire." This bodily shape seems rather to have been that of light, or a bright cloud, in which God usually appeared under the Old Testament, and from which he spake, and which is usually called ἡ δόξα τοῦ Κυρίου, "the glory of the Lord." So when the voice here mentioned was uttered a second time, it is expressly said, that ἡ νεφέλη φωτεινὴ ἐπεσκίασεν αὐτοὺς, "a bright cloud overshadowed or hovered over them, and a voice came from the cloud," Matt. xvii. 5, or, as St. Peter saith, "from the magnificent glory," 2 Pet. i. 17, and this Holy Spirit might here be said to descend after the manner of a dove, because that bird was anciently by the Jews looked upon as the symbol of the Holy Spirit: so Cant. ii. 12, "The voice of the turtle is heard;" that is, saith the Chaldee paraphrast, קל דרוחא דקודשא, "the voice of the Holy Ghost."

[12] Ver. 23. Καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἀρχόμενος, And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age.] i. e. He was entering into his thirtieth year, when he was thus baptized, and consecrated to his office. It is therefore certain from the first verse, that in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, our Lord was but beginning or entering upon the thirtieth year of his age: and then he suffering, as all agree, in the nineteenth year of Tiberius, could be but thirty-three years and a half when he was crucified. I know the critics say, that ἦν ἀρχόμενος ὢν, is a tautology; but ὢν belongs not to this, but the following sentence; ὢν ὡς ἐνομίζετο, "being as was supposed, the son of Joseph." They add, that it is not rightly said ἄρχομαι ἐτῶν τριάκοντα· but if ἀρχόμενος τέχνης, i. e. ἀπὸ τέχνης, in Plato,* be good Greek, why may not ἀρχόμενος ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, i. e. ἀπ' ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, be good Greek in St. Luke? Moreover, let ἀρχόμενος here be put absolutely for Christ's beginning his office, and the sense will run thus, That Jesus was then about thirty years of age when he began his office. And if we consider that this was the age appointed for the Levites to begin the service of the sanctuary; that John the Baptist began his office at that age; and that all the ancients† do agree in this, That our Lord entered on his office in the thirtieth year of his age; yea, that Irenæus and Eusebius justify this Greek against our critics; and some of them take this for granted upon the authority of St. Luke; all this will justify our version. And then impossible is it to be true, that our Lord suffered in the thirty-eighth; or, as Irenæus saith, lived either till fifty, or between forty and fifty, as he proves from the testimony of the disciples of St. John in Asia, declaring, id ipsum eis tradidisse Johannem; "they did this, not by conjecture from the countenance of Christ, but by tradition from the mouth of the apostle John;" yea that some of them heard, hæc eadem, "the very same things from the mouth of other apostles, et testantur de hujusmodi relatione, and give son of Aram, which was the son of Esrom, which was the son of Phares, which was the son of Juda,

---

* De Legib.

† Ἦν δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἐρχόμενος ἐπὶ τὸ βάπτισμα ὡς ἐτῶν Λ'. Clem. Al. Strom. p. 341. Ad baptismum venit nondum qui triginta annos impleverat, sed qui inceperat esse tanquam triginta annorum. Iren. lib. ii. cap. 39. Ἀρχόμενος ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἐπὶ τὸ Ἰωάννου βάπτισμα παραγίνεται. Euseb. lib. i. cap. 10. Et ipse erat Jesus incipiens. Orig. Hom. 28, in Lucam. Ἐβαπτίσθη ἐν τῷ Ἰορδάνῳ ποτάμῳ τοῦ τριακόστου ἔτους τῆς ἐν σαρκὶ γενέσεως, κατὰ Λοῦκαν, ἦν δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἀρχόμενος ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν Λ'. Epiph. Hær. 51, n. 24. Vide Ignat. Ep. Interp. ad Trull. §. 10. Hieron. in Ezek. cap. 1. Theoph. in locum.

34 Which was the son of Jacob, which was the son of Isaac, which was the son of Abraham, which was the son of Thara, which was the son of Nachor,

35 Which was the son of Saruch, which was the son of Ragau, which was the son of Phalec, which was the son of Heber, which was the son of Sala,

36 Which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad, which was the son of Sem, which was the son of Noe, which was the son of Lamech,

37 Which was the son of Mathusala, which was the son of Enoch, which was the son of Jared, which was the son of Maleleel, which was the son of Cainan, 38 Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God.

in testimony to this relation." Now Irenæus had laid down this as certain that Christ per omnem venit ætatem "passed through all ages, that he might sanctify them all, i. e. infants, little ones, boys, young men, et seniores, and old men: he therefore," saith he, "was made, infantibus infans, sanctificans infantes, an infant to sanctify them of that age; juvenibus juvenis, to young men, whose age," saith he, "begins at thirty, and extends to forty, he was made a young man, being baptized in his thirtieth year;" and this he proves from scripture, and the confessions of the Valentinians and Gnostics, against whom he disputes. He goes on, and says, sic et senior senioribus, "so was he made an old man for the sake of them; for," saith he, "from the fortieth or fiftieth year, man's life declines in ætatem seniorem, in old age; quam habens Dominus noster docebat, sicut evangelium et omnes seniores testantur, to which age our Lord having obtained, taught, as the gospel and all the seniors testify"—the gospel in those words of the Jews, "Thou art not yet fifty years old" (John viii. 57), and the seniors, as having received it by tradition from the mouth of John and of other apostles. Who sees not now, that Irenæus both doth, and by his gradation from infants to young men, and from young men to old, was obliged to assert, that our Lord taught after the age of forty, if not till he was fifty years old; and that this was the tradition he speaks of, as received by the elders from the mouth of St. John and other apostles?

CHAPTER IV.

1 And Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2 Being [1] forty days (invisibly) tempted of the devil. And in those days he did eat nothing (nor was he hungry): and (but) when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3 And (then) the devil (visibly appearing) said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone (this heap of stones) that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, (There is no necessity of that, for) [2] it is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every (thing appointed to feed him by the) word of God.

5 And (then) the devil, taking him up into an high mountain, shewed unto him (as in a map) all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, All this power (i. e. the power of these kingdoms) will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7 If thou therefore wilt [3] worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9 And (then) he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle (or battlement) of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

10 For it is written (Ps. xci. 11), He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus answering said unto him, It is said, Thou shalt not tempt (i. e. distrust) the Lord thy God (as I should do, if, after a voice from heaven, saying to me, Thou art my beloved Son, I should require any farther experiment of that truth).

13 And when the devil had ended all the (se) temptation (s), he departed from him for a [4] season.

14 ¶ And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 2. Ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα πειραζόμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου—καὶ συντελεσθεισῶν αὐτῶν, ὕστερον ἐπείνασε, Being forty days tempted of the devil,—and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.] He was tempted of the devil only inwardly, and invisibly, during those forty days: afterward by Satan appearing in a visible shape: for the devil came unto him, Matt. iv. 3, and departed from him, ver. 11, and tempted him to worship before him. Moreover, seeing Christ did eat nothing during those forty days and nights, they who, during the like number of days, abstain only from flesh, eating fish, and drinking wine plentifully on those days, do nothing less than imitate the example of Christ here: and seeing they cannot, for forty days, οὐδὲν φάγειν, "eat nothing," they can be no more obliged in this to imitate our Lord than Elias (see the note on Matt. iv. 2).

[2] Ver. 4. Γέγραπται, ὅτι οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ παντὶ ῥήματι Θεοῦ, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.] The words in Deut. viii. 3, run thus: "He suffered thee to hunger, and then fed thee with manna" (a light aerial sort of food), giving thee as great strength and vigour from that, as from the bread and flesh thou didst eat in Egypt, and this he did, providing it miraculously every day, "that he might teach thee (by this example) that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word of God;" i. e. every thing that he shall please to command to give him nourishment; so that though I am now hungry, as they were, I have no need to work a miracle myself to satisfy my hunger, seeing I know, by this example, that God, though he suffer his children to want bread, yet will command some other thing to preserve them alive, and will himself rather work a miracle, than they shall want nourishment.

[3] Ver. 7. Σὺ ἐὰν προσκυνήσῃς ἐνώπιόν μου, If thou wilt worship before me: ἐὰν πεσὼν προσκυνήσῃς μοι, If thou wilt fall down, and worship me, Matt. iv. 9.] Hence Dr. Lightfoot collects, that it is the same thing to worship the devil, and before the devil: and so, in like manner, to worship before an image, and to worship an image: and this indeed is true, when that before which we worship is the object, and the reason of the worship, as in this case it would have been; but it is otherwise, when that before which we worship is only a circumstance; as when the Jews worshipped before the ark, or sanctuary, as Ps. xcix. 5. 9, cxxxii. 7, the object of that worship being God, the ark only the circumstance, to wit, the place of his peculiar residence; and much less, when it is a mere accidental circumstance; as when old Jacob worshipped God upon his bed, and so bowed down to some part of it.

Ver. 8. Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου Σατανᾶ.] See the defence of this reading, Examen Millii.

[4] Ver. 13. Ἀπέστη ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἄχρι καιροῦ, He departed from into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And (for) he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to Nazareth, [6] where he had been brought up: and, as [6] his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and [7] stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened (i. e. unfolded) the book (the roll), he found the place where it was written (Isa. lxi. 1),

18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he (the Father) hath anointed me (with the Holy Ghost at my baptism, iii. 22) to [8] preach the gospel to the poor (in spirit); he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, (who are in bondage to the law of sin and death, Rom. vii. 23,) and recovering of sight to the blind (Jews and pharisees, who have eyes and see not, John ix. 40, 41, and the blind gentiles, Rom. ii. 19), and to set at liberty them that are bruised (with the weight of their sins),

19 To preach the [9] acceptable year of the Lord (the year of jubilee and rest, which was on that account very acceptable to servants and debtors).

20 And he closed (or, folded up) the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened upon him.

21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled (which hath been read) in your ears.

22 And (when he had expounded to them how it was fulfilled) all bare him witness (that so it was), and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he said unto them, You will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy (own) country (i. e. do that at home, which it is famed thou hast done at Capernaum).

24 And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is (so well) accepted in his own country (as elsewhere, they finding exceptions against him either for his parentage, ver. 22, or his kindred, Mark vi. 3, 4, or his habitation, John i. 47, or his country, John vii. 52).

25 But I tell you of a truth, (you deserve for your infidelity to be dealt with as Elias dealt with the Israelites; for) many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heavens were shut up [10] three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And (as in the case of Elisha; for) many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and (but) none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian (even so now the gentiles are more worthy, to whom I should be sent, than you Jews).

28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these words, [11] were filled with wrath,

29 And rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill whereon their

---

him for a season.] Till the time of his passion; for then only he returned, John xiv. 30, and that was his hour, Luke xxii. 53. And if this enemy of mankind omitted no season of tempting Christ, we have reason to believe he will omit no opportunity of tempting us.

[5] Ver. 16. Καὶ ἦλθεν εἰς τὴν Ναζαρὲθ οὗ ἦν τεθραμμένος, And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up.] That he, by his example, might teach us, saith Theophylact, first to teach and to do good to those of our own family and abode.

[6] Καὶ ἰσὴλθε κατὰ τὸ εἰωδὸς αὐτῷ ἐν τῇ ἡμέρα τῶν σαββάτων εἰς τὴν συναγωγήν· And, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day.] That the synagogue-worship was then loaded with rites and ceremonies of human invention, and that the manners of those who met there were much corrupted, no man, who is acquainted with the scriptures and the Jewish history, can doubt; and yet Christ, with his disciples, go customarily to these synagogues, as members of the church of Nazareth, every sabbath-day; and he joins with them in their worship, condemning, by his example, the niceness of our sectaries.

[7] Καὶ ἀνὲστη ἀναγνῶναι, Ver. 20, καὶ πτύξας τὸ βιβλίον ἐκάθισε, And stood up to read.——And, closing the book, he sat down.] Here Christ conforms to the ceremonies of the Jewish doctors, who, in honour of the law and the prophets, stood up when they read them because, as the law was given with reverence, so it is, say they, to be handled with reverence: and he sits down to teach; because it was the custom in their schools and synagogues to do so. So the Targum on Judg. ii. 6, "The wise men returned to sit in the houses of the synagogues with their heads covered, and to teach the people the words of the law:" so again, ver. 9. That this was our Lord's constant custom, when he taught the people, we learn from his own words, "I sat daily teaching in the temple," Matt. xxvi. 55, and from his practice throughout the evangelists (see Luke ii. 46, John viii. 2). Moreover, the book which he read in, being made of skins of parchment sewed to each other, and joined to a stick, upon which it was rolled; he that was to read unrolled it, till he came to the place where he was to read, and this was, ἀναπτύξαι, "to unfold it;" and when he had done reading he did, πτύξαι, "roll it up again," and gave it to the chasan, styled here, ὑπηρέτης, "the minister" of the synagogue.

[8] Ver. 18. Εὐαγγελίζεσθαι πτωχοῖς, To preach the gospel to the poor.] To the humble, or poor in spirit, Matt. v. 3 (see note on Matt. xi. 5), ἰάσασθαι τοὺς συντετριμμένους τὴν καρδίαν, "to heal the broken hearted;" i. e. those who are so pierced in heart, and contrite in spirit for their sins, as to repent, and turn from them, Isa. lvii. 15, Ps. xxxiv. 18, li. 17, κηρύξαι αἰχμαλώτοις ἄφεσιν, "to preach deliverance to the captives," to the Jews in bondage to the law, Gal. iv. 9, to both Jew and gentile, under captivity to the law of sin, Rom. vii. 23, "and recovering of sight to the blind" Jews and pharisees, who had eyes, and saw not, John ix. 40, 41, and the blind gentiles, Rom. ii. 19 (see the note there); ἀποστεῖλαι τεθραυσμένους ἐν ἀφέσει, "to set at liberty those that are bruised" with the chain of their sins (see Examen Millii here).

[9] Ver. 19. Κηρύξαι ἐνιαυτὸν Κυρίου δεκτὸν, To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.] The year of jubilee and rest, when liberty was to be proclaimed throughout the land to all the inhabitants of it (Lev. xxv. 8); when debts were to be remitted, and possessions restored to the poor, the Hebrew servant of the Jew set free, and he that was sold to a sojourner was to be redeemed (ibid.). Hence this jubilee is by Josephus rendered ἐλευθερία, liberty, and by Aquila, ἄφεσις, remission; and that the Jews themselves thought this jubilee did signify a spiritual redemption, is proved by Voisin de Jubilæo, lib. i. cap. 2: and the forty-second and sixty-first of Isaiah being, by the Jews themselves, interpreted of the Messiah (see Targum on Isa. xlii. 1, and Synopsis on lxi. 1), well might our Lord say, ver. 21, "This day is the scripture fulfilled in your ears."

Ver. 23. That do, ἐν τῇ πατρίδι σου, in thy own country.] For though Nazareth and Capernaum were both in Galilee, yet Nazareth was in the lower Galilee; whereas Capernaum, being a Decapolitan city, was in Galilee of the gentiles, that is, in upper Galilee.

[10] Ver. 25. Ἐπὶ ἔτη τρία καὶ μῆνας ἕξ, When heaven was shut up three years and six months.] For Elias tarried a year at the brook Kerith (1 Kings xvii. 7), and then in the middle of the third year came to Ahab (1 Kings xviii. 1).

[11] Ver. 28. Καὶ ἐπλήσθησαν πάντες θυμοῦ, And they were all filled with wrath.] When they heard Christ declaring them unworthy of the benefit of those miracles, which he had done at Capernaum; and, by the instances of the Sido-city was built, that they might cast him down headlong (thence).

30 But he passing (miraculously) through the midst of them went his way, 31 And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath days.

32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for his word was (attended) with (the) [12] power (of miracles to confirm it).

33 ¶ And (for) in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and (he) cried out with a loud voice,

34 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us (before the time)? I know thee who thou art: (viz.) the Holy One of God.

35 And (but) Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36 And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a (wonderful) word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

37 And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

38 ¶ And he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house. And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her.

39 And he stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her: and immediately she arose and ministered unto them.

40 ¶ Now when the sun was setting (and so the sabbath was ending), all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41 And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And he rebuking them suffered them not to speak (refusing to receive testimony from, though they spake the truth): for they knew that he was Christ.

42 And when it was day, he departed and went into a desert place: and the people sought him, and came unto him, and (would have) stayed him, that he should not depart from them.

43 And (but) he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent.

44 And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

---

nian widow, and Naaman the Syrian, plainly intimating, that this gospel should chiefly be received among the gentiles, they, in a furious zeal, seek to destroy him; but he, by passing unseen through the midst of them, or restraining their violence, gave an instance of his divine power.

[12] Ver. 32. Ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ ἦν ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ, For his word was with power.] That is, either as being confirmed by his miracles; so "with great power gave the apostles testimony to the resurrection of the Lord," Acts iv. 33, Mark xvi. 20 (see note on Matt. vii. 29), or he taught them as a prophet sent from God, and delivering his message to them, which, from the time of the prophets, had not been done; whence it was usually said by the Jews of the times of Ezra, "Hitherto the prophets, the wise men follow" (see 1 Macc. ii. 27, xiv. 41), and of a difficult question, "We leave it undecided till a prophet shall arise" (1 Macc. iv. 46), and when Christ came, they say, "A great prophet is risen up among us" (Luke vii. 16), and inquire of him, ποίᾳ ἐξουσίᾳ, "by what (extraordinary) authority he did these things, and who gave him that authority" (Matt. xxi. 23).

CHAPTER V.

1 And it came to pass, that, as the people pressed upon him to hear the word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennesaret,

2 And saw two ships standing by (the shore of) the lake: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing (Gr. having washed) their nets.

3 And he entered into one of the ships, (viz. that) which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out (the ship) a little from the land. And (this being done) he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4 Now when he had left speaking (to the people), he said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught (of fishes).

5 And Simon answering said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net.

6 And when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake.

7 And they (finding this) beckoned unto their partners, which were (now) in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so (full) that they began to sink (with the weight of the fishes).

8 When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a [1] sinful man, O Lord, (and so unworthy of the presence of so divine a person as I perceive thou art.

9 This he spake from a great sense of the majesty of Christ;) for he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken:

10 And so was also James, and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon (and were in the other ship). And (but) Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men (i. e. shalt be instrumental to draw men into the net of the gospel, see Acts ii. 41).

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all (their other business), and followed him.

12 ¶ And it came to pass, when he was in (the confines of) a [2] certain city, (to wit, Capernaum, Mark ii. 1,) behold a man (was there) full of leprosy: who seeing Jesus fell on his face, and besought him, say-

---

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 8. Ἔξελθε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, ὅτι ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλός εἰμι, Κύριε, Depart from me: for I am a sinful man, O Lord.] Not in that famous sense in which the sinner is joined with publicans and heathens, and denotes one who hath cast off the fear of God, and given up himself to wickedness; for this his fear was an indication of a religious mind. Moreover, hence it is probable, that St. Peter had higher apprehensions of Christ than of a mere man, seeing, of old, men were only struck with such a fear from the presence of the divine majesty, or of some angels delivering their message in his name (Gen. xxxii. 30, Judg. vi. 22, xiii. 22, Isa. vi. 5).

[2] Ver. 12. Ἐν τῇ μιᾷ τῶν πόλεων, When he was in one of the cities.] i. e. When he came down from the mount (Matt. viii. 2), being about to enter into Capernaum (into which he entered after he had healed the leper, Mark ii. 1), a leper meets him in the field of that city, the law not admitting such to come into a city; he is therefore here said to be in the city, as being in the field near to it: so, to be in Jericho, ing, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and [3] touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to tell no man: but (or, and said to him) go, and shew thyself to the priest (first), and [4] offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them (that thou art cleansed from thy leprosy).

15 But so much the more (did he divulge it, so that thence) went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear (him), and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16 ¶ And he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed (Gr. he was withdrawn into the wilderness, and praying).

17 And it came to pass on a certain day, as (that) he was teaching, that (Gr. and) there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judæa, and Jerusalem: and the [5] power of the Lord was present (with him) to heal them (who came to be healed of their infirmities, ver. 15).

18 ¶ And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in (to the house), and to lay him before him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the housetop, and let him down through the tiling with his couch into the midst (of the people) before Jesus.

20 And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

21 And the scribes and Pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this which speaketh (these) blasphemies (making himself God? for) Who can forgive sins, but God alone?

22 But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he answering said unto them, (For) what (cause) reason ye (thus) in your hearts?

23 (For) Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say (effectually, that which is a certain indication that the punishment of them is remitted, viz.) Rise up and walk?

24 But (I choose to say the first) that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive sins, (then) (he said unto the sick of the palsy,) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go into thine house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

26 And they (who saw this) were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to day.

27 ¶ And after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named [6] Levi (or Matthew), sitting at the receipt of custom: and he said unto him, Follow me.

28 And he left all (his toll-business, and) rose up (instantly), and followed him.

29 And Levi made him a great feast in his own house: and there was a great company of publicans and of others that sat down with them (and his disciples, Matt. ix. 10).

30 But [7] their scribes and Pharisees (i. e. the scribes and pharisees of that place) murmured against his

---

Josh. v. 13, is to be in the field of Jericho, or by Jericho; and to smite them begibajon, "in Gibeon," Josh. x. 10, is to do it in the fields of Gibeon. This leper came to him, πεσὼν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον, "bowing down with his face to the earth," saith Luke here; προσκυνῶν, "worshipping," Matt. viii. 2, γονυπετῶν, "bending his knees," Mark i. 40: so Luke viii. 41, Jairus came to him, πεσὼν παρὰ πόδας, "falling down at his feet;" προσκυνῶν, Matt. ix. 18.

[3] Ver. 13. Ἥψατο αὐτοῦ, He touched him.] To show that he, being a prophet, was not obliged to observe the punctilios of the ceremonial law.

[4] Ver. 14. Offer for thy cleansing.] Pious here is the note of Theophylact, that μετ' ὃ τις καθαρίσθη, ἄξιός ἐστι προσφέρειν τὸ ὦρον, "then only is a man fit to offer to God his gift, when he is cleansed from his sin." Hence the unclean person, who came into the sanctuary, was, by the law of Moses, to be cut off from his people, Numb. xix. 20.

[5] Ver. 17. Καὶ δύναμις Κυρίου ἦν εἰς τὸ ἰᾶσθαι αὐτούς, And the power of the Lord was present to heal them.] Who came to be healed of their infirmities, ver. 15, not the pharisees and lawyers, who had no faith to be healed, and perhaps no need of it; it being a known rule, that pronouns often do refer not to the immediate precedent, but the remoter noun. So Matt. xi. 1, he taught, ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν αὐτῶν, not in the cities of his disciples, for they had none, but of the Jews: so Ps. xcix. 8, "Thou answeredst them," Moses and Aaron, ver. 6, and "tookest vengeance on their inventions," i. e. the inventions of the people (see Matt. xii. 9, Acts xv. 11; see Glass. de Pronom. lib. iii. Tr. 2, Can. 10).

[6] Ver. 27. Τελώνην ὀνόματι Λευΐν, A publican named Levi.] That this Levi was not the same with Matthew, mentioned Matt. ix. 9, Grotius, and those who follow him, conceive, (1.) because Matthew never calls himself Levi, nor doth Mark (ii. 14) or Luke ever call Levi Matthew: to which argument St. Jerome* answers, that Matthew, out of modesty, and in remembrance of his former life, styles himself "Matthew the publican" (x. 3); but Mark and Luke never call him the publican, but mention his more honourable name, ne antiquæ conversationis recordantes, "lest they should seem to reproach him by remembering his former conversation;" it is enough that St. Mark calls his Levi "the son of Alpheus," as Matthew is in church history said to be the son of Alpheus. As therefore Saul, after his conversion, is almost always called Paul, so might Matthew the publican by these two evangelists be called Levi. (2.) He adds, that Heracleon, who was near to the apostles' time, reckons Matthew, and Philip, and Thomas, and Levi, among them who had no occasion to own Christ before princes, or suffer martyrdom on that account, as Clemens of Alexandria testifies.* I answer there is no regard to be had to this Valentinian heretic, especially when he contradicts the opinion of all the ancients, in saying that Matthew, and Philip, and Thomas did not suffer martyrdom (see Dr. Cave in the Life of Matthew, p. 134, of Philip, p. 125, of St. Thomas, p. 139). Against him we oppose the Apostolical Constitutions, introducing him speaking thus, Ἐγὼ Ματθαῖος ὃς καὶ Λευΐ, "I Matthew, named also Levi;" the testimonies of St. Jerome and Sophonius, in voce Matthæus, and others of the ancients. See Cotelerius in Constit. Apost. p. 315. (3.) He adds, that when Celsus objected that our Lord gathered publicans, Origen† confesses that Matthew was a publican, but he denies that Levi was so. To this it is answered, that the same Origen, in his preface to the Epistles to the Romans, and in the place cited in the catenæ on St. Matthew, says expressly, that he whom St. Matthew styles by the name of "Matthew the publican, is by St. Luke called Levi" (see another answer in Cotelerius, ibid.). In a word, sure it must be in vain to object against a history in Mark and Luke, where he is called Levi, so exactly agreeing with that in St. Matthew, where he is called Matthew, that not a circumstantial difference can be discerned: insomuch that even Mr. Clerc, who, in his annotations, quarrels with Dr. Hammond for following an opinion confuted by Grotius, in his Harmony, is himself forced to do what he corrects Dr. Hammond for doing. His words are these, Vidit publicanum cui nomen erat Levi, seu Matthæus. Moreover, that this Levi, being called, instantly left all, and followed Christ, both Mark and Luke attest. Now this is the note of an apostle, Matt. xix. 27 (see also Examen var. Lect. Mill. in Matt. x. 3).

[7] Ver. 30. Ἐγόγγυζον οἱ γραμματεῖς αὐτῶν, Their scribes

---

* In Matt. ix. 9.

* Strom. iv. p. 501 D. 502. † Lib. i. contr. Celsum, p. 48.

disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?

31 And Jesus answering said unto them, (This is done, because they most need my help, for) they that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick.

32 (And this suits best with the reason of my advent, for) I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

33 ¶ And they (who followed John, Matt. ix. 14) said unto him, Why do (we) the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees; but thine eat and drink (on our fasting-days)?

34 And he said unto them, Can ye (reasonably) make the children of the bridechamber (or guests of a marriage-feast) fast, while the bridegroom is with them?

35 But the days will (shortly) come, when the bridegroom shall (by death) be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

36 ¶ And he spake also a parable unto them (relating to the same purpose; saying,) No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old (garment); if otherwise, then both the new maketh a (fresh) rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old.

37 And (in like manner) no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else (or, if so) the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles will perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles; and (so) both are preserved. (Even so my young disciples, taken not from the schools, but from their fishing-trades, must not presently be put to severe tasks, for which they are not yet strong enough, lest they should be discouraged, and fall off from me.)

39 No man also having drunk old wine (which is smooth, grateful to the palate, and agreeable to the stomach,) straightway desireth (to exchange it for) new (which is harsh to the palate, and, by reason of the lee in it, offensive to the stomach): for he saith, The [8] old is better. (Even so my raw disciples must not be presently engaged in those austerities of life, which may be offensive to them at the first, but, by degrees, be brought to observe them.) and pharisees murmured, saying, διατί; Why eateth?] i. e. The scribes and pharisees, not the guests that sat down μετ' αὐτῶν, "with them," ver. 29 (for then they must themselves have been guilty of the same crime for which they murmured against Christ), but the scribes of the Jews; for what is here "their scribes," is absolutely, Mark ii. 16, "the scribes." So "in their cities," Matt. xi. 1, is "in the cities," not of Christ's disciples, but of the Jews; and he entered εἰς συναγωγὴν αὐτῶν, "into a synagogue of theirs," xii. 9, i. e. not into a synagogue of the pharisees to whom he spake, ver. 2, but of the Jews. Schmidius also here observes, that διατί here is as much as, "by what privilege?" for εἰς τί and ἵνα τί denote the final cause, but διατί the antecedent reason.

---

[8] Ver. 39. Ὁ παλαιὸς χρηστότερός ἐστιν, For he saith, The old is better.] So Cicero, de Amicitiis, Veterrimæ quæquæ, ut ea vina quæ vetustatem ferunt, esse debent suavissimæ, "Old friendships, as old wines, are to be deemed the sweetest."

Ver. 36. Οὐ συμφωνεῖ τὸ ἐπίβλημα. See this reading defended, Examen Millii.

CHAPTER VI.

1 And it came to pass on the [1] second sabbath after the first (Gr. on the first sabbath after the second day of the feast of unleavened bread), that he (Christ) went through the corn fields; and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat (of them), rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which (it) is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?

3 And Jesus answering them said, Have ye not read so much as this, (which is a case parallel to that of my disciples, viz.) what David did, when himself was an hungred, and they which were with him?

4 How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him; which (bread by the letter of the law) it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?

5 And (moreover) he said unto them, That the Son man is Lord also of the sabbath (i. e. he who came to save men's lives must have power, in such cases as concern the good and welfare of men, to dispense with the strict rest required by the law of the sabbath).

6 And it came to pass also on another sabbath, that he entered into the synagogue and taught: and there was a man whose right hand was withered.

7 And the scribes and Pharisees (having asked him, whether it was lawful to heal on the sabbath-day, Matt. xii. 10) watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath day; that (if he did so) they might find an accusation against him (as one that kept not the sabbath-day, John ix. 6).

8 But he knew their thoughts (or reasonings), and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst (of the synagogue). And he arose and stood forth.

9 Then said Jesus unto them, I will (also) ask you one thing; (viz.) Is it lawful on the sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it?

10 And looking round about upon them all (and receiving no answer from any of them), he said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11 And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus (i. e. how they might destroy or punish him with death, for violating the sabbath, Matt. ix. 14).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, It came to pass in the second sabbath after the first.] This should have been rendered, "in the first sabbath after the second day of the passover;" for after the first day of the passover, which was a sabbath, Exod. xii. 16, ἀπὸ τῆς ἐπαύριον τῶν σαββάτων, "from the morrow after the sabbath" (that is, saith Josephus, τῇ δευτέρᾳ ἀζύμων ἡμέρᾳ, from the second day of unleavened bread, that is, the sixteenth of the month, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 10), ye shall count unto you seven sabbaths complete (Lev. xxiii. 15), reckoning that day for the first of the first week, which was therefore called δευτερόπρωτον, the first sabbath from this second day of unleavened bread; the second was called δευτεροδεύτερον, the second sabbath from that day; and the third δευτεροτρίτον, the third sabbath from that second day; and so on till they came to the seventh sabbath from that day, i. e. to the forty-ninth day, which was the day of pentecost. The mention of the seven sabbaths to be numbered, with relation to this second day, answers all that Grotius objects against this exposition; see Petavius on Epiphan. Hær. 30, n. 32, where Epiphanius expressly says, our Lord's disciples did this, τῷ σαββάτῳ τῷ μετὰ τὴν ἡμέραν τῶν ἀζύμων, "on the sabbath fol-

12 And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in [2] prayer to God (Gr. ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, in God's house of prayer, or in a synagogue dedicated to his service).

13 ¶ And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and (out) of them he chose twelve (to be his constant attendants, and witnesses of his actions, John xv. 27), whom also he named apostles; (i. e. persons whom he would send to preach in his name to the Jews first, and after to the gentiles;

14 Viz.) Simon, (whom he also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15 Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alphæus, and Simon called Zelotes, 16 And Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

17 ¶ And he came down with them, and stood in the plain, and (with him were) the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judæa and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases;

18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

19 And the whole multitude (of them who came to be healed) sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all (who thus touched him).

20 ¶ And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, [3] Blessed be ye (who are) poor (in spirit): for your's is the kingdom of God.

21 Blessed are ye that hunger now (after righteousness): for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now (with that godly sorrow which works repentance): for ye shall (find that comfort which will make you) laugh.

22 Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil (doers), for the Son of man's sake (i. e. for the sake of the Messiah, styled by Daniel the Son of man, Dan. vii. 14).

23 Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, your reward is great in heaven (your case being like, in this, to those holy prophets who are now in heaven): for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.

24 But woe unto you that are rich (and by those riches are indisposed to follow me)! for ye have received your consolation (in this life).

25 Woe unto you that are full (and therefore do not hunger after righteousness)! for ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now (when you are called to repentance, to fit you to receive the gospel)! for ye shall mourn and weep (when ye find yourselves excluded from the kingdom of God, Matt. viii. 12).

26 Woe unto you, when [4] all (the) men (of the world) speak well of you (this being a sign that you imitate those false prophets, who spake things pleasing to the people)! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

27 ¶ But I say unto you which hear (me), Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, 28 Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

29 And unto him that smiteth thee (with his palm) on the one cheek offer (i. e. permit) also the other (to be smitten); and him that taketh away thy cloke forbid not to take thy coat also (rather than contend by force, or before the magistrate, about supportable injuries).

---

lowing the day of unleavened bread;" which, if understood of the second day, is the truth. And if pentecost was called "the feast of harvest," Exod. xxiii. 16 (as Bochart, Hieroz. par. i. lib. iii. cap. 13. Nicholas Fuller, Miscell. lib. iii. cap. 11. Mr. Mede, Disc. 46, p. 355. Dr. Lightfoot, and the Jews say, see Temple Serv. cap. 14. sect. 4), because then their barley and wheat-harvest were gathered in, this feast could not be pentecost, as Grotius conjectures; because then the corn must be gathered in: and therefore could not be plucked by Christ's disciples in the field.

[2] Ver. 12. Ἦν διανυκτερεύων ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, And he continued all night in prayer to God.] Or, in a house of prayer of God, or in a synagogue dedicated to the service of God: though synagogues were not, as far as we can find, of divine institution; yet, being necessary for the performance of God's service, they, by the psalmist, are styled the houses of God, Ps. lxxiv. 9, and here a house of prayer of God: and in like manner may our churches, for the same reason, be styled the houses of God: for, as "the mountain of God," Exod. iii. 1, iv. 27, "the bread of God," Lev. xxi. 17, "the lamp of God," 1 Sam. iii. 3, "the vessels of God," 1 Chron. xxii. 19, "The altar of God," Ps. xliii. 4, "the sacrifices of God," Ps. li. 17, "the gifts of God," Luke xxi. 4, "the ministers of God," 2 Cor. vi. 4, "the tabernacle of God," 2 Chron. i. 3, "the temple of God," Matt. xxi. 12, and "the synagogue of God," Ps. lxxiv. 8, are all things consecrated or appropriated to God's service; so προσευχὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ must, in all reason, be a house of prayer of God; whence it is called τόπος προσευχῆς, "a place of prayer," 1 Macc. iii. 46. And so the word προσευχὴ is certainly used, Acts xvi. 13, and by Philo* in his oration against Flaccus, where he complains that, αἱ προσευχαὶ, "their houses for prayer were pulled down;" and there was no place left, in which they might worship God, or pray for Cæsar: and by Josephus,† who says, the multitude was gathered, εἰς τὴν προσευχὴν, "into the house of prayer:" and so Juvenal‡ speaks of the mendicant Jew, Ede ubi consistas, in quâ te quæro proseuchâ? "In what house of prayer may I find thee begging," or asking alms?

[3] Ver. 20—26. Μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοὶ, &c. Blessed are the poor, the hungry, the mourners, for the Son of man's sake.] Here being but four of the eight beatitudes mentioned Matt. v., and not one of these being delivered in the same words which are there used; as it is certain this must be another sermon than that on the mount, and spoken to other auditors; so it is only probable, not necessary, that they should bear the same sense. However, it seems necessary that what is here added to the last clause should agree to them all, Blessed are they who patiently suffer poverty and hunger, grief and persecution, for the sake of Christ, that they may obtain that kingdom and that reward in heaven he hath promised to his faithful servants; or, that the poor should be the poor in spirit; the hungry, those that hunger after righteousness; and the mourners, those that sorrow to repentance after a godly manner (2 Cor. vii. 9), for to those that are otherwise poor and hungry, and upon other accounts, these blessings cannot always belong; and the opposite woes, which seem to favour the first interpretation of these four beatitudes, must be restrained to them, who, by the love of riches, pleasures, and plentiful provisions, are kept from preparing themselves by repentance for, and so from, entering into Christ's kingdom, or choosing that narrow and afflictive way which leadeth unto life eternal: for even here the very Christian sufferer is to rejoice, and leap for joy; and the rich man, who is ready, when Christ calleth, to leave all, and follow him, who is rich in good works, ready to give, and willing to distribute, layeth up for himself a good foundation against the time to come (1 Tim. vi. 19).

[4] Ver. 26. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσι πάντες οἱ ἄνθρωποι, Woe unto you when all men speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.] For he that will be pleasing to all, must speak things grateful to all, and do what they like; now that cannot be good, which is grateful to bad men: thus the false prophets, whom the Jews commended, spake to them "smooth things" (Isa. xxx. 10); they "prophesied lies," because "the people loved to have it so;" they "prophesied of peace, when war was at hand,"

---

* P. 752, F. 760, E. † De Vitâ suâ, p. 1020, C, E.
‡ Sat. 3, v. 215.

30 Give to every (indigent) man that asketh of thee (what he wants, and thou canst spare); and of him [5] that taketh away thy goods ask them not again (in a judiciary manner; see note on Matt. v. 42: or urge not the restoring them to the detriment of charity, or so as to quarrel, or show a contentious spirit about them).

31 And as ye would that men should do to you (in equal circumstances), do ye also to them likewise.

32 For if [6] ye love them (only) which love you, what thank have ye? (i. e. what reward can ye expect for that which even the worst of men will do? ver. 35,) for sinners also love those that love them.

33 And if ye do good to them (only) which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

34 And if ye lend to them (only) of whom ye hope to receive (what ye lend), what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

35 But love ye your enemies, and do good, and [7] lend, (though) hoping for nothing again; and your reward (in heaven) shall be great, and ye shall (show yourselves to) be the children of the Highest (God): for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

36 Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

37 Judge not (unnecessarily), and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive (others their trespasses), and ye shall be forgiven (yours):

38 Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall [8] men give (by God's disposal, or δώσουσι, shall be given; see the note,) into your bosom. For with the same (liberal) measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you (by God) again (2 Cor. ix. 6. 8. 10).

[To this sermon of Christ the evangelist here adds other things spoken by Christ at other times; but tending to engage men to observe these precepts, or to take off their exceptions against them.]

39 And (first, against the pharisees, who, being covetous, derided these charitable doctrines, Luke xvi. 14) he spake a parable unto them (that heard him, say-

Jer. vi. 14, viii. 11, xiv. 13, Ezek. xiii. 10. 16, Zech. x. 2, they "strengthened the hand of evil-doers," Jer. xxiii. 14, and "daubed with untempered mortar," Ezek. xiii. 10, 11 (see Examen Millii).

[5] Ver. 30. From him that taketh away what is thine, μὴ ἀπαίτει, ask it not again.] i. e. If any man will not ask, but without asking will take away, or detain from thee what is thine; ask it not again, either in a judiciary manner (see note on Matt. v. 40. 42), or urge not the restoring of it, to the detriment of charity or mercy; they who would interpret these words thus, From him that received any loan from thee, exact no usury, put a double force upon the words: for (1.) our Saviour doth not here say, as he doth Matt. v. 42, τὸν θέλοντα ἀπό σου δανείσασθαι, "From him that would borrow of thee, turn not away;" but ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴροντος τὰ σά, "from him that will take up, or take away that which is thine, ask it not again." Now he that is willing to borrow of me, owns that which he would borrow to be mine, and so cannot be willing at the same time to take away what is mine. (2.) Whereas they render the word ἀπαιτεῖν, "to exact usury," and for this sense appeal to the use of it in Nehemiah; it is evident, that there it hath no such sense, but plainly relates to their unjust exactions of debts and services of their brethren against the law, requiring them to remit those debts and services every seventh year, saying, "Every seventh year thou shalt make a release; and this is the manner of the release: Every creditor that lendeth any thing to his neighbour, πᾶν χρέος ἴδιον ὃ ὀφείλει σοι ὁ πλησίον, every debt of thine thy neighbour oweth thee, thou shalt release; and of thy brother, οὐκ ἀπαιτήσεις, thou shalt not exact it; of a foreigner, ἀπαιτήσεις, thou mayest exact it; but to thy brother thou shalt remit thy debt," Deut. xv. 1—3, and so for services, Exod. xxi. 2, Jer. xxxiv. 14. Accordingly, saith Nehemiah, let us remit the seventh year, שבעת כל יד ומשא καὶ ἀπαίτησον χειρός, and the exaction of every debt: so Deut. xv. 2, כל בעל משה ידו כל πᾶν χρέος ἴδιον, "All thy own debt thou shalt remit." When therefore he saith, v. 10, "Let us remit, I pray you τὴν ἀπαίτησιν ταύτην, this exaction," he must refer to the same debt; and when he says, ver. 7, ἀπαιτήσει, "Should a man exact of his brother, ἃ ὑμεῖς ἀπαιτεῖτε, the things which ye exact?" he plainly refers to the sin taxed in the Jews by Jeremy, ch. xxxiv., of demanding service of them again after these years of release were expired: so also Ecclus. xx. 14, 15, "The gift of a fool will do thee no good, σήμερον δανιεῖ, καὶ αὔριον ἀπαιτήσει, he will lend to-day, and ask it again to-morrow." And, lastly, if the first words referred to Matt. v. 42, μὴ ἀπαιτεῖν here must be the same with μὴ ἀποστρέφειν there, which sure hath no relation to usury.

[6] Ver. 32. Εἰ ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, ποῖα ὑμῖν χάρις; &c. If you love them that love you, what thank have you? for sinners also love those that love them.] Here saith Theophylact, If you only love them that love you, you are only like to sinners and heathens; but if you love those that do evil to you, you are like to God; Ποῖον οὖν θέλετε ὅμοιοι εἶναι, τοῦ ἁμαρτωλοῦ ἢ τοῦ Θεοῦ; "Which therefore should you choose, to be like sinners, or like God?"

[7] Ver. 35. Καὶ δανείζετε, μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, And lend, hoping for nothing again.] They who render these words, "making no man to despair," put a double force upon the words; first, reading μηδένα, "no man," for μηδέν, "nothing;" and, secondly, interpreting ἀπελπίζειν, "to make to despair;" of which sense they afford no instance. They who render them "distrusting nothing," i. e. not fearing lest thou shouldest be reduced to poverty by this charity, give a sense alien from the text; for when they say, "The heathens give and lend, knowing that they may want themselves;" this they add of their own to the words of Christ, who says, "They lend, ἵνα ἀπολαβῶσι τὰ ἴσα, that they may receive as much again;" and they reject that sense the text doth manifestly require: for so run the preceding words, "If ye lend to those, παρ' ὧν ἐλπίζετε ἀπολαβεῖν, from whom you hope to receive again (what you lend), what thank have you? for, do not sinners lend to sinners to receive, or that they may receive, what they lend again?" But lend not you on so mean account, but even when you hope to receive nothing back from them you lend to. And whereas we are told, that the word ἀπελπίζω bears no such sense; I hope the credit of Stephanus, who says the word is rightly rendered by the Vulgar, nihil inde sperantes; and of Casaubon, who saith, ἀπελπίζειν is ἀπὸ τοῦ πράγματος τι ἐλπίζειν, "to hope for something from a person, or matter;" may be sufficient to support the credit of our translation; especially when we read in the life of Solon, that he made no law against parricides, διὰ τὸ ἀπελπίσαι, "because he did not expect" that such a crime would be committed (Diog. Laert. lib. i. p. 17), and find this like composition in the word ἀπέχειν, when it signifies, ἀπό τινος ἔχειν, to receive, ἀπογεύομαι, ἀπό τινος γεύομαι, "I taste of something;" and in the word ἀπεσθίειν, which, saith Athenæus, is used, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀπό τινος ἐσθίειν, for "to eat of any thing." But (2.) where it is rendered by them, to despair, or to be desperate, the sense is still the same, viz. to be μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, "hoping for nothing from men," and therefore repairing to God. This is the plain sense of it, Isa. xxix., Jud. ix. 12, Esth. xiv. 19: so Ecclus. xxii. 21, xxvii. 21, μὴ ἀπελπίζῃς, is, "Be not without hope of reconciliation with thy friend;" and why then may not the word here signify, "Being without hope of receiving any thing again from him you lend to?" So that it is not to be doubted, that these words are well rendered by Chrysostom,* πρὸς ὧν οὐ προσδοκῶμεν ἀπολαμβάνειν, "From whom you expect not to receive."

[8] Ver. 38. Δώσουσι.] Impersonaliter interpretandum, "Is to be rendered impersonally," saith Grotius (see note on xvi. 9).

---

* In Mat. v. 42.

ing), Can the blind (pharisees) lead the blind (in the right way? if they commit themselves to their conduct,) shall they not both fall into the ditch?

40 (And to remove that fear of poverty, reproach, and injuries, to which this practice might subject his followers, he said,) The disciple is not (to expect to be) above his master: but every one that [9] is perfect (i. e. fully instructed in these rules) shall (will) be as his master (i. e. conformed to him in these things; see Matt. x. 25).

41 And (as for his command not to judge others, when we ourselves are greater criminals, his question upon that occasion was,) why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

42 Either (or) how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly (how) to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

43 For (then only wilt thou be fit to direct others well, both by example and by words, when thou art good thyself, seeing) a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44 For every tree is known by his own fruit. For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of (or, from) a bramble bush gather they grapes.

45 (And, in like manner,) a good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of (from) the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

46 ¶ And (he said, moreover) why (to what purpose) call ye me Lord, Lord (i. e. profess yourselves my disciples), and (yet) do not the things which I say (ye ought to do)?

47 (For) Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like:

48 He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and (yet) could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock.

49 But he that heareth (my words), and doeth (them) not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

[9] Ver. 40. Κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς ἔσται ὡς διδάσκαλος αὐτοῦ, But every one that is perfect, shall (will) be as his master.] Καταρτίζεσθαι is to be perfect in any thing, Matt. xxi. 16, 2 Cor. xiii. 9. 11, Heb. xiii. 21, 1 Pet. v. 10. The sense therefore of these words may be this, The disciple that perfectly understands the rules, and sees the example, of his master, will think it is his business to tread exactly in his steps, to do and suffer, upon like occasions, as his master did, and so he will be like his master.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Now when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people, he entered into Capernaum.

2 And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear unto him, was sick, and ready to die (or near death).

3 And when he (the centurion) heard (the fame) of Jesus, he [1] sent unto him (some of) the elders of the Jews, beseeching him (by them) that he would come and heal his servant.

4 And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly (or earnestly), saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this (i. e. he well deserved this kindness):

5 For he loveth our nation (and religion,) and (as an indication of this) he hath built us a synagogue.

6 Then Jesus went with them. And when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent (other) friends to him, saying unto him, Lord, trouble not thyself (to come to me): for I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof:

7 Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word (thy pleasure), and (I believe) my servant shall be healed.

8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it. (How much more then canst thou, who hast all power in heaven and earth, command one of the ministering spirits to come and heal my servant.)

9 When Jesus heard these things, he marvelled at him, and turned him (self) about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel; (and upon this faith, he told them that were sent, it should be as he believed, Matt. viii. 13.)

10 And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

11 ¶ And it came to pass the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now when he came high to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, (who was) the only son of his mother, and she was a widow (and so by the loss of this son left destitute): and much people of the city was with her (to attend the funeral).

13 And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not.

14 And (then) he came and touched the bier: and

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 3. Ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτὸν πρεσβυτέρους τῶν Ἰουδαίων, He sent to him the elders of the Jews.] And ver. 6, "The centurion sent to him friends:" by Matthew, viii. 5, "The centurion came to him;" and ver. 8, "The centurion said to him." To reconcile this difference, note,

First, That St. Luke relating this story more largely than St. Matthew doth, and with this signal circumstance said by his messengers, "I thought not myself worthy to come unto thee" (ver. 7), these circumstances must be as they are related by St. Luke. Note,

Secondly, That it being a rule among the Jews, that apostolus cujusque est quisque, the disciple, messenger, or proxy of any man is as himself; and, among the civilians, quod facimus per alium, id ipsum facere judicamur, "we ourselves are reputed to do that which by another we do:" St. Matthew well might say, the centurion who sent these elders and friends came to him by them. So Jethro comes to Moses by a messenger, Exod. xviii. 6, and Solomon speaks to Hiram by his servants, 1 Kings v. 7. James and John came to Christ with a petition presented by their mother, Mark x. 35 compared with Matt. xx. 20. John the Baptist speaks to Christ by his disciples, Matt. xi. 3. Note,

Thirdly, That though it seems probable from those words of Christ to the centurion, "Go thy way, and as thou hast they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, [2] I say unto thee, Arise.

15 And (at that word) he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.

16 And there came a fear on (them) all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath visited his people (by sending to them the promised Messiah).

17 And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judæa, and throughout all the region round about.

18 And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

19 ¶ And John calling unto him two of his disciples [3] sent them to Jesus, saying (in the name of their master, who sent them for their own satisfaction), Art thou he that should come (the Messiah)? or look we for another?

20 When (therefore) the men were come unto him, they said, John (the) Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying (or, to say), Art thou he that should come? or look we for (are we to expect) another?

21 And in that same hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind he gave sight (according to the prophecy of Isaiah concerning him: see the note on Matt. xi. 5).

22 Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached.

23 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me (i. e. who shall not fall off from me by reason of the afflictions he may suffer, as John doth, or by reason of my mean circumstances in this present world).

24 ¶ And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John (saying), What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? (Was it) a reed shaken with the wind (a man wavering in his doctrine or testimony)?

25 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment (a courtier and parasite)? Behold, they which are gorgeously appareled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26 But what went ye out for to see? (Was it) a prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and (one that is) much more than a (an ordinary) prophet.

27 (For) This is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

28 (More, I say, than an ordinary prophet,) For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but (yet) he that is (the) [4] least (prophet) in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

29 And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God (i. e. approved the wisdom and justice of his counsel, in calling them, by the Baptist, to repentance), being baptized with the baptism of John.

30 But the [5] Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against (towards) themselves, being not baptized of him (as being confident they were righteous, Luke xviii. 9, and so needed no repentance).

---

believed, be it done unto thee" (Matt. viii. 13), that when Christ was nigh to the house, the centurion might come in person to him, yet neither is this necessary; for when David sent messengers to commune with Abigail to take her to wife, she answers as if he had been present, "Behold thy handmaid to be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord" (1 Sam. xxv. 41).

[2] Ver. 14. Εἶπε, νεανίσκε, σοὶ λέγω, ἐγέρθητι, Jesus said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.] Here Woltzogenius owns that Christ spake this by that divine power which he had over inanimate things, as the wind and the sea; Est quidem hoc Deo proprium, "This indeed," saith he, "is proper to God, who calleth things that are not, as if they were" (Rom. iv. 17), but God had communicated this power to his Son, by whom he would most perfectly manifest himself to the world. So Peter speaks to Tabitha, "Tabitha, arise" (Acts ix. 40); as Christ to Lazarus, "Lazarus, come forth" (John xi. 43). Now to this I reply,

First, That the instance of St. Peter saying to Tabitha, "Arise," doth not lessen the strength of the argument from these words for the divinity of Christ, seeing he doth this only by prayer to and faith in the Lord Christ; to which he ascribes all his miracles, doing them in his name, or power, and "through faith in his name" (Acts iii. 16), and so in effect saith to her as he did to Æneas (ver. 34), "Jesus Christ healeth thee, arise," &c. Christ here doth this by his own power, without any prayers, as appears from those words, "I say to thee, Arise;" and he will raise all his servants from the dead, and "change their vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body, according to the mighty power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself" (Phil. iii. 21). He prayed, indeed, when he raised Lazarus; but then even Woltzogenius observes, he could not do this to receive power to raise him, because he had this power in himself already, John v. 26, and doth there challenge to himself to be "the resurrection and the life," vi. 25, but for other reasons accounted for John xi. 41, 42.

Secondly, When Woltzogenius can prove, that divine virtue which is proper to God alone, ever was, or ever can be communicated to a creature, or to another without communication of the divine nature, then, and not till then, will he have given a satisfactory answer to this argument.

[3] Ver. 19. John sent, saying, Art thou he that should come?] See the note on Matt. xi. 3.

[4] Ver. 28. The least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.] See the note on Matt. xi. 11.

[5] Ver. 30. Οἱ φαρισαῖοι καὶ νομικοὶ τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἠθέτησαν εἰς ἑαυτοὺς, μὴ βαπτισθέντες ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, But the pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against (Gr. towards) themselves, being not baptized of him.] That some of them came to be baptized, we read Matt. iii. 7, it therefore must be said, either that this is here said of them in general, because it was true of many of them; or that those who came to him, hearing the character he gave of them, refused his baptism (see note on Matt. iii. 7). But the chief thing here observable is this, that, in rejecting John's baptism, they are said to reject the counsel of God towards them, that is, his gracious design of calling them by him to that repentance which could alone exempt them from the wrath to come; and by that refusal declared they approved not of God's counsel, as just and righteous in calling such unblamable persons as they were, and such zealots for the law, to repentance, that so they might escape the ruin threatened by St. John; for thus Eleazar, one of them, speaks, after the destruction of the Jews, that though all the rest of the Jews perished,* ἡμεῖς δ' ἆρα μόνοι ἠλπίσαμεν περιέσεσθαι ὥσπερ ἀναμάρτητοι πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν γενόμενοι, "we alone expected to be preserved, as having not sinned against God, nor been guilty of any fault, and who were teachers to others." Christ tells us they were, πεποιθότας ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς, "confident in themselves, that they were righteous" (Luke xviii. 9), and represents them by the elder son, saying, "I never transgressed at any time thy commandments" (Luke xv. 29). They therefore judged it an incongruous thing to call such righteous persons to repentance and threaten them with ruin, who were so dear to God; but the publicans and common people were conscious to themselves of sin sufficient to expose them to divine judgments, and therefore they approved of this counsel God sent them by his messenger,

* Apud Joseph. de Bello Jud. lib. vii. p. 990.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32 They are like unto children sitting in the marketplace, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you (as at a festival), and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you (as they do at funeral solemnities), and ye have not wept (i. e. you have neither complied with us when we called you with mirth nor sadness.)

33 For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine (his meat being only locusts, and his drink water); and ye say (of him), He hath a devil (or, is a melancholy, frantic person).

34 The Son of man is come eating and drinking (in the usual manner); and ye say (of him), Behold (he is) a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35 But wisdom is [6] justified (i. e. approved) of all her children (i. e. of all true lovers of wisdom).

36 ¶ And (or, then) one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And (thereupon) he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37 [7] And, behold, a woman in the city, which was (formerly) a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment,

38 And stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39 Now when the Pharisee which had bidden him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him: for she is a sinner (and so by touching must defile him).

40 And Jesus answering (to his thoughts) said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41 (Jesus then began his discourse thus,) There was a certain creditor which had two debtors: the one owed (him) five hundred pence, and the other fifty.

42 And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore, which of them will love him most?

43 Simon answered and said, I suppose that he, to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44 And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? (When) I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou gavest me no kiss: but this woman since the time I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46 My head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47 [8] Wherefore I say unto thee, (This is a testimony that) her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she (hath) loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48 And (then) he said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.

49 And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, Who is this (man) that (he) forgiveth sins also?

50 And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee (from the punishment of thy past sins); go in peace.

---

and declared him righteous, both in calling them to repentance and threatening his judgments if they did neglect it; and therefore they submitted to this baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, to which God, by the Baptist, called them: that δικαιοῦν is to declare, or approve a thing or person righteous, see ver. 35. They whose principles will not allow them to believe that God had any such benign designs towards such a generation of vipers, say, First, That βουλὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ is not the counsel, or the purpose, but only the command of God; but (1.) this phrase in scripture never signifies a bare command, but always the decree, the purpose, or the counsel of God (see Acts ii. 23, vi. 28, xiii. 36, xx. 27, Eph. i. 11, Heb. vi. 17). Nor (2.) can it be rationally supposed, that God should give men any virtuous or moral precepts, which he doth not design and purpose that they should obey. Secondly, They add, that εἰς ἑαυτοὺς, "towards them," is here put for ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, "in themselves;" and therefore render the text thus, "They despised in themselves the counsel of God." But (1.) was it his counsel towards them, or was it not? If not, how could they by neglecting that which concerned not them, despise it? If so, then it is certain, that the purpose and counsel of God toward them was this, That they should repent, and bring forth fruits meet from repentance. (2.) The phrase, "in themselves," is always expressed by ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, iii. 8, vii. 49, viii. 9; εἰς ἑαυτοῦς occurs but twice elsewhere, viz. 1 Pet. iv. 8. 10, and then it plainly signifies, "towards themselves."

[6] Ver. 35. Καὶ ἐδικαιώθη, But Wisdom is justified of her children.] See note on Matt. xi. 19.

[7] Ver. 37. Ἰδοὺ, γυνὴ ἐν τῇ πόλει. And, behold, a woman in the city.] Here are two arguments against the opinion of Huetius* and others, that this woman was Mary, the sister of Lazarus, and that Simon the Leper, mentioned Matt. xxvi. 6, Mark xiv. 3, was the same with the Simon mentioned here; (1.) because this Mary was a woman of that city, that is, either of Nain or Capernaum, the only cities mentioned here; whereas Mary, the sister of Lazarus, was of no city, but of the town or village of Bethany, John xi. 1. (2.) After the collation here, which is not styled a supper, our Lord went "through every city and village, preaching the kingdom of God" (viii. 1), whereas, after he raised Lazarus, "Jesus walked no more openly." And, lastly, Mary's unction was made for Christ's interment, and but six days before Christ's last passover (John xii. 7), when he continued in Bethany and in Jerusalem (Mark xi. 11).

[8] Ver. 47. Οὗ χάριν, λέγω σοι, ἀφέωνται αἱ ἁμαρτίαι αὐτῆς αἱ πολλαὶ· ὅτι ἠγάπησε πολύ· For which cause I say unto thee, Her sins, which were many, are forgiven: for she loved much.] Christ saith not her sins were forgiven because she loved much; but this ought to be a token to thee, that her sins, which rendered her unworthy to touch me, have been forgiven; this great love to me being an indication of her deep sense of God's mercy to her in pardoning her many sins: and this do I the Prophet and the Son of God declare unto her: to this sense lead both the parable of the great debtor, to whom the Lord frankly had forgiven all, for he loved much, because much had been forgiven; and the conclusion of it in these words, "He that hath less forgiven loveth less;" whence it appears, that ὅτι here cannot be causal or intimate, she was forgiven much, because she loved much; the cause assigned of her forgiveness being not her love but faith (ver. 50); but only consequential, denoting the effect or indication of the forgiveness of her many sins. So Hosea ix. 15, All their iniquity was in Gilgal, "therefore there I hated them;" for they did not sin in Gilgal, because he hated them there; but he hated them there, because there they offended (Eccles. v. 7); ὅτι σὺ τὸν Θεὸν φοβοῦ, "Wherefore fear thou God." So John xiv. 17, The world cannot receive the spirit of truth, ὅτι οὐ θεωρεῖ αὐτο, "therefore it sees him not, neither knows him," but ye know him, "therefore he abideth with you, and shall be with you." In one at least of these two paragraphs ὅτι must bear this sense.

* Not. in Matt. p. 43, 44.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him,

2 And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils,

3 And Joanna the wife of Chuza Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which[1] ministered unto him (necessaries out) of their substance.

4 ¶ And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable:

5 (Saying,) A sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the way side; and [2] it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6 And some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked (root and) moisture.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns [3] sprang up with it, and (overgrowing it) choked it.

8 And other (seed) fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundredfold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear (i. e. wisdom to discern and willingness to receive the truth), let him hear (i. e. embrace it).

9 And his disciples asked him, saying, What might (the meaning of) this parable be?

10 And he said (to them), Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others (I speak) in parables; (they having shut their eyes, and closed their ears, Matt. xiii. 14) [4] that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

11 Now the (meaning of the) parable is this: The seed is the word of God.

12 Those (seeds sown) by the way side are (emblematically) they that hear (but consider not what they hear, Matt. xiii. 19); then cometh the devil (Gr. εἶτα, so that the devil cometh), and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They (who are represented by the seed sown) on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, (being persons) which for a while believe, and (but) in time of temptation fall away.

14 And (by) that (seed) which fell among thorns

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 2, 3. Καὶ γυναῖκές τινες, αἳ ἦσαν τεθεραπευμέναι ἀπὸ πνευμάτων πονηρῶν καὶ ἀσθενειῶν, And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities,——ministered to him of their substance.] This was customary, saith St. Jerome,* among the Jews, for women, and especially for widows, to minister necessaries to their teachers; and his disciples being with him, and they being not represented as of his family or domestics, but only as followers of his doctrine, could give no ground for any ill suspicion in this case.

[2] Ver. 5. Καὶ κατεπατήθη, And it was trodden down.] This is not mentioned by St. Matthew or Mark, and seems to signify a great contempt of the divine seed, the things which we tread under our feet being accounted vile, and not worthy to be taken up from the ground.

[3] Ver. 7. Καὶ συμφυεῖσαι αἱ ἄκανθαι ἀπέπνιξαν αὐτό· And the thorns springing up with it, choked it.] There be two principles of action in man, the flesh and the spirit, or the inward man; from which arise different appetites and inclinations: the flesh produceth an affection to riches, pleasures, and other allurements of the world, which are here called thorns; the inward man, or mind, approving of the laws of God (Rom. vii. 22), and persuading to those things which conduce to the peace, and tranquillity, and welfare of the soul, is a principle inclining us to virtuous actions; but if we suffer these thorns to take root in our hearts, and gain our affections, these inclinations to virtue will be quickly choked, or bring no fruit to ripeness or perfection, which is all one as to be ἄκαρποι, without fruit, as appears from ver. 14, compared with Matt. xiii. 22, Mark iv. 19.

Ver. 8. Ταῦτα λέγων ἐφώνει· Ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω.] These words are owned by all the versions, Theophylact, and Jerome, and yet are rejected by Dr. Mills on the sole authority of three MSS.

[4] Ver. 10. Ἵνα βλέποντες μὴ βλέπωσι, καὶ ἀκούοντες μὴ συνιῶσιν, That seeing they may not see, and hearing they may not understand: Mark iv. 12, That seeing they may see and not perceive, and hearing they may hear, and not understand, lest they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.] Here, say some, this is plainly given as a reason why our Saviour spake to them without in parables, viz. that they may not perceive, or understand, or be converted. But, to take off this pretension, it is sufficient to observe, that the words in St. Mark and St. Luke are only an abbreviation, or short hint of what St. Matthew saith was spoken by our Lord more fully; for Christ might say what St. Mark and Luke relate, and yet say more than they relate, as St. Matthew doth assure us he did; but then St. Matthew could not have given us his discourse fully, unless our Lord had spoken it more fully than it is related by St. Mark and Luke; whence it must follow, that the relations of Mark and Luke must be allowed to be deficient, i. e. not to contain all that our Saviour said on this occasion, and therefore must be filled up, or rendered entire, by the addition of the words recorded in St. Matthew. Since then St. Matthew doth expressly tell us from the mouth of Christ, "He therefore spake to them in parables, because they seeing would not see, or did not see, and hearing did not understand;" and that they therefore did not see, hear, and understand, "because their heart was waxed gross, and their ears heavy, and they had closed their eyes, lest they should see, and hear, and be converted;" it seemeth evident, that the words of St. Mark and Luke must be filled up, or made entire thus—To others (of the Jews) speak I in parables (because they seeing, see not; and hearing, do not understand; for their hearts are waxed gross, and their ears heavy, and their eyes have they closed), that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand, lest they should be converted: and though doubtless this sad effect of their not hearing, and seeing, viz. lest they should be converted, was not intended by them, yet, since it was the natural issue of their shutting their eyes against the light, it fitly is ascribed to them; as when the prophet Hosea saith, viii. 4, "Of their silver and gold have they made them idols, that they might be cut off;" and the prophet Micah, vi. 16, "For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make thee a desolation." A like expression to this we find, Isa. lxiii. 17, "Why hast thou caused us to err from thy ways? τί ἐσκλήρυνας τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν τοῦ μὴ φοβεῖσθαί σε; why hast thou hardened our hearts, that we should not fear thee?" And yet this is the church's prayer, imploring God's mercy, and the removal of his judgments, viz. the long oppression of the heathens, which was a temptation to them to depart from him, and to cast off his fear; and therefore shows they were no otherwise hardened by God than as these providences were a strong temptation to them to cast off his service. Hence also we may learn the power and efficacy of the word, when it is heartily believed and seriously attended to, to work in those that hear it conversion, to the salvation of the soul; it being only through the want of seeing and of understanding, that is, of believing are they (represented), which, when they have heard (the word), go forth (into the world), and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.

* In Matt. xxvii. 55.

15 But (by) that (seed which fell) on the [5] good ground are they (represented), which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

16 ¶ (And, having thus explained this parable, he said, I do not impart this knowledge to you that ye may conceal it, but that ye may teach it to others; for) [6] No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in (to the house) may see the light.

17 For nothing is (said in) secret (by me), that shall not be made manifest; neither (is) any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath (so as to improve it), to him shall be given (more); and whosoever (thus) hath not, from him shall be taken (away) even that which he seemeth to have.

19 ¶ Then came to (see) him his mother and his brethren, and (they) could not come at him for the press.

20 And it was told him by certain, which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

21 And he answered and said unto them, (Is) my mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

22 ¶ Now it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples: and he said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23 But as they sailed he fell asleep: and there came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, Master, master, we (are ready to) perish. Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water (saying to them, Peace, be still): and (then) they ceased, and there was a calm.

25 And he said unto them, Where is your faith? And they being afraid wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

26 ¶ And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had (been possessed with) devils (a) long time, and (he) ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28 When he (the evil spirit) saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee, torment me not: (this he said, fearing he might be punished for what he had done to the man.)

29 (For he (i. e. Jesus) had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and (though) he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and (yet) he brake the bands, and he was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

30 And Jesus asked (the unclean spirit in) him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, (It is) Legion, because many devils were entered into him.

31 And they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep.

32 And there was there an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled (from the place), and went and told it in the city and in the country (what was done).

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37 ¶ Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear (of what they might farther suffer by him): and he (accordingly) went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now the man out of whom the devils were departed besought him that he might be with him: but Jesus sent him away, saying,

39 Return to thine own house, and shew how great things [7] God hath done unto (for) thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

41 ¶ And, behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue: and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay a dying. But as he went, the people thronged (about) him.

43 ¶ And a woman having an issue (or flux) of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of (i. e. by) any (of them),

44 Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanched.

45 And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all (the rest) denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me (in order to some cure): for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me (to heal somebody).

47 And when the woman saw that she was not hid (from him), she came trembling, and falling down be-and considering the importance of it, that it hath not this effect upon men (see the note on Jam. i. 18).

---

[5] Ver. 15. Τὸ δὲ ἐν τῇ καλῇ γῇ οὗτοί εἰσιν οἵτινες ἐν καρδίᾳ καλῇ καὶ ἀγαθῇ ἀκούσαντες τὸν λόγον, κατέχουσι, But that on the good ground, are they, who, in (with) an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.] From these words it is manifest, that some good disposition of heart is requisite to render the word truly and durably fruitful. Now what this is, see in note on Matt. xiii. 23.

[6] Ver. 16. Οὐδεὶς γὰρ λύχνον ἅψας, καλύπτει αὐτὸν, No man when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel.] Of this, and the seventeenth verse, see Mark iv. 22.

[7] Ver. 39. Ὅσα ἐποίησέ σοι ὁ Θεὸς, Shew how great things God hath done to thee.] Here, saith Woltzogenius, Christ ascribes this miracle to God, the author of that power by which he did it (John v. 19), whereas had he been the high God, he should have ascribed it to himself. I answer, he doth this as "not seeking his own glory, but the glory of him that sent him;" that is, as one executing his prophetic office in his Father's name, and casting out devils by that Spirit he received from his Father.

fore him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.

49 ¶ While he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Master (any farther).

50 But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in (to her apartment), save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And all (present) wept, and bewailed her: but he said, Weep not; (you shall soon find) she is not (as one) dead, but (as one that) sleepeth.

53 And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54 And he put them all out (who were thus weeping), and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise.

55 And her [8] spirit came again, and she arose straightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And her parents were astonished: but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

[8] Ver. 55. Ἐπέστρεψε τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτῆς, Her spirit returned.] By adding this, saith Grotius, St. Luke shows, that the soul of man is not corporeal, or any thing that perisheth with it; but ἀϑυπόστατόν τι, something subsisting of itself; which, when the body dies, exists elsewhere, as the word ἐπέστρεψε shows. But this is not a certain inference from the word; for of Samson, refreshed with the water that came from the jaw of the ass, it is said, ἐπέστρεψε τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ, "his spirit returned," Judg. xv. 19, and the like phrase we find, Ps. iii. 23, Lam. i. 11. 16. 19, plainly importing the restoring a person to his vigour. This therefore is more surely to be gathered from the death of the damsel, ver. 53, for so Elijah speaketh in a like case, 1 Kings xvii. 21, ἐπιστραφήτω δὴ ἡ ψυχὴ τοῦ παιδαρίου τούτου, "Let, I pray thee, the soul of this child return into it."

CHAPTER IX.

1 Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority (through his name) over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them to preach the (coming of the) kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

3 And he said unto them, Take nothing (with you) for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece; (for you shall want neither provision nor protection, xxii. 35.)

4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide (while ye continue in that city), and (from) thence depart (to another).

5 And whosoever will not receive you, (your words, Matt. x. 14,) when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them (that ye account them as unclean, and not fit to be conversed with any more).

6 And they departed, and went through the towns (of Judea), preaching the gospel, and healing (the sick) every where.

7 ¶ Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead (and so his great wickedness appeared in killing a man so highly favoured by God);

8 And of some (it was said), that Elias had appeared; (and so that kingdom of the Messiah was to be set up, which should destroy all other kingdoms, Dan. ii. 44;) and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9 And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but (if he be not risen again) who is this, of whom I hear such (wondrous) things? And he desired to see him (that so he might discern whether he were the Baptist or not).

10 ¶ And the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done (in his name). And he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida (that they might rest a little, Mark vi. 31).

11 And the people, when they knew it, followed him: and he received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12 And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and (may) lodge, and get victuals (which here they cannot do): for we are here in a desert place.

13 But he said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they (upon inquiry, Mark vi. 38) said, We have no more but five loaves and two (little) fishes; (and what are they among so many? we cannot therefore satisfy them,) except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14 For they were about five thousand men (who were to be fed). And he said to his disciples, Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so (as he commanded), and made them all sit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed (God over) them, and brake (them), and gave (of them) to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17 And they did eat, and were all filled: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them (that gathered them) twelve baskets.

18 ¶ And it came to pass, [1] as he was alone (from the multitude) praying, his disciples were with him: and (having ended his prayer) he asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?

19 They answering said, (Some say thou art) John the Baptist; but some say (thou art) Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20 He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter answering said, (Thou art) the Christ of God.

21 And he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

22 Saying, The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised (again) the third day.

23 ¶ And he said to them all, If any man will come

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 18. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ εἶναι αὐτὸν καταμόνας προσευχόμενον, &c. And it came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him.] The word καταμόνας alone, excludes not his disciples, but the multitude now sent away, when they were filled, ver. 17, as appears from Mark iv. 10: or καταμόνας προσευχόμενος may be rendered, "As he was pray-after me, let him [2] deny himself, and take up his cross daily (as occasion serves), and follow me.

24 For whosoever will (reject me to) save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will (be ready to) lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it (and this surely will be his wisest course).

25 For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away (as ing alone," or "by himself," his prayer being ended, his disciples came to him.

---

[2] Ver. 23. Ἀπαρνησάσθω ἑαυτὸν, καὶ ἀράτω τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ καθ' ἡμέραν, &c. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.] Daily, i. e. as oft as an occasion offers itself. Here I shall recollect all that is said in several places of the gospel concerning this self-denial, and taking up the cross; and thence give rules of comprising this whole duty. And,

First, We must deny father and mother; for, "If a man come to me," saith Christ, "and hate not," Luke xiv. 26, i. e. "forsake not father and mother," Matt. xix. 29, "he cannot be my disciple. For he that loveth father and mother more than me, is unworthy of me," Matt. x. 37. Our Lord had told them, ver. 35, 36, that his gospel would accidentally cause great variance and division "betwixt the father and the son, the mother and the daughter," and render those of their own household the most fierce and cruel enemies; he therefore lets them know, that if when this shall come to pass, father and mother did prevail upon them, either by that affection which men naturally bear to their parents, or by that reverence they give to their authority and commands, when these commands do thwart his precepts; or else by those advantages, or outward comforts, which they expect to receive from their parents, and by adhering to the doctrine of our Lord, might lose or hazard; i. e. if they, by any of these motives, were induced to prefer the commands or will of their parents, before Christ's, and value their countenance and affections before his favour,—they could not sincerely be his disciples. Now this, by parity of reason, holds concerning civil magistrates, who are the fathers of their country, and spiritual superiors, who are fathers of the church; and of all others, who have like power to command, reward, or punish us; and so this instance affords this rule of self-denial.

Rule I. That they to whom we bear the greatest natural affection, and the highest reverence, to whose commands we owe the most entire obedience in lawful matters, from whom we have already received, and may expect, the greatest temporal advantages, provided we comply with their desires, or the worst temporal evils upon refusal, must be denied, forsaken, and comparatively hated, for the sake of Christ, so that although the yearning bowels of a tender mother which at first conceived me, and the grey hairs of an indulgent father, should be pleaded as motives to induce me to break the least commandments of the holy Jesus; though the authority of civil, natural, and ecclesiastical superiors should combine to tempt me to do what Christ forbids; though this authority should allure me with proffers of the highest honours or rewards, or should endeavour to affright me with the severest menaces; yet, if all these considerations should prevail with me, to gratify myself and them, by doing that which my own conscience and God's word assure me will be displeasing to my Saviour, or opposite to his commands, it is evident that I regard myself, or them, more than I do my Saviour; and therefore am unworthy of him, and cannot be sincerely his disciple.

Secondly, We must deny our wife and children, even that wife of our bosom, who is made "one flesh" with us, whom we must love as dearly as we love ourselves (Eph. v. 33), and for whose sake father and mother must be left (Gen. ii. 24). We also must deny those children, which are the offspring of our bowels, the joy and comfort of our lives; for, "if any man come to me," saith Christ, "and hate not his wife and children," Luke xiv. 26, "if he forsake not wife and children for my name's sake, and the gospel's (Mark x. 28), he cannot be my disciple." Accordingly it is recorded, for the everlasting honour of the Levites, that they observed God's word, and kept his covenant, "saying unto their father and mother, I have not seen them, not knowing their own children, not acknowledging their brethren;" that is, being commanded by God's servant Moses, to kill every man his brother, friend, and son, that had been guilty of idolatry, in worshipping the golden calf, they executed the command of God without regard to father, mother, son, or brother, Exod. xxxii. 27, 28. Now the children of our loins, and the wife of our bosom, being the objects of our strongest love and greatest pity, and those in whom we chiefly take delight and pleasure; this second instance will afford this rule, viz.

Rule II. That whatever we most passionately love, are most especially concerned for, do cleave most closely to in our affections, and above all enjoyments do take the most pleasure in, must be loved less than Christ; and consequently must be denied, forsaken, and comparatively hated, for his sake, and the gospel's. Now to this rule, by parity of reason, may be reduced all our immoderate affections to the pleasures of this world, whether they be the pleasures of the appetite, such as the glutton and the drunkard do pursue; the pleasures of the senses, which the voluptuous and lustful persons chiefly prosecute; the pleasures of vain sports and pastimes, gamings, and other recreations; so that if our affection to a bosom friend prevail upon us to defer that religion we profess without conviction, or to act in contradiction to any precept of it, of which our conscience is convinced; if our love to our own offspring will not permit us to reprove, correct, or to restrain them, when they dishonour God, and render themselves vile, but with old Eli, we despise our God by thus preferring our sons before him; if our affections are inordinately set upon the pleasures of this world, now mentioned, so that we do more passionately covet and delight more in them than the things of God, we do more eagerly pursue, more constantly employ our care and time about them than about spiritual things, and so become "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;" if our affection to them doth prevail upon us to neglect our duty towards God, our neighbour, or ourselves, or to enjoy them in that degree or manner which is forbidden by the laws of Christ,—then do we love them more than Christ; and therefore cannot be sincerely his disciples.

Thirdly, We must deny brother and sister, which may be fitly styled denying of ourselves, seeing a brother is a second self, of the same flesh and blood with us, and therefore styled, frater quasi ferè alter: for, "he that cometh unto me," saith Christ, "and hateth not his brother and his sister," Luke xiv. 26, i. e. "who will not leave them for my sake (Mark x. 28), cannot be my disciple." Now, a brother, naturally, and in the scripture import of the word, denotes a person with whom we do familiarly converse, and have an intimate acquaintance; hence, when the spouse desireth to have more near acquaintance, and more close communion with Christ, she thus expresseth her desire: "Oh that he were as my brother, that sucked the breast of my mother!" Cant. viii. 1. And the wise man, exhorting others to associate themselves with Wisdom, and be more intimately acquainted with her ways, doth bid them "say to Wisdom, Thou art my sister," Prov. vii. 4. Moreover, this relation intimates the closest union of affection, and the greatest friendship; whence friends in scripture are so oft styled brethren: and Christian love, in the superlative degree, is often represented by the love of brethren. So that our third rule will be this, viz.

Rule III. That Christians must deny, forsake, and must, comparatively, hate their nearest relative and dearest friend, who are as their own soul (Deut. xiii. 6), and cleave closer to them than a brother (Prov. xviii. 24), and him with whom they have enjoyed the sweetest and most delightful converse, and most familiar acquaintance, when it is necessary for the sake of Christ, and in obedience to his precepts, so to do; and then, à fortiori, this rule must bind us to deny our pot-companions, our lustful Delilahs, our brethren in iniquity, our vain and sinful company, and to have no communion with them in their works of darkness, but to reprove them. If then the importunity of friend or brother prevail upon thee to transgress wilfully any commandment of thy God and Saviour; if they draw thee, by their example and persuasions, to excess or riot, to chambering or wantonness, or any other sin, which is, in effect, to persuade thee to be damned for company; if, in dispensing punishments, rewards, preferments, favours, thou dost transgress this rule they who reject me, to save this temporal life, will be)?

26 For whosoever will be ashamed of me and of my words (now), of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, of equity on their accounts; if thy regard to them restrain thee from reproving their drunkenness and swearing, their lewd or atheistical discourse; nay, if the plain command of God, to hold no friendship or familiarity with them doth not prevail upon thee to abandon and forsake their company, as much as may be,—then evident it is, thou lovest the company of such vile creatures more than communion with thy Saviour; thou dost more prize their friendship than his favour, thou wilt not leave thy friend for him, and therefore art not worthy of him.

Fourthly, We must deny ourselves in houses, lands, and goods, or in those things by which we, with God's blessing on them, do subsist; and though these things be not so properly ourselves, as wife and children; yet, since men are so hot in the pursuit of them, that they will hazard their reputation, health, life, soul, or their whole selves in prosecution of them; since, when these things are lost, we are so apt to think and say, we are undone; since by the scriptures these things are called our substance, and are indeed the things by which our nature does subsist;—our denial of them, upon these accounts, may very fitly be called self-denial, and thus we are obliged to deny ourselves: for "whosoever he be of us, that forsaketh not all that he hath, πάντα τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, all his possessions," or his worldly goods, "he cannot be my disciple," saith our Lord, Luke xiv. 33. Hence doth our Saviour lay this command on the young man, to sell his great possessions, and give them to the poor, and follow him, in expectation of a heavenly treasure; and did pronounce, on his refusal to obey so irksome a command, that he could not enter into the kingdom of God. Here then the rule runs thus, viz.

Rule IV. That Christ's disciples must, when his providence doth call them to it, renounce, cast from them, abandon, even their whole subsistence, and all their temporal good things, in prospect of those spiritual blessings, which he hath promised to all who, for his and his gospel's sake, do thus deny themselves: and then much more must we renounce our superfluities, and those accommodations whereby we only gratify our fancies, and our carnal minds, viz. our stately palaces, our numerous attendants, our delicious fare, our rich attire, our large and flourishing estates. If then we cannot freely spend these temporal enjoyments in the cause of Christ, or part with superfluities for the relief and comfort of his members; if we cannot cast away, abandon, or reject these things, though dear unto us as a right hand, or eye, when they prove snares, temptations, and offences to us; if the rich man cannot be content to be "brought low," and to "take joyfully the spoiling of his goods," in prospect of those never-failing riches Christ hath promised; if, to enjoy or to preserve these things, we venture to "make shipwreck of faith," or "a good conscience," or out of love unto this present world are moved, with Demas, to forsake or to neglect our duty to Christ,—then we love mammon more than Christ, and therefore cannot be his true disciples.

Fifthly, We must deny even life itself, which is still a more high degree of self-denial: there is scarce any thing we do so highly value and dearly love, and so much labour to preserve, and so unwillingly let go, as life; for, "skin for," or after, "skin, and all that a man hath, will a man give for his life," and yet this also must be denied for Christ's sake: for, "if any man come unto me, and hateth not his own life," saith Christ, "he cannot be my disciple;" i. e. if he doth not love God better, and prize his favour more, than he doth value the continuance of this present life; if he cannot prevail upon himself to die for Christ, that he may live for ever with him; and lose this miserable life, to find it happily improved into a life of endless bliss and happiness; if he cannot follow the example of his Lord, who suffered first, then entered into his glory,—he vainly doth pretend to be a follower or a disciple of the holy Jesus. This instance then of self-denial doth inform us, that even natural life must be forsaken, and renounced, when we cannot preserve it without the loss of our more valuable interest in Christ, and those eternal blessings he hath promised to all those that suffer "for the sake of righteousness." And if this natural life must be denied for Christ, much more my personal or civil liberty, my habitation, or my country.

Rule V. If then I cannot live a pilgrim and stranger upon earth, in expectation of a heavenly country, or live in banishment and exile for the cause of Christ; if I cannot suffer bonds and imprisonments, that I may still continue the Lord's freeman; if I cannot be induced to lose my life, that I may find it; but will endeavour to preserve my life or liberty by the violation of any laws of Christ,—it is evident I love this present life more than I love my Saviour, more than that crown of life, which he hath only promised to those who shall continue "faithful to the death;" and therefore am unworthy of him, and falsely do pretend to be a true disciple of the holy Jesus.

Sixthly, We must deny our honour, and our reputation, our ease, and our deliverance from those afflictions, which render life a burden, which is the last and highest pitch of self-denial; even when our afflictions and our persecution do render death itself a mercy and deliverance; when, with good Job, "our soul chooseth strangling, and death, rather than life, and longeth for it more than for hid treasure" (Job iii. 21); when for his sake we are "reproached all the day long," and are exposed as spectacles of shame and infamy to the beholder: all this we must with patience suffer for the name of Jesus; for even after that our Lord had said, "If any man come to me, and hate not his own life, he cannot be my disciple," he adds, Luke xiv. 27, "And whosoever doth not bear his cross cannot be my disciple;" wherefore this bearing of the cross imports some farther act of self-denial; which, that we may the better understand, consider, (1.) That the cross among the Romans was accounted the most ignominious and shameful death, inflicted only upon slaves; for, as Lactantius saith, Homine libero quemvis nocente indignum videbatur, "Now to a generous spirit it is not so much to die, as it is to suffer in an ignominious manner, and as the worst of malefactors, being innocent;" whence, as the heathen Seneca well notes, no person can so much express his love to virtue, or more entirely be devoted to her, than he, qui boni viri famam perdit, ne conscientiam perderet, "that loses his reputation to preserve his conscience." (2.) Consider that this was a most bitter, painful, and afflictive death; whence, as Austin notes, acerbissimi dolores cruciatus à cruce vocabantur. From this expression therefore thus explained, I collect this rule, viz.

Rule VI. That the disciple of the holy Jesus must endure the most fiery trials, the most sharp afflictions, and choose to die in the most shameful, ignominious manner, for the cause of Christ; i. e. when he cannot escape those things without denial, or acting contrary to the commandments of his Saviour: and then much more, when equal circumstances do concur, must he deny himself his ease and worldly quiet, his places of grandeur, his honour and his reputation, and those punctilios of honour, which the hectors of our age so much insist on; and must with patience bear, and readiness forgive, all the affronts he suffers from the hands of men, which he can never less deserve than by adhering firmly to his Lord. If then we cannot quit our ease and worldly quietness for Christ, but rather will neglect known duty, than give ourselves the trouble which Christ's service calls for, rather comply with what is uppermost, than put ourselves to any trouble or disquiet to preserve an upright conscience; if the example and authority of Christ be not sufficient to curb our angry passions, quell our malicious and revengeful tempers; if the punctilios of honour tempt us to duel, and to spill our brother's blood; if we cannot lay down our honour and our reputation at the feet of Christ, not seeking honours from frail creatures, but "that which comes from God alone," and being willing to be dishonoured for his sake; if fiery trials do cool our love to Christ, or the most sharp afflictions do cause us to forget our duty to him; if we do not rather choose "to endure affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season,"—we either love or fear those things more than we love the favour, or fear the frowns, of our blessed Lord: and therefore cannot be his true disciples.

when he shall come in his own [3] glory, and in his Father's, (that of light and flame; see note on Heb. i. 3,) and (with the glorious attendance) of the holy angels.

27 But (besides this coming at the dreadful day) I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the (Son of man coming in the) kingdom of God (with power, Matt. xvi. 28, Mark ix. 1, to execute his judgment on them that reject him).

28 ¶ And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings (see the note on Mark ix. 2), he took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

29 And as he prayed, the fashion (or appearance) of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was (or became) white and glistering.

30 And, behold, there talked with him two men, which (by their discourse) were (known to be) Moses and Elias:

31 Who appeared in glory, and spake of his [4] decease (the death) which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32 But Peter and they that were with him (whilst he was praying) were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: [5] and (therefore) let us make (here) three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing (whether) what he said (were well or ill said).

34 While he thus spake, there came a cloud (of glory), and overshadowed them; and they feared as they entered into the cloud (because of the magnificent glory of it, 2 Pet. i. 17).

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.

36 And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they (three) kept it (the vision) close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

37 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son: for he is mine only child.

39 And, lo, a [6] spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again (Gr. it causeth him to beat himself; and foam), and bruising him hardly departeth from him.

40 And I besought thy disciples to cast him out; and they could not; (and this hath raised a dispute betwixt the scribes and thy disciples concerning thy power, Mark ix. 15.)

41 And Jesus answering said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him (or, and he beat himself with his fists). And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child (of his epilepsy), and delivered him again to his father.

43 ¶ And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God (visible in Christ). But while they wondered every one at all these things which Jesus did, he said unto his disciples, 44 Let these sayings sink down into your ears: for (notwithstanding this seeming admiration) the Son of man shall (by these very Jews) be delivered into the hands of men.

45 But they [7] understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that saying.

46 ¶ Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47 And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by him,

48 And said unto them, Whosoever shall receive (such a one as) this child in my name receiveth me, and whosoever shall receive me receiveth him that sent me: for he that is least among you all (in his own), the same shall be great (in my esteem and kingdom).

49 ¶ And John answered (i. e. spake) and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbad him, because he followeth not with us.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not: for he that is not against us (but pursues the same design in beating down the kingdom of Satan) is for us.

---

[3] Ver. 26. Ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐν τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοῦ πατρός, καὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων, When he shall come in his own, and in his Father's glory, and in the glory of his holy angels.] The divine apparitions in the Old Testament are represented by a great light, or splendour, by the Jews styled Shechinah, and the presence and attendance of holy angels; and these are styled "the glory of God," or the appearance of the glory of God, and, representing to them God the Father, are here styled "the glory of the Father;" and it being the Λόγος, or Son of God, which usually thus appeared, and who, after his ascension, was again invested with this glory, it is here also styled "his glory" (see the notes on John xvii. 5, Phil. ii. 6, Heb. i. 3).

[4] Ver. 31. Ἔλεγον τὴν ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ, &c. And they spake of his decease which he should accomplish ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ, at Jerusalem.] Not of that destruction which he was to accomplish on Jerusalem; for, that Moses and Elias spake one word of that, we read not in the holy scripture; nor doth the word ἔξοδος, absolutely put, ever signify any such thing, but only when it is joined with army, king, captains, soldiers, and the like; but it is the proper word used by scripture, and other writers, for a departure out of this life; so 2 Pet. i. 15, "I will endeavour that, μετὰ τὴν ἐμὴν ἔξοδον, after my departure, ye may have these things in remembrance;" Wisd. iii. 2, "In the sight of the unwise they seemed to die, καὶ ἔξοδος αὐτῶν, and their departure is taken for misery;" and, vii. 6, "All men have one entrance into life, ἐξόδος τε ἴση, and their departure is alike; Ecclus. xxxviii. 23, "Be comforted for him, ἐν ἐξόδῳ πνεύματος αὐτοῦ, when his spirit departeth." Hence Grotius notes this as one of those phrases by which the old tradition of the immortality of the soul is preserved, though ἐξέλευσις τοῦ πνεύματος is only the expiration, or going forth of the breath of man (Ps. civ. 29, cxlvi. 4).

[5] Ver. 33. Καὶ ποιήσωμεν, &c. And let us make three tabernacles.] Καὶ here signifies therefore, as Gen. xii. 19, xxix. 33, xlii. 22, Deut. iv. 6. 15. 37. 40, v. 32, vi. 3, vii. 9, viii. 6, xxviii. 48, Josh. xxiii. 11, xxiv. 10. 18, 1 Sam. ii. 17, Luke xii. 29, 1 Cor. v. 13.

[6] Ver. 39. Καὶ ἰδοὺ πνεῦμα λαμβάνει αὐτὸν, And, behold, a spirit taketh him.] That this person was truly possessed with an evil spirit, is evident, (1.) because Matthew saith expressly, that Christ "rebuked him, and the devil departed from him," Matt. xvii. 18, (2.) because Christ commands him "to depart, and return no more," Mark ix. 24.

[7] Ver. 45. Οἱ δὲ ἠγνόουν τὸ ῥῆμα, καὶ ἦν παρακεκαλυμμένον ἀπ' αὐτῶν, But they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them.] They understood the words, but knew not how to reconcile them with their own traditions, that their Messiah should live for ever; or with the great things they expected from him: and therefore in after ages they invented the distinction of Messiah Ben Joseph, who was to die; and of Messiah Ben David, who was to triumph, and live for ever.

51 ¶ And it came to pass, when the time was (near) come that he should [8] be received up (into heaven), he [9] stedfastly set his face (or fully purposed) to go to Jerusalem (where he was to suffer).

52 And (therefore) sent messengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready (a lodging) for him.

53 And they did not receive him, because his [10] face was as though he would go (i. e. he appeared to them to be going) to Jerusalem (to worship).

54 And when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did (to the captains and their fifties)?

55 But he turned, and [11] rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of (i. e. how opposite this exterminating spirit is to the design of my coming).

56 For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's (temporal) lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

57 ¶ And it came to pass, that, as they went in the

---

[8] Ver. 51. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ, When the time was come, that he should be received up.] Though this may be said with some analogy of his death, which he was, πληροῦσθαι ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, "to accomplish at Jerusalem," whither he was now bound; because that was by being lifted up upon the cross; yet that being only styled ὕψωσις, but never ἀνάληψις, I incline rather to think, that as his ἔξοδος signifies his departure, so his ἀνάληψις may import his glorious ascension into heaven, the fruit and consequence of his death, who, "having purged away our sins by his death, is set down at the right hand of majesty in the highest" (Heb. i. 3): "he, for the suffering of death, being crowned with glory and honour" (ii. 9), and διὸ, for this cause exalted (Phil. ii. 9). So Elias is said, ἀναληφθῆναι εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν, "to be taken up into heaven," 2 Kings ii. 1. 9, Ecclus. xlviii. 9.

[9] Καὶ αὐτὸς ἐστήριξε πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ τοῦ πορεύεσθαι εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem.] That is, he firmly purposed to go to Jerusalem, and began to execute it by passing from Galilee, the road-way through Samaria to Jerusalem. This is the frequent import of this phrase in the Septuagint, when there is mention of the counsel, purpose, or decree of God declared to his people. So Jer. iii. 12, οὐ μὴ στηριῶ πρόσωπόν μου ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, "I will not set my face against you;" xxi. 10, ἐστήριξα τὸ πρόσωπόν μου, "I have set my face against this city for evil;" and Ezek. xxi. 2, στήρισον τὸ πρόσωπόν σου ἐπὶ Ἱερουσαλὴμ, "Set thy face against Jerusalem:" so vi. 2, xiii. 17, xv. 7, xx. 46, xxv. 2, xxviii. 21, xxix. 2, xxxviii. 1, Dan. xi. 16, 17.

[10] Ver. 53. And the Samaritans received him not, ὅτι τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ ἦν πορευόμενον εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, because his face was as though he was going to Jerusalem.] It appeared by the road he took, and the places he went through, that he was going thither. So of Sennacherib, Hezekiah saw, ὅτι τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ, "that his face was to fight against Jerusalem," 2 Chron. xxii. 2, i. e. that he directed his army thither; and they that firmly purposed to go to Egypt are Σίνητες τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτῶν εἰς γῆν Αἰγύπτου, "men that set their face to go into Egypt," Jer. xlii. 15. 17 (see also 2 Kings xii. 17). The reason why the Samaritans, knowing thus his purpose, received him not, as they did other Galileans going thither, was, that, by going thither on a religious account, viz. to celebrate the passover, he decided the controversy betwixt them and the Jews, touching the place by God appointed for worship, and for sacrifice, against them; which, though they regarded not when done by the Galileans, yet was it grievous to them, that such a celebrated doctor, as Christ was, should do it.

Ver. 54. Ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε.] Hæc irrepserunt ex margine, saith Dr. Mills; but they are owned by the eastern versions, by Theophylact here, by Chrysost. de Precat. hom. 1, ed. Mor. p. 747 (see also the defence of καθ' ἡμέραν, ver. 33, Examen Millii).

[11] Ver. 55, 56. But he turned and rebuked them, saying, οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου πνεύματός ἐστε ὑμεῖς, You know not what spirit ye are of.] Here interpreters truly note, that πνεῦμα, spirit, is put for the affection, or disposition of the mind; as when the scripture speaks of the "spirit of bondage and adoption," Rom. viii. 15, and of the "spirit of fear, power, love, and of a sound mind," 2 Tim. i. 7. But that which is here chiefly to be observed is, the contradiction of this saying to the popish practice of persecuting, destroying, and exterminating those whom they call heretics, purely on account of their religion; for observe,

First, That whereas they who are thus persecuted by the church of Rome, are falsely supposed to be schismatics and heretics; the Samaritans undoubtedly were both. For, (1.) In opposition to the temple of Jerusalem, which God himself appointed for the place where he would be worshipped, commanding all men to repair to it, they erected a temple upon mount Gerizim, and there they worshipped, deserting the temple of Jerusalem; this was their schism. (2.) They also were heretics and idolaters: for they erred in matters which concerned salvation; and this our Saviour testified in these words, "Ye worship ye know not what, we know what we worship; for salvation is of the Jews" (John iv. 22).

Secondly, Observe, That whereas the Romanists do exercise this cruelty on them whom they call schismatics and heretics, chiefly for their refusing to receive and own him as Christ's vicar, who manifestly doth usurp that title; these Samaritans refused to receive our Saviour himself in his own person, and that because he seemed to be going to Jerusalem to worship; so that the honour of God, and of religion, and of Jerusalem, the place of his peculiar worship, were all concerned in this case.

Thirdly, Observe, That the permission of what was here desired by John and Peter, would have been more effectual for the conviction of the heretical, schismatical Samaritans, than any of the punishments inflicted by the inquisition, or any arts of papal tyranny can be for the conviction of those whom they call heretics and schismatics; for these disciples did not desire, that they themselves might execute on the Samaritans this sentence, by committing them to the flames, or imploring the magistrates' assistance to consume or burn them; they only did request, that they might call upon the God of heaven to rain down fire upon them, and consume them; which, had it pleased him to do on this occasion, the rest of the Samaritans, by what this village suffered, must have been evidently convinced, by demonstration from heaven, of God's displeasure against their way of worship, and of the truth of that Messiah, and his doctrine, who procured this vengeance to be executed upon them: whereas the persecutions of that church, because they minister no conviction to the conscience, serve only to harden men's hearts, and embitter their spirits against those who use them, and to induce them more firmly to believe that such a barbarous religion cannot be of God.

From these observations it is evident, that whatsoever may be pleaded by the church of Rome to justify her practice in burning, massacring, extirpating of heretics and schismatics, might, with advantage, have been pleaded here. * "Doth she practise her severities out of a zeal for truth, and for the honour of God and Christ, and of the true religion, and for the reclaiming heretics and schismatics, and the preventing or terrifying others from adhering to them, or being deluded by them?" Upon all these accounts you see, that the disciples had far greater cause to call for "fire from heaven" upon this village of Samaria: and yet our Saviour, under the circumstances, thinks fit to rebuke even the desires of doing this to one small village. How then will he rebuke the actual performance of it to many hundred thousand souls, after his solemn declaration of the repugnancy of these proceedings to the design of his most blessed advent, and to the spirit of the gospel! For the true reasons why Christ rebuked his disciples for their desire of dealing thus severely with these schismatical and heretical Samaritans were these:

First, Because this spirit of severity towards erroneous persons, in whomsoever it is found, is highly opposite to the calm temper of Christianity, as is insinuated in that reply of Christ to his disciples, "Ye know not what spirit ye are of;"

---

* Dr. Tillotson's Serm. Nov. 5, 1678, p. 15.

way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, [12] I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

58 And Jesus said unto him (Thou canst expect no advantage at present by following me; for) foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

59 And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go (home) and (stay till I) bury my (aged) father (and then I will attend upon thee).

60 Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead (or those who are dead to spiritual things be employed in those affairs): but go thou (forthwith) and preach the kingdom of God.

61 And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

62 And Jesus said unto him, No [13] man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back (i. e. having undertaken my service, and diverting from it to worldly business), is fit for the kingdom of God.

---

that is, ye do not well consider under what way of dispensation ye are placed by me. *The way I come to teach men, the temper, disposition, and affection I would fix within them, is not a furious, persecuting, and destructive spirit; but mild, and gentle, and tender of the lives and interests of men, even of those who are our greatest enemies. Under the †Old Testament, indeed, they who rejected and scoffed at a prophet suffered severely for it, the prophet had commission to call for "fire from heaven to destroy them presently, and curse them in the name of the Lord" (2 Kings ii. 24). But they who reject and crucify Christ, are by him prayed for, and are, by his command, to be still preached to, and, if possible, brought to repentance; and, according to his example are all Christians to conform themselves, acting towards contemners of their person or rejecters of their doctrine, not according to the legal, but the evangelical dispensation; not according to the severity of Elias, but the meekness and gentleness of Christ: and therefore your desire of proceeding according to the extraordinary spirit of Elias, under the gospel-dispensation, is intolerable; for that designs universal love, peace, and good-will even to enemies; it doth engage us to show all meekness to all men; and so no difference of religion, no pretence of zeal for God, can justify this fierce, vindictive, and exterminating spirit.

Secondly, Our Saviour's second reason against this proceeding is, that it was repugnant to the end for which he came into the world, which was, "not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." ‡ "He came to discountenance all fierceness, and rage, and cruelty in men one towards another; to restrain and subdue that furious and unpeaceable spirit, which is so troublesome to the world, and the cause of so many mischiefs and disorders in it; to beget a peaceable disposition in men of the most distant tempers;" making the lamb and the wolf lie down together (Isa. xi. 6. 9); and no more to destroy and hurt each other; "but turn their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks" (Micah iv. 3); engaging them to lay aside "all bitterness, and wrath, anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, with all malice." He came to introduce that excellent spirit which consults not only the eternal salvation of men's souls, but their temporal peace and security, their comfort and happiness in this world, whose fruits are "righteousness and peace" (Rom. xiv. 17); "love, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, and meekness" (Gal. v. 22, 23); whose wisdom is "pure and peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, [or works]" (James iii. 17), and which commands the wise and knowing man "to show forth, out of a good conversation, his works with meekness of wisdom" (ver. 13), condemning all his "bitter zeal" as "earthly, sensual, and devilish" (ver. 14, 15), which suffers not the servant of Christ to be engaged in "foolish questions, which beget strife;" because that the disciples of this mild and gentle Saviour "must not fight, but must be gentle towards all men, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves" against the truth, though their doctrine spread "as a gangrene, and overthrow the faith of some" (2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. 17, 18); not dispatching them out of the way, as is the manner of the Romanists, but "with long-suffering expecting, if God, peradventure, will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth," which teaches us to bear the infirmities of persons weak" in faith (Rom. xv. 1), "to restore them in the spirit of meekness" (Gal. vi. 1), "to become as weak to the weak, that we may gain the weak" (1 Cor. ix. 22), to bear with the weak, and "be long-suffering to all men" (1 Thess. v. 14), "to speak evil of no man, to be no fighters, but meek, showing all gentleness towards all men;" and that upon this sole account, that "we ourselves were sometimes foolish and deceived" (Tit. iii. 2, 3).

Now both these reasons are such as equally concern all persons, magistrates as well as ministers, them who thus persecute out of misguided zeal towards God, as well as those who do it from envy, hatred, and such carnal principles; and they seem plainly to infer, that no man should be persecuted, as in the church of Rome men are, purely for his mistake concerning, or his denial of, any article of faith revealed by the gospel, but only for seditious and treasonable doctrines, or for such crimes as, had the gospel never been revealed, might justly have been punished by the civil magistrate.

[12] Ver. 57. Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.] This being said, as Christ perceived, from the common opinion of the nation, that the disciples of the Messiah should get wealth and honour, Christ soon discourages him from executing this resolution, laying before him the mean and low condition in which he was to be followed by his disciples.

[13] Ver. 62. Οὐδεὶς ἐπιβαλὼν τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ ἐπ' ἄροτρον, καὶ βλέπων εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω, &c. No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.] Christ often compares his word to seed, and the time of gaining others to the faith to the harvest. Now of the plougher and sower of the seed, it was used to be said proverbially, "He is no good ploughman or seedsman, who, being at that work, looketh back;" because his furrows will not be straight, nor his seed cast even from him: whence they require of such a one, (1.) That he should stoop, for then he cannot look back; according to Pliny,* Arator, nisi incurvus, prævaricatur: (2.) That he should look straight before him, not back on his associates, as Hesiod in these words,

Ὃς κ' ἔργου μελετῶν ἰθεῖαν αὔλακ' ἐλαύνοι,
Μήκετι παπταίνων πρὸς ὁμήλικας. Ἔργ. ver. 441.

This Christ applies to the spiritual husbandry; to which he that applies himself must forget the things which are behind ἔμπροσθεν ἐκτεινόμενος, "bending and stretching out himself to those which are before" (Phil. iii. 14).

---

* Ibid. p. 7. † Vide Dr. Hammond in locum.
‡ Dr. Tillots. ibid. p. 8.

* Hist. Nat. lib. xviii. cap. 19.

CHAPTER X.

1 After these things the Lord appointed other [1] seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come (after them.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἑτέρους ἑβδομήκοντα, The Lord appointed seventy others.] Grotius saith they were chosen according to the number of the Sanhedrin, and so were seventy-two; six of them being chosen out of every tribe; for which he cites the authority of Josephus. Now Josephus doth indeed say

2 And because he sent them to so many cities,) therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth (more) labourers into his harvest.

3 Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves (ready to devour them;

4 Yet) Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and [2] salute no man by the way (i. e. spend no time in fruitless civilities, which may divert you from your business).

5 And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house.

6 And if the son of peace be there (one fit, by reason of his peaceable temper, to receive that blessing), your peace shall rest upon it (i. e. it shall be according to your prayer): if not, it shall turn to you again (i. e. they shall receive no benefit by it, Ps. xxxv. 13, Isa. lv. 11).

7 And in the same house (in which you find a son of peace) remain, eating and drinking such things as they give (you as the reward of your labour): for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house (for better entertainment).

8 And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you:

9 And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10 But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,

11 Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on (to) us, we do wipe off (as a testimony) against you (that we refuse all farther commerce with you): notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you (and you would not receive it).

12 But (and) I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day (when God shall judge the disobedient and unbelievers) for Sodom, than for that city.

13 Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes (with the deepest sorrow and humility).

14 But (and accordingly) it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the (day of) judgment, than for you.

15 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven (i. e. advanced highly above others by my doctrine, taught in thy synagogues, and miracles wrought in thee), shalt be thrust down to hell (i. e. into a state of the extremest misery.

16 And for your encouragement in the work on which I send you,) he that heareth you (preaching in my name the kingdom of God, shall be owned as one that) heareth me; and he that despiseth you (shall be treated as one that) despiseth me; and he that despiseth me (as one that) despiseth him that sent me.

17 ¶ And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the [3] devils are subject unto us through thy name.

---

of the seniors sent to Ptolemæus Philadelphus, that they were ἐξ ἀρ' ἑκάστης φυλῆς,* "six out of every tribe," but he says not so of the Sanhedrin: and that they were only seventy without, and seventy-one with Moses their governor, see Seld. de Synedr. lib. ii. cap. 4, §. 5, and Dr. Lightfoot here. And, (2.) he proves this from the authority of Origen, who, in his book, De Rectâ in Deum Fide,† saith, Christ chose seventy-two disciples; and from Epiphanius,‡ who saith, that St. Mark was one ἐκ τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα δύο, "of the seventy-two." But this they both speak by the bye: and to Origen, if that be indeed his work, we may oppose Tertullian, who styles them "seventy," saying, §Adlegit et alios septuaginta apostolos super duodecim: to Epiphanius, Jerome,‖ who saith, "the seventy palm-trees in the sixth mansion of the Jews signified, secundi ordinis prædicatores, the preachers of the second order, as the fountains signified the twelve apostles:" and to both, we may oppose the more ancient testimonies of Irenæus,¶ who saith, that "after the twelve apostles, septuaginta alios Dominus noster ante se misisse invenitur, our Lord sent seventy others before him:" and of Clemens, who, in his Hypotyposes, makes frequent mention of Christ's "seventy disciples:" of Eusebius there, and Ambrose here: and the council of Neocæsarea,†† saying, the chorepiscopi were constituted εἰς τύπον τῶν ἑβδομήκοντα, after the example of the seventy." But it is more material to observe, that as the first mission of the apostles was only for a season, and ceased at their return, Matt. x. 1 (see the note there); so was the first mission of the seventy, they returning quickly from it, ver. 17, and they received a new commission; of which, see note on ver. 19. Note (2.) that whereas some compare the bishops to the apostles, the seventy to the presbyters of the church, and thence conclude, that divers orders in the ministry were instituted by Christ himself: it must be granted, that some of the ancients‡‡ did believe these two to be divers orders, and that those of the seventy were inferior to the order of the apostles; and sometimes they make the comparison here mentioned; but then it must be also granted, that this comparison will not strictly hold: for the seventy received not their mission as presbyters do, from bishops, but immediately from the Lord Christ, as well as the apostles; and in their first mission were plainly sent on the same errand, and with the same power. Nevertheless, I think here is a fair foundation for that, in which Chrysostom, and others, place the superiority of bishops over presbyters, to wit, in this, that the power of ordination belongs to them alone (see note on 1 Tim. iii. 1, 2). For though the commission to preach the gospel belonged to the seventy, as well as to the twelve apostles, yet the power of conferring the Holy Ghost, by laying on of hands, belonged peculiarly to the twelve (see note on Acts viii. 15). This then seems to be the reason, why the conferring of the Holy Ghost for the use of the ministry hath been perpetually esteemed peculiar to those bishops, who, in the ecclesiastical style, are always called the successors of the apostles, and they have always done it by imposition of hands.

* Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 2, p. 392.
† P. 8.
‡ Hær. 51, §. 6, p. 428.
§ Adv. Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 24.
‖ Lib. iii. ep. ad Fab. f. 15. 1.
¶ Lib. ii. cap. 37, lib. iii. cap. 13.
 Apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. i. cap. 12.
†† Can. 13.
‡‡ Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 12.

[2] Ver. 4. Καὶ μηδένα κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν ἀσπάσησθε, And salute no man by the way.] i. e. Do nothing which may hinder you in the execution of your office. So when Elisha sent Gehazi on a message to be dispatched presently, he saith to him, "Salute no man by the way," 2 Kings iv. 29, the salutations of the eastern nations being prolix: so Grotius.

Ver. 15. Καὶ σύ, Καπερναοὺμ, ἡ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθεῖσα.] Dr. Mills approves μὴ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθήσῃ, taken from some few MSS. and the Latin Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 70, p. 371. But Chrysostom, Theophylact, the Syriac, and Arabic, read according to the text; and Dr. Grabe, on the place, saith, Lectio illa non ipsius Irenæi, sed solius Latini interpretis est, nam in nullo Græcorum patrum hunc locum ita allegatum reperio.

[3] Ver. 17. Καὶ τὰ δαιμόνια ὑποτάσσεται ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου, Even the devils are subject to us in thy name.] Here Woltzogenius notes, that Christ did cast out devils by a virtue residing in himself; his disciples only in the name and by the power of the Lord; seeing then this power accompanied them in all parts of the world, it is necessary that Christ's presence should be with them every where; now such a presence is a certain indication of the Deity (1 Kings viii. 27, Ps. cxxxix. 7, Jer. xxiii. 24, Amos ix. 3).

18 And he said unto them, (when I sent you forth) I beheld Satan as lightning fall from [4] heaven (i. e. I foresaw the sudden downfall of his kingdom).

19 [5] Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you (i. e. I promise you protection against Satan and his instruments, and whatever else may hurt you, and power to prevail over all their opposition).

20 [6] Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven (i. e. you have a present right to a heavenly kingdom).

21 ¶ In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast [7] hid these things from the (men, in their own conceits) wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes (in their account, Rom. ii. 20): even so, Father (hath the event been in my preaching); for so it seemed good in thy sight.

22 All things are delivered to me of (i. e. by) my Father: and no man (Gr. none) knoweth [8] who the Son is (as to his nature and dignity), but the Father; and (no man knoweth truly) who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal (the saving knowledge of) him.

23 ¶ And he turned him (self) unto his disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see:

24 For I tell you, that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see (viz. the days of the Messiah), and have not seen them; and to hear the things which ye hear (the mysteries of the kingdom of God), and have not heard them.

25 ¶ And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him (i. e. made trial of his wisdom), saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

26 He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou?

27 And he (the lawyer) answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

28 And he (Christ) said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

29 But he, willing to justify himself (as one that had already done this), said unto Jesus, And [9] who is my neighbour (I am thus to love? If those of our nation only, as we teach, I have done that.)

30 And Jesus answering (by an apologue) said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

31 And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side (taking no pity on him).

32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side (showing no compassion on him).

33 But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him.

---

[4] Ver. 18. Ἐθεώρουν τὸν Σατανᾶν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πεσόντα, I beheld Satan as lightning falling from heaven.] Though Satan may be reckoned among spiritual wickednesses ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, "in heavenly places," Eph. vi. 12, yet Christ seems not here so much to respect that, as the dissolution of that kingdom he had erected in the world; he is styled, "the God of this world," 2 Cor. iv. 4, "the ruler of the darkness of this world," Eph. vi. 12, and to him is ascribed "the kingdom of darkness," Col. i. 13, and a principality over the children of disobedience; Christ therefore here foretells that this dominion should be in great part lost by the translation of the heathens "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God;" and Satan being thus spoiled of his dominions, may be said to fall from heaven, by a phrase familiar both to sacred and profane writers: so of the fall of the king of Babylon the prophet saith, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer!" Isa. xiv. 12. Of the fall of the colleague of Antonius, Cicero* saith, Collegam tuum de cœlo detraxisti, "Thou hast pulled him down from heaven;" and when Pompey was overthrown, he is said by him, ex astris decidisse, "to have fallen from the stars" (Ep. lib. i. ad Atticum, ep. 20).

[5] Ver. 19. Ἰδοὺ, δίδωμι ὑμῖν ἐξουσίαν τοῦ πατεῖν ἐπάνω ὄφεων, Behold, I give you power to tread upon serpents.] Note here, that these words plainly seem to give a new institution to the seventy, relating not, as the former, to the cities of Israel, as the forerunners of their Lord, but to their preaching among other nations; as we may gather, by comparing these words with the commission given by Christ to his apostles, sent into the world "to preach the gospel to every creature," Mark xvi. 15. 18, according to these words of Grotius, Non pro hâc tantùm legatione dedi, sed do nunc etiam in posterum. (2.) This power seems to be given in words, containing a manifest allusion to Ps. xci. 13, where a like protection from danger is promised to the pious man, under the metaphor of "treading on the scorpion and the basilisk;" and according to the LXX. and the Chaldee, of "protection from the noon-day devil," or "from troops of evil spirits," ver. 5, 6. And "after this manner,"†

---

* Philip. 2.

† Hôc denique modo, etiam ethnicis sæpè subvenimus, donati à Deo eâ potestate, quam apostolus dedicavit, quum morsum viperæ sprevit. Scorp.

saith Tertullian, "we often help the heathens, being invested with that power which the apostle dedicated when he despised the biting of the serpent."

[6] Ver. 20. Πλὴν ἐν τούτῳ μὴ χαίρετε, &c. Notwithstanding, rejoice not in this, that the spirits are subject to you; but rather rejoice, that your names are written in heaven.] They returned (ver. 17) "rejoicing, that even the devils were subject to them in Christ's name;" which, as it tended to the glory of God, and the promotion of the gospel, was a just matter of their joy; but because to be thought worthy of salvation by God, and through faith in Christ to have a present right to an inheritance in heaven, was a blessing proper to the saints, and tended to the eternal welfare of their souls, which the casting out of devils was not, that being done by men to whom Christ will say at the last day, "I know ye not," &c. (Matt. vii. 22, 23); therefore Christ bids them, μᾶλλον χαίρειν, "to rejoice more," that their names were written in heaven, or in the book of life; which is a Jewish phrase, of the import of which see the note on Phil. iv. 3, not signifying an absolute election, but a present right to life eternal, through the obedience of faith (see also Targum on Deut. xxxii. 33, and Ps. lxix. 29, Isa. iv. 3, and Constitut. Apost. lib. viii. cap. 1).

[7] Ver. 21. Ὅτι ἀπέκρυψας, That thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent.] See note on Matt. xi. 25.

[8] Ver. 22. Καὶ οὐδεὶς γινώσκει τίς ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς, All things are delivered to me of the Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father.] All things, i. e. "all power both in heaven and earth," Matt. xxviii. 18; "all judgment," John v. 27; "power over all flesh to give eternal life," John xvii. 2. Now this includes power to raise the dead, and to pass judgment on them according to their works and secret thoughts; and so a power and wisdom which is plainly divine, and consequently the divine nature, from which those attributes are inseparable; which is one argument for the divinity of Christ. Secondly, He saith here, no man knoweth τίς ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς, "who is the Son," which seems not to respect what he was to do or suffer, but his nature, excellence, and dignity, as the words following, τίς ἐστιν ὁ πατὴρ, "who the Father is," respect his nature, his divine excellency, and dignity, exhibited to us ἐν προσώπῳ, "in the person of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. iv. 6).

[9] Ver. 29. Καὶ τίς ἐστί μου πλησίον; But he, willing to justify himself (as one who had performed the command of 34 And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in (to them) oil and wine, and (he) set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35 And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

36 Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves?

37 And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise (treat the Samaritan with like kindness, and thou wilt do according to this precept).

38 ¶ Now it came to pass, as they went (to Bethany, John xi. 1), that he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house.

39 And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word.

40 But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him, and said, Lord, dost not thou care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me.

41 And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things:

42 But one [10] thing is (absolutely) needful: and Mary (by hearing my word, that she may do it), hath chosen that good part, (the fruits of) which shall not be taken away from her.

---

loving his neighbour as himself), said, Who is my neighbour?] Now the corrupt tradition of the Jews having restrained this neighbour to men of their own nation and religion, to whom he might retain a very kind affection, he thought this sufficient to show, that he had satisfied that precept; Christ therefore here demonstrates to him that every person who stands in need of help, and who is capable of kindness from us, though he be of a different nation and religion, must be deemed our neighbour (see the note on Matt. xxii. 39).

[10] Ver. 42. Ἑνὸς δέ ἐστι χρεία. But one thing is needful.] Not one dish only to eat of, as Theophylact and many of the fathers descant here, but the "better part," or that spiritual wisdom which Mary made it her chief care to labour after. So Arrian* saith of the government of the mind, and the fixing it upon that only which is in our power, and which we cannot be deprived of, νῦν ὁὴ ἑνὸς δυνάμενοι ἐπιμελεῖσθαι καὶ ἑνὶ προσαρτηκέναι, ἑαυτοὺς μᾶλλον θέλομεν πολλῶν ἐπιμελεῖσθαι καὶ πολλοῖς προσδεδέσθαι, "When we might contract our cares to one thing, and cleave to that alone, we choose rather to be bound to and troubled about many things."

* In Epict. lib. i. cap. 1, p. 84.

CHAPTER XI.

1 And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us (a form by which) to pray, as John also taught (one to) his disciples.

2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say (these words), Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as (it is) in heaven, so in earth.

3 Give us day by (or, after) day our daily bread.

4 And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is [1] indebted (or, hath been injurious) to us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil (see the paraphrase and notes on Matt. vi.)

5 And (to encourage them to expect a return of their prayer) he said unto them, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go unto him at midnight, and say unto him, Friend, lend me three loaves;

6 For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him?

7 And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise and give (them to) thee.

8 I say unto you, Though he will not (be moved to) rise and give him (them), because he is his friend, yet because of his [2] importunity he will rise and give him as many (loaves) as he needeth.

9 And (accordingly) I say unto you, Ask (in faith), and it shall be given you; seek (diligently), and ye shall find; knock (earnestly), and it shall be opened unto you.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 4. Καὶ γὰρ αὐτοὶ ἀφίεμεν παντὶ ὀφείλοντι ἡμῖν, For we forgive every one that is indebted to us.] That is, every one that offends against us, according to the usual import of that word in the Syriac, or Chaldee, where a sinner is חיב, "a debtor," and sin is חיבא, "a debt;" thus Exod. xxxii. 30, חטאתם חטאה גדלה, "ye have sinned a great sin," is, in the Targum, חבין חובא רבא, "You have contracted a great debt:" so Gen. xx. 9, xxvi. 10, xxxi. 36, Lev. iv. 3, see Burtorf in the word חיב: and in this sense ὀφειλέτης, "a debtor," and ὀφειλήματα, "debts," are used, Matt. vi. 12, and Luke xiii. 4, "Think ye that they on whom the tower of Siloam fell were ὀφειλῆται, debtors." that is, "sinners above all men?"

But then it is carefully to be observed, for the due stating the controversy of Christ's satisfaction, that sins are not properly and strictly compared to debts, seeing by sinning we do not so properly contract a debt, as a guilt, or obnoxiousness to punishment; which two things will admit these differences; (1.) That if another will pay my debt, the creditor cannot justly refuse his paying it for me, or complain he is not satisfied when the whole debt is paid; but let another be never so willing to suffer for my offence, he can make no satisfaction for it, unless the judge be willing to admit him to suffer in my stead. Hence (2.) the creditor does no act of grace by admitting the solution of another; and if that other pay the whole, he can require no conditions for my discharge; but the ruler, against whose laws I have personally offended, does me an act of grace in admitting another to suffer in my stead, and so may do this only upon some reasonable conditions. And (3.) we do not properly pay our whole debts, unless we pay what was owing in specie, or something admitted as an equivalent to it; but we may make satisfaction for our sins against our governor by any thing of less value, provided that it preserves the honour of the lawgiver, and terrifies us and others for the future from lapsing into the same offence.

Of the third and last petition of the Lord's prayer, whether they were wanting in St. Luke's original, or not, and whether (ver. 13) we are to read Πνεῦμα ἅγιον, or ἀγαθὸν δόμα, see Examen Millii, lib. ii. cap. 1. n. 12, 13.

[2] Ver. 8. Διά γε τὴν ἀναιδείαν, For his importunity.] i. e. His request so importunate as to admit of no refusal, his continual coming and crying night and day (xviii. 1. 5. 7): Gr. "for his impudence," according to that saying of the Jews, *"The impudent man overcomes the modest and the bashful, how much more God who is goodness itself!"

* Buxtorf. in voce chatoph.

10 For every one that (thus) [3] asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened (by his heavenly Father).

11 (For) if a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?

12 Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? (i. e. things unprofitable and hurtful to, rather than what is good and needful for him.)

13 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your [4] heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit (the fountain of all spiritual blessings) to them that ask him?

14 ¶ And he was casting out a devil, and it was (such a one as made the man) dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out (of him), the dumb (man) spake; and the people wondered (at it).

15 But some of (the pharisees among) them said, He casteth out devils through (confederacy with) [5] Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16 And others, tempting him (i. e. distrusting his power, and doubting of his commission), sought of him a [6] sign from heaven (as the chief token of the Messiah mentioned by Daniel, vii. 14).

17 But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them (who accused him of confederacy with Satan), Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth (into ruin).

18 If Satan (then) also be divided against himself (and he casts his own subjects out of his dominions), how shall his kingdom stand? (And thus I argue) because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.

19 And (moreover) if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, (let me ask you) by whom do your [7] sons (who exorcise them in the name of the same God by whose power I profess to do it) cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges (i. e. your judgment, that they do this by the power of God, shall condemn you, who ascribe the same thing done by me to the power and assistance of Satan).

20 But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt (can be made of it that) the kingdom of God is come upon you (i. e. that the Messiah promised to erect this kingdom is among you.

21 For) when a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are (preserved) in peace (and safety):

22 But when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. (I therefore being thus able to overcome Satan, and cast him out of his dominions, must be stronger than he.

23 And in this work, of beating down Satan's kingdom) He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth (i. e. he that assists me not in bringing men to the kingdom of God, scattereth them as sheep without a shepherd.

24 And to you from whom Satan hath been thus ejected, and to you who continue yet to side with him against me by whom he is ejected, I direct this parable; viz.) When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places (not yet watered by the word preached to them), seeking rest; and finding none (there, the gospel following him to the gentiles, and dispossessing him there), he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out.

25 And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished (and so ready to receive him).

26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and (so) the last state of that man is worse than the first. (Thus also will it be with you; Satan ejected by me, finding nowhere else persons so fitted to receive him, will return, and take more durable possession of you, and render you seven times more the children of Satan than ye were before.)

27 ¶ And it came to pass, as he spake these things,

---

[3] Ver. 10. Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ αἰτῶν, λαμβάνει, For every one that asketh receiveth.] i. e. Who asks in faith, seeks with diligence, and knocks with importunity and perseverance, receives all that is needful for him; so the connexion shows "He will rise and give him ὅσον χρήζει, as much as he wants; (ver. 8;) and I say to you, Ask, and ye shall receive" all knowledge necessary to your salvation, all that assistance which is necessary to preserve you from those sinful courses which will exclude you from salvation, or to the performance of that obedience which God hath made the condition of your salvation under the new covenant, and to your perseverance in that obedience to the end; he shall receive all things spiritually good for him: "for if you, being evil, will give good things to your children, much more will your heavenly Father give τὰ ἀγαθὰ, good things," Matt. vii. 11, "his Holy Spirit," ver. 13, "to those that ask him."

[4] Ver. 13. Ὁ πατὴρ ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ δώσει Πνεῦμα ἅγιον, Much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him.] Ὁ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ is the same with ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, Matt. vii. 11; so "our house from heaven," 2 Cor. v. 2, is our house "in heaven," ver. 1, and "the Lord in heaven," 1 Cor. xv. 47, is ὁ ἐπουράνιος, "the heavenly Lord," ver. 48, 49. Πνεῦμα ἅγιον "the Holy Ghost," if it here signify, as throughout the Old Testament, "the spirit of prophecy," or as generally in the New, "the miraculous inward gifts and operations of the Holy Spirit" (see note on 1 John v. 6); it must be granted, that Christ speaks here, not of what they were to ask at present; for "the Holy Ghost was not yet, because Jesus was not glorified," (John vii. 39): and so must we understand our Lord's words, xii. 11, 12. "When they shall bring you before princes and governors, meditate not beforehand what you shall speak, for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in that hour;" for neither were they brought before princes till after our Lord's resurrection and ascension, nor did the Holy Ghost instruct them how to speak till then. So our Lord's commission as to these words, Matt. x. 8, and all that follows in that chapter, from ver. 16, to the end, plainly respects what they were to do and suffer after Christ's ascension. If it relates to the present time, and to Christians in general, not only to the apostles, as the words, "every one that asketh," and the "good gifts," in Matthew, seem to argue; we, by this phrase, can only understand the ordinary assistances and operations of the Holy Spirit.

[5] Ver. 15. Ἐν Βεελζεβοὺλ, By Beelzebub, the prince of the devils.] Of the right reading of this word Beelzebub, "the lord of flies," or Beelzebul, "the lord of dung," as St. Jerome reads, Matt. xii. 24, see Dr. Lightfoot there. But then when both he and the great Bochartus wonder how this god of flies should come to be styled "the prince of devils," that seems to be no great wonder, he being no less than the heathen Jupiter, the prince and father of the gods, as appears from the titles of ἀπόμυιος, μύαρτος, μυώδης, all given him à muscis abigendis, "from his office of chasing the flies from the sacrifices, the temples," and cities of the heathens (see Bochart. Hieroz. par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 9, p. 499—501).

[6] Ver. 16. Σημεῖον ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, A sign from heaven.] Because the Son of man was to "come in the clouds of heaven," Dan. vii. 13 (see the note on Matt. xii. 38).

[7] Ver. 19. Οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν ἐν τίνι ἐκβάλλουσι; By whom do your sons cast them out?] To what hath been said on Matt. xii. 27, add, that some think that this relates to the seventy disciples sent by Christ to preach the kingdom in every city and place whither he was afterward to come, Luke x. 2: for they return to him with these words, "Even the devils are subject to us in thy name," ver. 17. Now doubtless they were the sons of the Jews, and though they cast ou a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, [8] Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and (blessed are) the paps which thou hast sucked.

28 But he said, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

29 ¶ And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, (in answer to those who sought of him a sign from heaven, ver. 16,) This is an evil generation: they seek a sign; and there shall no (farther) sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

30 For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites (being three days and nights in the whale's belly, and yet raised out of it to preach to them), so shall also the Son of man be (raised from the dead after three days, for a sign) to this generation.

31 The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and (shall) condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a (person of) greater (wisdom) than Solomon is here (and yet his wisdom is despised by them).

32 The men of Nineve shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, (these men repent not, though) a greater (prophet) than Jonas is here.

33 (But though the men of this generation despise this heavenly wisdom, it becomes not me, nor my disciples, to conceal it; for) [9] No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in (to the house) may see the light.

34 (As) The light of the body is the eye (directing the body how to walk, so the light of the soul is the mind, directing it how to discern its duty): therefore [10] when thine eye is single (free from worldly-mindedness and liberal), thy whole body also is full of light (directed by the love of God and of our neighbour for his sake, into the way that leads to life); but when thine eye is evil (envious and covetous), thy body also is full of darkness (all thy actions done in the body will be deeds of darkness).

35 Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee (thy mind which should direct thy actions) be not (by covetousness, and an immoderate love of the world, turned into) darkness.

36 If (by this care) thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole (of thy life) shall be full of light, as (a room is) when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light.

37 ¶ And as he spake (these words), a certain Pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in (to his house), and sat down to (eat of his) meat.

38 And when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner.

39 And the Lord said unto him, Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter (i. e. take care to have a fair outside, and bodies clean from ceremonial defilement); but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

40 Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also? (and should not ye then be as careful to keep that clean, as ye do the outward man, by frequent washings?)

41 But rather give alms of such [11] things as ye have; and (when God and the poor have had their dues), behold, all things (ye eat of or enjoy) are clean unto you.

42 But woe unto you Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and devils in Christ's name, yet is not this sufficient to take off the force of Christ's argument; for it was not easy to suspect so great a number of honest men, of their own nation and acquaintance, sent by two and two into their villages and cities, should be all confederates with Satan; they therefore going through their cities to assure them, "the kingdom of God is at hand," and confirming their testimony by healing diseases, and casting out devils in Christ's name, gave in full testimony against them, who said, that Christ himself did this by a confederacy with Satan.

---

[8] Ver. 27, 28. Blessed is the womb that bare thee. Μενοῦνγε, Yea, rather blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.] i. e. That blessedness of my mother ariseth not from this, that she conceived, and brought me forth into the world; but in order to that, it is necessary for her, as well as others, to believe and obey my word (so Theophylact).

[9] Ver. 33. Οὐδεὶς δὲ λύχνον ἅψας, &c. No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, &c.] Some give here the connexion thus: Though you generally receive very little benefit from my preaching, it becomes neither me nor my disciples to conceal our wisdom, but still to let it shine forth to the world (Matt. v. 15). But seeing it is evident, that the same expressions are oft applied to different things in divers senses (see note on Matt. xii. 30), why may not this have relation to the following verse, thus? God never gives the light of nature, or of revelation, as he hath done to you Jews, but that it may be improved, and shine forth in them to others: now, as the light of the body is the eye, so the light of the soul is that reason, and that revelation of his mind, which God affords; and therefore it becomes you to take as great care that your light be not turned into darkness by prejudices, which blind the eyes, or by shutting your eyes against the light, or by your infidelity, or those vicious habits which will not suffer you to come at the light, or believe in it; as that the eye of the body be not darkened, or put out.

[10] Ver. 34. Ὅταν οὖν ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου ἁπλοῦς ᾖ, Therefore when thy eye is single, thy whole body is full of light; but when, πονηρὸς ᾖ, it is evil, thy body also is full of darkness.] There is no tautology in these and the following words, but only a progression from the mind clearly enlightened and directed, and the faculties of the soul rightly disposed, to a life led according to them, or, in the scripture phrase, "a walking in the light." For Christ here compares the inward light of the soul, or the eye of it, to that of the body, showing, that as that being pure from spots, adventitious humours, cataracts, and other blemishes, gives a clear light for the direction of the body; but when it is ill affected, by reason of these or other maladies, the body is in the dark: so if the eye of the soul be not single, i. e. if it be not pure from covetousness, which is ἐπιθυμία τοῦ ὀφθαλμοῦ, "the lust of the eye" after worldly things (1 John ii. 16), from carnal concupiscence, which renders it the "adulterous eye" (Matt. v. 28, 29, 2 Pet. ii. 14), from envy which is ὀφθαλμὸς βασκανίας, the "evil or bewitching eye," (Prov. xxiii. 6, Ecclus. xiv. 3. 10), from pride which is ὀφθαλμὸς ὑπερηφάνων, "the high look" (Ps. ci. 5), ὀφθαλμὸς ὑβριστοῦ, "the proud look" (Prov. vi. 17), ὀφθαλμὸς ὁ μετέωρος, "the lofty eye" (Isa. v. 15): if, I say, it be not purified from these distempers, it will not direct our way aright, or preserve us from walking in the dark: for these are the lusts of the world, which are contrary to the friendship of God, making all the actions of the life perverse; and therefore they who do such things are said to walk on still in darkness (Ps. lxxxii. 5, Eccles. ii. 14, John viii. 12, xii. 46, 1 John ii. 9), "to be in darkness" (1 Thess. v. 4), and "to love darkness more than light" (John iii. 19); whereas when the mind is free from these vices, and adorned with the contrary virtues, it directs all our actions to piety, virtue, and the love of God; as a lantern shining in darkness directs our feet; or as a candle enlightens the whole room where it is; and hence such persons are said "to walk in the light" (1 John i. 7), and to be "children of the light, and of the day" (Luke xiv. 8, John xii. 36, Eph. v. 8, 1 Thess. v. 5). This therefore is the import of these words, That a mind thus enlightened, and free from all these distempers, which darken and make blind the soul, will direct all our faculties and inclinations, and all the actions of the life aright; as a light doth the body when it walks in a dark night.

[11] Ver. 41. Πλὴν τὰ ἐνόντα δότε ἐλεημοσύνην, But give alms

rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done (as being your own constitutions), and not to leave the other undone (as being the more weighty matters of the law).

43 Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets (minding these respects from men more than the favour of God, John v. 44, xii. 43).

44 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves which appear not (so to be, as being overgrown with grass and herbs), and (so) the men that walk over them are not aware of them (having specious outsides, but hearts defiled, and defiling others).

45 ¶ Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto him, Master, thus saying thou reproachest us also (for we are scribes).

46 And he said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers (i. e. ye will not show the least mercy to them who are thus oppressed with them; see note on Matt. xxiii. 4).

47 Woe unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them (as you yourselves acknowledge).

48 Truly ye bear witness that (ye are by nature the children of those fathers, and) ye allow (or, are well pleased with) the deeds of your fathers: (showing the like malice against me, and mine, as they did against the old prophets; I say, you testify this, viz. that ye are the children of such fathers) for they (your fathers) indeed killed them, and ye (their children) build their sepulchres.

49 Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute (to the death):

50 That (so) the blood of the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation (who by their hatred to the last and chiefest of them have filled up the measure of their sins);

51 From the blood of (righteous) Abel (the first prophet and preacher of righteousness, Heb. xi. 4, 2 Pet. ii. 5) unto the blood of Zacharias, (the last prophet slain by you, 2 Chron. xxiv. 22, and) which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation.

52 Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the [12] key of knowledge (by which the kingdom of God should be opened to men): ye enter not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered (obstructing their faith by your tradition and false interpretations of the scripture).

53 And as he said these things unto them, the scribes and the Pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and [13] to provoke him to speak of many things (Gr. and to inquire of many things from his mouth):

54 Laying wait for him, and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that (by it) they might accuse him.

---

of all that you have, and all things shall be clean unto you.] Τὰ ἐνόντα, are τὰ παρόντα, τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, "our substance," or the things which we have; or, as Stephanus, "which are in our power;" according to those words of Tobit, ἐκ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων σοι ποίει ἐλεημοσύνην, "Give alms of thy substance," iv. 7, and ver. 8, ὡς σοὶ ὑπάρχει, "as thou hast ability," according to thy abundance. Christ therefore here instructs us, that our temporal enjoyments are unclean, i. e. unlawful to be used by us till we have sanctified them by some act of charity; and this is the frequent import of the word καθαρὸς, clean, when it relates to meats, as Acts x. 14, 15, xi. 8, 9, Rom. xiv. 20, Tit. i. 15. And suitable to this, is God's command concerning the tithe of the third year, that it should be given "to the stranger, the orphan, the widow, that God might bless the land" (Deut. xxiv. 13, 14): so that till this were done, they were not to expect from him a blessing on their substance. This also is frequently prescribed as a means to procure the pardon of our sins. So Daniel saith to Nebuchadnezzar, λύτρωσαι ἐν ἐλεημοσύναις, "Redeem thy sins," or expiate them, "by acts of mercy to the poor," iv. 27, for, "by mercy and truth iniquity is purged," Prov. xvi. 6. Ἐλεημοσύνη, "Mercy (or charity) delivereth from death, and shall purge away all sins," Tobit xii. 9. "Water will quench a flaming fire, καὶ ἐλεημοσύνη ἐξιλάσεται ἁμαρτίας, and alms maketh an atonement for sins:" our mercy to his servants inclining God to be merciful to us.

[12] Ver. 52. Ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως, You have taken away the key of knowledge.] By which the kingdom of God should be opened to men, and they be enabled to enter into it (see note on Matt. xxiii. 13); obscuring and hiding, by your traditions and false interpretations, those scriptures which relate to the Messiah, and the light which those prophecies of the Old Testament afford to conduct men to it; and pretending, that for want of knowledge of the law, they are not sufficient to judge of these matters, but must be guided by your judgment of them (John vii. 48, 49): and thus you, not believing in the Messiah, nor entering yourselves into the kingdom of God, now come among you, and preached to you, have obstructed the faith of them who otherwise would have believed and entered into it.

At the ordination of a Jewish rabbi to be a teacher of the law, a key was given him, to show that he was appointed to open the scriptures to the people. Hence Christ pronounces a woe upon those doctors of the law, who being thus designed to open those scriptures to the people, which concerned the kingdom of heaven, or of the Messiah; they, by their false interpretations, and corrupt traditions, touching the scriptures relating to that kingdom, did "shut the kingdom of heaven up against them."

[13] Ver. 53. Καὶ ἀποστοματίζειν αὐτὸν περὶ πλειόνων. And to provoke him to speak of many things.] Or to inquire of many things from his mouth: for they did this ζητοῦντες θηρεῦσαί τι ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, "seeking to catch something out of his mouth." So Julius Pollux* saith, that ἀποστοματίζειν is ἀπὸ στόματος εἰπεῖν, "to speak something from the mouth," or words not written: Suidas, that it is ἀπὸ στόματος λέγειν, "to speak from the mouth" or memory. So Aristotle† saith the grammarians learn τὰ ἀποστοματιζόμενα, "those things which are delivered from their master's mouth" (see Stephanus on this word): Theophylact saith, it is κηδεύειν αὐτὸν καὶ ἀπὸ στόματος κρατεῖν.

* Lib. ii. cap. 9, §. 23, p. 94, lib. xxiii.
† Elench. lib. i. cap. 3.

CHAPTER XII.

1 In the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people (Gr. ἐν οἷς, whilst Christ was saying these things, an innumerable multitude of people being gathered together), insomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, [1] Beware ye of the leaven of the

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. Προσέχετε ἑαυτοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς ζύμης τῶν φαρισαίων, ἥτις ἐστὶν ὑπόκρισις, Beware of the leaven of the pharisees, which is hypocrisy.] i. e. Take heed ye be not guilty of phari-

Pharisees, which is hypocrisy (i. e. an outward appearance of sanctity, which puffs up and deceives others; but yet is only a pretence).

2 For there is nothing covered (under hypocritical pretences), that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be (made) known.

3 Therefore (Gr. ἀνθ' ὧν, because, or forasmuch as) whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed on the housetops (so that though you should be able to conceal the evil of your hearts and actions from men, they will be laid open at the great day of your accounts).

4 And (though I send you with a message, which will so offend men, and more especially the Jews, that they will think by killing you they do God good service, John xvi. 2, yet) I say unto you, my friends, Be not afraid of them that (can only) kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do (nothing to hurt the soul).

5 But I will forewarn you whom ye shall (rather) fear: (viz.) Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast (both soul and body) into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him.

6 (For) are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and (yet) not one of them is forgotten before (that) God (whose providence watches over the smallest things in the world? You may then be assured your least concerns are not neglected by him.)

7 But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows (and so the more peculiar objects of God's care and providence).

8 Also (and farther to engage you to constancy in your profession, and patient suffering for my sake) I say unto you, Whosoever shall (thus) [2] confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God (he will own them before God, in whose presence the angels stand):

9 But he that (to avoid the rage of men) denieth me before men shall be denied (i. e. renounced, as none of my disciples) before the angels (standing in the presence) of God.

10 And (as for the enemies of me and my doctrine) whosoever (of them being offended at my present humble circumstances) shall (notwithstanding all the conviction I have given them) speak a word against the Son of man (in derogation from his mission), it shall be forgiven him: but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost (when he cometh upon you in his gifts and miraculous operations, to assert my resurrection and confirm my doctrine,) it (that blasphemy) shall not be forgiven.

11 And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and (heathen) powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say (seeing it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak, Matt. x. 19):

12 For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say.

---

saical hypocrisy; for though you should be able to conceal the evil of your hearts and actions from the eyes of men, the time will come when they shall be revealed and made known (ver. 3), ἀνθ' ὧν eo quòd, propterea quòd, idcircò quòd, for that, or forasmuch as, or because, in the great day of your accounts, that which you have spoken or done with the greatest secrecy, shall come to light, and be revealed openly. So Luke i. 20, "Thou shalt be dumb, ἀνθ' ὧν, because thou hast not believed my words;" Luke xix. 44, "They shall lay thee even with the ground, ἀνθ' ὧν, because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation;" Acts xii. 23, "The angel of the Lord smote him, ἀνθ' ὧν, because he gave not glory to God." And thus it answers to the Hebrew עֵקֶב אֲשֶׁר which is mostly rendered by the LXX. ὅτι, διότι, and sometimes, ἀνθ' ὧν ὅτι, as 2 Sam. xii. 16, ἀνθ' ὧν ὅτι, "Because he hath done this thing;" 1 Kings ix. 9, ἀνθ' ὧν, "Because they have forsaken the Lord their God;" 2 Kings xviii. 12, ἀνθ' ὧν ὅτι, "Because they have not hearkened to the voice of the Lord;" Jer. xvi. 11, ἀνθ' ὧν, "Because your fathers have forsaken me:" so xxii. 9, Ezek. xxix. 39, ἀνθ' ὧν, "For I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel."

[2] Ver. 8, 9. Πᾶς ὃς ἂν ὁμολογήσῃ ἐν ἐμοί, &c. Every one that shall confess me before men, him also shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God: But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God.] The critical note here is, that as the Hebrew ב is very frequently only the sign of the dative case (see Nold. de Partic. p. 165, 166), so is ἐν, both in the Old and the New Testament: so Gen. xl. 14, ποιήσεις ἐν ἐμοὶ ἔλεος, "Thou shalt show me kindness," Ps. lxxxii. 8: so Rom. xi. 2, ἐν Ἠλίᾳ, "to Elijah;" 1 Cor. ix. 15, I have not written this that it should be so done, ἐν ἐμοί, "to me;" xiv. 11, ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοὶ βάρβαρος, "He that speaketh shall be a barbarian to me:" so in Euripides, ἐν βέλει πληγείς, "smitten with a weapon," ἐν γαλάκτι χαίρων (see Stephanus). And it is also used where the sense requires an accusative case, as σὺ ἐνελίξω ἐν Ἀβραὰμ, "thou hast chosen Abraham," Neh. ix. 7; Esd. ii. 81, ἐμυκτήριζον ἐν ἀγγέλοις αὐτοῦ, "They mocked his messengers;" 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, "The leprosy of Naaman shall cleave ἐν σοὶ καὶ ἐν τῷ σπέρματί σου, to thee and to thy seed;" 2 Kings v. 27, "I will hear what the Lord will say ἐν ἐμοί, to me;" so ἐν πόλει ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, "a city—Jerusalem," LXX. Moreover, these words (ver. 9) afford us a full confutation of the pernicious doctrine of Mr. Hobbes, against that self-denial, and taking up the cross, our Lord so expressly and frequently requires from all Christians, and Mr. Hobbes, out of his more abundant wisdom, fully doth excuse us from: for, "Faith," saith he, "being internal and invisible, we need not put ourselves into danger for it;" and therefore he alloweth subjects, being commanded by their sovereigns, to deny Christ. His words are these, "Profession with the tongue is only an external thing, wherein a Christian, believing firmly in his heart the faith of Christ, hath the same liberty which the prophet Elisha allowed to Naaman the Syrian, who believed in his heart, but by bowing before the idol Rimmon, he denied the true God in effect, as much as if he had done it with his lips." Moreover, he giveth license to a Christian to commit idolatry, or do an idolatrous act, for fear of death or corporal danger; "To pray," saith he, "to a king voluntarily for fair weather, or for any thing which God alone can do for us, is divine worship and idolatry; but if the king compel a man to this by the terror of death, or other great corporal punishments, it is not idolatry;" his reason is, "because it is not a sign that he doth not honour him as God inwardly, but that he is desirous to save himself from death, or from a miserable life:" thus doth he, with those Gnostics of whom St. Peter speaks, "bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought him." But (1.) this doctrine renders self-denial, or taking up the cross, a thing impossible: for where the magistrate is not against the free profession of our faith, where he enjoineth nothing opposite to the command of Christ, we cannot suffer for the sake of Christ and of his gospel; and where the magistrate compels us by punishments or threats to deny Christ, or do what he hath otherwise forbid, Mr. Hobbes tells us, we may lawfully obey, and therefore need not suffer. (2.) No man, according to this doctrine, can suffer "according to the will of God," as the apostle Peter doth suppose (1 Pet. iii. 17). No man can suffer "for conscience towards God, or for well-doing," as the same apostle speaks; because it is not the will of God we should thus suffer, since he permits us to deny our faith, saith Mr. Hobbes, and practise contrary to what he hath forbid, when faith or practice will expose us to corporal punishments, or to the fear of death. (3.) No man, according to this doctrine, can promise to himself any reward for what he suffers in the cause of Christ, because he never did require him to suffer; whereas a crown of glory is every where in scripture promised to the patient sufferer, his light afflictions are said

13 ¶ And (then) one of the company said unto him, [3] Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me (for I would gladly have thee to be arbitrator betwixt us concerning it).

14 And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? (This properly belongs not to my prophetic office, but to your civil consistories.)

15 And (upon occasion of this man's concern for his temporals) he said unto them, Take heed, and [4] beware of covetousness: for (the comfort of) a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

16 And (to this end) he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully:

17 And he thought within himself, saying (to him-

"to work for him a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" and it is said to be "a righteous thing with God, to recompense to them that suffer for him rest with him."

Moreover, this doctrine gives the lie to our Saviour, who plainly tells us, that "whosoever shall deny him before men, he will deny him before his heavenly Father" (Matt. x. 33): that "whosoever shall be ashamed of his words and doctrine in a perverse and adulterous generation, of him his Saviour will be ashamed, when he comes before his Father and his glorious angels" (Mark viii. 3. 8). But to this it is replied by Mr. Hobbes, that "what a subject is compelled to do in obedience to his sovereign, and doth it not in order to his own mind, but in order to the law of his sovereign, that action is not his, but his sovereign's; nor is it he that in this case denieth Christ, but his sovereign." Ans. 1. Seeing the persecuting world is that "adulterous generation" of which our Saviour speaks, and the world persecuteth by the civil power; to be ashamed of Christ and of his word "in this adulterous generation," is certainly to be ashamed to confess him, and to own his doctrine, by reason of the ignominy or troubles we may suffer for so doing from the civil power. 2. That to refuse to bear our cross, and even lose our lives "for Christ's sake and the gospel's," is to be ashamed of Christ, is evident from the connexion of the words: for Christ informeth his disciples (ver. 31), "that he must suffer many things of the chief priests and rulers of the Jews;" and, ver. 34, he tells them, All that would be his disciples, must also be content to bear the cross, and lose their lives for his sake and the gospel's, when men saw fit to treat the disciples as they had done their Master, which, saith he, whosoever doth refuse to do, will be the greatest loser; οὗ γὰρ ἂν, "for whosoever will be ashamed of me," &c. Is it not therefore evident, that to refuse even to lose our life for Christ's sake and the gospel's, when rulers shall think fit on that account to take it from us, is to be ashamed of Christ and of his doctrine? And therefore Mr. Hobbes wisely said nothing to this text. But (2.) in his pretended answer to those words of Matthew, he manifestly wrests our Saviour's words, who plainly speaks of denying him by words in presence of, or in compliance with, the magistrate: for (ver. 18) he declares to his disciples, that "they should be brought before kings and rulers for his sake," and by them should be scourged (ver. 17), imprisoned (ver. 19), and killed (ver. 21). But notwithstanding all their menaces and persecutions, publish, saith he, my doctrine openly to all the world; "what I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in the light; and what you hear in the ear, that speak on the housetop" (ver. 27): and be not discouraged from so doing by fear of them who "may kill the body," which magistrates, who have the power of the sword, have only a right to do: and which they cannot do for our internal faith, of which they cannot judge, but only for outward profession, or confession of it, which, saith Christ, I command you to make before them without fear (ver. 31), "for whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess—deny me before men—deny" (ver. 32, 33); so saith our Lord. It is no such matter, saith the great Malmsburian philosopher; you are fools if you offer yourselves to be thus treated by the magistrate for the name of Christ; you need not run this hazard; you may deny, as well as preach Christ's doctrine on the housetop, if so commanded by the magistrate: and therefore you need not fear him, because you need do nothing to provoke him; you may be sound believers, though ye deny, blaspheme, or disobey Christ, when by their menaces or precepts the magistrates compel you so to do; and therefore you, notwithstanding all your blasphemies, will be acceptable to Christ; but he will punish those persecuting rulers as those who only do indeed deny him. Now whether this be to interpret or contradict our Saviour's words, let any rational man judge. (3.) This doctrine is a flat contradiction to St. Paul, who doth expressly teach as well confession of the Lord Jesus with our mouths, as belief of him with our hearts, to be required "to salvation;" for "with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Rom. x. 10); adding, that "if we do deny Christ, he also will deny us; but if we suffer for him, we shall reign together with him" (2 Tim. ii. 12). It also thwarts the doctrine of St. John, who having told us of some Jewish rulers, who, when convinced that "Jesus was the Christ," would not confess him for fear of punishment, and of disgrace, by being turned out of the synagogue, saith, "they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God" (John xii. 43), which whosoever doth can be no sound believer, and no true lover of his Lord (John v. 42. 44). Moreover, by this doctrine we must condemn the three children who refused to worship the golden image which Nebuchadnezzar did erect, whereas God by their wonderful deliverance approved their disobedience to the command of the king; and all those martyrs and confessors, who rather chose to suffer than deny their Lord, or worship idols, when by the heathen magistrate they were commanded so to do, must be condemned as fools and criminals; whereas the miracles they wrought, and the divine assistance which they found under their sufferings, sufficiently convince us that God approved of their actions. Lastly, the instance of Naaman the Syrian, as it may be rendered from the Hebrew, is wholly impertinent to this purpose; for there he doth not ask this prophet's leave to sin again, but only asks his pardon that he had done it; "In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my lord went into the house of Rimmon to bow down himself there, and leaned on my hand, I bowed down myself there; that I bowed down myself—the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing;" and so the margins of some bibles read; and that which may be fairly offered to confirm this reading is, that these very Hebrew words here used are elsewhere found, not in the future, but in the preterperfect tense, "the Lord pardon me, beboa, in going to the house of Rimmon," saith the text here; a psalm of David, beboa Nathan "when Nathan went unto him," li. 1: והשתחויתי "and I bow down myself," saith our translation here, והשתחוו "and they bowed down themselves," Exod. xxxiii. 10.

[3] Ver. 13. Εἰπὲ τῷ ἀδελφῷ μου μερίσασθαι τὴν κληρονομίαν μετ' ἐμοῦ, Master, speak to my brother to divide the inheritance with me.] Here Dr. Lightfoot shows that this was usually done either by the consistory of three, or by some chosen by them betwixt whom the cause depended, as arbitrators in the case, as Grotius and Dr. Hammond have suggested; therefore there is no ground for Mr. Le Clerc to say this man did not desire him to perform the office of a judge or arbitrator between him and his brother, but to use his prophetical authority to oblige his brother, who detained the whole inheritance, to divide it with him; for if so, why doth not Christ answer, that this was no part of his prophetic office, but only, "Who made me a ruler or a judge?" Now it is probable that Christ refused to take this office upon him, not only to avoid the envy and calumny of the Jewish rulers, who might be apt to say, he took upon him an office to which he was not called, in prejudice to them who were appointed for that work; but chiefly because he had but little time remaining, which he could better spend in dividing to them the word of life, and in promoting their eternal interest.

[4] Ver. 15. Φυλάσσεσθε ἀπὸ τῆς πλεονεξίας, &c. Beware of covetousness: for a man's life consists not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth.] Hence we learn, that the desire of having more than we do really need, not to supply the necessities of others, or to promote God's glory, but that we may keep, and treasure them up, and enjoy self), What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow (i. e. lay up) my fruits?

18 And he said, This will I do; I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods.

19 And (then) I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.

20 But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be [5] required of thee (i. e. thou shalt die this night: and) then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?

21 So (such a fool) is he that layeth up treasure for himself (on earth), and is not rich toward God (i. e. in heavenly treasures, which will alone commend him to God, and procure his favour).

22 ¶ And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought (be not anxiously concerned) for (the things necessary to preserve) your life, (viz.) what ye shall (have to) eat; neither for the body, what ye shall (have to (put on.

23 (For) the life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. (He then who gave this life and body without your care and assistance, will not be wanting in making the provisions necessary to preserve them.)

24 Consider the (young) ravens (excluded from their nests by the old ones, and crying to the Lord for meat, Ps. cxlvii 9): for (Gr. that) they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and (yet) God feedeth them (giving them food when they cry): how much more are ye better than the fowls (and so more sure to be provided for)?

25 And which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit (one moment to his life, or one inch to the growth of his body; and how much less will your solicitude preserve the whole)?

26 If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest (which you are less able to compass)?

27 (Again)Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, (They appear so beautifully clothed by nature,) that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

28 If then God so clothe the grass, which is to day in the field, and to morrow is cast into the oven (and so is of a very short duration); how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith (if you distrust not his care in making these provisions for you)?

29 And seek not ye (or seek not then) what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of [6] a doubtful (wavering) mind.

30 For all these things do the nations of the world seek after (who have no hopes of better things): and (you need not be concerned for them, seeing) your (heavenly) Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

31 ¶ But rather seek ye (first) the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.

32 Fear not (any want of these things), little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom (of glory).

33 [7] Sell that ye have, and give alms (even out of the main stock, when the necessities of your brethren require it; and so) provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, nor moth corrupteth (this being the only way to be heavenly-minded).

34 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

35 Let your [8] loins be girded about, and your lights burning (i. e. as servants attending still their master's coming, and ready to execute his commands);

36 And ye yourselves like unto men (servants) that wait for their lord (or bridegroom), [9] when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

37 Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself (as a servant), and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them (i. e. he will administer to them in an unusual manner).

38 And if he shall come in the second watch, or

---

them, is one species of covetousness: for these words are certainly produced as a dissuasive from the sin of covetousness, which sure they could not be, were not the desire of having more, one species or symptom of that sin. 2. From the words following we learn, that to be more solicitous concerning temporals than we are for spirituals, and to be anxious about them, when we are not yet rich towards God, is another sign of covetousness. This may probably be concluded from the concern of this person for the dividing of his inheritance, rather than that our Lord should instruct him in the way of life, it being this which gave occasion to this admonition, "to beware of covetousness;" and it more clearly follows from the example of the fool, who was so much concerned to hoard up his goods, but not at all concerned to be "rich towards God;" i. e. to have his treasure with God in the heavens, and to esteem it his chiefest riches to be an heir of the kingdom of God (ver. 32), and to employ his riches so as to procure God's favour, and his own future happiness: for this is a plain indication of a heart that values these temporal concernments more than God's favour, or celestial riches; which in St. Paul's judgment renders the covetous person guilty of idolatry.

[5] Ver. 20. Ταύτῃ τῇ· νυκτὶ τὴν ψυχήν σου ἀπαιτοῦσιν ἀπὸ σοῦ.] i. e. Either thy soul shall be required of thee by God that gave it, and whose depositum it was, as the Jews speak (see note on 2 Tim. i. 12); or else it shall be required by evil angels, according to that other opinion of the Jews, that the souls of the just when they die are carried into the garden of Eden, per manum angelorum, "by the ministry of holy angels," and the souls of the wicked to the place appointed for them, by evil spirits (see the note on xvi. 22).

[6] Ver. 29. Καὶ μὴ μετεωρίζεσθε, Neither be ye of doubtful minds.] Μετέωρος, saith the Glossary of Stephanus, is ὁ μὴ στατερὸς τὸν νοῦν, ταλαντευόμενος, τῇ γνώμῃ, Budæus, "one fluctuating and unstable in his mind, judgment, or counsel:" hence μετέωρος δίκη is, "a suspended judgment," μετέωρος ἀρχὴ, "a doubtful or controverted empire;" μετέωροι, saith Suidas, are οἱ πρὸς τὸ μέλλον ἔτι σαλεύοντες, "those that are anxious and fluctuating as to future events," or whatever may befall them; in which sense, say Thucydides and Plutarch, μετέωρος ἦν ἡ Ἑλλὰς, "Greece was in suspense touching the event of the war;" and Josephus, that the Jews were μετέωροι ἐπὶ τῷ μέλλοντι πολέμῳ, "anxious about the war with the Romans." Accordingly μετεωρισμὸς, the thing forbidden here, is, saith Theophylact, ὁ περισπασμὸς καὶ τοῦ λόγου ἄστατος περιφορὰ, "a distracting and unstable fluctuation of the mind or reason, about provision for the body," which Christ would here remove from the children of God, as being well assured that his wisdom knoweth what is needful for them (ver. 30), and his fatherly care would certainly provide for them what was so.

[7] Ver. 33. Πωλήσατε τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ὑμῶν, καὶ δότε ἐλεημοσύνην, Sell that you have, and give alms.] i. e. Be ready when God calls, and the exigencies of Christ's members do require it, so to do, and be so far from the sordidness of the rich man, who would not give of his superfluities to the needy, as in these cases to do it out of the main stock, as knowing this heavenly kingdom is to be obtained, not by hoarding up treasures here on earth, but by distributing them to Christ's needy members. If it be asked how moths can corrupt treasures, seeing they eat not through gold or silver, I answer, that precious clothes are also reckoned among treasures, Ezra ii. 69, Neh. vii. 70, Job xxvii. 16 (see the note on Jam. v. 2, 3).

[8] Ver. 35. Ἐστωσαν ὑμῶν αἱ ὀσφύες περιεζωσμέναι, καὶ οἱ λύχνοι καιόμενοι, Let your loins be girded about, and your come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants (whom he will so regard).

39 And this know, that (men use the like vigilance in temporals; for) if the goodman of the house had known what hour the thief would come, (it is to be supposed) he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

40 Be ye therefore ready also (and show like care in spirituals): for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not (of).

41 ¶ Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us (disciples and apostles only), or even unto all?

42 And the Lord said, (This duty is incumbent on, and will be done by, as many as expect a reward from me for their prudence and fidelity, τίς ἄρα) [10] who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his houshold, to give them their portion of meat in due season (as their wants require)?

43 Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

44 Of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath (i. e. advance him to great honour and glory at his coming).

45 But and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming (as many of the Jews did, revolting from his service); and (therefore) shall begin to beat the menservants and maidens (the persevering Christians, as the apostatizing Jews did), and to eat and drink, and to be drunken; (i. e. return to a dissolute course of life, 2 Pet. ii. 2. 22;)

46 The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and (for his perfidiousness) will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

47 And that servant, which [11] knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself (for his coming), neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

48 But he that knew (it) not, and did commit things worthy of stripes (as sinning against the law of nature), shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

49 ¶ (I farther tell you that) I am come to send fire on the earth (to publish that doctrine which will cause great heats and contentions); and (yet so profitable is it to the world, that) what will I, [12] if it be already kindled? (Gr. what do I desire, even that it were already kindled?)

50 But (and) I have a baptism to be baptized with (i. e. a death to suffer); and how am I straitened (as one in pain) till it be accomplished!

51 Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth (i. e. to free you from the troubles of the world)? I tell you, Nay; but rather (to preach that doctrine which will cause) division:

52 For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided (on the account of this doctrine, viz.) three against two, and two against three.

53 The father shall (by reason of it) be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother in law against her daughter in law, and the daughter in law against her mother in law.

54 ¶ And he said also unto the people, When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and (usually) so it is.

55 And when ye see (hear) the south wind blow, ye say, There will be heat; and (so) it cometh to pass.

56 Ye hypocrites, ye can discern (by) the face of the sky (what weather,) and (by the face) of the earth (what season it is like to be); but how is it that ye do (Gr. how then do ye) not discern (from what I do and teach that) this (is the) time (of the Messiah's advent)?

---

lights burning.] The servant, when he was to minister to his master, that his clothes might not hinder him, girded them about him. So Luke xvii. 8, "Gird thyself, and serve me:" and when Christ ministereth to his apostles, he "takes a towel," and girdeth himself, John xiii. 14, and then washeth their feet. Hence, saith Philo,* "we are commanded to eat the passover, τὰς ὀσφύας περιεζωσμένοι ἑτοίμως πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν ἔχοντες, with our loins girt as being ready for service." Moreover, they, waiting to expect their master's coming home at night, were to have their lamps burning, and ready to receive him (Matt. xxv. 7). To servants so provided, and ready for service, our Lord here promiseth a new and unusual honour, like that of the Romans in their Saturnalia; the Cretans† in their Hermæa; and of the Babylonians in their feast called Saccas, where the servants sat at table, and their masters waited on them; "Their lord," saith he, "shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and he will come forth to serve them," ver. 37, he coming into the world, "not to be ministered unto, but to minister," Matt. xx. 28.

[9] Ver. 36. Πότε ἀναλύσει ἐκ τῶν γάμων, When he will return from the marriage.] Ἀναλύσει ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐπανέρχεται, Phavorinus; ἀναλύειν, ὑποστρέφειν, ἀνακάμπτειν, Gloss.; i. e. the word signifies to return. And though in profane authors this is more rare, yet in the apocryphal books this is perpetually the sense of the word: as when Tobit saith, "In the night, ἀνέλυσα, I returned from the burial," ii. 9; "No man was known, ἀναλύσαι ἐξ ᾅδου, returning from the grave," Wisd. ii. 1; "The air being parted presently εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἀνελύθη, returns to itself," v. 12, and xvi. 14, "The spirit when it is gone forth, οὐκ ἀναλύει, returneth not again" (see 2 Macc. viii. 25, ix. 2, xii. 7, xv. 28).

[10] Ver. 42. Τίς ἄρα ἐστὶν ὁ πιστὸς οἰκονόμος; Who then is that wise servant?] Our Lord here does not answer directly to the question of St. Peter, yet he sufficiently doth it by declaring that this is to be done of every servant who expects to be rewarded or treated as one faithful to him, and especially of the guides of the church, Mark xiii. 37.

[11] Ver. 47, 48. Ἐκεῖνος δὲ ὁ δοῦλος, &c. And that servant who knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes: but he that knew not, &c.] This being one great difference betwixt the pastors of the church and other Christians, they must expect a severer punishment, as sinning against greater evidence, and knowledge of their duty; for "to whom much is given, of them much will be required:" whereas they who, through slowness of understanding, or neglect of pastors, and multitude of worldly business, are ignorant of their duty, and so neglect it, will find a milder punishment; for ignorance may be pitied, but contempt deserves no mercy.

[12] Ver. 49. Πῦρ ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ τί θέλω εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθη, I came to send fire on the earth, and what will I if it be already kindled?] Here it is to be noted, that the particle εἰ hath two significations, both agreeable to this place. (1.) That, see note on 1 Tim. v. 10. (2.) It is a particle of wishing: so Numb. xxii. 29, εἰ εἶχον μάχαιραν, "I wish I had a sword;" εἰ κατεμείναμεν, "We wish we had continued beyond Jordan," Josh. vii. 7, εἰ ἤκουσας, Ps. lxxxi. 13, and Isa. xlviii. 18, "O that thou hadst hearkened to my precepts;" Luke xviii. 42, εἰ ἔγνως, "O that thou hadst known." So then the sense of these words is this,—I come to deliver to the world a doctrine, which will incense the world against me and my followers, and subject us to great sufferings, signified in scripture by fire, Ps. lxvi. 12, Isa. xliii. 2, Ecclus. li. 4, and therefore called "fiery trials," 1 Pet. iv. 12, and will baptize me in my own blood; but yet I am so far from being moved from prosecuting my Father's pleasure, by the prospect of them, that I wish the time of my

---

* De Sacr. Ab. et Cain. p. 108.

† Athenæus Deipnos. lib. xiv. p. 639. Ctæsias, p. 674, apud Herod.

57 Yea, and why even of [13] yourselves judge ye not (from the agreement of my doctrine with the principles of reason) what is right?

58 ¶ When thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, (it is good counsel,) as thou art in the way, (to) give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison.

59 (For) I tell thee, thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last mite. (Why then neglect you that repentance towards God, and faith in the Messiah, which can alone preserve you from that infernal prison from which there is no escaping?

suffering were at hand, and my gospel preached to the world.

[13] Ver. 57. Τί δὲ καὶ ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν οὐ κρίνετε τὸ δίκαιον, And why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?] i. e. Take an example from yourselves; you are not wont to neglect the means by which you may be preserved from that prison here, from which you cannot escape till your whole debt be paid; why then neglect you that repentance towards God, and faith in the Messiah, which can alone preserve you from that infernal prison, from which you cannot escape? You can observe the signs of heaven for your temporal advantage; why therefore do you not observe the clearer signs of the Messiah's coming, and calling you to faith and repentance by his doctrine?

CHAPTER XIII.

1 There were present at that season (when Christ spake the foregoing words) some that told him [1] of the Galilæans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices (slaying them when they came to offer sacrifice, for rejecting the authority of the Roman emperor).

2 And Jesus answering said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galilæans were sinners above all the (other) Galilæans, because they suffered such things?

3 I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish (for the same cause, and many of you after the same manner: see note).

4 Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

5 I tell you, Nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all [2] likewise perish.

6 ¶ He spake also this parable (to the same purpose; saying), A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

7 Then he said unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, [3] these three years I come seeking fruit on

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. Περὶ τῶν Γαλιλαίων, ὧν αἷμα Πιλάτος, ἔμιξε μετὰ τῶν θυσιῶν αὐτῶν, Whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices.] It is not to be doubted, saith Grotius, but that the sedition of Judas Gaulonites, as it had its rise in Galilee, so found it many followers and abettors there, who, coming up to Jerusalem, insinuated into the people that they were the Lord's people, and therefore were to own him only as their king, and to pay tribute, not to Cæsar, but to his temple; it therefore seemeth credible, saith he, as some of the Greek fathers think, that such as these were the Galileans, "whose blood Pilate mingled with their (paschal) sacrifice," as finding they were then sowing these seeds of sedition against Cæsar; and if this were at the passover, then the words following, "Ye shall all likewise perish," agree wonderfully with that account of their destruction which Josephus and Eusebius give us, that when they were come up from all places to observe the passover, they were enclosed in the city by the Romans; and upon the very day appointed for killing the passover, many of them were slaughtered like sheep in the very temple, for this very cause, that they shook off the Roman yoke, and refused to pay tribute to Cæsar.

[2] Ver. 5. Ὁμοίως ἀπολεῖσθε, Ye shall likewise perish.] That is, saith Grotius, among the ruins of the city, of which that tower was a part, they perishing in Jerusalem (ver. 4), or rather among the ruins of the towers of the city and the temple. To illustrate these conjectures of the learned Grotius, let us a little consider what Josephus hath delivered of this matter: he therefore saith, that this Judas, with one Zadoc a pharisee, incited the Jews to rebellion, saying,* τὴν ἐπιτίμησιν οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ ἀντικρυς δουλίαν ἐπιφέρειν, "that the paying tribute was a sign of slavery;" and under this pretence they exhorted the whole nation to maintain their liberty, καὶ ἡδονῇ ἀκρόασιν ἐδέχοντα ἄνθρωποι, "and this the Jews received with pleasure, and this became the seed of their future calamities." Hence they continually demanded ἀναιρεῖν τὰ τέλη,† "that the tributes may be taken away." When Coponius was procurator of Judea, one Simon a Galilean reproved them,‡ εἰ φόρον τε Ῥωμαίοις ἐπιτελεῖν ὑπομενοῦσι, καὶ μετὰ τὸν Θεὸν οἵσουσι θνητοὺς δεσπότας, "that they would endure to pay tribute, and suffer mortal lords to rule over them:" when Felix was procurator, some magicians and thieves met together calling the people to liberty, and* θάνατον ἐπιτιμῶντες τοῖς πειθαρχοῦσι τῇ Ῥωμαίων ἡγεμονίᾳ, "threatening death to those who obeyed the Roman government:" when Campanus was procurator, one Dortus solicited the people† ἐπὶ τῇ Ῥωμαίων ἀποστασίᾳ, "to shake off the Roman yoke;" so ready were they to embrace the doctrine of this Galilean. That many of the Jews perished, as did these Galileans, the same Josephus testifies, saying, that under the president Cumanus twenty-five thousand‡ κατὰ τὸ ἱερὸν ἀπώλοντο, "perished in the temple at the feast of passover." That under Florus§ συχνὸς φόνος, "there was a multifarious slaughter of them fighting in the temple," and that one Manahem "was slain as he worshipped there." That "many of the zealots perished in the temple,‖ καθαιμάσσοντες τὸ θεῖον ἔδαφος, and washed the holy ground with their blood." That the Idumeans "coming in to their help, eight thousand and five hundred of the party of Ananus high-priest were slain;" so that¶ ἐπεκλύσθη καὶ τὸ ἔξωθεν ἱερὸν πᾶν αἵματι, "the whole outward temple was washed over with blood." In that threefold sedition which arose in Jerusalem between Eleazar keeping the inward temple, John with his associates seizing the outward temple, and Simon the upper city, φόνοις ἐμιαίνετο πανταχοῦ τὸ ἱερὸν, "the temple was every where polluted with slaughters, the weapons flew every where, and fell upon the priests, and those who officiated at the altar; many who came from far to worship, πρὸ τῶν θυμάτων ἔπεσον αὐτοῖ, fell before their sacrifices, and sprinkled the altar with their blood; insomuch that the blood of the dead carcases made a pool in the holy court. At the feast of unleavened bread, Eleazar, with his companions, opening a gate for the people that came to worship and to offer sacrifice, John, taking that opportunity, sends in with them many of his party, having short swords under their garments, who invaded Eleazar's party, and filled that temple with the blood of the zealots and of the people." And when Titus "fought against the temple,†† περὶ μὲν τὸν βωμὸν πλῆθος ἐσωρεύετο τῶν νεκρῶν, a multitude of dead bodies lay round the altar, and the blood ran down the steps of the temple, and many perished by the ruins of the towers or porches."

[3] Ver. 7. Ἔτη τρία ἔρχομαι ζητῶν καρπὸν ἐν τῇ συκῇ ταυτῃ,

* Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 1.
† De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 1.
‡ Cap. 12.
* Cap. 23.
† Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5. p. 692.
‡ Lib. xx. cap. 4.
§ De Bello Jud. iii. cap. 31, p. 811.
‖ Lib. iv. cap. 14.
¶ Lib. xvi. cap. 17.
 Lib. vi. cap. 50.
†† Lib. vi. cap. 4.

this fig tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? (And the like sentence may you of this nation expect from God for your unfruitfulness.)

8 And he answering said unto him, Lord, (be pleased to) let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it:

9 And if it bear fruit, well (thou wilt see cause to spare it): and if (it do) not, then after that thou shalt cut it down. (And such is now God's sparing mercy to you, he is making further trial of you, whether what I or my apostles, preaching after my ascent to heaven, can do, will make you fruitful; and if after all our labours you continue still unfruitful, you must expect to be cut off.)

10 And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath.

11 ¶ And, behold, there was (there) a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together (with it), and could in no wise lift up herself.

12 And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art (now to be) loosed from thine infirmity.

13 And he laid his hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.

14 And the ruler of the synagogue answered (i. e. said, with relation to this cure) with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the sabbath day, and said unto the people, There are six days in which men ought (i. e. by the commandments are allowed) to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the sabbath day.

15 The Lord then answered him, and said, Thou [4] hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the sabbath (day) loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

16 (This you do on that day for a beast to free it from a little thirst,) And ought not (then) this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom [5] Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the sabbath day?

17 And when he had said these things, all his adversaries were ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

18 ¶ Then said he, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it?

19 It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and cast into his garden; and it grew, and waxed a great tree; and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it. (For thus, from a very small beginning, will it grow up into the greatest of all kingdoms, as that becomes the greatest of all herbs, Matt. xiii. 32.)

20 And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

21 It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened (for so shall the doctrine of the kingdom spread till it hath seasoned all the regions of the earth).

22 And he went through the cities and villages, teaching, and journeying toward Jerusalem.

23 Then said one unto him, Lord, are there [6] few that (shall) be saved? And he said unto them (that heard him, Be not so much concerned to know how it will be with others, as to)

24 ¶ [7] Strive to enter in at the strait gate (which leadeth to life, while ye have opportunity to do it): for [8] many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able (because they do it too late; for)

25 When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord,

---

These three years have I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and found none.] These three years seem not to signify only the time of our Lord's preaching among the Jews; for they were not destroyed the next year, but about thirty-six years after our Lord's ascension; they rather seem to be mentioned, because the fruit of some fig-trees came not to maturity till the third year; the time he expected afterward includes the whole time of the apostles' preaching to them at Jerusalem, and to their dispersions, and to the gentiles, to gather and set up his church among them; and then was the end of the Jewish church and temple, and the great destruction of that nation to come (Matt. xxiv. 14). Nor were the Jews then given over, but were, after our Lord's ascension, to be under the dispensation of the Holy Ghost; and, upon the rejection of that call, was Christ's prediction, that their house should be left to them desolate, to take place: whence, after the Holy Ghost was fallen down upon them, the apostles were to begin their preaching at Jerusalem, and to go thence throughout all Judea (Acts i. 8), and to preach to them remission of sins (Acts xiii. 38); and this they did with such success, as to convert many myriads of them (Acts xxi. 20): and the apostle Paul declares it necessary for them to preach the word of God first to them (Acts xiii. 46).

[4] Ver. 15. Ὑποκριτὰ, Thou hypocrite.] This Christ pronounceth upon the ruler of the synagogue, partly because he placed his holiness chiefly in the observation of ritual precepts, or the rest of the body on the sabbath-day, preferring that before the great things of the law, which Christ still representeth as a sign of hypocrisy (Matt. xxiii. 23); partly because he pretended a great zeal for the law of God, when he was rather acted in this matter by black envy at the glory of Christ, which he, that saw his heart, well knew.

[5] Ver. 16. Ἣν ἔδησεν ὁ Σατανᾶς, Whom Satan hath bound these eighteen years.] That sometimes by concurring with, and sometimes without natural causes, many diseases were, by divine permission, brought on men by evil spirits, the gospel and histories of Job and Saul inform us; for that Saul, after the departure of a good spirit, fell εἰς πάθη δεινὰ καὶ δαιμόνια, "into demoniacal passions," and had, ἀπὸ τῶν δαιμόνων ταραχὴν, "perturbations from demons," or, as the scripture speaks, "by an evil spirit from the Lord" (1 Sam. xvi. 14. 23), we learn from Josephus.* And, by confession of Maimonides,† Satan was the cause of all that Job suffered, not only in his substance, but in his body (Job. ii. 7): and the Targum on Ps. xci. 6, numbers "troops of demons," among those who inflict plagues and death upon men.

[6] Ver. 23. Εἰ ὀλίγοι οἱ σωζόμενοι; Are there few that be saved?] This question seems to be propounded agreeably to that sentiment of the Jews, that all Israelites should have their portion in the world to come: to which Christ was not pleased to give an answer that might satisfy the curiosity of the man, but rather an instruction that might benefit him; it being not our concern to know how many will be saved, but how we may be saved.

[7] Ver. 24. Ἀγωνίζεσθε εἰσελθεῖν διὰ τῆς στενῆς πύλης, Strive to enter in at the strait gate.] Here Christ shows, that the number of them who may be saved, is not defined by any decree of God excluding all others from it, or rendering them unable to attain it: for then Christ must in vain exhort them to use their diligence to enter in at the strait gate, which leadeth to eternal life; and yet by saying, ἀγωνίζεσθε, "Strive, as men in agony," to do it, he shows, that this requires great constancy, diligence, and courage, and a strong conflict with the world, the flesh, and the devil; and so such only will obtain it.

[8] Πολλοὶ ζητήσουσιν εἰσελθεῖν, καὶ οὐκ ἰσχύσουσιν, For many shall seek to enter, and shall not be able.] Not for want of power, or sufficient grace on God's part, but for seeking too late to enter; viz. when the door is shut, ver. 25. The sense therefore runs thus, Be careful, O ye Jews, now to believe, and obey my word, before the kingdom be taken from you, and the gate of the gospel-banquet be shut, so that you after knock in vain for entrance (Matt. xxv. 10. 13, see the note on Matt. viii. 11, 12).

---

* Antiq. lib. vi. cap. 9. † Mor. Nev. lib. iii. cap. 22.

Lord, open unto us; and (or, then) he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are: (be careful therefore, now, O ye Jews, to believe and obey the word, before the kingdom of God be taken from you, and the gate of the gospel-banquet be shut, so that you after knock in vain for entrance, Matt. xxv. 10, 13, for)

26 Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. (He will answer,)

27 But he shall say (καὶ ἐρεῖ, and will say), I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28 (And then) There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye (the seed of Abraham) shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God (enjoying the blessings promised to the members of that kingdom), and you yourselves thrust out (of it).

29 And (then) they (of the gentiles) shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God (shall partake of the blessings of the gospel, and be owned as children of his kingdom).

30 And, behold, (thus shall it happen, that) there are last (i. e. the gentiles called at the last hour, Matt. xx. 7) which shall be first (in this kingdom), and there are first (i. e. the Jews to whom the gospel was first preached, and who are styled God's first-born, Exod. iv. 22) which shall be last (i. e. cast out of this kingdom, and not recalled till the last, or at the close of the world).

31 ¶ The same day there came certain of the Pharisees, saying unto him, Get thee out (of Galilee, Herod's jurisdiction), and depart hence: for (else) Herod will kill thee.

32 And he said unto them, Go ye, and tell that [9] fox (from me, a prophet sent from God, and therefore authorized thus to style him), Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures (in prosecution and confirmation of my prophetic office) to day and to morrow (i. e. for a short time more), [10] and the third day I shall be perfected (i. e. by death be consecrated to my priestly office, and so he needs not be concerned to put me to death, who shortly am to die as a sacrifice for the sins of the world).

33 Nevertheless I must walk (on my journey, ver. 22) to day, and to morrow, and the day following (till I reach to Jerusalem, and I may do it without fear of being killed by Herod): for it cannot be that [11] a prophet perish out of Jerusalem (where the Sanhedrin, who think themselves the only judges of him, sit).

34 O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together (under my protection), as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not (be gathered)!

35 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and (δὲ, for) verily I say unto you, (After a while) ye shall not see me (Matt. xxiii. 38), until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord (till εἴπητε, you would say, i. e. you would be glad to see your Messiah coming to deliver you, and to say to him what your pharisees cannot now hear with patience, xix. 39, but shall only see him coming to avenge himself upon you, Matt. xxvi. 64.)

[9] Ver. 32. Εἴπατε τῇ ἀλώπεκι ταύτῃ, Go tell that fox.] To impose this ignominious but agreeable name on Herod, is not contrary to the command "not to speak evil of the ruler of thy people;" it being the office of a prophet, not to spare kings when they reprove their offences (Jer. i. 10). Christ therefore here uses his prophetical power, in giving this tyrant a name so suitable to his actions.

[10] Καὶ τῇ τρίτῃ τελειοῦμαι, And the third day I am perfected.] The word signifies, I am consecrated to my priestly office, by dying as a sacrifice for the sins of the world: so the old scholia, τελειοῦμαι, σπένδομαι, θυσιάζομαι, "I am perfected, i. e. I am offered, I am sacrificed." For the confirmation of this sense, see the note on Heb. ii. 10, ix. 10.

[11] Ver. 33. Οὐκ ἐνδέχεται τὸν προφήτην ἀπολέσθαι ἔξω, A prophet cannot perish out of Jerusalem.] Because he was only to be judged by the great Sanhedrin, and they were only to pass judgment on him in that place: so Dr. Lightfoot here.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 And it came to pass, as he went into the house of one of the [1] chief Pharisees (or of the rulers, who was of the pharisees) to eat bread on the sabbath day, that they watched him (whether he would heal on the sabbath day, that they might accuse him, Matt. iii. 2).

2 And, behold, there was a certain man (then) before him which had the dropsy.

3 And Jesus [2] answering (to their thoughts) spake to the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath day (or not)?

4 And (but) they held their peace. And (then) he took him, and healed him, and let him go;

5 And (he) answered them (who held this unlawful), saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath day? (And shall that kindness be denied to a son of Abraham in his distress on that day, which you afford on it to your distressed beast?)

6 And they could not answer him again to these things.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. Εἰς οἶκόν τινος τῶν ἀρχόντων τῶν φαρισαίων, Into the house of one of the pharisees.] Gr. "Into the house of one of the pharisees," who was a ruler in the Sanhedrin; for they are called ἄρχοντες, "rulers," Luke xxiv. 20, John iii. 1, Acts iii. 17, 1 Cor. ii. 8 (see the note there).

[2] Ver. 3. Καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπε πρὸς τοὺς νομικοὺς· And Jesus answering spake to the lawyers and pharisees; and, ver. 5, καὶ ἀποκριθεὶς πρὸς αὐτοὺς εἶπε, and he answering them said.] Here ἀποκριθεὶς, "answering," is twice used, where neither any question was put, nor any thing said to him; but then it is still an answer to some λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, "inward conception," or reasoning, or to some action expressive of their sentiments concerning him: sometimes it is used, when he perceived their inward thoughts and reasonings about his actions, words, or person: thus, when the pharisees were consulting how they might apprehend him for the parable he spake against them; ἀποκριθεὶς, "he answering," spake another parable, showing what destruction would come upon them for crucifying him (Matt. xxii. 1): so Jesus "perceiving their thoughts, ἀποκριθεὶς, answering, said to them," Luke v. 22: so he answers to what Simon said within himself, Luke vii. 39, 40: sometimes he answers to their actions, as discovering their apprehensions of him: thus, when they came to take him, Jesus, ἀποκριθεὶς, "answering, said to them, Are you come as against a thief?" Mark xiv. 48; so to the barren fig-tree, ἀποκριθεὶς, "he answering, said, Let never fruit grow on thee more," Mark xi. 14; so reflecting on the infidelity and impenitence of those cities among whom he had done his mighty works, and of those pharisees who believed neither him nor the Baptist, ἀποκριθεὶς εἶπεν, "he answering, said, Father, I thank thee," Matt. xi. 25; so when Peter had smitten off the ear of Malchus, ἀποκριθεὶς, "Jesus

7 ¶ And he put forth a [3] parable to those which were bidden (to sit down with him), when he marked how they (the pharisees) chose out the chief rooms (at feasts, on the account of their pretended wisdom); saying unto them,

8 When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding (or a marriage-feast), sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be (also) bidden of him;

9 And (so) he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

10 But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then [4] shalt thou have worship (i. e. honour) in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

11 For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted (both by God and man).

12 ¶ Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a [5] dinner or a supper, (do it not from a prospect of an invitation by way of recompense; and therefore ordinarily) call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and (so) a recompence be made thee.

13 But when thou makest a feast, (do it out of charity to the needy; and therefore) call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14 And thou shalt be blessed; for (ὅτι that) they (are called by thee, who) cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the [6] resurrection of the just.

15 ¶ And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, [7] Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God (i. e. that shall partake of the pleasures and enjoyments of the kingdom of the Messiah).

16 Then (to convince him that the generality of the Jews were, for their unbelief, to be excluded from that kingdom), he said unto him (by way of parable), A [8] certain man made a great supper, and bade many:

17 And sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready (as God sent first the Baptist to invite the Jews, and then the apostles, and seventy disciples, to tell them the kingdom of God was at hand, and to persuade them to enter into it).

18 And they all with one consent began to make excuse. (For) the first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19 And another said, I have bought five yoke of answering," with relation to that action, saith, "Suffer ye so far," Luke xxii. 52; so Peter answers, not to what he had heard, but to what he had seen, Matt. xvii. 4; so Elisabeth answers, without being spoken to, the discourse of the women about the name of her son, Luke i. 60; and the angel answers to the fear of the women, Matt. xxviii. 5; and the high-priest to Christ's silence, "I adjure thee to tell us," Matt. xxvi. 63; and St. John the evangelist to Christ's words, "He that receiveth you receiveth me;—Master, we saw one cast out devils in thy name," &c. Mark ix. 38.

---

[3] Ver. 7. Ἔλεγε δὲ πρὸς τοὺς κεκλημένους παραβολήν, &c. And he put forth a parable to them that were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms.] i. e. Christ being in the house of a prince of the pharisees (ver. 1), and observing how solicitous they were to choose the upper rooms on the account of their reputed wisdom, because Solomon had said (Prov. iv. 8), "Exalt wisdom," as Dr. Lightfoot here shows; that he might cure this swelling pride in them, and teach them humility (ver. 11), he propounds this parable, as it is fitly called, according to the definition of a parable by the Greeks: that it is πρόθεσις ὁμοιωματικὴ ἐπὶ σαφηνείᾳ τῶν ὑποκειμένων, "a comparative resemblance of things, for the illustration of what is spoken of; or, as Phavorinus, παραπλησίων πραγμάτων παράθεσις, "a collation of things resembling each other." This parable being taken from a like example of a nuptial banquet.

[4] Ver. 10. Τότε ἔσται σοι δόξα, Then shalt thou have honour in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.] i. e. This will ordinarily be the result of thy humility; and though it ought not to be our chief design in any virtuous action, yet hence it follows, that this may be one motive to the performance of such actions (Phil. iv. 8).

[5] Ver. 12. Ὅταν ποιῇς ἄριστον, ἢ δεῖπνον, &c. When thou makest a dinner, or a supper, call not thy friends and thy brethren, &c., but call the poor, the maimed.] Some think Christ speaks here of the sacred banquet made by the Jews on their peace-offerings and other feasts, to which they are bid to "call the poor, the widow, and the Levite," Deut. xiv. 29; but this seems a mistake; for Christ speaks not of any special stated feast, but of such banquets as he was then at: nor hath he one word of the widow and the Levite, who were to be guests there, but of the blind, the lame, the maimed, of which the law saith nothing; nor doth he say, "For this the Lord shall bless thee upon earth," as Deut. xiv. 29, but "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

Note, Secondly, that Christ doth not absolutely forbid us to invite our friends, our brethren, or kinsfolk, to testify our mutual charity and friendship, and how dear our relations are to us; only he would not have us invite them out of a prospect of a compensation from them again; but to prefer the exercising our charity to them who cannot recompense us. As comparative particles are sometimes in sense negative (see the notes on Mark xv. 11, John iii. 19), so negative particles are oft in sense only comparative; Prov. viii. 10, "Receive my instructions, וְאַל, and not (that is, rather than) silver:" Joel ii. 13, "Rend your hearts, וְאַל, and not (i. e. rather than) your garments:" John vi. 27, "Labour not for the meat that perisheth, but for that which endureth," &c. (see Exod. xvi. 19, Prov. xvii. 12, Jer. vii. 22, 23). So here, μὴ φώνει, Be not so much concerned to call thy friends, as to call the poor. Nor,

Thirdly, Doth he lay upon us a necessity by this precept to call the lame, the blind, or maimed, to our tables, but either to do this, or what is equivalent to us in respect of charge, and more advantageous to them and their families, viz. to send them meat or money to refresh them at home. Note also, that Dion Chrysostomus,* who flourished in the time of Trajan, seems to have taken this observation hence, That "they did ἀνελευθέρως πράττειν τὰ περὶ τοὺς ξένους τοὺς πένητας, act sordidly as to poor strangers, who did μόνους τοὺς πλουσίους ὑποδέχεσθαι ξενίοις, καὶ δώροις, παρ' ὧν δῆλον ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ προσεδόκουν τῶν ἴσων ἐντυχεῖν, entertain the rich only friendly, with their hospitalities and gifts, from whom they expected to receive as much again."

[6] Ver. 14. Ἀνταποδοθήσεταί σοι ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει, Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.] See here the time of recompensing even those works of charity which are most acceptable to God, and for which we are chiefly to be rewarded at the great day (Matt. xxv. 34).

[7] Ver. 15. Μακάριος, &c. Blessed is he who shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.] It appears from the ensuing parable, that "the kingdom of God" here doth not signify "the kingdom of heaven" in the highest sense, but only the kingdom of the Messiah, of which the carnal Jew here speaks according to the received sense of his nation, as of a glorious temporal kingdom, in which the Jews should lord it over the gentile world, enjoy their wealth, and be provided with all temporal blessings and delights, in which they placed their happiness.

[8] Ver. 16. A certain man made a great supper, &c.] We are called of God, saith Philo,† to partake of a banquet;

---

* Orat. 7.

† Εἰς μετουσίαν ξοίνης, οὐκ ἧς αἱ γαστρὸς ἡδοναὶ πιμπλαμένης τὸ σῶμα πιαίνουσιν, ἀλλ' ἀφ' ἧς διάνοια ἐντρεφομένη καὶ ἐγχορεύσασα ἀρεταῖς γήθει τε καὶ εὐφραίνεται. De Sacr. Abel. et. Cain. p. 104 B.

oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20 And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come (i. e. they either out of great love to the pleasures or the advantages of this world rejected the kind invitation).

21 So that servant came, and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry (that they, who were so lovingly invited, would not come,) said to his servant (the apostles sent with a fresh commission after Christ's resurrection to go to Judea, and the dispersions of the Jews, Acts i. 8, saying), Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind (i. e. the gentiles and the dispersed Jews).

22 And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room (for more guests).

23 And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges (i. e. to the heathen nations), and [9] compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.

24 For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden (and refuse to come) shall taste of my supper (i. e. enjoy the blessings of my kingdom).

25 ¶ And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and said unto them,

26 If any man come to me, and [10] hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also (i. e. if he prefers not my service before all these), he cannot be my disciple.

27 And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me (i. e. that will not obey me, and suffer any hardship for my sake), cannot be my disciple.

28 (Consider therefore well of these things before you enter on a Christian life:) For which of you, intending to [11] build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

29 Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him,

30 Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish (his building: so before we enter on a Christian life, we should sit down and consider seriously what it will cost us to be indeed Christians, and whether we be steadfastly resolved to do and suffer all that Christianity requires).

31 Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

32 Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33 So likewise, whosoever he be of you that (engageth not so manfully in his Christian warfare against sin, Satan, and the world, that when I call him to it, he) [12] forsaketh not all he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

34 ¶ [13] Salt is good (i. e. a Christian life is very advantageous): but if the salt have lost his savour (if the Christian apostle and professor hath lost his Christian conversation), wherewith shall it be seasoned (i. e. what can be used farther to recover him)?

35 It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out (i. e. such an unsavoury Christian can neither do good to himself nor others). He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

"not which shall satiate us with the pleasures of the belly, and fatten the body; but with which the mind being nourished, and leaping for pleasure, rejoiceth, and is glad." See the exposition of this parable, Matt. xxii. 1, 2.

[9] Ver. 23. Καὶ ἀνάγκασον εἰσελθεῖν, And compel them to come in.] How vainly these words are brought to prove that men may be compelled, by the secular arm, to embrace the true faith, appears (1.) from the nature of a banquet, to which no man is compelled by force, but only by the importunity of persuasion, and from which no man's business doth by force restrain him, but only by the inconvenience of attending on it; and yet one of the guests saith, ver. 18, ἀνάγκην ἔχω, "I am compelled to be absent." (2.) From the scope of the parable, which respects the calling of the gentiles, which only Mahometans think fit, by force of arms to compel to the faith. We do, ἀναγκάζειν, compel not only by example, but by exhortation, Mark vi. 25, Luke xxiv. 29, as here: and Christ, saith Theophylact, here not only commands them to call, but to compel them, "though it be free to every one to believe, that we may learn, ὅτι μεγάλης τοῦ Θεοῦ δυνάμεώς ἐστι τὸ πιστεῦσαι τὰ ἔθνη, that it is the work of God's great power to make the gentiles believe" (see the note on Gal. ii. 14, and Grotius here, and xxiv 29).

[10] Ver. 26. If any come to me, καὶ οὐ μισεῖ, and hate not his father and mother, &c.] It being impious to hate father or mother, wife or children, and impossible to hate ourselves (Eph. v. 29), to hate here can only signify comparatively, viz. to love them less than God; and therefore what is here, "and hateth not father and mother," is Matt. x. 37, "and loveth father and mother more than me:" for what we love less, we are comparatively said to hate, as in the case of God and mammon, Matt. vi. 24. So ἐμισεῖτο Λεία, "Leah was hated," Gen. xxix. 31. 33. Now Leah surely was not hated by good Jacob, but loved less than Rachel (see note on Rom. ix. 13).

[11] Ver. 28. Τίς γὰρ ἐξ ὑμῶν, θέλων πύργον οἰκοδομῆσαι, &c. For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost? Ver. 31. What king going to war, consulteth not first whether he be able?] Two things do usually hinder men from embracing that narrow way which leadeth to eternal life; (1.) The difficulties of the duties positively required of all Christians; viz. the love of enemies, requiring us not only to forgive their injuries "from the heart," but also "to overcome their evil with our good:" the reparation of any injury done to another in his good name or fortunes, not only by begging his pardon, but by restoring what we got injuriously, and endeavouring to repair his credit; the restraining of the tongue from all evil speaking, and uncharitable censures, and of our appetites from all carnal desires, the exact government of our passions, and the moderation of our affections to all worldly things; a heart restrained by the fear of God from doing evil, and constrained by the love of him to yield sincere obedience to his holy laws. (2.) The greatness of the temptations we must resist, and of the injuries and losses we may suffer, by persevering in this way, from the violent assaults of Satan, and the continual solicitations of the flesh, the examples and allurements of the world, the persecutions of it, the loss of all things, and even life itself. Christ therefore by these resemblances adviseth us, before we enter on this Christian life, seriously to consider of and weigh these things, to form within us the most steadfast resolutions to perform the one, and arm ourselves with fortitude and patience against the other, that so we may not afterward be moved by them to depart from it.

[12] Ver. 33. So likewise, whosoever he be of you, ὃς οὐκ ἀποτάσσεται πᾶσι τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ ὑπάρχουσιν, who forsaketh not all that he hath, &c.] Christ doth not here require that we should actually renounce these things, for then we must renounce even life itself (ver. 26), but that our heart and our affections should be so taken off from them, that we do always love them less than him, and that we, in preparation of mind, be always ready to part with them when we cannot keep them, without making "shipwreck of faith, and a good conscience."

[13] Ver. 34. Καλὸν τὸ ἅλας, &c. Salt is good; but if the salt hath lost its savour, wherewith shall it be seasoned?]

This excellently connects with the discourse preceding, thus: The gospel I require you to adhere to, is that salt with which every oblation that is acceptable to God must be seasoned (Mark ix. 48, 49); the preachers of it are the salt of the earth (Matt. v. 13). As then salt, when it hath lost its savour, becomes good for nothing, but to be cast out into the dunghill: so the Christian professor, who lives not according to the prescripts of the gospel, can do no good to himself or others; and if he fall off from it, can hardly be recovered (Heb. vi. 6, x. 27). When Mr. Le Clerc and others object against this comparison or similitude, that salt cannot lose its savour, they consider not, that in the boiling up of the saline particles, of which salt is made, there is left a caput mortuum, which is insipid.

CHAPTER XV.

1 THEN drew near unto him [1] all the publicans and sinners for to hear him.

2 And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man (now) receiveth sinners, and (at other times) eateth with them.

3 ¶ And (upon this murmuring) he spake this parable unto them, saying,

4 What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders (and returns home with it), rejoicing.

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me: for I have found my sheep which was lost. (Now this is a just resemblance of the joy of God for the conversion of a sinner; for)

7 I say unto you, that likewise [2] joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance (i. e. no conversion from a life of sin to that of holiness).

8 ¶ Either what woman (is there) having ten pieces of silver, (who,) if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?

9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost. (Now this is a just resemblance of the joy of God at the recovery of a lost soul; for)

10 Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the pre-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1, 2. Ἦσαν δὲ ἐγγίζοντες αὐτῷ πάντες οἱ τελῶναι, καὶ οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ, ἀκούειν αὐτοῦ. Καὶ διεγόγγυζον οἱ φαρισαῖοι, &c. Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners to hear him. And the pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, &c.] For the better understanding of these three parables, note,

First, That publicans, gross sinners, and heathens, were by the scribes and pharisees judged unfit to be conversed with, even though it were with a design to reduce them from their evil courses, they thinking God had cast off the care of them, and had no design to grant them repentance unto life; whence they abhorred their company, as thinking it a defilement to be touched by them, and never would concern themselves to make them better, and were offended that our Lord was thus employed, Matt. ix. 11, Luke v. 30, Acts x. 28, xi. 18, 19. Note,

Secondly, That publicans and heathens, sinners and heathens, are joined usually together, as being accounted persons of the same desperate wickedness, and equally unworthy to be conversed with, as in those words of Christ, Matt. v. 46, 47, "Do not even publicans the same?" or, as other copies read, οἱ ἐθνικοὶ, "Do not heathens do the same?" which in Luke vi. 33, 34, is, "Do not οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ, sinners do the same?" and Matt. xviii. 17, "If he refuse to hear the church, let him be to thee as a heathen and a publican;" and in those words of St. Paul, Gal. ii. 15, "We that are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the gentiles." That they thought God took no care of the gentiles, is evident from the words of Esdras, saying to God, "Thou hast said they are nothing, but are like unto spittle, and hast counted the abundance of them as a drop falling from a vessel," 2 Esd. v. 56, 57; and the prayer of Mordecai, "Lord, give not thy sceptre to them that are not," Esther xiv. 11 (see note on 1 Cor. i. 28). Hence the converted Jews at first preached not to them, as judging it unlawful to "go in unto," or converse with the uncircumcised (Acts x. 28), and wondered that God should give the gentiles "repentance unto life" (Acts xi. 18, 19), and only would converse with them when they showed a willingness to be made proselytes to their religion. Some, therefore, here do think, that the word sinners here may signify the gentiles, which will be more probable, if Christ were then beyond Jordan, as they collect from John x. 40, or in Galilee of the gentiles, from whence we find him going to Jerusalem, Luke xvii. 11, otherwise it will not be so easy to discern how all the gentiles should draw nigh to hear him, or he should be eating with them, ver. 12. Note,

Thirdly, That these parables, and especially the last, are designed against the scribes and pharisees, who thought so abjectly of publicans and sinners, and so perversely of the whole gentile world; and to convince them of their inhumanity, and show them that their deportment was very alien from God's merciful inclination to them, and that they ought not to be unmerciful to them to whom God was so well inclined to show mercy, or deny their charity to them to whom he was ready to afford it: for he spake this parable to them, saying, "Which of you?" ver. 3, 4.

[2] Ver. 7. Οὕτω χαρὰ ἔσται ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, &c. So joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, see note on ver. 10, ἢ ἐπὶ ἐνενηκονταεννέα δικαίοις, οἵτινες οὐ χρείαν ἔχουσι μετανοίας, more than over ninety and nine just persons, who need no repentance.] Here note that ἤ is here put for μᾶλλον ἤ, as usually it is both in the Old and New Testament, and in profane writers: so Gen. xxxviii. 26, ἐδικαίωται Θαμὰρ ἢ ἐγὼ, "Thamar hath been more righteous than I;" Ps. cxviii. 8, ἀγαθὸν ἐλπίζειν ἐπὶ Κυρίῳ ἢ, "It is better to trust in the Lord than in princes;" 1 Cor. xiv. 19, "In the church I would speak five words, so as to teach others, ἢ μυρίους, rather than ten thousand in an unknown tongue:" so Luke xviii. 14. See Stephanus giving examples of this from Homer, Aristotle, Diogenes Laertius, and St. Chrysostom. Note,

Secondly, That there being no person in the world so just, as absolutely to need no repentance; because there never was a person in the world, besides our Saviour, who "did righteousness, and sinned not;" the best of men being subject to some faults and infirmities, of which they stand obliged to repent: that our Lord may not here be thought to have supposed a case that never was, let it be observed, that the repentance of a sinner usually imports an entire change in the whole course or tenor of his life, from the service of sin to the service of God, from yielding obedience to it in the lustings of it, to "yielding our members instruments of righteousness unto holiness;" and this is the repentance of the sinner mentioned in the text; and in this sense it is manifest the righteous person, or new creature, needeth no repentance. (2.) There is a repentance, which consists in a godly sorrow, for the particular failings and infirmities we may have committed through surprise, a sudden fear, a violent temptation, or a single deviation from the general course and tenor of our lives; such was that of David and St. Peter, and the humiliation of good Hezekiah "for the pride of his heart:" and in this sense it is not to be thought that in this state of imperfection and continual conflict we have with the flesh, there should be any righteous person who needs no repentance. And this interpretation I prefer before that of St. Ambrose, Hilary, and Chrysos-sence of the [3] angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

11 ¶ And he said (also by way of parable to the same purpose), A [4] certain man had two sons:

tom, who, by the ninety and nine sheep not lost, and the ninety-nine persons who need no repentance, understand the holy angels that fell not; by the lost sheep all mankind lost in Adam, whom to recover the Son of God became incarnate, and in the gracious work of our redemption, brought him home upon his shoulders; the joy in heaven for his returning is, say they, the joy of God, and of his holy angels for the recovery of lost mankind; in which sense the words are strictly true, the holy angels need no repentance, because they never fell from their obedience. And this interpretation was so generally approved in the church, that in Tertullian's* time it was appealed to as a proof of it, that "in the bottom of their sacramental cups, Christ was engraven carrying the lost sheep upon his shoulders."

Thirdly, It is inquired with what reason it can be said, "There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety-nine righteous persons who need no repentance:" for is it not better not to offend, than to sin and repent? Is not innocence better than amendment? And if repentance be not better than righteousness, why is there more joy in heaven over the penitent than over the righteous? Yea, why over one penitent sinner, than over ninety-nine just persons?

Now to this some answer, according to the forementioned opinion of the ancients, that the lost sheep, returning prodigal, and the "one sinner that repenteth," comprehend all mankind redeemed from a state of misery by Christ; now this may fitly be represented as matter of the greatest joy to God, and the whole court of blessed angels, they being represented as stooping down to look into this mystery, 1 Pet. i. 12, and learning from the church "the wisdom of God in it," Eph. iii. 10, and therefore, in this sense, do doubtless know and rejoice in our redemption. (2.) Others answer, that the sheep not lost, the ninety-nine righteous persons, and the elder son, who said he never had offended, represent the Jewish nation, and especially those scribes and pharisees, who trusted in their own righteousness, and despised others (see Matt. ix. 12): the lost sheep and returning prodigal represent the gentile world, which, by the preaching of the gospel, were to be converted to the Christian faith. Now, the church of the gentiles being more numerous than was that of the Jews, "the desolate having more children than she that had a husband," her conversion may fitly be represented as a matter of the greatest joy.

Against these expositions this visible objection may be made, that whereas the righteous are here represented as ninety-nine, the penitent as one single person, these expositions make them equal to, if not more numerous than, the righteous. But to this it is answered, that in the parables of the gospel, it is usual to represent all of the same kind, though they be sometimes the greatest number, by one man. Thus, in the parable of the wedding-supper, the man that had not on his wedding-garment, represents, according to most interpreters, all wicked men, and in our Lord's intention it importeth the whole race of unbelieving Jews, Matt. xxii. 11; the slothful person, who hid his talent in a napkin, is represented as one man, Matt. xxv. 24, they who improved their talents as three persons; and yet who knows not but there are fewer that improve, than they who do receive the grace of God in vain? and all that came in at the last hour, and received their penny, that is, all the converted gentiles, are reckoned as one man in those words of Christ, "I will give ἐσχάτῳ τούτῳ, to this last man even as to thee" (Matt. xx. 14).

But that which is principally to be considered for the full clearing of this difficulty is this, viz., that this passage of our Lord being spoken of God after the manner of men, is to be understood after the manner of men, or suitably to the nature of human passions, and the usual occasions of moving them. Now we are much affected with the obtaining what we have long and passionately desired, with the regaining that which we have looked upon as almost lost and desperate, with the security of that which we looked upon as in imminent danger; at the first obtaining what we passionately desired, regaining what we looked upon as lost, securing what was in great danger, our joy is strong, and our delight transporting; and afterward it sensibly abates. So it is with us, that we are not so sensibly moved with the continuance of a good which we have long enjoyed, as at the first recovery of it, after it was lost; we may have still a real value for what we do possess, a settled pleasure and contentment in it, but the sudden joy and transport is at the recovery of it. So a continued course of goodness may in itself be most valuable, and yet the recovery of a lost sinner, the reviving of one dead in trespasses and sins, the seeing him snatched as a firebrand out of the fire, when he was ready to fall into it, may be the more affecting, and give us a more fresh and lively joy. Thus, v. g. it cannot but be comfortable to a loving father, to see his children in a state of perfect health; but if one of them fall sick, and beyond expectation of recovery, to see him out of danger ministers more present joy, than doth the constant health of all the rest. And this is the reason given in the parable of the prodigal son, why the kind father rejoiceth more at his return, than at the continuance of his elder brother always with him; that it was the recovery of one given over for dead, the finding one looked upon as lost: "It is meet," saith the father, "upon this occasion that we should make merry: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; was lost, and is found." Our Saviour, therefore, to encourage the repentance of the sinner, represents God after the manner of men, as if he did conceive such a joy at it, as earthly parents are wont to do at the return of a wild extravagant child to himself and his duty.

[3] Ver. 10. Οὕτω λέγω ὑμῖν, χαρὰ γίνεται ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων, &c. Likewise, I say unto you, There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.] Hence most interpreters conclude, that the angels and blessed spirits are acquainted with the conversion of a sinner; and seeing true conversion is wrought in the heart, hence the Romanists infer, that they must have knowledge of that also. But,

First, Here is not one word of blessed spirits, but of angels only; and whereas papists argue for an equality of knowledge in them to that of angels, because it is said "they are as the angels of heaven," Matt. xxii. 50, I answer, Christ doth not say they are equal to angels now, but at the resurrection they shall be so. Nor doth he say this absolutely, or as to the faculties of their souls, but as to their freedom from secular actions and passions, and as to the state and condition of their bodies; for so the text runs, "They that are counted worthy of the resurrection neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more;" i. e. they are equal to the angels as to immortality, "and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection" (Luke xx. 35, 36).

Secondly, This text affirms not, that the joy here mentioned, is the joy of angels, but only that it is the joy of God, ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων, before, or in the presence of the angels, which stand continually before his face. Now as an earthly king may rejoice before his court, and they know not the special motive of his joy, so may the King of heaven rejoice before the angels of his presence, and they know not the reason of that joy, and much less the particular convert that gave occasion to it. In a word, it is confessedly God, who is compared to the shepherd, seeking his lost sheep, and to the father rejoicing for the return of his prodigal son; and therefore the similitude requires, that the joy conceived when a lost sheep is found, or a prodigal son comes home, should be ascribed to him.

Note also, That this consideration should inflame the zeal, and quicken the industry, of the spiritual shepherd for the conversion of sinners, as knowing this is a work so highly acceptable to the God of heaven, and that for which he sent the "great Shepherd of the sheep" into the world.

[4] Ver. 11. Ἄνθρωπός τις εἶχε δύο υἱούς, A certain man had two sons.] Here observe, (1.) that the elder son in this

* Procedant ipsæ picturæ calicum vestrorum, si vel in illis perlucebit interpretatio. Dic mihi nonne omne hominum genus unius Dei grex est? De Pudic. cap. 7.

12 And the younger of them said to his father, Father, [5] give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living (i. e. gave him the portion allotted for the livelihood of his younger son).

13 And not many days after the younger son gathered all (his estate) together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country (to become his servant); and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him (enough to satisfy his hungry appetite).

[Now here the younger son represents the gentiles gone far off from God their Father, Eph. ii. 13, living in riot and drunkenness, 1 Pet. iv. 3, and committing whoredom with idols, against the light of their reason, Rom. i. 20, 21, labouring under a famine of the word, and employed in the vilest drudgery by sin and Satan, in which no satisfaction can be found.]

17 And when he came to himself (i. e. to consider his own miserable state), he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I (am ready to) perish with hunger!

18 I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against (the God of) heaven, and before thee (by departing from thee),

19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. (And this represents the case of a penitent sinner: considering his present misery, his vileness and unworthiness, humbly acknowledging his sin to God, resolving on amendment of life, and actually returning to God, as many of the gentiles did, when the gospel was preached to them.)

20 And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion (on him), and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet (in token that I own him as my beloved son):

23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry:

---

parable representeth not the just or righteous; for they are not angry, either that sinners do return to God, or that he graciously entertains them when they do so, but rather are industrious to bring them home to him, and rejoice at their return: he rather represents the Jews murmuring, and being angry, that the gentiles, who before were, μακρὰν ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, "far off from God" (Eph. ii. 13), were by faith, without circumcision, or obedience to their law, brought "nigh to him," and made partakers of the same privileges God offered, or afforded to them. The gentiles are represented as the younger son going into a far country, as being "far from God," and squandering away their goods by riotous living, as depraving that knowledge they had of the true God, from tradition and his marvellous works, by gross idolatry, on which account the Jews represented them as born of harlots (see note on John viii. 41, as here, ver. 30), and serving them, "which, by nature, were no gods, by holding the truth in unrighteousness," and giving up themselves to all uncleanness (Eph. iv. 19); yea, labouring under a famine of the word of God, and of his saving truth, and giving up themselves to the meanest services, such as that of keeping of hogs was deemed by the Jews and the Egyptians, who suffered not such to come into their temples, or sacred houses; they having now, through Christ, "access unto the Father," being adorned with the wedding-garment of faith, and the robe of righteousness, fed with the banquet of the true paschal lamb, and admitted to wear their Father's ring, as a testimony that they were now his genuine sons.

Nor is it a sufficient objection against this, that the gentiles were never sons before, or, if ever they were so, they must be so before the Jews, and so the elder sons: for God is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the gentiles, he being the common Father of the world, and we being "all his offspring;" yea, they are called "the sons of God" before the flood, Gen. vi. 2, and were so afterward before the name of Jew was known. And the Jews here represent the elder son, because they being afterward abdicated for their idolatry, God gave to the Jews the primogeniture, and styled them his sons, and his "first-born" (Exod. iv. 22, 23), and accordingly bestowed upon them the privileges of the first-born, choosing them "above all nations" of the world.

If it be again objected, that this elder son saith, ver. 29, "These many years have I served thee, and never transgressed I at any time thy commandments," which could not be true of the Jews; I answer, neither could they say, God "never gave them a kid," or treated them with the like kindness, the gospel being first preached to them; this therefore only signifies their high conceit of themselves, that they were righteous. And so much for the chief import of the parable. To touch a little on some other circumstances of it.

First, From those words, "He went into a far country, and spent all his substance," Theophylact notes, that he who estrangeth himself from God, loseth all those seeds of virtue and goodness, which either nature or revelation hath implanted in him.

Secondly, From his being put to "feed swine;" observe, to what vile and sordid employments they are put, who serve sin and Satan.

Thirdly, From these words, "He would have filled his belly with husks, but could not;" observe, that there can be no satisfaction to any man who wants the favour of God.

Fourthly, From those words, "When he came to himself;" observe, that he who lives a sinful life is beside himself: for, being a rational creature, and having a judgment and conscience to direct his actions, he acts against his reason, his judgment, and his conscience.

Fifthly, From those words, "He arose, and went," ver. 20, Theophylact notes, that it is not sufficient to make good resolutions, saying, "I will go" (ver. 18), but we must practise suitably.

Sixthly, From those words, ver. 20, "His father seeing him, ran to him;" observe, that when God sees men truly willing to return unto him, he is still ready to receive them, and even prevent them with his grace.

Seventhly, From those words, ver. 24, "This my son was dead;" observe, that wicked men are dead in the worst sense: for, as Philo saith, "he that lives a sensual life, τέθνηκε τὸν εὐδαίμονα, is dead as to a happy life."

Eighthly, From those words, "Father, I have sinned," ver. 21, spoken after the kindness of his father; note, that after sin is pardoned, it becomes the sinner ingenuously to acknowledge and confess it.

Ninthly, As for the phrase, "I have sinned against heaven and against thee," it is a Jewish phrase, shamaim, as Buxtorf says,* being frequently used to signify God. Accordingly they say, there is one who sins against earth (i. e. man), but not against heaven (i. e. God); and there is one that sins against heaven, but not against earth; but he who speaketh with an evil tongue, sins against heaven and earth. Though Theophylact here saith, he had sinned against heaven by preferring earthly things before heavenly.

[5] Ver. 12. Δός μοι τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος τῆς οὐσίας, Give me the portion of goods that falleth to me.] So Demosthenes† uses τὸ ἐπιβάλλον ἡμῖν μέρος, for the portion allowed to us: and Aristides, τὸ ἐπιβάλλον ἐξ' ὑμᾶς μέρος, for the portion that belongs to you (De Concord. ad Rhodios).

---

* Lex. Talm. p. 2440. † Περὶ Στεφ.

24 For this my son was dead (in sin), and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry. (And this is a lively representation of God's great love and mercy to sinners returning to him; forgetting all their former provocations, and treating them, as soon as they began to break off their sins by repentance, and to turn to him, with a most fatherly affection, and with expressions of the greatest joy.)

25 Now his elder son was in the field (following his father's business): and as he came and drew nigh to the house (of his father), he heard musick, and dancing.

26 And he called one of the servants, and asked (him) what these things meant (i. e. what was the cause of all this mirth).

27 And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28 And he was angry (at the kindness showed by his father to his younger brother), and would not go in (to the house): therefore came his father out, and intreated him.

29 And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment: and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends:

30 But as soon as this thy son was come (back to thee), which hath devoured thy living with harlots (committing spiritual whoredom), thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine (in the first place the blessing of the Messiah being first promised to the Jews, and from them derived to others; see treatise on the Millennium, chap. 2, sect. 2).

32 It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and (he) was (as the) lost (sheep and piece of money), and is found (by the great Shepherd of souls).

[Now this elder brother is a true emblem of the Jews, and especially of the scribes and pharisees, murmuring at God's kindness to the sinners of the gentiles, in admitting them after so long idolatry to the blessings of the gospel, and to equal privileges with them, without circumcision, and obedience to that law of Moses, under which they had still lived; and refusing to enter into the kingdom of God, and come into the faith, by reason of the kindness God thus showed to the gentiles. See note on Rom. xi. 28.]

CHAPTER XVI.

1 And he said also unto his [1] disciples, There was a certain [2] rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him (it being said) that he had wasted his goods.

2 And he called him, and said unto him, How is it (thou hast dealt with me) that I hear this of thee? give (up) an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer (permitted to be) steward.

3 Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do (to live)? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig (for a livelihood); to beg (for it) I am ashamed.

4 I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they (whom I befriend) may receive me into their houses.

5 So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6 And he said, An hundred measures of oil (i. e. about a thousand gallons). And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore (and likewise he said to the rest).

8 And the lord [3] commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely (i. e. he represented him as one that acted according to the wisdom of this world; and was so far worthy to be imitated by the children of light, as to make this their chief care, when, by death, they are removed from their stewardship, that they may be received into everlasting habitations): for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light (more provident and dexterous to provide for this life, than they are to provide for eternity).

9 And I (likewise) say unto you, [4] Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness (i. e. make such provisions for yourselves of those riches, which the men of this world get by falsehood and injustice); that, when ye fail, they may receive you (i. e. that, when you die, ye may be received) into everlasting habitations.

10 He that is faithful in that which is least (i. e. in the enjoyments of this world, so as to employ them in

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, And he said also to his disciples.] i. e. Not only to the twelve, but to those who followed him, attending on his doctrine, as did the publicans and sinners (xv. 1).

[2] Ἄνθρωπός τις ἦν πλούσιος, ὃς εἶχεν οἰκονόμον, &c. There was a rich man who had a steward, and he was accused to him as wasting his goods.] Kimchi on Isaiah xl. saith, "The fruits of the earth are like a table spread in a house; the owner of this house is God; man in this world is, as it were, the steward of the house, into whose hands his Lord had delivered all his riches; if he behave himself well, he will find favour in the eyes of his Lord; if ill, he will remove him from his stewardship." And so the scope of this parable seems to be this, That we are to look upon ourselves, not as lords of the good things of this life, so as to get and use them at our pleasure, but only as stewards, who must be faithful in the administration of them.

[3] Ver. 8. Καὶ ἐπῄνεσεν ὁ Κύριος τὸν οἰκονόμον τῆς ἀδικίας, ὅτι φρονίμως ἐποίησεν, And the lord commended the unjust steward, that he had done wisely.] i. e. Discreetly, according to the wisdom of the men of this world, whose concern is only for the good things of this life; he commended him as we do such persons, when we say, Such a one is a shrewd man for the world, he understands well the way of dealing in it: he commends him not absolutely, as a fit example to be followed in this injustice, fraud, and wasting of his master's goods, but comparatively, as being worthy to be so far imitated by the children of light, as to make this their chief concern, that when by death they are removed from their stewardship, "they may be received into everlasting habitations," or into "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" (2 Cor. v. 1): this being an instruction needful for them, because "the children of this world are wiser" in their care to make provisions for themselves, "than are the children of light;" i. e. they who enjoy the light of the gospel, to make provisions εἰς γενεὰν ἑαυτῶν, "for their age," to secure the true riches and the celestial habitations prepared for them.

[4] Ver. 9. Κἀγὼ ὑμῖν λέγω, ποιήσατε ἑαυτοῖς φίλους ἐκ τοῦ μαμωνᾶ τῆς ἀδικίας, I say therefore unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteouness.] That "the mammon of unrighteousness" is the false mammon, works of charity, and to the ends for which he is intrusted with them) is faithful also in much (i. e. he will be so in the great concernments of another life): and (likewise) he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful (stewards) in (dispensing) the unrighteous mammon (or, the false and deceitful riches of this world, to the uses for which they were given you), who will (it is not to be expected God should) commit to your trust the true riches?

12 And if ye have not been faithful in that which is (to be) [5] another man's, who shall give you that which is your own? (i. e. that inheritance which shall never pass from you to others.

13 ¶ And there is great reason to caution you against that affection to the world which obstructs your love to God; for) [6] No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot (then) serve God and mammon (also).

14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things: and they derided him (looking on this as a ridiculous doctrine).

15 And (but) he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men (i. e. seek to approve yourselves to, and expect to be owned by, them as righteous persons); but God knoweth (the falsehood of) your hearts: for that (fair outside) which is highly esteemed among men (who see no farther) is (an) abomination in the sight of God (who seeth the filth and hypocrisy of your hearts.

16 Nor is it to be wondered that you hear these higher precepts of charity from me and John; for) The [7] law and the prophets (which engaged you to do your duty, chiefly by temporal promises) were until John: since that time the kingdom of God (which promises treasures in heaven) is preached, and every man (that enters into that kingdom) presseth into it (i. e. forces his way into it, by breaking through the love of temporal concerns).

17 And (this I say not to depreciate the law, which as to its moral precepts shall obtain for ever; for) it according to the common import of the word ἀδικία, for falsehood, [of which see Jer. xxvii. 15. 29. 31, and the note on 1 Cor. xiii. 6] may be gathered from the "true riches" opposed to it, ver. 11. But then it remains to be inquired, whether it be called here the mammon ἀδικίας, or "false mammon," because it deceives them who trust to, and seek for, satisfaction from it, and comparatively to the "true riches;" or else as the unjust steward is styled οἰκονόμος ἀδικίας, unjust, because he betrayed his trust, and dealt falsely with his master; to which sense the preceding verse and the parable seem plainly to direct, and the use of the phrase mammon dishekar, in the Targumists, doth constrain us to interpret it, as being usually put for gain gotten by unfaithfulness to our trust, or falseness in the discharge of our office. So of the sons of Eli it is said, that they had respect to mammon dishekar, "the mammon of falsehood," 1 Sam. viii. 3, and xii. 3, Samuel inquires, From whose hand have I received mammon dishekar? and, 2 Sam. xiv. 14, A just judge will not receive mammon dishekar: so Prov. xv. 27, He destroys his house who heaps up to himself "the mammon of falsehood:" see to the same sense, Isa. v. 23, xxxv. 15, Ezek. xxii. 27, Hos. v. 11, Amos v. 12. But then, whereas it is hence inferred, that our Lord here speaks of making restitution of such goods, and spending some of the remainder in acts of charity; which, when Zaccheus had resolved to perform, Christ saith, "This day is salvation come to this house" (xix. 9); though this be a good sense, and fit to be preached to those publicans and sinners who came to attend upon his doctrine, yet it is not necessary; for Christ's intendment may be only this, to advise his followers to be so far from getting wealth by such unfaithfulness and falsehood as the men of the world do, as rather to expend what providence hath entrusted them with, in acts of charity and mercy, that so they may lay up for themselves treasures in the heavens, or be received into heaven when they die: for ἐκλείπειν bears this sense in scripture. So Gen. xxv. 8, ἐκλείπων ἀπέθανεν Ἀβραὰμ, "Abraham gave up the ghost and died;" Jer. xlii. 17, ἐκλείψουσι ἐν τῇ βομφαίᾳ, "They shall die by the sword:" and ver. 22, ἐν λιμῷ ἐκλείψετε, "Ye shall die by the pestilence;" Wisd. v. 13, οὕτως καὶ ἡμεῖς γενηθέντες ἐξελίπομεν, "So we are born to die" (see Gen. xxxv. 29, xlix. 33, Job xiii. 19, Ps. ciii. 10, Isa. xxxviii. 12, Jer. ix. 10, xliv. 12. 18. 27, Lam. i. 20, Zeph. i. 2, 3, Ps. lxxiii. 19, lxxxix. 7. 9, ci. 4). Δέξωνται ὑμᾶς, "they may receive you," is impersonally put for "you may be received:" so Luke vi. 38, "Give, and δώσουσιν, it shall be given into your bosoms;" xii. 20, τὴν ψυχήν σου ἀπαιτοῦσιν, "Thy soul shall be required."

---

[5] Ver. 12. Καὶ εἰ ἐν τῷ ἀλλοτρίῳ πιστοὶ οὐκ γένεσθε, τὸ ὑμέτερον τίς ὑμῖν δώσει. And if you have not been faithful in that which is another's, who will give you that which is your own?] The eleventh verse seems to bear this sense: If you have not been faithful in those temporal concerns, which minister temptations to unrighteousness, but have either sought to obtain them by fraud and unfaithful dealings, when they have been committed to your trust, or by "withholding more than is right," or that which the great Lord of them required you to expend upon his needy servants, how can you reasonably expect the true riches, which are only promised to the upright and charitable person? And again: If you have been thus unfaithful in those things which you cannot properly call your own; because they may, by various accidents, be devolved on, and must at last be left to others, what reason have you to expect that which is your own, as being the inheritance of the children of light, and that which they are to enjoy for ever? where the concerns of this world are styled ἀλλότρια, "things which belong not to us;" because we have no assurance of the enjoyment of them, and know that we must leave them to others; and this is said agreeably to the philosophy of the heathens: thus in Arrian the dying man is said τὰ ἀλλότρια ἀποδιδόναι, "to render up that which belongs to others," lib. i. cap. 1, and every one is bid, τὰ ἴδια τηρεῖν, τῶν ἀλλοτρίων μὴ ἀντιποιεῖσθαι, "to keep that which is in his power, and not desire external things," lib. ii. cap. 16, p. 215; and lib. iii. cap. 24, we are taught that "the things we may be hindered of, or which may be taken from us, are τὰ ἀλλότρια; and so," saith he, "are all those things which we must leave to others, or restore them to God that gave them," lib. iv. cap. 5: so Hermas, lib. iii. sim. 1, τί εἰς τὴν ἀλλοτρίαν ἑτοιμάζομεν ἀγρούς, οἰκοδομάς; "Why do we, who know the city in which we are to dwell, prepare for ourselves fields, houses, &c., in another city? this being a sign that we expect not to return to our own city, to the Jerusalem above;" which is here styled by St. Luke "our own," by Hermas ἡ πόλις ἡμῶν, because prepared for and promised to us Christians; here we are only travellers, there is our city (Phil. iii. 20); here we are only dispensers, there heirs; here we enjoy things for a season, there for ever.

[6] Ver. 13. Οὐδεὶς οἰκέτης δύναται δυσὶ κυρίοις δουλεύειν, &c. No man can serve two masters,——ye cannot serve God and mammon.] The coherence of these words seems to lie thus: I have just reason to caution you thus against that affection to the world, which obstructs your charity, and tempts you by fraud and falsehood to acquire it; because it will not permit you to love God truly, or to be faithful servants to him; and whereas you covetous pharisees deride me for this doctrine (ver. 14), as thinking yourselves highly favoured of God for other things, viz. your long prayers, your washings, your exactness in paying tithes, your niceness in observing your vain traditions, and your separation from the men of the world, know, that however you may think well of yourselves upon these accounts and highly be esteemed of others, whilst ye continue covetous and "full of rapine and uncleanness" (Matt. xxiii. 25), hypocrisy and injustice (ver. 27), ye are abominable in the sight of God.

[7] Ver. 16—18. Ὁ νόμος καὶ οἱ προφῆται ἕως Ἰωάννου, &c. The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every one presseth is easier for heaven and earth to pass (away), than (for) one tittle of the law to fail. (See Matt. v. 18.)

18 (And, to give you another instance of the sublimer precepts of the gospel, the law permits divorces, but under the gospel dispensation) Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery (against her): and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery (as cohabiting with another man's wife.

19 ¶ And, to show them the mischief of riches not charitably employed, he told them, by way of parable,) [8] There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20 And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus (i. e. one without help), which was laid at his gate, full of sores,

21 And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table (but was denied them): moreover the dogs (being more compassionate than the rich man's servants) came and licked his sores.

22 And it came to pass, that the [9] beggar died, and was carried by the angels (who are ministering spirits to good men) into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried:

23 And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

24 And he [10] cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

25 But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

---

into it.] Here the coherence seems to run thus: It is not to be wondered that you now hear, from John and me, higher precepts of charity, and contempt of the world, than you find in the law or prophets, who moved you to your duty by the promises of temporal blessings in the land of Canaan; since now the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every one that enters into it, forces his way by breaking through the love of temporal concerns and sensual pleasures: for, to give you another instance of like nature, whereas the law admitted of divorces at the pleasure of the husband, by reason of "the hardness of your hearts," the gospel forbids this now on any other score than that of fornication, which from the nature of the sin dissolves the marriage; yet, that you may not cavil at me as a dissolver of the law, I declare that all the moral precepts of it shall obtain, and be of perpetual obligation under the gospel dispensation.

[8] Ver. 19. Ἄνθρωπος πλούσιος ἦν, There was a rich man, &c.] That this is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident, (1.) because we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonicum, whence it is cited by Mr. Sheringham, in the preface to his Joma. (2.) From the circumstances of it, viz. the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and his desire that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history? As for the judgment of antiquity in this case, they who owned this as a history, owned the whole so to be, thinking the soul to be corporeal, as Tertullian did, and that there was διαφορὰ κατὰ τὰς μορφὰς, "some discretion, or resemblance of men as to their shapes after death," which was the sentiment of Irenæus,* proving from this very instance, that souls, when they have put off the body," do yet characterem corporum custodire, preserve the shape or character of the body" to which they were united, as Tertullian† before from the same instance had inferred, effigiem animæ, et corporales lineas, "the shape and corporeal lineaments," and also corporalitatem animæ. Much as Thespesius‡ returning to life represents τὰ τῶν ψυχῶν χρώματα, "the colours of souls," and saith that there be οὐλαι καὶ μώλωπες ἐπὶ τῶν παθῶν ἑκάστου, "ulcers and scars of their passions left upon them by which they are discerned;" whereas they who renounced these opinions, as false and ridiculous, declared that this was not a history, but only a representation,§ "That after the separation of the soul from the body, she could receive no advantage from any man, and that it was foolish to think it a history;" and this they also gather, because there was to be no future retribution before the general resurrection. And whereas against this it is objected, that the proper name Lazarus shows it to be a history; it is answered, that the name Lazer, being only the contraction of Eliezer, is the same with Ani Achad, "a poor man" in the Gemara, as being in sense ἀβόηθος, "one that hath no help," or one who hath God only for his help. Note, Secondly, That though this parable contains something suitable to the opinion of the Jews touching the state of souls after death, yet doth it not respect their state immediately after death, but the punishments that wicked men are to suffer after the resurrection of the dead, or ἐν ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, "at the last day," saith Theophylact. For, as Cicero says of the fables, by which the poets represent the punishments of evil souls, that, corpora cremata cùm scirent, tamen ea fieri apud inferos fingebant, quæ sine corporibus nec fieri possint, nec intelligi, "though they know their bodies have been burnt, yet they do represent them suffering such things in the infernal regions which neither can be done or suffered, or even understood to be so without bodies:" so it is plainly here in the forementioned instances produced to prove this a parable.

[9] Ver. 22. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἀποθανεῖν τὸν πτωχὸν, &c. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom.] Here are two things said agreeably to the tradition of the Jews touching good men, which was, (1.) That their souls were in the garden of Eden, in Paradise, or in Abraham's bosom; thus of R. Judah, when he died, they say, "This day he sits in Abraham's bosom" (see Lightfoot on the place); and Josephus* saith of good men, that they are gathered εἰς πατέρων χῶραν, "to the region of the patriarchs," and that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, do παραδέχεσθαι, "receive their souls." (2.) That they are carried thither by good angels; so the Targum on Cant. iv. 12, saith, "No man hath power to enter into the garden of Eden, but the just, whose souls are carried thither by the hand of angels" (see Cartw. on Luke ii. 29, p. 2994). They add, that, when evil men die, "the evil angels come and say, There is no peace to the wicked:" so Dr. Lightfoot here; and in like manner Socrates† in Phæd. saith, λέγεται, "It is reported that as soon as any man dies, every one's demon, whom he chose to himself whilst he lived, brings him to a certain place where all are to be judged, and then he goes to hades, μετὰ ἡγεμόνος ἐκείνου ᾧ προτέτακται τοὺς ἐνθένδε ἐκεῖσε πορεύεσθαι, with the governor to whom it was appointed to bring them that depart hence to those places."

[10] Ver. 24. Καὶ αὐτὸς φωνήσας εἶπε, πάτερ Ἀβραὰμ ἐλέησόν με, And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me.] As the Baptist taxeth their vain imaginations in hoping to be preserved from divine judgments whilst they lived, because they were "the children of Abraham;" so our Lord here may perhaps strike at a like imagination got among them, that hell-fire had no power over the sinners of

---

* Lib. iii. cap. 62 † L. de An. cap. 7, 9.

‡ Plutarch. de his qui serò, p. 565.

§ Παραβολὴ καὶ τοῦτο, ἀλλ' οὐκ ὥς τις ἀνοήτως ἂν οἴῃ, εἶεν πρᾶγμά ἐστιν ἤδη γεγονός. Theoph. Ἔστι δὲ τὸ περὶ τοῦ Λαζάρου καὶ τοῦ πλουσίου διήγημα ὑποτύπωσις λόγου διδασκαλίαν ἔχοντος τοῦ μὴ δύνασθαι μετὰ τὴν ἐκ τοῦ σώματος ἔξοδον τῆς ψυχῆς κατὰ προνοίαν τινα ἢ σπουδὴν ὠφελείας τινὸς τυχεῖν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους. Pseudo-Just. q. 63. Οὔτε γὰρ πρὸ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῶν ἑκαστα βεβιωμένων ἀνταπόδοσις γίνεται. Ibid. Theoph. ibid. Vide Suicerum in voce Λάζαρος.

* De Maccab. p. 1097, 1102. † P. 80, B.

26 And beside all this, [11] between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence (i. e. good men have all their evils, and bad men all their good things in this life; and hereafter the happiness of the one, and the misery of the other, will be unchangeable).

27 Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28 For I have five brethren; (and am desirous) that he may testify unto them (the happiness of the blessed and the misery of the wicked), lest they also come into this place of torment.

29 Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets (to testify to them these things); let them hear (and obey) them.

30 And he said, Nay, father Abraham (they prevailed not with me, and therefore may not do so with them): but if one went unto them from the dead, (I suppose) they will repent.

31 And he said (again) unto him, If they [12] hear (i. e. obey) not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead (to preach repentance to them; for he could come with no greater authority, deliver no better motives to repentance, and he could give them no greater assurance of the truth of what he said than they did).

Israel, because Abraham and Isaac come down thither to fetch them hence (see the note on Rom. ii. 13); declaring, even from the mouth of Abraham, that no help was by them to be expected from him, when they were in that place.

[11] Ver. 26. Μεταξὺ ἡμῶν καὶ ὑμῶν χάσμα μέγα ἐστήρικται, Betwixt us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that none can pass to us from thence.] The words seem plainly to refute the opinion of Origen, that there would come a time when the punishments of the wicked would have an end, and they should at last live with God and his saints.

[12] Ver. 31. Εἰ Μωσέως καὶ τῶν προφητῶν οὐκ ἀκούουσιν, &c. If they hear not Moses nor the prophets, they would not be persuaded though one rose from the dead.] "If they hear not," i. e. obey not, "Moses and the prophets," whom they own to be persons sent from God, and delivering his message, one rising from the dead would not persuade them to break off their iniquities; for he could come with no greater authority than they did, he could deliver no other message to the sinner than they had done, that if they turned not from their evil ways they should die, and be obnoxious to eternal shame and misery (Dan. xii. 2); he could give them no more assurance of the truth of what he said, than did the word of that God who cannot lie; no reason therefore could be conceived why they should hearken to one risen from the dead, and calling them to repentance, rather than to those prophets whom they acknowledged to be sent from God. And of this we have a clear instance in the resurrection of our Lord from the dead; for of this they had the testimony of our Lord's predictions, of their own prophets, of the guards that kept the sepulchre, of their own senses, of the apostles, and five hundred witnesses, and all this confirmed by the miraculous effusions of the Holy Ghost on those that believed on him, and a continual throng of miracles wrought in his name; and yet all this was insufficient to reclaim that wicked generation from their infidelity, and to provoke them to repentance. The practical observations made from this parable are,

First, That this rich man is not accused of getting riches by injustice, but only of faring deliciously and luxuriously, with the neglect of others oppressed with misery and want before his eyes. How then will many Christians escape the same place of torments, who indulge in the same luxury and carnal pleasures, and are as little touched with an affectionate sense of the wants and miseries of others?

Secondly, That they who have their good things in this life, i. e. that which they chiefly valued, pursued, and delighted in whilst they lived here, are to expect no comfort, nothing but evil, after death.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Then said he unto his disciples, It is impossible (through the unrestrained wickedness of men) but that offences will come (i. e. things will be said and done which will hinder some from embracing, and cause others to fall off from the faith): but woe unto him, through whom they come!

2 It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should (thus) offend one of these little ones (that believe in me).

3 ¶ Take heed (therefore) to yourselves (that ye be not guilty of any degree of this offence: and therefore) if thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if (upon this reproof) he repent, forgive him.

4 And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent (of what I have done against thee); thou shalt (as oft) forgive him.

5 And the apostles said unto the Lord, [1] Increase our faith (that so we may be enabled to perform those duties contrary to flesh and blood, or that we may more successfully minister to the welfare of souls without offence).

6 And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you (i. e. the least sincere and active faith would enable you to do the most difficult things in order to the promotion of the Christian faith).

7 But (then) which of you, having a servant plowing or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat?

8 And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink?

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver. 5. Πρόσθες ἡμῖν πίστιν, Increase our faith.] In the beginning of this chapter, our Lord requires his apostles to be careful, that they do not offend one of his little ones; secondly, to be so charitable to their offending brother, as to rebuke him for his sins; and, thirdly, to pardon their offending brother, though he should daily multiply his provocations, provided that he only say unto them, "I repent" (ver. 4). Now these three duties of an inoffensive conversation, fraternal correction, and full forgiveness of a brother daily multiplying fresh indignities and provocations, being so difficult, and contrary to their natural inclinations, and faith being the foundation of all Christian virtues, the apostles, in order to the performance of these duties, beg the increase of faith. Moreover, seeing faith is wrought in the heart, which God alone can search, and can immediately work upon, by thus repairing to Christ to increase their faith, they must ascribe to him, as Woltzogenius here confesseth, a divine virtue, which being proper to the Deity, and incommunicable to a finite nature, must consequently show that Christ had in him a divine nature.

9 Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10 So likewise ye, when ye shall have done [2] all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have (only) done that which was our duty to do (i. e. whereas the performance of the greatest things, which I your Master do require, may seem to you a very eminent piece of service, know that in obeying all my precepts, you only do the office of good and faithful servants, obeying the commands of your great Master, as ye ought to do, and so must look on the reward promised, not of debt but of grace).

11 ¶ And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the [3] midst (or confines) of Samaria and Galilee.

12 And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

13 And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us (and heal us).

14 And when he saw them, he said unto them, [4] Go shew yourselves unto the priests (as when a cure is wrought the lepers are to do by the law, Lev. xiv. 2). And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

15 And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified (or praised) God,

16 And fell down on his face at his (i. e. Christ's) feet, giving him thanks: and he (who did this) was a Samaritan.

17 And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? (doubtless there were:) but where are the (remaining) nine (of them)?

18 There are not found (any of them) that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19 And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.

20 ¶ And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with [5] observation (i. e. with outward pomp and splendour, visible in earthly kingdoms):

21 Neither shall they (have need to) say (of it), Lo here! or, lo there (it is)! for, behold, the kingdom of God is [6] within (already among) you.

22 And he said unto his disciples (or followers), The days will come, when ye (of this nation) shall desire to see [7] one of the days of the Son of man (the Messiah coming to deliver Israel, iv. 21), and ye shall not see (one of them) it.

23 And (when) they shall say to you, See here; or

---

[2] Ver. 10. Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ὅταν ποιήσητε πάντα τὰ διαταχθέντα ὑμῖν, λέγετε, ὅτι δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοί ἐσμεν, &c. So likewise you, when you have done all things that are commanded you, say, that we are unprofitable servants, for we have done that (only) which it was our duty to do.] Here Christ destroys two doctrines of the schools, the merit of good works, and works of supererogation. For (1.) we being in respect of God unprofitable servants, ("for can a man be profitable to God, as he that is wise may be profitable to himself? is it any advantage to him that we are righteous, or is it gain to him that we make our ways perfect?" Job xxii. 2, 3. "If thou be righteous, what givest thou him, or what receiveth he at thy hands?" xxxv. 7, seeing thy goodness reacheth not him, Ps. xvi. 2) sure we cannot merit from him by doing that which is unprofitable to him: (2.) because we only can do that, which it is our duty to perform; for (1.) we are all God's servants: now it being the duty of a servant to do all his master's pleasure, and what he had declared to be grateful to him, and this being only ministerium servi, "the proper business of a servant," which he lies under a necessity of doing, that he may please the lord, even reason shows he cannot put it to account to his superior, or be supposed to merit by it, as Seneca* grants; and that it may not be said that this is the condition only of slaves, and not of servants in the general, which we all are to God and Christ (1 Cor. vii. 22, Rom. xiv. 4, Col. iii. 24, Eph. vi. 9), it is to be observed from these words, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, "so also ye," that Christ speaks this to his disciples, who are not to be reckoned as his slaves, but servants, whose duty it was to have "their loins girt, and their lamps burning," upon that account (Luke xii. 35, 36); who therefore doing all that he required, were still "unprofitable servants," in the sense forementioned, and did only what they ought. Christ therefore here seems to speak to them thus, It is the duty of servants after they have done their work in the field, to minister to their lord as he shall require, and when they have done what he requires, they for that service merit not so much as thanks, because they only do their duty; if then I treat you more liberally, rather as friends than servants; if I condescend to minister to you (Luke xii. 37), and place you over all that I have (ver. 44), you are not to imagine that I am indebted to you, or owe you such favours, but rather are to acknowledge, when you have done all, that you are still unprofitable servants, and only have performed your duty (see here Examen Millii, in locum).

* Ministerium esse servi, quem conditio sua eo loco posuit, ut nihil eorum, quæ præstat, imputet superiori,——Si servo, quominùs in nomen meriti perveniat necessitas obest. Sen. de Ben. lib. iii. cap. 18.

[3] Ver. 11. Διὰ μέσου Σαμαρείας καὶ Γαλιλαίας, As he went to Jerusalem, he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.] It is well known that Samaria lay betwixt Galilee and Judea, and so our Lord, taking his journey to Jerusalem, must go first through Galilee, then through Samaria; why therefore is it here said, that he passed "through Samaria and Galilee?" To this it may be answered, that בתוך, in medio, is often the same as μεταξὺ, between, and so is διὰ, as διὰ νήσων, inter insulas; so here the Arabic and Syriac, "between Samaria and Galilee;" i. e. between the confines of both countries; Christ, in this journey, going to the Scythopolitan bridge, saith Lightfoot, by which he passed into Perræa, and so on by Samaria into Judea.

[4] Ver. 14. Πορευθέντες ἐπιδείξατε ἑαυτοὺς τοῖς ἱερεῦσι, Go show yourselves to the priest.] By sending them thus to the priests, who were to make their offerings in the temple, Christ decides the cause betwixt the Jews and the Samaritans, sending the Samaritan, not to mount Gerizim, but to Jerusalem.

[5] Ver. 20. Οὐκ ἔρχεται ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ μετὰ παρατηρήσεως, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation.] i. e. Not with that royal splendour, or worldly pomp and grandeur, which render it conspicuous in the eyes of the world, as you expect it should; so that a man may be able to say from the lustre of its first appearance, Lo, it is here! or, it is there!

[6] Ver. 21. Ἰδοὺ γὰρ, ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐντὸς ὑμῶν ἐστιν, Behold, the kingdom of God is within you.] i. e. Amongst you: for it is certain that our Lord speaks not of the power it had gained over the hearts of the Jews, and much less of the pharisees, to whom he speaks; but that the kingdom of the Messiah began now to appear, and the gospel of the kingdom was now preached among them; so that Christ says thus, This kingdom, which you inquire after, as if it had not yet appeared, because you see not that outward splendour you expect when the Messiah comes, is even now among you, and is come unto you; so ἐντὸς ὑμῶν and ἐν ὑμῖν are used frequently in the Old Testament. So Gen. xxiii. 9, "Give me it for a place of burial ἐν ὑμῖν, among you:" see ver. 6, xxxiv. 10, ἐν ἡμῖν κατοικεῖτε, "Ye shall dwell among us;" Exod. xvii. 7, "Is the Lord ἐν ἡμῖν among us, or not?" so Josh. iii. 5, ix. 22, Micah iii. 11. Hence also it is evident that "the kingdom" here cannot signify Christ's coming to destroy Jerusalem: for of that certainly the Jews did not think that it "should suddenly appear;" of that our Lord could not say, it was now among you, or that it came not with observation, it being attended with so many glorious signs of their approaching ruin, and the presence of the Roman army.

[7] Ver. 22. Ἐλεύσονται ἡμέραι, ὅτε ἐπιθυμήσετε, &c. And see there (for him): go not after them, nor follow them.

24 [8] For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so (visible) shall also the (coming of the) Son of man be in his day.

25 But first must he suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.

26 And as it was in the days of Noe (a preacher of righteousness to the old world), so shall it be also in the days of (the coming of) the Son of man.

27 They (then) did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage (not expecting the threatened judgments), until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all.

28 Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded;

29 But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

30 Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed (a sudden and unexpected destruction shall then fall upon the men of this nation).

31 In that day, he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back (i. e. let him endeavour to escape without delay, or staying to carry his goods with him).

32 [9] Remember (therefore) Lot's wife (what her delay and looking back wrought upon her).

33 Whosoever shall seek to save his life (by apostasy from the faith) shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life (for my sake) shall preserve it.

34 I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed; (so remarkable shall be the providence of God in preserving his faithful servants, that) the one (of them) shall be taken (away by death), and the other shall be left (safe).

35 Two woman shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

36 Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

37 And they answered and said unto him, Where, Lord (shall this be)? And he said unto them, [10] Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together (i. e. wheresoever the Jews are, there will the Roman army, whose ensign is the eagle, come to destroy them).

---

the days shall come, when you shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and shall not see it.] "One of the days of the Son of man" seems here to signify the time of their visitation by him (ch. xix.), when he came to offer them all the blessings of the kingdom of God, upon their faith and repentance; this offer, saith Christ, in your extremity you will be glad to hear, but shall not hear it.

[8] Ver. 24. Ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ ἀστραπὴ, &c. For as the lightning (or splendour) shineth from one part of the heaven to the other part under the heaven; so shall also the (coming of the) Son of man be in his days.] Christ had told them, that the kingdom of God was already come upon them, and he appeared in the purity of his doctrine, and the miracles by which it was confirmed, though not with such an outward splendour as might enable them to point it, and say, Lo, it is here, or there, ver. 20, 21. He tells them in the twenty-fifth verse, that this Son of man should suffer, and be rejected by them, and so the glory of it would be for a while eclipsed: and here, that after his resurrection it would shine with such a fresh and glorious brightness, by the effusion of the Holy Ghost on his disciples, as would render it equal to the splendour of the sun shining from one part of heaven to the other, and cause it to be propagated almost as quick as lightning through the world, so that there shall be no need to attend any man, saying, It is here, or there, seeing it would be quickly and conspicuously set up among all nations (Matt. xxiv. 15); and that then the Son of man, so fastidiously rejected by them, would also appear suddenly and gloriously, to revenge upon them their infidelity, and the affronts which they had offered to him.

[9] Ver. 32. Μνημονεύετε τῆς γυναικὸς Λώτ, Remember Lot's wife.] What befell her for looking back to Sodom, lest you likewise perish in this slaughter of the unbelieving Jews, by looking back to what you have in your houses, or in the fields (ver. 31).

[10] Ver. 37. Ὅπου τὸ σῶμα, &c. Where the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together.] That is, wherever the Jews are, there will the sword of the Romans, whose ensign is the eagle, be ready to devour them, and their army will assemble to destroy them.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought [1] always to pray, and not to faint (or cease from the performance of that duty, because they are not presently heard; see 2 Cor. iv. 1);

2 Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man (to do justice, or to show mercy to him):

3 And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of (or do me justice against) mine adversary.

4 And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man (so as to be moved by either of those motives to do this);

5 Yet because this widow troubleth me (with her importunity), I will avenge her (or do her right), lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6 And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith (on account of the widow's importunity).

7 And shall not God avenge his own elect (i. e.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. Πρὸς τὸ δεῖν πάντοτε προσεύχεσθαι, καὶ μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, That men ought always to pray, and not to faint.] Of the notion of praying always, see note on Thess. v. 15. Here it signifies, not to pray oft every day, but to pray perseveringly day after day, without giving off our suit; and then μὴ ἐκκακεῖν will be, not to faint under the pressures and persecutions they suffered, either from the persecuting Jews, or others by their instigation; from which they are here supposed to pray for deliverance (ver. 7), or not to despond under them: for ἐκκακεῖν is not so properly to be slothful, as malis succumbere, animo concidere, malis cedere, to faint and despond, say the lexicons; and this especially when it relates, as here, to tribulations: so, Eph. iii. 13, μὴ ἐκκακεῖν ἐν θλίψεσι is well rendered, "not to faint under tribulation;" and, 2 Cor. iv. 16, οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν, "We faint not under those afflictions," which make the outward man perish, but continue steadfast in the faith: ver. 1, "We faint not;" though we are troubled on every side, and perplexed, we despair not of help from God, ver. 8, so Gal. vi. 9, μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, "not to grow weary of well-doing," is μὴ ἐκλύειν, "not to faint;" which two things are put together in St. Paul's injunction to the Christian sufferer, "not to grow weary or faint in his mind," Heb. xii. 3, and so 2 Thess. iii. 13, μὴ ἐκκακεῖν, "not to be weary of well-doing," being an exhortation to them, who received the word "with much affliction," 1 Thess. i. 6, and were in danger by it to fall from their steadfastness, iii. 2, 3. 5, may reasonably be supposed to have the same import.

Christian sufferers), [2] which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them (who afflict them, and so for a season seemeth not to hear them)?

8 I tell you that he will avenge them speedily (after a little time, Heb. x. 37, Rev. i. 1). [3] Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh (to do this), shall he find faith on the earth (that he will come to execute his vengeance on the Jews)?

9 And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous (as the pharisees generally did), and despised others (as they did the publicans, counting them sinners unfit to be conversed with).

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.

11 The [4] Pharisee stood and prayed thus with (by) himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican (perhaps guilty of all these crimes.

12 I am so far from these things, and so exact in my duty, that I do more than is commanded; for) [5] I fast twice in the week, (and) I give tithes of all that I possess (even of mint and cummin, Matt. xxiii. 23).

13 And (but) the publican, [6] standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven (as judging himself unworthy so to do), but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

14 I tell you, (that) this man went down to his house justified (i. e. approved of God, and pardoned) [7] rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

15 And they (who believed he was a true prophet) brought unto him also infants, that he would touch (or lay his hands upon) them (and pray, Matt. xix. 13): but when his disciples saw it, they rebuked them (that brought them).

16 But Jesus (being much displeased at this action of his disciples, Mark x. 14) called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

17 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God (with affection as free from

---

[2] Ver. 7. Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς οὐ μὴ ποιήσει τὴν ἐκδίκησιν τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ μακροθυμῶν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς; And shall not God avenge his own elect, that cry unto him day and night, though he bear long with them?] Here note,

First, That the elect in general signify all Christians chosen out of the world through faith in Christ, to be the church and people of God (see note on 2 Pet. ii. 9): when it relates particularly to the Jews, it signifies those of them who believed in Christ, and upon that account are styled "the election of grace," and absolutely "the election," Rom. xi. 5. 7, under which character St. Peter writes unto them, 1 Pet. i. 1 (see note on Matt. xxiv. 22), and this seems to be the import of the word here: for μακροθυμῶν some copies read μακροθυμεῖ, and so interpreters read the whole by way of interrogation, "And will he be slack towards them?" i. e. towards his elect; and this well agrees with the following words, "I tell you, he will avenge them speedily;" and with the words ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, which have no other substantive to refer to but the elect; and with the like passage, Ecclus. xxxv. 17—19, "The prayer of the humble (or afflicted) pierceth the clouds; and till it come nigh he will not be comforted, and will not depart till the Most High shall behold to judge righteously, and execute judgment. For the Lord will not be slack, οὐδὲ μὴ μακροθυμήσει ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, neither will the Almighty be patient towards them, till he hath smitten asunder the loins of the unmerciful, and repaid ἐκδίκησιν, vengeance to the heathen; till he hath judged the cause of his people, and made them rejoice in his mercy."

Yet, because the common reading is μακροθυμῶν, and because sinners, and especially the unbelieving Jews, are reckoned as the objects of God's long-suffering, and not the elect, as when Paul saith to them, "Despisest thou the riches of his goodness, patience, and long-suffering?" (Rom. ii. 4), and as persons God endureth with much long-suffering (ix. 22); and Peter saith, "God was long-suffering towards them, not being willing they should perish, but should all come to repentance" (2 Pet. iii. 9), others make the sense run thus, "Shall he, who is thus long-suffering towards the worst of men, and the persecutors of his people, be slack to avenge the cause of his people whom he loves, and to whose prayers his ears are always open?"

[3] Ver. 8. Πλὴν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐλθὼν ἆρα εὑρήσει τὴν πίστιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, Nevertheless, when the Son of man comes, shall he find faith upon earth?] i. e. When the Son of man comes to exercise this vengeance on the Jewish nation, how few shall he find in the Jewish nation that will believe it? As for the unbelieving Jews, though Christ and his forerunner had told them so frequently and plainly of their approaching ruin; and though they had so many signs of it, recorded in Josephus, he tells us they were still expecting deliverance from God: and they, among them, who believed and professed the Christian faith, being pressed with continual sufferings, began to "grow weary and faint in their minds," and to ask, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Yea, some of them began to forsake the assemblies of the saints (Heb. x. 25), and many of them became apostates, and fell back to their own Judaism; so that all the epistles directed to them are manifestly designed to keep them steadfast in the faith (see the preface to those Epistles, and note on 2 Thess. ii. 3).

[4] Ver. 11. Ὁ φαρισαῖος σταθεὶς πρὸς ἑαυτὸν, The pharisee standing by himself.] As fearing to be polluted by the touch of the impure publican (Luke vii. 39), on which account they had their frequent washings when they came from the markets (Mark vii. 4). He standing thus prays, "God, I thank thee" (thanksgiving being reckoned as one part of prayer, 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 16, 1 Tim. ii. 1), "that I am not as other man are, nor as this publican." Here he offends, (1.) that he concludes himself good, because he is not so bad as other men: whereas he should have done this only from the evidence of his own sincerity in heart and actions; it being only from this approving our own works, that we can have "rejoicing in ourselves, and not in another," Gal. vi. 4. (2.) In judging so ill of others, many of whom he could have no certain knowledge of, and particularly in his judgment on this publican; from whose submissive gesture and penitential actions he might have charitably concluded, that he came to the temple with a true penitent heart.

[5] Ver. 12. Νηστεύω δὶς τοῦ σαββάτου, I fast twice in the week.] The public and private fasts of the Jews were upon the second and fifth days of the week, i. e. Monday and Thursday: and therefore the ancient Christians, that they might not be outdone by them in any part of devotion, in lieu of those days, chose the fourth and sixth days of the week for their fasting-days: Stationibus quartum et sextum sabbati dicamus (Tert. de Jejun. cap. 14. Can. Apos. 61. Const. Apost. lib. v. cap. 15. 20, p. 263. lib. vii. cap. 23. Epiph. Hær. 51, n. 26. Expos. Fidei, n. 22. Philostorg. lib. x. §. 12. Pseudo-Ignat. Ep. ad Philip. §. 13).

Theophylact here notes of this pharisee, that, in opposition to the rapine and injustice of others, he declares his exactness in paying tithes: and, in opposition to the luxury and adultery of others, his care to keep under his body, by fasting twice a week.

[6] Ver. 13. Ὁ δὲ τελώνης μακρόθεν ἑστώς, But the publican standing afar off.] He stood afar off, perhaps in the court of the gentiles, looking upon himself unworthy to draw nigh to God, or to stand in the holy place: he could not lift up his eyes to heaven, from the sense of the same unworthiness; he smites upon his breast, punishing himself out of a deep sense of his guilt; this being the sign of a mind vehemently afflicted (xxiii. 48); and, lastly, he humbly confesses, that he was a sinner, and earnestly begs mercy; and therefore it is said, covetous and vain-glorious desires) as (those of) a little child, shall in no wise enter therein (his love of honour, John v. 44, and of the world, ver. 24, being great obstructions to it).

[7] Ver. 14. Κατέβη οὗτος δεδικαιωμένος εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ, ἢ ἐκεῖνος, He went down to his house justified rather than the other.] Here ἤ is again put for μᾶλλον ἤ. So Hos. ii. 7, καλῶς μοι ἦν τότε ἢ νῦν, "It was better with me than now;" Jonah iv. 3. 8, καλόν τὸ ἀποθανεῖν ἢ ζῆν, "It is better for me to die, than live" (see note on xv. 7).

18 And a certain ruler (who had a good opinion of him, and some religious concern for future happiness) asked him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? (Seeing) none is good, save one, that is God (dost thou own me as one commissionated by God to teach the way of life? I will then do it from his word).

20 Thou knowest the commandments, (viz.) Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother. (Do this and thou shalt live.)

21 And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

22 Now when Jesus heard these things, he said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing (viz. a heart so free from the love of riches, as to be ready to part with them at my command for heavenly blessings: I therefore say to thee,) sell all that thou hast, and distribute (it) unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and (then) come, (and) follow me.

23 And when he heard this, he (went away, and) was very sorrowful: for he was very rich (and unwilling to part with his estate).

24 And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How hardly shall they that have riches (and trust in them, Mark x. 24) enter into the kingkom of God!

25 For it is easier for a camel (or, a cable) to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man (thus affected to his riches, that he cannot part with them for treasures in heaven) to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they that heard it (this saying) said, Who then can be saved?

27 And he said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God (he can take off men's hearts from this love of the world, though the persuasions of men cannot do it).

28 Then Peter said, Lo, we (thy apostles) have left all, and followed thee. (What shall we have therefore? Matt. xix. 27.)

29 And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake,

30 Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time (from the joys of a good conscience and the Holy Ghost, the sense of God's favour, and the hopes of treasures in heaven, and the affection of good Christians to him), and in the world to come life everlasting.

31 ¶ Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and (then) all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

32 For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on:

33 And they shall scourge him, and put him to death: and the third day he shall rise again.

34 And they understood none of these things (i. e. they knew not how to reconcile them with their apprehensions of his temporal kingdom, and their traditions, that the Messiah should not die, John xii. 34): and (so) this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

35 ¶ And it came to pass, that as he was come nigh (Gr. was nigh) unto Jericho, a certain blind man (named Bartimeus, Mark x. 46) sat by the way side begging (and another with him, Matt. xx. 30).

36 And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant (i. e. what was the reason of that concourse).

37 And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

38 And (upon this) he cried, saying, Jesus, thou son of David, (whose office it is to give sight to the blind, Isa. xxxv. 5,) have mercy on me.

39 And they which went before rebuked him (saying), that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, Thou son of David, have mercy on me.

40 And Jesus stood (still), and commanded him to be brought unto him: and when he was come near, he asked him, 41 Saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? And he said, Lord, (I desire) that I may receive my sight.

42 And Jesus said unto him, (Thou shalt) receive thy sight: thy faith hath saved thee (i. e. hath made thee whole, Mark x. 52).

43 And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, glorifying God (for his mercy to him): and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise (also) unto God.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 And Jesus entered (into) and passed through Jericho.

2 And, behold, there was a man named Zacchæus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.

3 And he sought to see Jesus who (i. e. what kind of man) he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4 And he (therefore) ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him: for he was to pass that way.

5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to day I must abide at thy house.

6 And he [1] made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7 And when they (the pharisees) saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner (thinking that a matter of defilement and reproach to him, not considering the design on which Christ came into the world).

8 And Zacchæus stood (up), and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, (not the fifth part only, but) the [2] half of my goods I (now resolve to) give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 6. Καὶ σπεύσας κατέβη, καὶ ὑπεδέξατο αὐτὸν χαίρων, And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.] By this joy, and by his diligence to see him, he showed what a high esteem he had for that holy Jesus whom the scribes and pharisees despised.

[2] Ver. 8. Ἰδοὺ, τὰ ἡμίση τῶν ὑπαρχόντων μου, Κύριε, δίδωμι τοῖς πτωχοῖς, &c. Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give accusation (or oppression, see note on Luke iii. 14), I (will) restore him fourfold (i. e. beyond the rigour of the law).

9 And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house (Zaccheus having done like a true convert), forsomuch as he also is a [3] son of Abraham (i. e. a Jew.

10 And this is suitable to the design of my coming, and justifies my eating and conversing with him:) for the Son of man is come to seek (after) and to save that which was lost.

11 And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, (which shortly was to be the scene of misery, ver. 41, 42) and because they thought that the kingdom of God (or, of the Messiah) should immediately appear.

12 He said, therefore, (The kingdom of God is like to) a [4] certain nobleman (who) went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return (and thus shall I go to heaven and be installed in my mediatory kingdom, and then return to execute the severest judgments on this nation for their non-proficiency).

13 And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come (i. e. improve them till I come and take an account of your proficiency).

14 But his citizens (the Jews) hated him, and sent a messenger after him, (disclaiming and rejecting his authority, and) saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, Well (done), thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities (i. e. be thy reward proportionable to the increase of thy talent).

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities (i. e. be thy reward answerable to the improvement of thy talent).

---

to the poor; and if I have wronged any man, I restore him fourfold.] By two things Zaccheus shows the sincerity of his reformation and conversion; (1.) that he is ready to repair any injury that he had done to any man by oppression or false accusation, which is the proper import of the word συκοφαντέω, not only by adding a fifth part, as the law required in case of theft, when what was purloined was voluntarily restored (Numb. v. 7), nor by restoring double, as the trespasser was to do by law, when that which was taken away was found in his hands (Exod. xxii. 4), but by restoring for money and goods what the rigour of the law required only in the case of an ox or sheep killed after it was stolen (Exod. xxii. 1), i. e. four-fold; doing not only what justice required for compensation of the injury (for no man can be righteous till he, if he be able, hath satisfied for the injury done to his brother), but inflicting on himself this surplusage by way of penalty for his sins; and as a testimony of his great displeasure against himself for committing it. And (2.) whereas the law and tradition of the Jews required only that a fifth part of their income should be spent in charity, he bequeaths half his estate to charitable uses.

[3] Ver. 9. This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is υἱὸς Ἀβραάμ, a son of Abraham.] Not only by faith, of which sonship the Jews, to whom Christ spake, had then no notion, but by birth; for the pharisees do not murmur against Christ that he did eat with one uncircumcised, but that he did it with a sinner: it would also have been no indication to the Jews that he was the son of Abraham, that he believed in Christ: and, lastly, his respect to the law of Moses, in making restitution, shows he was no stranger to that law. Moreover, though the phrase, "Salvation is come unto this house," doth not necessarily argue that his whole family believed, and the pronoun ipse, and the reason here assigned, seem personally to respect Zaccheus, the master of the house; yet it is piously observed that Christ here promiseth salvation to the house, because it was the duty, and usually the practice, of the master of the family, to reduce his whole house to the faith he had embraced; as in the case of the centurion, Acts x. 2, of Lydia, Acts xvi. 14, 15, of the gaoler, ver. 33, 34, of Crispus the ruler of a synagogue, Acts xviii. 8, and of the nobleman, John iv. 46. 53.

[4] Ver. 12. Ἄνθρωπός τις εὐγενὴς ἐπορεύθη εἰς χώραν μακρὰν, λαβεῖν ἑαυτῷ βασιλείαν, καὶ ὑποστρέψαι, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive a kingdom, and to return.] Here observe,

First, That it is ingeniously conjectured by Mr. Le Clerc, that Christ took the rise of this parable from the custom of the kings of Judea, Herod the Great and Archelaus his son, who usually went to Rome to receive the kingdom of Judea from Cæsar, without whose permission and appointment they durst not take the government into their hands; and in the case of Archelaus there is indeed some resemblance of this; for the Jews sent their complaints after him, showing their unwillingness that this nobleman, or εὐγενὴς, the son of Herod the Great, to whom the kingdom of Judea was assigned by his father's will and testament, should reign over them; and at his return, ἐθναρχίαν παραλαβὼν, "he receiving the kingdom," tyrannized over them for ten years; but with this signal difference, that upon their second complaint to Cæsar, they prevailed against him, and procured his banishment to Vienna.

Secondly, That the parable here, as it respects our Lord Christ, "going into a far country to receive a kingdom, and return," either respects his going to heaven to sit down at the right hand of God in majesty and glory, and to take possession of his mediatory kingdom, and the return to punish the unbelieving and obdurate Jews; or going by his apostles and disciples to erect a kingdom among the gentiles, and then coming, as it were, back to punish the Jews, according to these words of his, "The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached throughout all the world for a testimony to all nations, and then shall the end (of the Jewish polity) come" (Matt. xxiv. 14). Note, Thirdly, That this parable doth certainly respect the Jewish nation; as appears (1.) because they are said here to reject Christ's kingdom, saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us;" and upon this account are styled his enemies, and devoted to destruction by him, which agrees still only to the Jews, ver. 27. (2.) To them is threatened the punishment of the unprofitable servants, to wit, "to be cast out into outer darkness," &c. (Matt. viii. 12, xxii. 13. xxv. 30, Luke. xiii. 28). In fine, it is expressly said, he "therefore spake this parable to them, because they thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear" (ver. 11).

Fourthly, The only difficulty remaining is, how to apply the pounds here, and the talents mentioned Matt. xxv., to any of the Jews; but this seeming difficulty is removed by a careful observation of the words, which show they were distributed, not to his citizens, but τοῖς ἰδίοις δούλοις, to his "own proper servants," Matt. xxv. 14, to his servants, ver. 13, i. e. to his apostles, five; and to the seventy disciples, or those who had received lesser spiritual gifts, two talents; to the Jews, who are also styled "his own," John i. 14, only one talent (viz. the law and the prophets, promising to them the Messiah, and pointing out his advent and his characters to them); which they might and ought to have employed, so as to have believed, and fitted themselves to receive and to improve the gifts of the Holy Ghost, as others did.

Fifthly, Observe, that as the dreadful destruction of the unbelieving Jews was an emblem of the last judgment, so Christ's reckoning with them is a representation of that reckoning he will make with all men at the great day, for all the talents they have respectively received; and, with respect to that, this Lord is said, Matt. xxv. 12, to come, μετὰ χρόνον πολὺν, "after a long time."

20 And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin (making no use of it):

21 For I feared thee, because (I judged) thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow (requiring an increase far exceeding what thou gavest.)

22 And he saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge (and condemn) thee, thou wicked servant. (For) Thou (owndst that thou) knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23 Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank (i. e. didst not thou improve my talent), that at my coming (back) I might have required (and received) mine own with usury (or improvement)?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 [5] (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds) (but he answered, Therefore I give him more).

26 For I say unto you, That unto every one which (improveth what he) hath shall be given (more); and from him that hath not (so as to improve it), even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But those mine enemies (of the Jewish nation), which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

28 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, he went before (his disciples), ascending up to Jerusalem.

29 And it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples, 30 Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, (We do it) Because the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found (all things) even as he had said unto them.

33 And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34 And they said, The Lord hath need of him (and then they let them go with him).

35 And they brought him to Jesus: and they cast their garments upon the colt, and they set Jesus thereon.

36 And as he went, they (the multitude) spread their clothes in the way (as at the triumphant entrance of a prince).

37 And when he was come nigh (to Jerusalem, being) even at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen (done by Christ);

38 Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: (may) peace (be procured by him to us) in heaven, and glory (to God who lives) in the highest (place).

39 And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples (for these acclamations).

40 And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these (my disciples) should hold their peace, the [6] stones would immediately cry out (i. e. my kingdom would be proclaimed by far more unlikely means).

41 ¶ And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and [7] wept over it, 42 Saying, (Happy had it been for thee) [8] if thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day (of visitation, Luke i. 68) the things which belong unto thy peace (and welfare)! but now (through thy infidelity) they are hid from thine eyes.

43 For the days shall (shortly) come upon thee, that thine [9] enemies shall cast a trench about thee,

---

[5] Ver. 25.] Though this verse is in St. Jerome, Theophylact, and in all the versions, and confirmed by the words following, λέγων αὐτοῖς, yet saith Dr. Mills, Lubens, nisi repugnarint omnes codices, pro irreptitio habuerim (Proleg. p. 155).

[6] Ver. 40. Οἱ λίθοι κεκράξονται, If these hold their peace, the stones will cry out.] This is a proverbial expression, signifying that if these followers of Christ should hold their peace, some more unlikely way should be found out for the proclaiming the Messiah, even by those who are reckoned the most stupid and insensate people, as by you the gentiles are. So, Lapidi loqueris, "Thou speakest to one who hath little sense to hear or understand;" lapis being metaphorically put for a stupid and brutish person: so when Aristippus* was asked by one, what his son would be better for instruction, he answered, that then ἐν τῷ θεάτρῳ οὐ καθήσεται λίθος ἐπὶ λίθον, "one stone," that is, "one stupid person, would not sit above another in the theatre." So ἠλιθιάζειν καὶ ἠλίθιον φθέγγεσθαι, in Aristophanes, is to be stupid, and speak without sense, ἀναίσθητοι γὰρ οἱ λίθοι, "for stones have no sense:" so the scholiast, p. 352, G.

[7] Ver. 41. Καὶ—ἔκλαυσεν ἐπ' αὐτῇ, And he wept over it.] I hope Epiphanius† may be mistaken, when he tells us, these words, and the like in John xi. 35, were blotted out, as being denied to be in the most correct copies; for it is certain, and confessed by him, that "they were to be found in Irenæus,‡ and in Origen§ twice," who saith, our Lord wept, εἰκότως, "with good reason," over Jerusalem: for he did it out of a profound charity, and deep commiseration of the evils coming upon Jerusalem; in both which virtues he came to be an example to us; and therefore can do nothing in it unworthy of himself.

[8] Ver. 42. Λέγων, ὅτι εἰ ἔγνως καὶ σύ, Saying, (Happy hadst thou been) if thou hadst known, in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace, &c.] Here the critics note, that εἰ often signifies utinam, and so the words will contain an ardent wish, that the people of Jerusalem had been thus wise, conceived after this manner, "O that thou hadst known!" but though this be true (see note on Luke xii. 40), yet the particle ὅτι, that, makes it not applicable to this place; and therefore I think it better to supply the deficient sense by the words contained in the parenthesis. Here then observe, (1.) that Christ here plainly shows, and takes it for granted, that the people of Jerusalem, in this day of their visitation by the Messias, might have savingly known the things belonging to their peace, since otherwise our Saviour's tears may rather have been looked upon as the tears of crocodiles, than of charity and true commiseration; and either his assertion, that they might have been happy, would have been contrary to truth; or his wish, that they had thus known the things belonging to their peace, contrary to his Father's will and decree; both which are palpably absurd: and seeing the will of Christ was always the same with that of his Father, it follows also, that God the Father had the same charitable affection to them, and so had laid no bar against their happiness by his decrees, nor been wanting in any thing on his part necessary towards their everlasting welfare (see the note on Matt. xxiii. 37).

[9] Ver. 43. The days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side.] How exactly this was done we learn from Josephus, saying,* that "when Ves-

---

* Apud Laert. p. 135, 136.

† Ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔκλαυσε κεῖται ἐν τῷ κατὰ Λουκᾶν εὐαγγελίῳ ἐν ἐν τοῖς ἀδιορθώτοις ἀντιγράφοις, καὶ κεκύρωται τῇ μαρτυρίᾳ τοῦ ἁγίου Εἰρηναίου· ὀρθόδοξοι δὲ ἀφείλοντο, τὸ ῥητὸν φοβηθέντες. Anchorat. §. 31, pl. 36.

‡ Iren. lib. i. cap. 17.

§ Orig. in Matt. ed. Huet. tom. i. p. 441, tom. ii. p. 168. Agnoscunt Theophylactus et versiones omnes.

* Τοὺς δὲ οὔπω τὰ Ῥωμαίων φρονοῦντας εἶργεν ἡ στρατία παντα χόθεν τὴν πόλιν περιέχουσα. De Bello Jud. lib. v. cap. 27, p.

and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side,

44 And shall lay thee [10] even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not (i. e. didst not improve aright to faith and repentance) the time of thy visitation.

45 And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

46 Saying unto them, It is written (Isa. lvi. 7), My house (shall be called, or) is the house of prayer: but ye have made it (by your fraudulent, covetous dealings, and extortions) a den of thieves.

47 And he taught daily in the temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him, 48 And could not find what they might (safely) do (because of the multitude): for all the people were very attentive to hear him.

pasian besieged Jerusalem, his army compassed the city round about, and kept them in on every side, and though it was judged a great and almost impracticable work to compass the whole city with a wall: yet Titus animating his soldiers to attempt it, they in three days built a wall of thirty-nine furlongs, having thirteen castles in it, and so cut off all hopes that any of the Jews within the city should escape."

893, B. Τὸ μὲν οὖν τεῖχος ἑνὸς δέοντος τεσσαράκοντα σταδίων ἦν, τρίσι δ' ὡκοδομήθη τὸ πᾶν ἡμέραις. Ibid. p. 936, 937, B.

[10] Ver. 44. And shall lay thee even with the ground,—and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another.] How this also was exactly done, Josephus teacheth, by saying, that* "Titus having commanded his soldiers to dig up the city, this was so fully done, by levelling the whole compass of it except three towers, that they who came to see it were persuaded it would never be built again."

* Τὸν δὲ ἄλλων ἅπαντα τῆς πόλεως περίβολον οὕτως ἐξωμάλιζον οἱ κατασκάπτοντες ὡς μηδὲ πώποτε οἰκισθῆναι πίστιν ἂν ἔτι παρασχεῖν τοῖς προσελθοῦσι. Lib. vii. cap. 1, p. 970, B. C.

CHAPTER XX.

1 And it came to pass, that on one of those days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the gospel, the chief priests and the scribes came upon him, (and rose up against him) with the elders,

2 And spake unto him, saying, Tell us, by what authority doest thou these things (which only prophets, and persons allowed and approved by authority, shall do)? or who is he that gave thee this authority?

3 And he answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and (if you) answer me (you may thence know by what authority I do these things):

4 The baptism of John, was it from (the God of) heaven, or of men (only)?

5 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, (It was) from heaven; he will say, Why then believed ye him not (when he testified that I was the Christ)?

6 But and if we say, Of men; all the people will (be ready to) stone us: for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7 And they answered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

9 Then began he to speak to the people this parable; A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen (the Jewish doctors), and went into a far country for a long time (i. e. left them a long time, to manage and to make it fruitful).

10 And at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen, (requesting) that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen (the guides and rulers of the Jewish church) beat him, and sent him away empty.

11 And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12 And again he sent a third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out (killing God's prophets, and stoning them that were sent to them, xiii. 34, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16).

13 Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

14 But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the heir: come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be our's.

15 So they (the Jews) cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him (Christ, the Son of God). What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And [1] when they (the pharisees) heard it, they said God forbid (that this should happen to us).

17 And he beheld them, and said, (If this will not be so) what is (the import of) this then that is written (Ps. cxviii. 22), The stone which the builders reject-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX.

Ver. 16. Ἀκούσαντες δὲ εἶπον, μὴ γένοιτο, And when they heard it, they said, God forbid.] In Matt. xxi. 41, Mark xii. 9, Christ inquires of them what "the lord of the vineyard will do to these husbandmen?" And they answer, "He will destroy them, and let out his vineyard to other husbandmen:" here Christ himself declares what the lord of the vineyard will do to those husbandmen, and they seem to say, God forbid that he should do so. Now this seeming contrariety is by some solved thus, That the pharisees do not, by these words, deny that the lord of the vineyard would destroy those husbandmen; but knowing that the parable was spoken against them, they say, μὴ γένοιτο, Far be it from us husbandmen to do a work so worthy of this punishment; and this sense Christ's reply seems to require, viz. τί οὖν ἐστι τὸ γεγραμμένον, i. e. If the priests and pharisees will not do this, "what means that which is written?" what means that saying of the psalmist, which even you Jews interpret of the Messiah, "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of (in) the corner?" Ps. cxviii. 22. To strengthen this interpretation, let it be considered that our Lord "spake this parable against them," Matt. xxi. 45, Mark xii. 12. They therefore deny what they understood, that they should destroy the son of the lord of the vineyard, i. e. the Messiah, as not believing Christ to be the Messiah, but an impostor; but they deny not that they who should do this were worthy of this punishment: or, (2.) because St. Luke peculiarly notes, ver. 9, that this parable was spoken "to the people," this may be their answer, Far be it from our rulers to do so vile a thing as may bring down this judgment on us; whilst the rulers and pharisees, who thought themselves far from being such husbandmen as they knew Christ suggested they would be, stick not to say such husbandmen deserve indeed to be destroyed, as thinking they should never be concerned in their ruin.

Either of these solutions I like better than that of Mr.

ed, the same is become the head of the corner? (Now you are these builders, and I, whom you reject, am that corner-stone.

18 And) Whosoever shall fall upon (or stumble at) that stone shall be broken (i. e. shall do it to his ruin); but on whomsoever it shall fall (as it will most severely on you of this nation), it will grind him to powder (i. e. subject him to the heaviest judgments, both here and hereafter; for they who through weakness, or the prejudices of their education, or reverence to their guides, shall stumble at this stone, and not believe, shall be hereafter punished, yet with fewer stripes than those Jewish doctors, who obstinately and against full conviction hated and rejected the Messiah, and would not he should reign over them, ch. xiv.).

19 ¶ And the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him; and (but) they feared the people: for they perceived that he had spoken this parable against them (representing them as the persons who would thus treat the Son of God, and should thus suffer by him for so doing).

20 And they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of (i. e. advantage against him from) his words, that so they [2] might deliver him (up) unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked him, saying, Master, we know that thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God truly (without favour to or fear of any, though the greatest in power and dignity: we therefore inquire of thee,)

22 Is it lawful for us (Jews) to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?

23 But he perceived their craftiness (in designing from his answer to represent him to the governor as an enemy to Cæsar, xxiii. 2, or to the people, as an enemy to their liberty), and (therefore) said unto them, Why tempt ye me?

24 Shew me a (Roman) penny; (and tell me) Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, (It is) Cæsar's (image that is stamped upon it).

25 And he said unto them, (This, by your own rules, is an evidence that Cæsar's government hath obtained among you,) render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's (the tribute due to him as your governor under God) and unto God, the things that be God's (i. e. the tribute due to his temple).

26 And (when he had thus said) they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at (the wisdom of) his answer, and held their peace.

27 ¶ Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is (to be) any resurrection (of the body); and they asked him,

28 Saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

29 There were therefore (with us) seven brethren: and the first (of them) took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the second took her to wife, and he (also) died childless.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner (the residue of) the seven also; and they left no children, and died.

32 Last of all the woman died also.

33 Therefore in the resurrection (of the body from the dead, Mark xii. 23,) whose wife of them is she (to be)? for seven had her to wife.

34 And Jesus answering said unto them, (This question proceeds from a gross ignorance of the future state; for) the children of this world (only) marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (which is to come), and (attain to) the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36 Neither can they die any more: for they are (as to duration) equal unto the angels; and are the [3] children of God, (who are to live with him for ever, John viii. 35) being the children of the resurrection.

37 Now that the dead are (to be) raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he (i. e. God) calleth (to him, saying, I am) the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob (long after they were dead).

38 For he is not a God of the dead (i. e. of them who are so dead, as not to be the sons of the resurrection), but of the living (i. e. of them whose bodies shall live again): [4] for all live unto him.

39 ¶ Then certain of the scribes answering said,

Le Clerc, who will have these words in the beginning of this verse, "He will come, and will destroy these husbandmen, and let out his vineyard to others," to be the words not of Christ, but of the Sanhedrin; and yet will have the words immediately following in the same verse, ἀκούσαντες δὲ εἶπον, μὴ γένοιτο, "and understanding, they said within themselves, God forbid," to be also the words of the same Sanhedrin: for could they, understanding that these words were spoken against them, first give this severe sentence against themselves, and then in the same breath contradict themselves? And, secondly, why must εἶπον be rendered, "they said within themselves," and not in the hearing of Christ, who when they had said this, looks upon them, and inquires of them, "What then is it which is written?" ver. 17.

[2] Ver. 20. Εἰς τὸ παραδοῦναι αὐτὸν τῇ ἀρχῇ καὶ τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος, To deliver him up to the power and authority of the governor.] And therefore they put to him the question about paying tribute to Cæsar, hoping that, by denying it to be due to him from the Jews, they might accuse him as an enemy to Cæsar; for they knew that his decision of questions, relating only to their law and controversies, would not offend those Gallios.

[3] Ver. 36. Καὶ υἱοί εἰσι τοῦ Θεοῦ, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, And being sons of the resurrection, are sons of God.] For this υἱοθεσία, sonship, imports "the redemption of the body from corruption," Rom. viii. 23, and they that are sons, are "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, and to be glorified with him," ver. 17, see the note there; and the strength of Christ's argument depending on this notion (note on Matt. xxii. 31, 32), Jamblichus very likely from hence makes it the reward of good souls going out of the body, to be converted εἰς ἀγγέλους καὶ ἀγγελικὰς ψυχὰς, "into angels and angelical souls," apud Stob. Ecl. Phys. p. 144.

[4] Ver. 38. Πάντες γὰρ αὐτῷ ζῶσιν, For all live to him.] Woltzogenius interprets these words thus, They live in respect of God's power and decree, that they shall live again; and hence he argues, that the souls of good men live not after death till the resurrection: for, saith he, Christ argues thus, If Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were not to live again, God, who styles himself their God, would be the God of the dead; whereas if their souls lived, and enjoyed a state of happiness, God would not be the God of the dead, though they never rose again. To this I answer,

Ans. 1. First, That when it is said, "God is not the God of the dead," the meaning is, he is not the God of them who are to abide in a state of death, and never to enjoy the resurrection of the just; i. e. he owns not them for his who are not to be "the sons of the resurrection" (ver. 36), and will not be called their God, as having not prepared for them a heavenly city (Heb. xi. 16). Hence the scriptures say of them, that they are "passed from death unto life," (John v. 24), and that they shall not die; because Christ will raise them up at the last day (John vi. 50). And, in the opinion of the Jews, they only seem to die in the eyes Master, thou hast well said (in relation to the sadducees).

40 And after that they durst not ask him any question at all.

41 And he said unto them, How say they (of the scribes) that Christ is David's son?

42 And (when) David himself saith in the book of Psalms, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 43 Till I make thine enemies thy footstool (by subduing them, and putting them under thy feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25).

44 David therefore (in these words) calleth him Lord, how is he then his son?

45 ¶ Then in the audience of all the people he said unto his disciples,

46 Beware of the scribes, which [5] desire (affect) to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts;

47 Which devour widows' houses, and for a shew (of devotion) make long prayers: the same shall receive greater damnation (for their hypocrisy).

---

of fools, because their hope is full of immortality (Wisd. iii. 2—4), and they proverbially say, "The just live when they are dead;" and in this sense, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob would not live to God, though their souls lived with him, unless their bodies also rose again.

Ans. 2. Secondly, God here styles himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, i. e. not of their souls only, but of their persons; in which sense the Jews always understood these words: now thus he would not be the God of the dead, though their souls lived, unless their bodies also rose again.

[5] Ver. 46. Θελόντων περιπατεῖν ἐν στολαῖς, Affecting to walk in long garments.] Down to their ankles, or to their feet, that no part of their bodies might be seen; for this, says Dr. Lightfoot upon the place, was the talith that the disciples of the wise men wore. Good here is the observation of Mr. Le Clerc from Pope Celestine, touching the clergy, that "they are to be discerned à plebe vel cæteris, doctrinâ, non veste; conversatione, non habitû; mentis puritate, non cultû; not so much by their apparel, as by their learning; not only by their habit, but their conversation; not by the adornment of their body, but by purity of mind."

CHAPTER XXI.

1 [1] And he looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2 And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites.

3 And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all:

4 For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the [2] offerings of God (i. e. the treasure designed for the use of his temple): but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had (i. e. all that she had to live upon that day).

5 ¶ And as some spake of the temple (showing) how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said,

6 [3] As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down (from its place).

7 And they asked him, saying, Master (thou speakest dreadful things of this place), but (tell us) when shall these things be? and what sign will there be (to inform men) when these things shall come to pass? (We hope thou only speakest of the desolation which shall overturn all things at the end of this world.)

8 And he said, Take heed that ye (of this age) be not deceived: for (after my departure) many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time (of your redemption) draweth near (but must be all false Christs): go ye not therefore after them.

9 But (and) when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end (of the polity and temple of the Jews) is not by and by.

10 Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs (of approaching judgments) shall there be from heaven.

12 But before all these (things), they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and (casting you) into prisons, (you) being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake.

13 And it shall turn to you for a testimony (of my presence with you; they being not able to resist the wisdom of your doctrine, ver. 15, or gainsay the miracles by which you do confirm it).

14 Settle it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer (to their inquiries and accusations):

15 For I will give you (in that hour, Mark xiii. 11) a mouth (full of such power) and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist (Acts vi. 10).

16 And (through the persecutions, which shall then be great; and the apostates, which shall then be many, Matt. xxiv. 10. 13) ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17 And ye shall be hated of all (sorts of) men for my name's sake.

18 But (notwithstanding, if ye continue faithful to

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 1. He looked, and saw men casting their gifts into the treasury.] That which was thus cast into the treasury was designed, saith Theophylact, not only for relief of the poor, but for sacred uses, and εἰς κοσμὸν τοῦ ναοῦ, "for the ornament of the temple;" and this might give ground to Josephus to say, the temple was built, not only with the bounty of Herod, that not being sufficient for the work, but with all that was contained in the holy treasury, and with the tributes sent from all parts of the world; and so that which men thought could never be finished, was, through patience and length of time, accomplished (De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 14, p. 916).

[2] Ver. 4. Ἔβαλον εἰς τὰ δῶρα τοῦ Θεοῦ, Cast in unto, i. e. among, the offerings of God.] For it seems a mistake to say that δῶρα, "gifts," signifies the treasury itself, which in Hebrew is called korban; for that is δῶρον, not δῶρα in the plural; and according to this sense, βάλλειν τὰ δῶρα εἰς τὸ γαζοφυλάκιον, must be, "to cast the treasury into the treasury" (ver. 1).

[3] Ver. 6. Ταῦτα ἃ θεωρεῖτε, As for these things which you behold,] Quod ad hæc attinet. So Plautus, Naucratem, quem convenire volui in navi non erat, Amphitr. act. 4, sc. 1. Hos, quos videtis hic stare captivos duos, Capt. Prol. et act. 1, sc. 2, Istos captivos duos—his indito catenas; and Terence, Eunuchum, quem dedisti nobis quas turbas dedit! See like examples from the Old Testament Ps.

the end, Matt. xxiv. 13) there shall not [4] an hair of your head perish (i. e. you shall not perish in that destruction, which shall then come upon the unbelieving Jews).

19 In your patience possess ye your souls (ἐν τῇ ὑπομονῇ ὑμῶν κτήσασθε τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν, you shall have your lives preserved as the reward of your Christian patience).

20 And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with (the Roman) armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21 (And) then let them which are in Judæa flee to the mountains (of Perœa); and let them which are in the midst of it depart out (of Judea); and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22 For these be the days of vengeance (upon Judea), that all things which are written may be fulfilled (upon them).

23 But woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days (and so are not in a condition thus to flee)! for there shall (then) be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall (many of them) fall by the edge of the sword, and (many of them) shall be led away [5] captive into all nations: and [6] Jerusalem shall be trodden down of (or trodden by) the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled (i. e. till the glorious conversion of the gentiles, at the coming in of the Jews, who shall then also be gathered to their own city and country).

25 ¶ And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars (i. c. in the heavens where they move); and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; [7] the sea and the waves roaring (see the note);

26 Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the (habitable) earth: for the powers of heaven (the ecclesiastical and civil government) shall be shaken.

27 And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud (or, as upon a cloud) with power and great glory.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption (from your troubles) draweth nigh.

29 And he spake to them a parable (to this effect); Behold the fig tree, and all the (other) trees;

30 When they now shoot forth (their leaves and branches), ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God (or, the xviii. 30, civ. 17, Eccl. ii. 14, Hos. iii. 11, xii. 7, Neh. i. 3; in the New, Acts vii. 40, x. 36, 1 John ii. 27, Rev. ii. 26, vi. 8, where as for, or quod attinet ad, is understood.

---

[4] Ver. 18. Καὶ θρὶξ ἐκ τῆς κεφαλῆς ὑμῶν οὐ μὴ ἀπόληται, And there shall not one hair of your head perish.] This, saith Grotius, is a proverbial expression, used 1 Sam. xiv. 45, 2 Sam. xiv. 11, 1 Kings i. 52, Acts xxvii. 34, signifying that they should sustain no loss, i. e. all circumstances considered; for to suffer some loss for the present, to gain eternal life, is the greatest advantage; whilst that which seems at present to be lost is laid up with God, to be restored to us with usury; and this limitation seems necessary, not only from the former words, "Some of you they shall cause to be put to death" (ver. 16), but also from the event; for as most of the apostles were cut off before the destruction of Jerusalem, so the protomartyr Stephen was taken away by the Jews, James the less, and other Christians, by Ananus* the high-priest. But yet I cannot acquiesce in this interpretation; (1.) because this proverb, in all the places cited, contains a promise, that the persons spoken to should not die, or perish in the danger they lay under, or as they apprehended they might do; so "No hair of any man's head shall perish," Acts xxvii. 34, is the same as, "There shall be no loss of any man's life," ver. 22; "One hair of Jonathan's head shall not perish," 1 Sam. xiv. 45, is, in the same verse, οὐ θανατωθήσεται, "He shall not be put to death:" "A hair of thy son's head shall not fall to the earth," 2 Sam. xiv. 11, is, in the same verse, "They shall not destroy thy son:" "One hair of Adonijah shall not fall to the earth," 1 Kings i. 52, is, in the same verse, "He shall not be put to death." Christ, therefore, seems to promise, that whatever might befall them at other times, yet in these days of vengeance upon the Jews, or at the time of the destruction of the city and the temple, none of those Christians which endured to the end should perish in that siege. And this the following words seem to insinuate, "In patience possess your souls;" that is, saith Tertullian, Per tolerantiam salvos facietis vosmet ipsos, "By patience you will preserve yourselves," ver. 19; so Matt. xxiv. 13, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved" (see here ver. 8). Accordingly the Pseudo-Clemens, in his Recognitions, saith, that this was an evident token of this great mystery, that† "every one that believed in this prophet, and was baptized in his name, ab excidio belli, quod incredulæ genti imminet ac loco ipsi, servaretur illæsus, should be kept safe from the destruction which should happen to that unbelieving nation, and to their temple, by the war." And Theodoret* saith there was a fame, that "when Vespasian and Titus came to fight against them, τοὺς τηνικαῦτα πιστοὺς ἐξ ἀποκαλύψεως τὴν πόλιν καταλιπεῖν, the faithful that were there, by revelation, left the city, according to our Lord's admonition, Luke xxi. 20, and that of them Zachary foretold, the rest shall not perish." Add to this what is noted on Matt. xxiv. 13.

[5] Ver. 24. Καὶ αἰχμαλωτισθήσονται εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, And shall be carried captive into all nations.] Accordingly Josephus informs us, that the number of those who were taken captives by the Romans during the war, was† ἐνενήκοντα μυριάδες καὶ ἑπτακισχίλιοι, "ninety and seven thousand;" of which some of the fairest and tallest Titus reserved for his triumph; of the rest, that were about seventeen years old, he sent some to Egypt to work in the mines, πλείστους δ' εἰς τὰς ἐπαρχίας διεσώρησατο, "most of them he dispersed through the Roman provinces, to be destroyed in their theatres by the sword and wild beasts; but they that were under seventeen years of age, ἐπράθησαν, were sold."

[6] Καὶ Ἰερουσαλὴμ ἔσται πατουμένη ὑπὸ ἐθνῶν, ἄχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν, And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles, till the time of the gentiles be fulfilled.] That is, say some interpreters, till the full number of the gentiles, which God shall call, be completed. This, I confess, is a very ancient interpretation of these words; but it is contrary to the express word of the apostle Paul, who declares, that, at the conversion of the Jews, there shall be a greater and more glorious conversion of the gentiles, than that which happened at the fall of them; that "their fullness should be much more the riches of the gentiles" than their fall was (Rom. xi. 12, 13), and that "their coming in should be to the gentiles as life from the dead," and should so much more enrich them, than their casting off (ver. 15). I therefore do interpret these words thus: Jerusalem shall be inhabited, not by the Jews, but by the gentiles ruling there, till the season for the full conversion of the still heathen gentiles shall come in; i. e. till the time of the conversion of the Jews, and the flowing in of all nations to them. See this exposition confirmed in the appendix to the eleventh chapter to the Romans, and Dr. Hammond's sense of the words confuted there (see here, Examen Millii).

Ἄχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν.] These two words are in St. Jerome, Theophylact, and in all the versions, and yet rejected by Dr. Mills, Proleg. p. 133.

[7] Ver. 25. Ἠχούσης θαλάσσης καὶ σάλου, The sea and the

---

* Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 8, p. 698.
† Recogn. lib. i. §. 39, p. 409.

* In Zech. xiv. 2.
† De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 49, p. 968.

coming of Christ, as a king, to execute his vengeance on his disobedient subjects of the Jewish nation) is (also) nigh at hand.

32 Verily I say unto you, (The men of) this generation shall not pass away, till all (that I have spoken) be fulfilled.

33 Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away (unperformed).

34 ¶ And [8] take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and (with the) cares of this life (which will unfit and indispose you for your flight, or your care to avoid these things), and so that day (will) come upon you unawares.

35 For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth (or, land of Judea).

36 Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man (thus coming to avenge himself on that nation).

37 And in the day time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to him (being) in the temple, for to hear him.

---

waves roaring.] To this I would refer those words of Josephus; at that time, ἀμήχανος ἐκρήγνυται χειμών, "an immense storm of the sea brake out, and violent winds, with most vehement showers, and terrible lightnings and thunders, καὶ μυκήματα σειωμένης τῆς γῆς ἐξαίσια, and vast roarings of the shaken earth" (De Bello Jud. lib. iv. cap. 17, p. 881): or rather to that violent storm, called malemboreas, which happened to the Jews at Joppa, got in boats to the sea, in which their boats perished, with a violent noise, the people howling, and the waves roaring at the same time; of which Josephus gives a very tragical description, De Bello Jud. lib. iii. cap. 29, p. 855.

[8] Ver. 34—36. Προσέχετε δὲ ἑαυτοῖς, &c. But take heed to yourselves, &c.] Here our Saviour calls upon the believing Christians, to take care and use the greatest vigilance that they do not miscarry in this dreadful season, by reason of that excess and luxury, which may render them unmindful of it; or those cares, which may render them unwilling to part with their temporal concerns, lest they should be involved in that ruin, which would come on others as a snare, suddenly and unexpectedly; and that they should add to this vigilance constant prayer to God, that they might be found worthy to escape these tremendous judgments, and might stand safely and boldly before the Son of man, when he comes to execute them on the unbelieving Jews. Whence note,

First, That God's promise of a deliverance to the Christians then, was only conditional, provided that they took care to avoid those sins which might render them obnoxious to these judgments, and to do those things which might render them worthy to escape them.

Secondly, That there is to be a connexion of our endeavours with the divine aid and providence for our preservation; and that we are not to expect preservation immediately from him, without the use of those means which he hath put into our power to effect it.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which (from the beginning of it) is called the Passover.

2 And the chief priests and scribes sought [1] how they might (safely) kill him; for they feared the people.

3 ¶ Then [2] entered Satan into Judas, surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve (which attended him).

4 And he went his way (from the twelve), and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

5 And they were glad (of the motion), and covenanted to give him money (even thirty pieces of silver, Matt. xxvi. 15).

6 And he [3] promised (to make good his word), and sought opportunity to betray him unto them in the absence of the multitude (as ἀτερ ὄχλου, without tumult).

7 ¶ Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must (according to the law) be killed.

8 And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat (of it).

9 And they said unto him, (or, for they had said to him, Matt. xxvi. 17, Mark xiv. 12,) Where wilt thou that we prepare (it)?

10 And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII.

[1] Ver. 2. Πῶς ἀνέλωσιν αὐτον, How they might take him away.] i. e. Without a tumult of the people (Mark. xiv. 2).

[2] Ver. 3. Εἰσῆλθε δὲ ὁ Σατανᾶς εἰς Ἰούδαν, Then entered Satan into Judas.] That is, two days before the passover: for, first, as for that supper in which our Saviour gave him the sop, at which Satan entered, the scripture doth expressly tell us, that it was held πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ πάσχα, "before the feast of the passover," John xiii. 1. And when our Saviour, having given him the sop, said, "What thou doest, do quickly;" some of our Lord's disciples thought that Christ had bid him "buy those things which were needful for the paschal feast" (ver. 29), whence it is evident that feast was not yet celebrated by them; and here, St. Luke saith, Satan entered into Judas, and he consulted with the high-priest, and with the soldiers, "how he might deliver him up unto them:" and then it follows, ver. 7, 8, "Then came the days of unleavened bread, and Christ said to his disciples, Prepare the passover for us, that we may eat;" so that Satan must have entered into Judas before the passover was prepared. The apostle declares, that Satan ἐνεργεῖται, "inwardly worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. ii. 2), and "leads them captive at his will" (2. Tim. ii. 26). When therefore Judas had, through the temptation of his covetousness, robbed even the poor of the charity designed for them (John xii. 6), Satan suggests unto him another way to satisfy his avarice, even the betraying of his Master for a sum of money; and when this suggestion prevailed with him to go to the high-priests with that question, "What will you give me to betray him?" (Matt. xxvi. 15) then Satan fully entered into him, and carried him on, without remorse, to the performance of that horrid enterprise.

[3] Ver. 6. Ἐξωμολόγησε, And he promised.] i. e. Consented to do the thing: for that this doth not only signify to confess, and to give thanks, but also to consent and engage, is evident, not only from the institution of Theophilus, where we read thus, προμίττεις, προμίττω, τουτ' ἔστι, ὁμολογεῖς, ὁμολογῶ, that is, ὁμλογεῖν to promise; but from Phavorinus, who renders ὁμολογῶ, συντίθεμαι, σύμφημι, "I promise, I consent," of which import of the word we find many instances from Plato, Xenophon, Demosthenes in Constantine; so that ἐξωμολόγησε is here well rendered, "he promised," or consented to the price; nor is it to be wondered that St. Luke, born at Antioch, where there was an academy, and studying in the universities of Greece, should use this word, not as the Septuagint, but as those Grecians did

11 And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

12 And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished: there make ready.

13 And they went, and found (it) as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

14 And when the hour (of eating it) was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

15 And he said unto them, With [4] desire I have desired (i. e. I have earnestly desired) to eat this passover with you before I suffer:

16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it (that which was typified by it) be fulfilled in the kingdom of God (procuring your spiritual redemption by the oblation of the true paschal Lamb).

17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

18 For I say unto you, I will not (any more) drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19 ¶ And he took bread, and gave thanks (over it), and brake it, and gave (it) unto them, saying, This (bread given) is (the memorial of) my body which is given for you: [5] this do (break bread henceforth thus) in remembrance of me (giving my body to be broken for you, 1 Cor. xi. 24).

20 [6] Likewise also (he took) the cup after (the end of the paschal) supper, saying, (The wine contained in) this cup is (the memorial of) the new testament (or covenant ratified) in my blood, which is shed for you (for the remission of your sins, Matt. xxvi. 28).

21 ¶ But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth (or delivers) me (up to the chief priests) is with me on the table.

22 And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was [7] determined (by that God, who, by his prophets hath fore-

---

[4] Ver. 15. Ἐπιθυμίᾳ ἐπεθύμησα, &c. With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer.] I cannot here see, what Grotius and others affirm, that Christ gives here a reason why he would anticipate the paschal supper, our Lord himself giving a reason of these words in the following supper, viz. that he would eat no more of it, till that which was typified by this paschal lamb was fulfilled in the kingdom of heaven; that is, till he, who is styled our paschal lamb, was offered, and, by his death, had procured to men a liberty from that death, by the fear of which they were formerly kept in bondage (Heb. ii. 15), and in perpetual memory of his oblation, and the benefits purchased by it, had instituted a new paschal supper, in which his disciples should eat at his table with him. That our Lord did not antedate the paschal supper, see in the discourse on that subject.

[5] Ver. 19. Τοῦτο ποιεῖτε, Do this in remembrance of me.] That is, say the papists, Sacrifice this, very absurdly; for who ever read in any Greek author, that σῶμα ποιεῖν signified to "sacrifice a body?" nor do the Latins say, facere victimam, but facere victima, understanding sacra. Moreover, it is said also of the cup τοῦτο ποιεῖτε, "Do this (1 Cor. xi. 25), and yet it is not the cup by which the new covenant is sacrificed, but by which it is established; nor do the papists say this cup is sacrificed, but only that it is consecrated by those words.

[6] Ver. 20. Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὸ ποτήριον, μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι, &c. Likewise also the cup, after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament of my blood.] Here is a double metonymy; (1.) that of the cup for the wine contained in it; (2.) that of the sign for the thing signified by it, the wine being the symbol of that blood in which that new covenant was established. And this, saith the evangelist, was said after the paschal supper, to signify that this cup pertained not to the solemnity of the passover.

[7] Ver. 22. Καὶ ὁ μὲν υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου πορεύεται κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, And the Son of man goeth, as it was determined (of him): but (yet) woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed?] Κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, i. e. according to the prophecies concerning the death of Christ, made by counsel and appointment of God. From the woe, denounced upon him that should betray the Messias, we learn, that he was highly criminal in so doing, and therefore could not be under an absolute necessity of doing so: therefore, who, from these words, gather that Judas was, from the beginning of this action to the end, under an absolute necessity of doing as he did, by virtue of the decree of God impelling him to this action, render Judas free from guilt; and to them, saith Grotius, we may say as Irenæus* did to Florinus, maintaining that some souls were not by choice, but, by nature, good; and others were, by nature, evil: these doctrines are not sound, nor consonant to the sentiments of the church; nay, they induce the greatest impiety; these things, neither the ancients which were before us, and which were the disciples of the apostles, delivered, nor durst our heretics assert. Since God is good, saith Plato,* "we must by no means allow any body to say, he is the cause of the evil done by any; but must by all means repel and reject such opinions;" and indeed all the ancients unanimously held that neither prophecies, nor the prescience, nor the decrees of God, laid any necessity upon the will of man; for they who assert this, saith Origen,† "absolve sinners from all guilt, and lay the charge of all the evils which they do upon God, as, by his decree, prescience, or prediction, laying upon them that necessity, which will not suffer them to do otherwise. They also," saith he "take away τὸ ἐφ' ἡμῖν, the freedom of our will, and with that all praise and dispraise, or all difference betwixt things worthy of praise or reprehension. ‡This doctrine also cuts off all that is said of the equity of the divine judgment, and of the threats made against, or the punishments inflicted on, the wicked, and of the promises of a better life, and the reward of them that do well."—"For," saith Clemens of Alexandria,§ "there is no difference betwixt faith and infidelity, nor is either of them worthy of praise or dispraise, if they have προηγουμένην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ τὰ πάντα δυναστοῦ φυσικὴν ἀνάγκην, an antecedent physical necessity from God; nor are praises or reprehensions, rewards or punishments, just,‖ μὴ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐχούσης τὴν ἐξουσίαν τῆς ὁρμῆς καὶ ἀφορμῆς if the soul hath not a freedom of desiring or abstaining from things, but is carried on to them by an unwilling necessity." God, saith Irenæus,¶ "hath always preserved to man his freedom and power over his own actions, ut justè damnentur, qui non obediunt ei, that they may justly be condemned who do not obey him:"—"for man," saith Justin Martyr, "would neither be worthy of praise or reward, οὐκ ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ ἑλόμενος τὸ ἀγαθόν, did he not of himself choose what is good, but was so by nature; nor, being evil, could he be justly punished, if he were not so of himself;†† ἀλλ' οὐδὲν δυνάμενος εἶναι ἕτερον παρ' ὃ ἐγεγόνει, but could be no other than what he was made; for we are crowned or punished διὰ τὸ ἐφ' ἡμῖν, for that which it is in our power to do." And this they especially apply to this fact of Judas. "For," saith Chrysostom, "neither is prescience the cause of wickedness, nor does it induce a necessity of doing it: for Judas was not a traitor because God foresaw it; but he foresaw it, because Judas would be so" (see the note on Acts ii. 23, iv. 28).

---

* Ταῦτα τὰ δόγματα, ἵνα περισμένως εἴπω, οὐκ ἔστιν ὑγιοῦς γνώμης· ταῦτα τὰ δόγματα ἀσύμφωνά ἐστι τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, εἰς τὴν μεγίστην ἀσέβειαν περιβάλλοντα τοὺς πειθομένους αὐτοῖς——ταῦτα τὰ δόγματα οἱ πρὸ ἡμῶν πρεσβύτεροι, οἱ καὶ τοῖς ἀποστόλοις συμβοιτήσαντες, οὐ παρέδωκάν σοι, p. 510.

* Κακῶν δὲ αἴτιον φάναι Θεὸν ἀγαθὸν ὄντα διαμαχητέον παντὶ τρόπῳ, &c. Lib. ii. de Repub. p. 606, A.

† Τοὺς ἁμαρτωλοὺς ἀπολύοντες παντὸς ἐγκλήματος, τῷ Θεῷ προσγράφουσι πάντων τῶν κακῶν——τὴν αἰτίαν. Tom. iii. in Gen. ed. Huet. tom. i. p. 38, C, E.

‡ Τὰ τῆς κεκηρυγμένης τοῦ Θεοῦ κρίσεως, δίκαι καὶ ἀπειλαὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἡμαρτηκότας ὡς κολασθησομένους, τιμαί τε αὖ πρὸς τοὺς τοῖς κρείττοσιν ἑαυτοὺς ἐπιδεδωκότας. Ibid.

§ Strom. lib. ii. p. 363.

‖ Strom. i. p. 311, A, B, C.

¶ Lib. iv. cap. 9 et 29.

 Apol. ii. p. 81, B.

†† Q. et Resp. 9, p. 397.

told my sufferings): but (yet) woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!

23 And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

24 ¶ And there was also a [8] strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest (in Christ's kingdom).

25 And (to remove the causes of that strife) he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them (at pleasure); and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors (or, they who are called benefactors, or princes, exercise authority upon them as their subjects: see Matt. xx. 25, Mark x. 42).

26 But ye shall not be (or do) so (i. e. ye shall not exercise such dominion over others in my kingdom): but he that is greatest among you, let him be (subject) as the younger (are to the elder, 1 Pet. v. 5); and he that is chief, (let him be) as he that doth serve.

27 For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I (the head of this kingdom) am among you as he that serveth (and so shall you be among others).

28 Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations (i. e. my low and afflicted state on earth).

29 And (though I permit you no dominion over others at pleasure, but a ministry only for their good, yet) I appoint unto you a [9] kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me (giving you power in my name to preside over my church, making laws, as I have done in his name, by which they shall be governed);

30 That ye may eat and drink at my table (and so have the honour of grandees) in my kingdom, and (may) sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel (and so may have the highest power in it).

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath [10] desired to have you, that he may sift (i. e. toss and shake) you (by temptations,) as wheat (is tossed and shaken in a sieve):

32 But I have prayed for thee (who will suffer most by his temptations), that thy faith fail not (utterly): and when thou art converted (i. e. returned from thy fall), strengthen thy brethren (subject to the like temptations).

33 And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death.

34 And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day (in the morning), before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

35 And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, (We lacked) nothing.

36 Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it (with him), and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, [11] let him sell his garment, and buy one (i. e. now the times will be so perilous, that I have need to warn you to arm yourselves, as much as may be, by faith and patience, against the danger of them).

37 For I say unto you, that this that is written (of me) must yet be accomplished in (upon) me, (viz.) And he was reckoned among the transgressors (Isa. liii. 12): for the things (written) concerning me (will) have an end (or, accomplishment).

38 And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough (to answer my design, for I intended only, by this monition, to warn you of the distresses that were now approaching, that you may be prepared for them).

39 ¶ And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

40 And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation (i. e. that you be not overcome by it).

41 And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed,

42 Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove [12] this

---

[8] Ver. 24. Ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ φιλονεικία, There was also contention which of them should be accounted the greatest.] i. e. Which of them should be so: for that δοκέω is oftentimes an expletive, see 1 Cor. vii. 40. I see not any reason why interpreters should here say, this account of their contention is misplaced, since in the other evangelists it is mentioned after Christ's admonition concerning his passion, viz. Matt. xx. 25, Mark x. 42. Here Christ saith more than he did there.

[9] Ver. 29. Κἀγὼ διατίθεμαι ὑμῖν, &c. And I appoint you to a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed to me.] Christ speaks not here of the heavenly kingdom common to all the faithful, but of a kingdom proper to his apostles, viz. that as his Father had given him power to make laws, by which all his subjects should be governed, and to which they should be subject, so did he give to his apostles power to deliver to Christians those evangelical laws, which they should all be obliged to obey. Now hence it follows, that the gospels and epistles of the apostles must be owned as the laws of Christ; and whereas the nobility in a kingdom use to be known by two things, the honour and the power imparted to them—their honour in eating at the king's table; their power in having a share in the government under the king—therefore our Saviour represents the honour of his apostles by eating and drinking with him at his table, and their power by judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

[10] Ver. 31, 32. Ὁ Σατανᾶς ἐξῃτήσατο ὑμᾶς, &c. Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not.] Here note,

First, For the consolation of good men, that Satan cannot afflict or tempt them without divine permission (Job. i. 12).

Secondly, That Satan is said σινίασαι, to sift those whom he tempts and afflicts; because afflictions toss and shake them, as wheat is tossed and shaken in a sieve.

Thirdly, That Christ prayed, that the faith of Peter might not fail, not because he was constituted by him the head of the church, but because he was so infirm in faith as to deny his Master thrice; whence he deserved to make shipwreck of his faith by the subtraction of divine grace, and had actually done so, had not his sudden conversion obtained the pardon of his sin.

Note, Lastly, That it is the duty of those, who truly have repented of their faults, to commiserate the fall of others, and be solicitous for their confirmation in the faith.

[11] Ver. 36. Καὶ ὁ μὴ ἔχων, &c. And he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.] This is not a command to buy a sword, or to use one to repel force with force, as is apparent, partly because Christ saith here, "Two swords are enough," ver. 38, which sure they could not be for the repelling those that were to come against them; and partly because he reprehends Peter for using one in this manner, Matt. xxvi. 52. It is therefore only a monition that the times were now to be perilous, that, if things were to be acted by human power, there would be more need of swords and purses than ever: and by saying that two swords were enough, some good interpreters think, he designed they should understand, he spake not this to bid them provide swords, but rather to acquaint them by symbols after the oriental manner, with the approaching danger, that they by faith and patience might be the better armed against it. According to the descant of Theophylact, οὕτω προνοεῖσθε ἑαυτῶν ὡς κινδύνοις καὶ πολέμοις προσκρούσοντες, "So provide for yourselves as persons that may expect to meet with perils and wars."

[12] Ver. 42. Εἰ βούλει παρενεγκεῖν τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, Father, if thou be willing to remove this cup from me.] He, by the Jewish phrase of a cup, expresseth his death: so R. Caijah comforts R. Lakis upon the death of his son, by saying, "This is the path which hath been trod since the cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done.

43 And (upon this prayer) there [13] appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him (by letting him know he should be heard in that he feared, Heb. v. 7).

44 And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were [14] great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

45 And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for (their great) sorrow (had dispirited them, and so rendered them sleepy),

46 And (he) said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

47 ¶ And while he yet spake, behold (there came to apprehend him) a multitude, and (with them) he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, (who) went before them, and he drew near unto Jesus to kiss him (this being the sign given, by which they that were with him should know Jesus).

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? (Art thou guilty of such vile hypocrisy as to make this the signal of thy treachery?)

49 When they which were about him saw what would follow, they (not rightly apprehending the meaning of his words, ver. 46) said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

50 ¶ And one of them (not staying for an answer) smote the (a) servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jesus answered (i. e. spake with relation to that action) and said, [15] Suffer ye (me) thus far (to be at liberty as to restore the man to his ear). And he touched his ear, and healed him.

52 Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and [16] captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53 When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but [17] this is your hour, and the (hour of the) power of darkness (i. e. the devil and you, his instruments, are now permitted to compass my death).

54 ¶ Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they (the servants) had kindled a fire beginning of the creation; many have drunk, and many shall drink, of this cup."

---

[13] Ver. 43. Ὤφθη δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ ἐνισχύων αὐτόν, And there appeared to him an angel from heaven strengthening him.] In St. Jerome's* time these words seem to be wanting both in some Latin and Greek copies, as is insinuated in these words cited in the note: nor hath Ambrose any thing of this angel in his commentary on this chapter. But Epiphanius,† answering an objection of the Arians, contending Christ could not be God, ὅτι ἐπεδέετο καὶ ἰσχύος ἀγγέλων, "because he wanted the help of angels," acknowledged, that this was written in the gospel of St. Luke, making no mention of any variation of the copies; whence it may be conjectured, this variation happened after the conflict with the Arians. But whereas Woltzogenius saith after them, that this anxiety and consternation of our Lord, which required that he should be strengthened by an angel, proves he was not God; he might as well have hence concluded, that he was not "filled with the Spirit above measure;" and before he made this conclusion, he should have confuted Grotius, saying here, "that the divinity dwelling in him had subtracted his influence; whence Christ, being left to his human nature, needed the comfort of an angel:" for otherwise, he who with a word made the whole band of soldiers fall to the earth (John xviii. 6), and healed the ear of Malchus with a touch (ver. 51 of this chapter), sure gave sufficient indications of the divinity residing in him.

[14] Ver. 44. Ἐγένετο δὲ ὁ ἱδρὼς αὐτοῦ ὡσεὶ σρόμβοι αἵματος, And his sweat was as it were great drops of blood.] I own that these words do not certainly signify that the matter of this sweat was blood, but only that it was thick and viscous, like to blood falling from the nose in a small clot, at the end of bleeding; but I see nothing why this might not be so great an agony, as to force blood out of his capillary veins to mix with it, this being no unusual thing: for Aristotle‡ says, ἤδη τινὲς ἱδρωσαν αἱματώδη ἱδρῶτα, "Some have sweat a bloody sweat;" and again,§ ἤδη τισὶν ἱδρῶσαι συνέβη αἱματώδει περιττώματι διὰ κακεξίαν, "Some, through an ill habit of body, have sweat a bloody excrement." And Diodorus Siculus] saith of the Indian serpents, that "if any one be bitten by them, he is tormented with excessive pains, καὶ βύσις ἱδρῶτος αἱματοειδοῦς κατεῖχε, and seized with a bloody sweat."

[15] Ver. 51. Ἐᾶτε ἕως τούτου, Suffer ye thus far.] I do not think that Christ spake this to his disciples, bidding them to permit his enemies to deal thus with him, and not to do any thing for his rescue, but rather that he spake thus to the soldiers, Permit this injury, or assault, offered by one of my apostles, which I will presently repair: for it follows, "and he healed him;" and this he said and did, partly to show, that he who had such a power to heal and throw down his enemies was taken willingly, and not for want of power to preserve himself, and partly to preserve his apostles from their assaults.

[16] Ver. 52. Καὶ στρατηγοὺς τοῦ ἱεροῦ, And captains of the temple.] It is past doubt with me, saith Dr. Lightfoot, that these captains of the temple were not the Roman soldiers placed in the tower of Antonia, of whose conspiring against the life of Christ we read not; but the captains of the several watches of the temple: for, say the Jews, the priests keep watch in three places in the temple, and the Levites in twenty-one; and to every one of these watches there was a chief, they consisting of many, and to them all one, who was eminently ἀρχηγὸς, "the captain," or chief ruler of the temple. But these, say some, could not be Jews, because they kept watch at the passover, and on the sabbath. To this I answer, that the Jews did not think their feasts or sabbaths were profaned by service done in and for the temple on that day (see the note on Matt. xii. 5). That the Jews had then such watches, we learn from those words of Pilate, Matt. xxvii. 65, ἔχετε κουστωδίαν, "Ye have a watch:" that the office of the priests and the Levites was called a warfare, see note on 1 Cor. ix. 7. That these captains were not Romans may probably be argued even from their name, "captains of the temple;" which name is never given by Josephus to the governors of the soldiers in the tower of Antonia; they being by him called φρούραρχοι,* "the governors of the castle;" whereas the officer is still called ὁ στρατηγὸς, "the ruler of the temple," both by the scripture (Acts iv. 1, v. 24. 26), and by Josephus:† and by Dr. Lightfoot he is supposed to be the same with the man of the mount, so often mentioned in the Jewish writers, or the ruler of the mountain of the house. And by what we read of him, both in Josephus and the scripture, he seems to be an officer of the high-priests, appointed to bring them who offended in the temple (as the apostles were thought to have done, by preaching in it Jesus) to the high-priest and Sanhedrin, to be punished.

[17] Ver. 53. Αὕτη ὑμῶν ἐστιν ἡ ὥρα, καὶ ἡ ἐξουσία τοῦ σκότους, This is your hour, and the power of darkness.] i. e. This is the time in which it is permitted to you to exercise your malice, and execute your bloody designs against me, and in

---

* In quibusdam exemplaribus, tam Græcis quàm Latinis, invenitur, scribente Lucâ, Apparuit illi angelus de cœlo confortans eum. Adv. Pelag. lib. ii. f. 103, F.

† Hær. 69, §. 66.

‡ Hist. Animal. lib. iii. cap. 19

§ De Part. An. lib. iii. cap. 15.

] Lib. xvii. p. 560.

* Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 6. p. 624, F.

† Τοὺς δὲ περὶ Ἀνανίαν τὸν ἀρχιερέα καὶ τὸν στρατηγὸν Ἄνανον δήσας εἰς Ῥώμην ἀπέπεμψε. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5.

in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.

56 But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him.

57 And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not.

58 And after a little while another saw him, and said (as he had heard from another maid), Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

59 And about the space of an hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilæan.

60 And Peter said, Man, I know not (any thing of) what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

61 And (then) the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

62 And (upon this) Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

63 ¶ And the men that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him.

64 And when they had blindfolded him, and struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, (Thou, who callest thyself a prophet) prophesy, (or, tell us) who is it that smote thee?

65 And many other things blasphemously spake they against him.

66 ¶ And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led him into their council, saying,

67 Art thou the Christ? tell us (whether it be so or not). And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe (me):

68 And if I also ask you (questions to convince you that I am so, as formerly I have done, xx. 3), ye will not answer me, nor let me go.

69 (Yet this I do assure you, that) Hereafter (ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, from this time of my death) shall the Son of man (soon) sit on the right hand of the power of God.

70 Then said they all, Art thou then the [18] Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that (which) I am.

71 And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard (out) of his own mouth (that he styles himself the Son of God, and so blasphemes, by making himself equal with God, John v. 18, x. 33).

---

which Satan is permitted to rush upon me with his most furious temptations.

[18] Ver. 70. Σὺ οὖν εἶ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ; Art thou then the Son of God?—I am. Ver. 71. What need we any further witnesses? Matt. xxvi. 63. 65. Behold, ye have heard his blasphemy.] They conclude Christ guilty of blasphemy, and, consequently, of death, because he styled himself the Son of God, not in their sense, in which they allowed that of the Psalmist to belong to him, "Thou art my Son," Ps. xxvii. 12, but in his own; i. e. because being a man he made himself God (John x. 33). Whence it is manifest, (1.) that in the sense of the Jews, to own himself the Son of God, and to make himself God, was the same thing. (2.) Hence also it is certain, that the Jews of that age did not think the Messias was to be God, but only a man, who could not challenge to himself divinity, seeing they never conclude him a blasphemer, because he said he was the Christ, but only "because he said he was the Son of God;" by that making himself "equal with God" (John v. 18), and because he declared he shortly was to "sit at the right hand of power" (Matt. xxvi. 64).

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 And the whole multitude of them (of the Sanhedrin) arose, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and [1] forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, (see xx. 35, by) saying that he himself is Christ a King.

3 And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered and said, Thou sayest it (i. e. it is as thou hast said).

4 Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

5 And they were the more fierce (upon these words of Pilate), saying, He stirreth up (all) the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from [2] Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilæan.

7 And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself was also at Jerusalem at that time.

8 ¶ And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

9 Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him (to) nothing.

10 And the chief priests and scribes stood (before Herod) and vehemently accused him.

11 And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe (as a mock king), and sent him again to Pilate.

12 ¶ And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

13 ¶ And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people,

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him:

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIII.

[1] Ver. 2. Καὶ κωλύοντα Καίσαρι φόρους διδόναι, And forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar.] That here they lie against their own conscience, is evident from Matt. xxii. 21. But yet this lie was covered under two specious pretences; first, that he professed himself king of the Jews, which these hypocrites here abuse, to render him odious to the Romans, though they themselves still gave this title to the Messiah: secondly, that he was a Galilean, and so likely to embrace the opinion of Judas Gaulonites, who held it was not lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar (see ver. 6).

[2] Ver. 5. Ἀπὸ Γαλιλαίας, From Galilee.] They seem here to mention Galilee, to incite Pilate against him, as a seditious person (see the note on xiii. 1), and to confirm their suggestion that Christ was so; and also to insinuate, that he was an enemy to Cæsar, forbidding to pay tribute to him: they of Galilee being prone to sedition, and rebellious upon that account, whence some of them were slain by Pilate.

15 No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him (to whose jurisdiction he belongs); and, lo, nothing (as to one) worthy of death is done unto him (by Herod).

16 I will therefore [3] chastise him (as if he were to die), and (then I will) release him (as the fittest person to be released at this feast).

17 (This he said)(For (because) of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast) (of the passover).

18 And (but) they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas:

19 (Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.)

20 Pilate therefore, (being) willing to release Jesus, spake again to them (of releasing him).

21 But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22 And he said unto them the third time, Why (are ye so desirous of his death?) what evil hath he done? (For my part) I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and (then) let him go (as the fittest person to be released at this feast).

23 And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed (at last with Pilate to consent to his crucifixion).

24 And (so) Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required.

25 And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison (viz. Barabbas), whom they had desired; but he delivered (up) Jesus to (be dealt with according to) their will.

26 And as they led him away (bearing his cross, John xix. 17, finding him weak, and not well able to sustain it), they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

27 ¶ And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, (ye have cause to) weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.

29 For, behold, the days are [4] coming, in the which they shall (find cause to) say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.

30 Then shall they begin (to feel such calamities as will cause them) to [5] say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us (from the wrath of God, Rev. vi. 16).

31 For if they do these things in a [6] green tree (i. e. to me a righteous person, Ezek. xx. 47, xxi. 2, 3), what shall be done in the dry? (i. e. to those wicked persons who, like the dry tree, are fit to be burned in the fire.)

32 And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death.

33 And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left (hand of Jesus).

34 ¶ Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do (i. e. who it is they crucify, Acts xiii. 27). And they (viz. the soldiers) parted his raiment, and cast lots (for his upper garment, John xix. 23, 24).

35 And the people stood beholding (him). And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him (now) save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him [7] vinegar, 37 And saying, If thou be (indeed) the king of the Jews, save thyself.

38 And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, (viz.) THIS (man) IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 ¶ And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be (the) Christ, save thyself and us (also).

40 But the other [8] answering rebuked him, saying, Dost thou not fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? (i. e. Dost thou not fear him now that thou art under the sentence of death?)

---

[3] Ver. 16. Παιδεύσας οὖν αὐτὸν ἀπολύσω, I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.] Note, that this chastisement was not in order to his crucifixion, and therefore not that punishment the Romans used to inflict upon malefactors, as a preparative to their crucifixion (of which, see Lipsius de Cruce, lib. ii. cap. 2), for Pilate intended it in order to his release; he therefore seems willing to inflict upon him the punishment so common among the Jews towards those who did perversely against their law and their traditions, that he might exempt him from that death they did so studiously endeavour to expose him to.

[4] Ver. 29. The days will come in which ye shall say, μακάριαι αἱ στεῖραι, Blessed are the barren.] This they undoubtedly had occasion to say at the siege of Jerusalem, and during the war against the Romans, not only on the account of the loss of their children, and the sale of them, who were under seventeen years, for bond-slaves; but chiefly on the account of that famine in Jerusalem, which forced Mary, the daughter of Eleazar, to eat her own sucking child: upon which, saith Josephus,* "there was a vehement desire of the famished persons to die, καὶ μακαρισαὶς τῶν φθασάντων πρὶν ἀνοῖσαι καὶ ἀκοῦσαι τηλικαῦτα, and he counted himself blessed that he could die before he saw or heard such evil things."

[5] Ver. 30. Τότε ἄρξονται λέγειν τοῖς ὄρεσι, πέσετε ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us.] That this is a proverbial expression, used Hos. x. 8, not to be fulfilled by what the Jews should then say, but by what they should afterward suffer, is evident in itself, and confessed by the Jews; for the Targum upon Hosea speaks thus, "He will bring such judgments upon them, which will render their condition as miserable as if the mountains should cover them, and the hills fall upon them:" see the like words, Rev. vi. 15, 16.

[6] Ver. 31. Ὅτι εἰ ἐν τῷ ὑγρῷ ξύλῳ ταῦτα ποιοῦσιν, ἐν τῷ ξηρῷ τί γένηται; For if these things be done in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry?] The good and just man is, by the prophets and Jews, represented under the metaphor of "a green tree," or a tree whose leaves do not wither, Ps. i. 3; of "a green olive-tree," Ps. lii. 10; of "a green fir-tree," Hos. xiv. 8; of "a tree whose leaves are ever green," Jer. xvii. 8. Whereas of the wicked it is said, "His branch shall not be green," Job xv. 32. Thus God by Ezekiel threatens, that he will "cut off every green tree, and every tree in Jerusalem," Ezek. xx. 47, that is, as it is interpreted, xxi. 3, that he will "cut off the righteous and the wicked;" and it is proverbial among the Jews, that "two dry sticks will burn a green one;" i. e. that the company of two wicked men will corrupt, and bring judgments upon a good man.

[7] Ver. 36. Ὄξος προσφέροντες αὐτῷ, The soldiers offered him vinegar.] Dr. Lightfoot shows from Ælius Spartianus, Capitolinus, and Trebellius Pollux, that vinegar was the usual drink of the soldiers: two cups were therefore offered to Christ, one of "wine mixed with myrrh," before he was nailed to the cross (Mark xv. 23), and this was offered by the Jews, as the custom was to do towards men condemned to capital punishments; the other of vinegar by the soldiers, in a scoffing manner, after he was nailed to the cross.

[8] Ver. 40. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ἕτερος, ἐπετίμα αὐτῷ, &c. But the other answering rebuked him, &c.] Almost all interpreters that I have read, here say that this thief began his repentance upon the cross; and hence others are apt to conceive, that though they repent only at the last gasp, they may

---

* De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 21, p. 955, D.

41 And we indeed (are sentenced to die) justly; for we receive (only) the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss (whereby to deserve this sentence).

42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom (to be the judge of all men, and to exercise all power in heaven and earth).

43 And Jesus said unto him, [9] Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise (and there enjoy the greatest blessing which belongeth to the members of my kingdom).

44 And it was about the sixth hour (when he was crucified), and there was a darkness over all the earth (or land of Palestine) until the ninth hour.

45 And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple (which parted the inward temple from the sanctuary) was rent in the midst.

46 ¶ And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

47 Now when the centurion saw what was done, he [10] glorified God, (by) saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

48 And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned (to their houses full of trouble for it).

49 And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things (and were sad).

50 ¶ And, behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just:

51 (The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them (who condemned Jesus);) he was of Arimathæa, a city of the Jews: (and he was one) who also himself waited for the kingdom of God (i. e. expecting it should suddenly appear).

52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.

53 And (by his permission) he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid (taking this care, that our Lord's body might not be cast into the common place assigned for malefactors).

54 And that day was the preparation (i. e. Friday), and the sabbath drew on.

55 And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56 And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments (to embalm him); and rested (from doing this on) the sabbath day according to the commandment.

---

enter into paradise, as he did; but this is but a precarious supposition at the best, and like to prove a broken reed to the Christian that depends upon it. For,

First, It is not certain that this thief only then began to act the penitent; for any thing we know to the contrary, he might have begun that work in prison long before, and so the whole foundation of their hopes, who depend upon this instance, is built upon a great uncertainty.

Obj. And whereas in favour of this opinion it is said, that both the thieves upbraided him, and therefore this thief must do so at the first, and after that repent:

Ans. I answer, That St. Luke here expressly says, that one of them only did it, and that the other did rebuke him for it; and therefore, to reconcile him with St. Matthew, let it be observed, that it is usual in the evangelists to ascribe that to many which agrees only to one of them (see the note on Matt. xxvii. 38): so that is said to be written in the prophets, which is only written in one of them, as will be evident from comparing Mark i. 2, Mal. iii. 1, John vi. 45, Isa. liv. 13, Acts xiii. 40, Hab. i. 5 (see Glassius, lib. iii. tr. 1, de Nomine Can. 27).

Secondly, This probably was the first time that this thief had the knowledge of Christ, or was acquainted with him; he therefore haply had no call, no day of grace, before this hour, and so he brake no vows or covenants, abused no grace vouchsafed, sinned against no such light and strong convictions, resisted no such strivings of the Spirit, as they who live under the gospel dispensation must have often done. What comfort therefore can this example give to them, who, having once been washed in the laver of regeneration, still wallow in the mire; who, having often heard the joyful sound, have slighted all the promises, despised all the threats, been deaf to all the callings of the word, abused all the means of grace, and resisted all the motions of the Spirit; and to whom Christ may say as to the Jews, "How oft would I have gathered you under my wings, and ye would not?"

Thirdly, Observe, that this thief improved his time at last in that extraordinary manner, as perhaps no man ever did before, or will hereafter; he then believed Christ to be the Saviour of the world, when one of his disciples had betrayed, another had denied him, and all of them had forsook him; to be the Son of God, the Lord of life, when he was hanging on the cross, suffering the pangs of death, and seemingly deserted by his Father; he proclaims him the Lord of paradise, when all the Jews condemned him, the gentiles crucified him, as an impostor and a malefactor; he feared God, acknowledged the justice of his punishment, and did with patience submit unto it; he condemned himself, and justified the holy Jesus, declaring that he had "done nothing amiss;" he was solicitous, not for the preservation of his body, but the salvation of his soul; not only for his own, but the salvation of his brother thief, whom he so charitably reprehends, so earnestly requesteth not to proceed in his blasphemous language, so lovingly inviteth to the fear of God: so that the glory which he did to Christ by his faith and piety upon the cross, seems such as the whole series of a pious life in other men can barely parallel.

[9] Ver. 43. Ἀμὴν λέγω σοι, σήμερον μετ' ἐμοῦ ἔσῃ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, Verily I say unto thee, To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise.] That the word σήμερον, "to-day," is not to be connected with "I say," as if the sense were this, "I say to thee to-day;" but with the words following, so as to contain a promise, that the thief should even that day be in paradise, as to his better part, appears from the familiar phrase of the Jews, who say of the just man dying, היום ישב "To-day he shall sit in the bosom of Abraham." Secondly, To be sure Christ spake in that sense in which the thief could, and in which he knew he would, understand him; now he being a Jew, would surely understand him according to the received opinion of his nation concerning paradise; now they plainly held it to be the place into which pious souls, separated from the body, were immediately received. Hence sprung that oracle of the Chaldees,* "Seek paradise, the glorious country of the soul:" hence their kind wish for the dying or dead person, "Let his soul be in paradise." Now hence it follows, (1.) that the souls of men die not with their bodies, but remain in a state of sensibility. Christ here commends his into the hands of God, ver. 46, where the souls of the just are, Wisd. iii. 1, in peace, ver. 3, and in hope, ver. 4. (2.) That the souls of good men after death are in a happy state, a state of joy and felicity; for paradise, saith Philo,† is σύμβολον ψυχῆς ὑπὸ πλήθους καὶ μεγέθους χαρᾶς ἀνακιρτώσης, "The representation of a soul leaping for fullness and greatness of joy;" and it is, according to Tertullian,‡ "a place of divine delights." So that, as the thief could only be there that day by the presence of his soul, so could not his soul be there without the greatest joy and felicity (see Examen Millii bis in locum).

[10] Ver. 47. Ἐδόξασε τὸν Θεὸν, &c. He glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.] For whosoever doth confess that Jesus is the Christ, doth it "to the glory of the Father" (Phil. ii. 11), by giving him the glory of his truth in giving testimony to him.

---

* Aruch. f. 11, 3.

† De Plant. Noæ, p. 171.

‡ Apol. cap. 47.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they (i. e. the women, mentioned xxiii. 35) came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, [1] and certain others (women, came) with them.

2 And (being come) they found the stone rolled away from (the mouth of) the sepulchre.

3 And they entered in (to the outward sepulchre), and (stooping down to look into the inward, they) found not the body of the Lord Jesus (there.)

4 And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among (i. e. the place of) the dead?

6 He (whom ye seek) is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, (that he would rise the third day, Matt. xvii. 23,)

7 Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8 And they remembered his words,

9 And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

10 (And) It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles.

11 And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12 Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering [2] in himself at that which was come to pass.

13 ¶ And, behold, two [3] of them (who belonged to Jesus) went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.

14 And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

15 And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.

16 But their eyes were [4] holden (either miraculously, or by his appearance in another form, Mark xvi. 12) that they should not know him.

17 And he said unto them, [5] What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

18 And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering said unto him, Art thou only [6] a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

19 And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, (The things) concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word (in miracles and doctrine) before God and all the people:

20 And how the chief priests and our rulers de-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1. Καί τινες σὺν αὐταῖς. And some other women of Jerusalem with them.] Viz. "Joanna and Μαρία τοῦ Ἰακώβου, Mary the mother of James," as we read Mark xv. 40. So in Herodotus, Ἄδραστος ὁ Γορδιέω τοῦ Μίδεω, "Adrastus the nephew of Gordias and father of Midas:" in Ælian,* Ὀλυμπίας ἡ Ἀλεξάνδρου, "Olympias the mother of Alexander;" and in Stephanus,† ἡ δὴ πόλις ἀπὸ Δαιδάλου τοῦ Ἰκάρου ἡ ἐν Λυκίᾳ, "A city in Lycia, built by Dædalus, the father of Icarus:" so Acts vii. 16, παρὰ τῶν υἱῶν Ἐμμὼρ τοῦ Συχέμ, "Of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem," for so he was.

[2] Ver. 12. Πρὸς ἑαυτὸν θαυμάζων, Wondering in himself.] So Luke xviii. 11, πρὸς ἑαυτὸν προσηύχετο, "He prayed by himself."

[3] Ver. 13. Δύο ἐξ αὐτῶν, Two of them.] Not of the apostles, for these two returning told what had passed betwixt Christ and them to the eleven apostles, ver. 33. 35, but two of the rest that were with them, ver. 9. 33. The village Emmaus, to which they were going, was not that Emmaus near Tiberias, so called from the hot baths there, for that was in Galilee; but a village in the tribe of Judah, sixty furlongs from Jerusalem, say St. Luke and Josephus;‡ thirty, saith his translator.

[4] Ver. 16. Οἱ δὲ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν ἐκρατοῦντο, But their eyes were held.] That they knew him not might be, not because their eyes were held by a miracle, but because he appeared to them, ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in another form or shape, than that which formerly he had when he conversed with them, Mark xvi. 12, and which when they knew him might be changed; for that their eyes did not perceive him, through grief, as Mr. Le Clerc conjectures, is not very likely, for though they were sad (ver. 17), we read not that they wept; and seeing it elsewhere said, that the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam to see the angel, Numb. xxii. 31, and the Lord opened the eyes of the young man to see chariots of fire, 2 Kings vi. 17, and the Lord opened the eyes of the host of the king of Syria, ver. 20, which was withheld from seeing, or struck blind, ver. 18,—I say, seeing in all these cases doubtless an extraordinary power was exerted, I believe rather according to the plain import of the words, that God withheld the eyes of Hagar from seeing the well, and then opened her eyes, Gen. xxi. 19, by taking away that impediment, and that here Christ some way withheld their eyes from perceiving him, and then removing that impediment, opened their eyes that they knew him.

[5] Ver. 17. Τίνες οἱ λόγοι οὗτοι; What manner of communications are these?] Christ asks, saith Woltzogenius, not because he knew not what they said, for what could he be ignorant of, who knew men's hearts and reins? but to give them an occasion to begin the discourse.

[6] Ver. 18. Σὺ μόνος παροικεῖς ἐν Ἰερουσαλήμ; Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem?] Παροικεῖν here may signify to be extra patriam, one of another country, and, as so, a stranger to the affairs of Judea and Jerusalem. So the seed of Abraham were πάροικοι ἐν γῇ ἀλλοτρίᾳ, "strangers in another country," Acts vii. 6, Moses was πάροικος, "a stranger in the land of Midian," ver. 29, the gentiles, not yet called to be fellow-citizens with the saints, are ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι, "strangers and aliens," Eph. ii. 19, and according to this metaphor, the patriarchs are said παροικεῖν "to sojourn in the land of promise, as in a strange country," Heb. xi. 9, the Christians to live in this world, ὡς παροίκους, "as strangers and pilgrims," as 1 Pet. ii. 11, the time they spend here is the time παροικίας αὐτῶν, "of their sojourning," 1 Pet. i. 17. So also the philosophers* held that heaven was their own country, that they were τῆς πόλεως τῆς ἀνωτάτης πολῖται, "citizens of the city above, and strangers" in this world: hence any one who is ignorant of what is done in any place, is styled a stranger in it: so Antoninus† saith, they are ξένοι κόσμου, "strangers in the world, who knew not what is done in it:" and Cicero‡ speaks thus to Atticus, "I desire thee, ne illuc hospes veniam, that I may not come thither as a stranger;" that is, as ignorant of things done there: and again, "It is

* Var. Hist. lib. xiii. cap. 30. † Voce Δαίδαλα.
‡ Ἀμμαοῦς ἀπέχειν τῶν Ἱερουσολυμῶν σταδίους ἑξήκοντα. De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 27, p. 983.

* Annot. lib. iii. §. 11. † Anton. lib. iv. §. 29.
‡ Ad. Atticum, lib. iv. n. 13, lib. vi. n. 33. See Orat. 38, n. 24.

livered him (up) [7] to be condemned to death (by Pontius Pilate), and (thereupon) have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done (i. e. the very day in which he promised to rise again).

22 Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre (of Jesus);

23 And when they found not his body, they came (to us), saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

24 And certain of them which were with us (viz. Peter and John) went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.

25 Then he said unto them, [8] O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that (which) the prophets have spoken:

26 Ought not Christ (according to the scriptures) to have suffered these things, and (then) to enter into his glory?

27 And beginning at [9] Moses and (going through) all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.

28 And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went: and he (kept on walking, and so) [10] made as though he would have gone further.

29 But they (by their entreaties) [11] constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

30 And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, [12] he took bread, and blessed it, and brake (it), and gave (of it) to them.

31 And their eyes were opened (that which obstructed the discerning of him being removed), and they [13] knew him; and he vanished (or conveyed himself secretly) out of their sight.

32 And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us (i. e. was there not in us a great warmth of affection), while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?

33 And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, 34 (And heard them) [14] saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

35 And they told (them) what things were done in the way (to Emmaus), and how he (the Lord) was known of them in breaking of bread.

36 ¶ And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in something for him that comes to Rome, non esse hospitem et peregrinum, not to be ignorant of what is done there;" and, in his familiar epistles, he writes for instructions in what is done in the commonwealth, ne hospes planè veniam,* "that he might not come thither as a stranger." So here, "Art thou a stranger?" i. e. Art thou ignorant of things well known to all that dwell at Jerusalem?

---

[7] Ver. 20. Εἰς κρίμα θανάτου, To the sentence of death.] So 1 Kings iii. 28. All Israel heard τὸ κρίμα τοῦτο, "this judicial sentence of king Solomon:" τὸ κρίμα τοῦ Μωὰβ, is God's "sentence against Moab," Jer. xlviii. 46, and τὸ κρίμα Βαβυλῶνος, his sentence against Babylon," li. 9. "Let my sentence, τὸ κρίμα μου, come forth from thy presence," saith the psalmist, xvii. 3 (see the note on Rom. iii. 4).

[8] Ver. 25. O fools!] Hence note, that the command, Mat. v. 22, is not always transgressed by this expression; but only then, when it is used without cause, from an undue commotion of spirit, or a mind evilly affected towards our brother.

[9] Ver. 27. Καὶ ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ Μωσέως, &c. And beginning from Moses, he expounded the things concerning himself.] If the things concerning him relate to his sufferings and future glory, mentioned in the preceding verse, we may hence learn, that the Mosaical sacrifices, and especially the solemn anniversary expiation, typified the sufferings of Christ; as also did the oblation of Isaac, and the lifting up of the brazen serpent.

[10] Ver. 28. Προσεποιεῖτο πορρώτερω πορεύεσθαι, He made as if he would have gone farther.] Yea, perhaps he would have done so, had they not been urgent with him to abide with them, ver. 29, or he seemed to them by continuing on his course to be willing so to do: so Mark vi. 48, ἤθελε παρελθεῖν αὐτούς, "He would have passed by them:" not that Christ intended this, but that he seemed to them by continuing his course on the sea to be willing so to do: here therefore was no dissimulation in Christ; but only in the disciples and apostles a mistaken conjecture from his walking. Now, though words ought to be the certain interpreters of our minds, and therefore ought not to be used so as that we may be deceived by them, yet walking hath no certain signification, nor was instituted to be a certain indication of the mind, and so there seems here to be no just occasion for the long discourses, which some hence make of lying, simulation, or dissimulation; here being no instance of that kind.

[11] Ver. 29. Καὶ παρεβιάζοντο αὐτὸν, And they constrained him, saying.] They laid this constraint upon him only by their earnest desire: so Lot, κατεβιάζετο, "constrained" the angels to lodge with him, Gen. xix. 3, so Jacob constrained Esau to accept his presents, Gen. xxxiii. 11, so Judg. xix. 7, 2 Kings ii. 17, v. 16, Matt. xi. 12, Luke xvi. 16, Acts xvi. 5; see note on Gal. ii. 14.

[12] Ver. 30. Λαβὼν τὸν ἄρτον εὐλόγησε, καὶ κλάσας ἐπεδίδου αὐτοῖς, He took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave it to them.] This he did, say the papists, when he celebrated the sacrament, Luke xxii. 19, therefore here also he celebrated the sacrament, though in bread only. This he did, say I, when he fed the four and five thousand; for then ἄρτους εὐλόγησε καὶ κλάσας ἔδωκε, "he blessed the bread, and, breaking it, gave it to his disciples" to give to the multitude (Matt. xiv. 19, Mark vi. 41, viii. 6): and will they say, that then also he celebrated the sacrament before the institution of it? 2. To make of bread a sacrament, it is absolutely necessary, according to them, that Christ should say, "This is my body," which here he said not; if they rejoin, that this is to be understood, I say, with as much reason, that wine, the usual concomitant of a supper, is to be understood; and so here will be no example of communicating in one kind. 3. If Christ here celebrated a sacrament without wine, he also consecrated without wine; which yet the papists say is never to be done.

[13] Ver. 31. Καὶ ἐπέγνωσαν αὐτὸν, And they knew him.] Christ having now removed the obstruction from their eyes; for he would conceal himself from them for a season, that he might more freely discourse with them; when he had done that sufficiently, he would be known to them, for the confirmation of their faith. And, when they had obtained the certain knowledge of him, ἄφαντος ἐγένετο, "he withdrew himself again out of their sight," either by a sudden change of place, or by a cloud cast over his body: whence we can no more argue, that he had only an airy body, than that he had the like when ἐκρύβη, "he hid himself, passing through" the Jews, when they were about to stone him, John viii. 59. Where this word is used of Pelops in Pindar,* it signifies one that was lost, and nowhere to be found, though much sought after by the men his mother sent to look after him; and I grant to Mr. Clerc, that a man may be lost, and not found by them that seek after him, without a miracle, but ἄφαντος ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἐγένετο, "he became invisible to them," or disappeared from them, seems to carry the matter higher, though it may be otherwise.

[14] Ver. 34. Λέγοντας, Saying.] They found the eleven, saying at their very entrance, "The Lord is risen," or those that were with them, ver. 33, thus greeting them before they could speak.

---

* Lib. ii. n. 21.

* Olymp. 1, 72.

the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had [15] seen a spirit (rather than a real body, because they knew not how he came in to them).

38 And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do (such) thoughts arise in your hearts?

39 Behold my (pierced) hands and my feet, (and see) that it is I myself (that speak to you): [16] handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

40 And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet.

41 And while they yet (firmly) believed not for joy, and wondered (how this could be, thinking it was too good to be true, and rather might be a pleasant dream, Ps. cxxvi. 1), he said unto them, Have ye here any meat?

42 And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb.

43 And he took it, and did [17] eat before them (for farther confirmation to them that he had a real body).

44 And he said unto them, These (things) are (done according to) the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written [18] in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me.

45 Then (by the special operation of the Holy Ghost) [19] opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures (concerning his death and resurrection, which as yet they knew not, John xx. 9).

46 And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:

47 And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem (i. e. that all men should be called to repent, Acts xvii. 30, and to believe in him, for the remission of their sins).

48 And ye are (to be) [20] witnesses of these things.

49 ¶ And, behold, (in pursuance of that end) I (shall shortly) send the promise of my Father (i. e. the Holy Ghost promised by him, Joel ii. 28) upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with (this) power from on high. (Isa. xxxii. 15).

50 ¶ And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.

51 And it came to pass, while he blessed them, (that) he was parted from them, and (was) carried up into heaven.

52 And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy:

53 And (they) were [21] continually in the temple (at the hours of prayer), praising and blessing God. Amen.

---

[15] Ver. 37. Ἐδόκουν πνεῦμα θεωρεῖν, They supposed they saw a spirit.] i. e. A phantasm, or a spirit assuming the shape of Christ, and appearing to them in it; viz. because they heard no noise of any doors opening, or of feet moving towards them: and so, though they doubted not of Christ's resurrection (ver. 34), yet might they, for these reasons, doubt of this appearance of him in the midst of them without knocking at the door for entrance, or giving any indications of his coming to them.

[16] Ver. 39. See my hands and feet, ψηλαφήσατέ με, handle me.] Christ proves that he had a true body from the evidence of their sight and touch: and the apostles testify to the truth of the resurrection of his body, as being that which "their eyes had seen, and their hands had handled," 1 John i. 2. Therefore those senses must be sufficient to testify the truth of any body, and much more the truth of the substance of bread remaining after the sacrament, confirmed also by the taste and smell; and the denial of this must render the argument of Christ here, and the testimonies of the apostles, infirm: our Saviour goes on in confirmation of the same thing, by saying, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." Now certain it is, that our Lord's argument must be firm; it therefore must be certain, that evil spirits cannot assume such a body as will not yield unto the touch, but only a mere phantom, or an aerial appearance of a body, which cannot cheat the touch and eyes of men. And, (2.) that good spirits, if they can assume a more solid body, yet cannot put illusions upon men in things belonging to their faith, or be sent by God for such ends.

[17] Ver. 43. He did eat before them.] Not to satisfy any hunger his body could have after his resurrection, but to prove to them that his body was truly raised; and seeing it cannot be supposed, that Christ in this action designed any illusion, it follows from his truly eating, that his body had those parts by which meat is chewed, and a stomach to receive it.

[18] Ver. 44. All things must be fulfilled which are written ἐν τῷ νόμῳ Μωσέως, καὶ προφήταις, καὶ ψαλμοῖς, περὶ ἐμοῦ, in the law of Moses, and the prophets, and the Psalms concerning me.] This division of the books of the Old Testament obtained in our Saviour's time, as Josephus* witnesseth, who saith, "We have only twenty-two divine books; of which five are the books of Moses, thirteen the writings of the prophets, four contain hymns to God and documents of life;" of which hymns the Psalms obtained the first place.

[19] Ver. 45. Τότε διήνοιξεν αὐτῶν τὸν νοῦν, &c. Then he opened their minds, that they might understand the scriptures.] It is one thing to open τὰς γραφὰς, the scriptures themselves, or to explain them; and another, to open their understandings to perceive them; Christ did the latter, probably by giving them now some first-fruits of that Spirit of prophecy, which fell more plentifully on them at the day of Pentecost.

[20] Ver. 48. Ὑμεῖς δέ ἐστε μάρτυρες τούτων, And ye are witnesses of these things.] Christ's resurrection being a matter of fact, must be proved by the testimony of eye-witnesses, who, if they be honest men, and such as suffer the greatest prejudices in fortune, reputation, and life, for this testimony, we have the greater reason to believe it; for their honesty must render them unwilling to testify a falsehood; their interest and prudence would not suffer them, without any necessity laid upon them, to testify a lie; much more to testify the grossest falsehood to their utmost damage, and without any prospect of advantage: but farther, if they confirm this testimony by all kinds of signs, miracles, and wondrous powers, exercised by themselves and others who embraced their testimony; if this was done in all ages on all kinds of persons, for a whole age or ages, this renders it impossible they should thus attest a lie; and therefore Christ bids them stay at Jerusalem till they were thus empowered by virtue from on high to confirm this testimony, Acts i. 8.

Ver. 52. Προσκυνήσαντες αὐτόν.] These words are rejected by Dr. Mills, though they are owned by Jerome, Theophylact, and all the versions, and wanting only in his imaginary old Vulgar.

[21] Ver. 53. Καὶ ἦσαν διαπαντὸς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, And they were continually in the temple.] Some, from these words, conceive they dwelt in some ὑπερῷον, "upper room," or apartment of the temple, belonging to some priest or Levite, such as are mentioned 2 Kings xi. 2, 3, 2 Chron. xxii. 11, 12. But it is not easy to conceive, the Sanhedrim and rulers of the people would have permitted this; and yet, notwithstanding all their hatred of and oppositions to them, we never read they thus dislodged them: they therefore may be said to have continued "always in the temple," as constantly resorting thither at the hours of prayer, as the sacrifices offered morning and evening are styled ὁλοκαυτώματα διαπαντὸς, "continual sacrifices," 1 Chron. xvi. 40, 2 Chron. ii. 4 (see note on 1 Thess. v. 17; and Acts ii. 46).

---

* Δύο δὲ μόνα πρὸς τοῖς εἴκοσι βιβλία,——καὶ τούτων πέντε μέν ἐστι Μωσέως. Προφῆται τὰ κατ' αὐτοὺς συνέγραψαν ἐν τρίσι καὶ δέκα βιβλίοις· αἱ δὲ λοιπαὶ τέσσαρες ὕμνους εἰς τὸν Θεὸν καὶ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ὑποθήκας τοῦ βίου περιέχουσιν. Lib. i. contra Apion. p. 1036, F, G.

THE

GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN,

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

By way of preface to this gospel, I shall endeavour to show,

First, Against some ancient heretics and modern Socinians, that not Cerinthus, but St. John the evangelist, was the true writer of this gospel.

Secondly, At what time he wrote it, and upon what occasion. And,

Thirdly, Why Christ still speaketh in this gospel, as one that did and could know nothing of himself, but acted all things by commission from, and by the authority and power of, God the Father. And,

§. 1. That not Cerinthus, but St. John the evangelist, was the true writer of this gospel may be concluded,

First, From these words, xxi. 23, "Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die;" ver. 24, "This is that disciple which testifies of these things, and wrote these things." For (1.) hence it is evident, that he who wrote that gospel was a disciple of our Lord, which Cerinthus never was. (2.) That he was that disciple whom Jesus loved, and who leaned on his breast at supper, and who said, Lord, who is it that betrayeth thee? ver. 20. Now this is the constant periphrasis of St. John the evangelist throughout this gospel, viz. John xiii. 23, xix. 26, xxi. 7, the whole Christian world having still applied these sayings to St. John; who, being in this gospel still mentioned by this periphrasis, and never by his proper name, as he is in the other evangelists, no better reason can be given of this, than that he was the writer of this gospel, and therefore named not himself. And (3.) it was that disciple of whom the fame went abroad among the brethren that he "should not die;" now this was so constantly applied to St. John the evangelist, that some of the ancients declare he died not at all, but was translated; and others, that he only lay sleeping in his grave (see Dr. Cave in the life of St. John, sect. 8, 9). And it was he alone, of the twelve apostles, who tarried till our Lord came to the destruction of Jerusalem, which he outlived many years (see note on xxi. 22).

Secondly, For this we have the testimony of all the ancient fathers in the church, they all concurring in this as an unquestionable truth, that this gospel was written by St. John, the apostle of our Lord. This follows from what hath been already proved in the general preface; viz. that the four gospels were generally received by the universal church of God, as gospels written by those authors whose names they bear. Add to this, that the gospel of St. John was, saith Eusebius,* always reckoned among τὰς ἀναντιῤῥήτους γραφὰς, "the books not controverted among Christians." And again, that the gospel of John must be received as being "known to all the churches of the world;" and a third time, that this gospel, with his first epistle, was, without controversy, admitted both by the ancients and by those of his time. Irenæus† informs us, that Ἰωάννης ὁ μαθητὴς τοῦ Κυρίου, "John, the disciple of our Lord," who leaned upon his breast, writ his gospel at Ephesus. Clemens‡ of Alexandria saith, Ἰωάννην πνεύματι θεοφορηθέντα, that "St. John, being moved by an afflatus of the Spirit, writ this spiritual gospel." Origen§ reckons the gospel of St. John among the τὰ ἀναντίῤῥητα, "the gospels received without dispute by every church under heaven." And Tertullian, among the apostles which instruct us in the faith, reckons St. Matthew and St. John; among the apostolical men that do it, Mark and Luke (Contr. Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 2).

Thirdly, They who ascribed this gospel to Cerinthus were guilty of a great absurdity, as Epiphanius* observes; for how could those things be wrote by Cerinthus, which do, in direct terms, contradict his doctrine: he asserted, as Tertullian† and others of the ancients testify, the doctrine of the Ebionites, that Christ "was born as other men, and was a mere man without the divinity;" whereas the author of this gospel declares him to be the Word, which, "in the beginning, was with God, and was God;" and that "all things were made by him," and not by a "virtue far separate and distant from God," as, saith Irenæus,‡ Cerinthus held. Cerinthus therefore could not be the author of this gospel, unless we will suppose that he forged a gospel under the name of an apostle, on purpose to condemn his own opinions. And this consideration is strengthened by the tradition of many of the primitive fathers and others, who say expressly, this gospel was written by St. John the disciple of our Lord, to§ "remove that error which Cerinthus had dispersed among men;" or that he writ it "against the doctrine of the Ebionites."

And, Lastly, Whereas some Unitarians have the confidence to conclude this gospel was written by Cerinthus, because he and his followers did use this gospel, it appears from Irenæus‖ and Epiphanius, that they did constantly reject it, and use only the gospel of St. Matthew, and not that entirely.

§. 2. The other objections of the same persons against this gospel are the fruits of ignorance. For whereas,

First, They say, that "the other evangelists agree, that immediately after his baptism our Lord was led into the wilderness to be tempted forty days;" this forger of St. John's gospel saith, the next day after (his baptism) our Saviour speaks with Andrew and Peter, and the day after went to Galilee.

Ans. This is a miserable mistake, of the next day after the Baptist returned his answer to the pharisees inquiring who he was, and why he baptized (John i. 29), for the next day after Christ's baptism. The series of the story lieth thus; Christ, being newly baptized, goes into the wilderness, and leaveth John at Jordan on Judea side. In the time of our Lord's temptation, John, having finished his work at Jordan, goes over into the country beyond Jordan, out of the precincts of Judea, and into the Scythopolitan region, and baptized at Bethabara, at a water distinct from Jordan, and somewhat above it; thither some pharisees are sent to him by commission from the Sanhedrin, to inquire of the authority by which he baptized; the next day after they had made this inquiry Christ cometh in sight, and John bears record to him; and

---

* Τὸ κατ' αὐτὸν εὐαγγέλιον ταῖς ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανὸν διεγνωσμένον ἐκκλησίαις πρῶτον ἀνομολογεῖσθαι—τῶν δὲ Ἰωάννου συγγραμμάτων πρὸς τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, καὶ ἡ προτέρα τῶν ἐπιστολῶν παρά τε τοῖς νῦν καὶ τοῖς ἐπ' ἀρχαίοις ἀναμφίλεκτος ὁμολόγηται. H. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 24, p. 94. 96.

† Lib. iii. cap. 1. ‡ Apud Euseb. H. Eccl. lib. vi. cap. 14.

§ Ibid. lib. vi. cap. 25, p. 226.

* Hær. 51, §. 4.

† Cerinthus Christum hominem tantummodò sine divinitate contendit. Lib. de. Præscript. C. Hieron. in. Catal. Script. verbo Johannes.

‡ Lib. i. cap. 25.

§ Volens, per evangelii annuntiationem, auferre eum, qui à Cerintho inseminatus erat hominibus, errorem. Iren. lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 257. Adversùs Cerinthum aliosque hæreticos, et maximè tunc Ebionitarum dogma, consurgens. Hieron. Catal. Script. Catal. Procem. in Matt.

‖ Χρῶντες γὰρ τῷ κατὰ Ματθαῖον εὐαγγελίῳ ἀπό μέρους, καὶ οὐχὶ ὅλῳ. Epiph. Hær. 30. §. 5. Idem de Ebionæis dicit Irenæus; de Cerinthianis quòd Marcum præferunt, lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 258.

the next day after that he renews his record, saying, in the presence of Andrew, "Behold the Lamb of God;" ver. 29. 37, and he, following Christ, finds out Simon, and bringeth him to Christ.

Obj. 2. "The other three evangelists suppose all along that our Saviour preached but one year, and therefore they reckon but one passover, but (the pretended) St. John counts three years, and three passovers before his death, which seems to be an unaccountable contradiction."

Ans. But here again we find nothing but mistakes; for none of the three evangelists suppose that our Saviour preached but one year. This, at the first, was the opinion of the Valentinians,* and other gnostics, not of the apostles or evangelists, and it is confuted by Irenæus from the passovers of St. John; though some of the fathers fell into the same error, not on account of these evangelists, but of the prophet Isaiah saying he was sent "to preach the acceptable year of the Lord," Isa. lxi. 2, that is, the year of jubilee (see note on Luke iv. 19).

Secondly, Though the other evangelists mention expressly but one passover at the close of Christ's life, of which they speak to show he was the true paschal lamb; yet are they so far from contradicting, that they confirm St. John's account of more passovers during the time of our Lord's preaching; for (1.) St. Matthew, xii. 1, St. Mark, ii. 23, St. Luke, vi. 1, speak of our Lord's disciples plucking ears of corn on the sabbath-day, and rubbing them in their hands, and eating the corn; whereas till after the passover was over, and the first-fruits' sheaf offered, which was always done the second day after the passover, it was not lawful to eat either "parched corn or green ears" (Lev. xxiii. 14): this therefore is a sufficient indication of one passover then past. And this is still clearer from the words of St. Luke, who says they did this ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, "on the first sabbath after the second day of the passover," or after the oblation of the first-fruits' sheaf (see the note there): so that Epiphanius† saith truly, ἵνα δείξῃ ἐντεῦθεν, "hence it is proved," that not St. John only, but St. Luke, and the other evangelists, mention more than one passover. St. John mentions another passover, vi. 4, in these words, "And the feast of the passover was near;" and then immediately follows the mention of the feeding five thousand people with five loaves and two little fishes; now this miracle is recorded Matt. xiv. 15, Mark vi. 35, Luke ix. 12, and so they all suppose our Lord was also preaching at this other passover.

§. 3. As for the second inquiry, at what time, and upon what occasion, this gospel was written by St. John, Irenæus saith only in the general, that "he writ his gospel during his stay at Ephesus in Asia;" but whether he wrote it there before his banishment from thence by Domitian, or after his return from it, or in the isle of Patmos, to which he was exiled, he saith not. The fathers‡ of the fourth and fifth centuries do all agree, that he writ it either in that isle,§ or after his return from it, when he was ninety years old, saith Epiphanius;‖ when he was an hundred, saith Chrysostom:¶ so that according to the account of all these ecclesiastical writers, St. John must have written this gospel a considerable time after the destruction of Jerusalem.

And yet the latter writers and commentators upon this gospel have almost generally gone off from this opinion, asserting that St. John writ this gospel "in the thirty-second or thirty-third year after our Lord's ascension." And,

§. 4. Touching the occasion of the writing of it, St. Jerome* having told us that St. John writ this gospel, rogatus ab Asiæ episcopis adversùs Cerinthum, aliosque hæreticos, "at the desire of the bishops of Asia against Cerinthus, and the heresy of the Ebionites, who held that our Lord was a mere man;" unde et compulsus est divinam ejus nativitatem edicere; "and so he was compelled to speak of his divine original;" in which opinion most of the latter writers agree with him; he adds another cause of writing this gospel, current before and in his time, viz. that* "having perused and approved the other three gospels, he supplied what was wanting in them, especially as to what our Saviour did before John was cast into prison." Accordingly Clemens of Alexandria and Eusebius say, that St. John, observing that the other evangelists had written τὰ σωματικὰ, that is, the series of our Lord's generation, according to the flesh, he writ a spiritual gospel, beginning from the divinity of Christ, this being reserved for him as the most excellent person, by the Holy Ghost (see and compare Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 24, with lib. vi. cap. 14). And that he did this to supply those excellent discourses, and those signal miracles, which the other evangelists had omitted, seems manifest from the whole tenor of this gospel.

§. 5. I proceed to the third inquiry, why Christ still speaketh in this gospel, as one who did and could do nothing of himself, but acted all things by commission from, and by the power and authority of God the Father.

This is a matter of very great importance; for it is observable, that whereas Crellius, in his book de uno Deo Patre, sect. 2, reckons up thirty-six arguments against the divinity of Christ; and Woltzogenius, in his Præparatio ad utilem Lectionem librorum Novi Testamenti, reckoneth up sixty against it; one half of them are taken from some passages of this gospel. And the same author, in his prolegomena to this gospel, saith, that "in no writing of the evangelists or apostles, are there more arguments against the divinity of Christ, than in this gospel." Nor have I yet been so happy as to see one author, who hath given sufficient, clear, and satisfactory answer to the arguments produced from this gospel against that necessary article. I could heartily wish that men so skilled in the controversies betwixt us and the Socinians, as Dr. Edwards, of Jesus College, is, would rather give us a clear answer to the arguments of Crellius de uno Deo Patre, against the divinity of Christ, which is too much wanted, than furnish us with "antidotes against Socinianism," by producing arguments against it, whilst that and such-like books, unanswered, seem to be antidotes against antidotes.

I have endeavoured in my annotations on this gospel to do this, by asserting that our blessed Lord did execute his prophetic office by virtue of that unction of the Holy Ghost, which he received at his baptism; and that all the things, which the Socinians urge from this gospel as arguments against his divine nature, were spoken by him as acting in that office here on earth; not by an immediate efflux, or exertion of his divinity, but by virtue of the Holy Ghost, conferred upon him without measure. And that I may not seem singular in this assertion, I shall strengthen it with the suffrage of some of our most able and judicious divines, and then confirm it from the plain testimonies of scripture, and our Lord's own words. Now of those able and judicious divines, who concur with me in this notion, the first is Dr. Barrow, who, in his sermon on these words, Acts ii. 38, "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," saith thus,‡ "The Holy Spirit not only conducted God our Saviour into his fleshly tabernacle; and with unmeasurable communications of himself did continually reside within him, but also did attend him in the conspicuous performance of innumerable miraculous works of power and goodness, exceeding not only any natural, but all created power: such as were, by mere word and will, healing the sick, and restoring the maimed, ejecting evil spirits, discerning the secret thoughts

---

* Καὶ ὅτι τῷ δωδεκάτῳ μηνὶ ἔπαθεν ἑνιαυτῷ ἑνί, βούλονται αὐτὸν μετὰ τὸ βάπτισμα αὐτοῦ κεκηρυχέναι. Lib. i. cap. 1, p. 16. Uno enim anno volunt eum post baptismum prædicâsse. Lib. ii. cap. 36; vide cap. 39.

† Hær. 51, §. 31.

‡ Μετὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς Πάτμου ἐπάνοδον, Epiph. Hær. 51, §. 12, p. 434. Martyrium Timothei apud Photium, p. 1403. Athanas. Synops. Scrip. Suidas in voce Johannes. Præfatio ad Joannem apud Augustinum.

§ In Patmos, Dorotheus in Vitâ Apostol.

‖ Hær. 51, ubi supra. See note on Heb. iv. 3.

¶ Serm. de Sancto Johanne Ap. tom. iv. p. 505.

 Isidore lib. de Sanctis N. Testamenti. Beda, Euthymius, Theophylact, Nicephorus.

* Verbo Johan.

† Sed et aliam causam hujus scripturæ ferunt quòd cùm legisset Matthæi, Marci, et Lucæ volumina, probaverit quidem textum historiæ, et vera eos dixisse firmaverit, sed unius tantùm anni in quo et passus est, post carcerem Johannis, historiam texuisse——Superioris temporis, antequàm Johannes clauderetur in carcerem, gesta narravit.

‡ Vol. iii. serm. 45, p. 524.

of men, foretelling contingent events, reviving the dead, raising himself from the grave; which works, some expressly, others by parity of reason, are ascribed to the Holy Spirit; 'for if,' saith our Lord, 'I by the Spirit of God cast out devils,' Matt. xii. 28, and God, saith St. Peter, 'anointed him with the Holy Ghost, and with power,' Acts x. 38."

The second is the judicious Dr. Scott,* who speaks thus, "When Christ came down into the world, to transact personally with men, he generally acted by the Holy Spirit: for at his baptism we are told, that 'the Holy Ghost descended on him in a bodily shape,' Luke iii. 22, upon which it is said, that he went away 'full of the Holy Ghost,' Luke iv. 1. After which it is plain that it was by the Holy Ghost in him that he prophesied, and wrought his miracles; for so Isa. lxi. 1, the prophet attributes the whole prophecy of Christ to the Spirit of the Lord, which was upon him; and in Matt. xii. 28, our Saviour himself affirms, that he 'cast out devils by the Spirit of God;' and therefore he saith that the Jews by attributing his miraculous works to the devil, 'blasphemed against the Holy Ghost,' Matt. xii. 31, because it was by the power of the Holy Ghost that he wrought them."

The last is Dr. Lightfoot, who, in his note on Mark xiii. 32, saith, "We must distinguish between the excellences and perfections of Christ, which flowed from the hypostatical union of the two natures, and those which flowed from the donation and anointing of the Holy Spirit. From the hypostatical union of the natures flowed the infinite dignity of his person, his impeccability, his self-sufficiency to observe the law, and to satisfy the divine justice; from the anointing of the Spirit flowed his power of miracles, his foreknowledge of things to come, and all kind of knowledge of evangelic mysteries: those rendered him a fit and perfect redeemer; these a fit and perfect minister of the gospel."

To illustrate and confirm this assertion, let it be considered,

First, That Jesus Christ, while he was on earth, delivered all his doctrines and precepts in his Father's name, or as one sent from him, and authorized to speak what he delivered in his name, according to those words of his forerunner, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God," John iii. 34.

He himself often declares in express words, that he was come in his Father's name, John v. 43, that the Father had sent him, viii. 29, that he came not of himself, but he sent him, ver. 42, that he came not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him, vi. 38—40. 57, that the works which he did bare witness of him, that the Father had sent him, v. 36, 37, that he spake those things which he had heard of, and seen with, his Father, viii. 26. 38, and that the Jews were guilty of a great sin, in that they believed not in him whom the Father had sent, v. 38. Of this doctrine he saith, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me; and if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself," vii. 16, 17 (see the note there): that he spake not from himself, but from him that sent him, ver. 18, that as his Father had taught him, so he spake these things, viii. 28, that he had told the Jews that truth which he had heard of God, ver. 40, that the word which they heard was not his, but the Father that sent him, xiv. 24, that he had not spoken of himself; but the Father which sent him gave him commandment what he should say, and what he should speak: whatsoever he spake therefore, even as the Father said to him, so he spake, xii. 49, 50; and of his disciples he speaks thus to his Father, "I have given to them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou hast sent me," xvii. 8: from all which sayings he concludes, that "he that heareth me, heareth him that sent me: and he that believeth in me, believeth in him that sent me," xii. 44, xiii. 20. Consider,

Secondly, That he preached his doctrines, and delivered his sayings to the world, by virtue of that Spirit with which he was anointed; so we learn plainly from those words of John the Baptist, iii. 24, "He whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure to him" (see the note there). So also he himself declares, in his first sermon preached at Nazareth after his temptations; for having read those words of Isaiah lxi. 1, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives—to preach the acceptable year of the Lord; he began to say to them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears," Luke iv. 18, 19. 21.

Moreover, it seems essential to a prophet to act as he is moved, assisted, and incited by the Holy Ghost; for a prophet, saith Philo,* ἴδιον μὲν οὐδὲν ἀποφθέγγεται, "speaks nothing from himself, but all things from another:" no prophecy being, saith St. Peter, ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, "of the proper motion, or incitation of the prophets," they speaking still as "they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i. 20, 21). And it is essential to a prophet sent from God, and speaking in his Father's name, to speak that only which he had received from him, even as other prophets did, that is, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost; whence by this Spirit our great prophet is said to be sanctified, or consecrated to his office, and sent into the world (x. 36).

Thirdly, The miracles he did on earth in confirmation of this mission and his doctrine, were also done by the assistance of the Holy Ghost. So we learn plainly from these words of the apostle Peter, Acts x. 37, 38, "Ye know how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power (or with the power of the Holy Ghost), who (thereupon) went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil: for God was with him." And Christ himself affirms in one place, that he did "cast out devils by the finger (i. e. the power) of God," Luke xi. 20, and in another that he did cast them out "by the Holy Ghost," Matt. xii. 28, from the collation of which two places we may rationally conclude, that what he elsewhere saith he did by the power of God was done by the Spirit of God abiding in him: thus, when our Lord came from the wilderness, where he was tempted of the devil, he goes through all Galilee, healing every disease and malady in the people: and the fame of him goes out through all Syria: "and they brought to him all sick people, and all that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those that were possessed with devils, and those that were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them," Matt. iv. 23, 24. Now by what power he healed all these diseases and maladies, which raised this fame of him in Galilee, St. Luke insinuates, by saying, "He returned in the power of the Holy Ghost into Galilee, and the fame of him was spread throughout all that region," Luke iv. 14.

Moreover, our Lord declares he did his miracles by the Father abiding in him, bidding the Jews believe his works, that they might know and believe that the Father was in him, and he was in the Father, John x. 37, 38, and ch. xiv. he proves, that he is in the Father, and the Father in him; "because," saith he, "the Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the works," ver. 10, and, ver. 11, he adds, "Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the works' sake." Now these works being done, as hath been proved, by the Holy Ghost, it follows that he must be here said to be in the Father, and the Father in him, because the Spirit of the Father, styled "the power of the Most High," Luke i. 35, resided in him without measure. And having promised to send the Holy Ghost upon them, and said they should do greater works than he had done, because he went to the Father, to send this promise of the Father, ver. 12. 17, he adds, ver. 20, "In that day ye shall know, that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you." Now it is certain, that Christ was in his apostles by his Spirit abiding with them (ver. 16), and that they were in him by the same Spirit uniting them to their head Christ (Eph. ii. 22, iii. 16, 17, iv. 16); and therefore Christ must be here said to be "in the Father" by the Spirit of his Father (see the note there, and see more proofs of this, note on John xvii. 19, 20. 22): so that from these things I conclude, that Jesus Christ being then in the state of humiliation, and emptied of the form of God, acted, in things relating immediately to his prophetic office, not as God, but only as a prophet sent from God; not by the power of his divine nature, but of that Spirit by which he was anointed and sanctified to that office: though being also God, of the same essence derived from the Father, he might do many other things by virtue of his divinity; by that discerning what was in the hearts of all men; by that walking on the sea, and stilling the stormy winds with a word, which he did only in the presence of his disciples; and by that doing many other things of a like nature.

* Vol. ii. par. ii. cap. 7, p. 60, 61.

* Quis Rer. div. Hæres. p. 404.

Moreover, his divinity being part of that doctrine which he was to publish, he might upon occasion assert it, by saying, God was properly his Father, and he was properly his Son; and that he and his Father were one, and that all men were to worship the Son even as they worshipped the Father; with other things of a like nature, relating to his divinity.

The objection of the Socinians against this hypothesis, is fully answered, note on Matt. iii. 16.

POSTSCRIPT.

I COME now to the chief controversy betwixt me and Mr. Whiston, which is concerning the time of Christ's preaching and his baptism.

He saith, prop. 8, that "the beginning of our Saviour's ministry, both as to preaching and miracles, commenced soon after that of John the Baptist, towards the beginning of the famous fifteenth year of Tiberius, long before his own baptism;" i. e. according to his computation, near two years before it.

Now to this proposition I oppose the contradictory assertion of Cyril of Jerusalem,* viz. That "Jesus Christ preached not before his baptism, but then only began to preach when the Holy Ghost bodily descended on him in the shape of a dove:" and this probably he might know from the tradition of the Jewish converts, who might be baptized with him. Agreeable to this assertion is that of Eusebius of Palestine,† that "our Lord beginning to be thirty, came to John's baptism, καταρχὴν τε ποιεῖ τηνικαῦτα τοῦ κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κηρύγματος, and from thence he began to preach the gospel." Epiphanius,‡ who was born in Palestine, of Jewish parents, saith, that "our Lord came to the baptism of St. John the Baptist in the thirtieth year of his incarnation, καὶ ἀπεντεῦθεν, and from that time preached the acceptable year of the Lord." And lastly, Irenæus saith§ that "he neither could have disciples nor could teach before he began to be thirty, magistri ætatem non habens; but then he came to his baptism, triginta quidem annorum existens, cùm veniret ad baptismum, deinde magistri ætatem perfectam habens, being then of perfect age to be a teacher." And hence arose that canon‖ of the church to ordain a presbyter τριάκοντα ὄντα ἐτῶν, "when he was thirty years old." This being by all the fathers (one alone excepted) gathered, and thought certain, from St. Luke, that Christ came to his baptism when he was in his thirtieth year; see the note on Luke iii. 33, where this is proved, and the sense of the words of St. Luke is fully considered: and, saith Langius,¶ "that which hath this full consent of antiquity, and is agreeable to scripture, is certainly the truth."

Secondly, It is the express assertion of St. Luke, that the Baptist began his ministry in the fifteenth year of Tiberius; for then, saith he, "the word of the Lord came to him, and he came forth preaching the baptism of repentance," Luke iii. 2, 3, and it is the general assertion of all antiquity, that Christ was baptized in the same year; it is therefore impossible that either John should so long begin to preach, or that Christ should preach so long as he saith he did, before his baptism. And,

Thirdly, That which Mr. Whiston offers from Eusebius in favour of his opinion is a perfect demonstration against it; for he saith, St. John writ his gospel to supply the defects of the other evangelists, who had omitted τὴν περὶ τῶν ἐν πρώτοις καὶ κατ' ἀρχὴν τοῦ κηρύγματος ὑπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ πεπραγμένων διήγησιν, "the narrative of the things done by Christ at the beginning of his preaching:" now, saith the same Eusebius, in the same book, Christ beginning to be thirty years old, came to John's baptism, καταρχὴν τε ποιεῖ τηνικαῦτα, &c., "and from thence he began to preach the gospel:" moreover, he makes the defect of the other evangelists to consist in this; that "they said nothing of the time of the beginning of Christ's preaching" (which, saith he, was from his baptism by John in Jordan) till after John's imprisonment; whereas the evangelist St. John begins there (i. e. at the beginning of Christ's preaching after his baptism), saying, "This beginning of miracles did Jesus;" and goes on through all the time of John's baptizing afterward, till his imprisonment, as he shows by saying, "John was baptizing in Enon, near Salim, for John was not yet cast into prison," John iii. 23. Who sees not now that Eusebius places all the time of Christ's preaching, mentioned by St. John from the second to the fifth chapter, betwixt Christ's baptism and St. John Baptist's being cast into prison? Now this being the way that Jerome, Eusebius, and all the ancients, who undertook to answer the cavils of Porphyry and others who questioned the truth of the gospels, took to reconcile the evangelists in this matter, demonstrates that they knew and believed nothing of this new revelation that our Saviour preached above two years before his baptism.

To proceed now to the arguments from scripture, concurring with the suffrage of antiquity, I assert,

First, That John the Baptist did see the Holy Spirit descending from heaven, and abiding upon Christ at his baptism. This is evident (1.) from the nature of the thing, it being almost inconceivable that there should be such a glorious opening of the heavens, and such a visible descent of the Holy Ghost in a bodily shape, and that he who stood by all the while, and saw Christ come out of the water, should not discern what was more visible, as being a more glorious appearance.

Secondly, This seems farther evident from the words following, καὶ ἰδοὺ, "And behold a voice from heaven, saying, οὗτος, This is my beloved Son;" for as, in the like case, καὶ ἰδοὺ, "And behold a voice out of the cloud saying, οὗτος, This is my beloved Son, hear him," Matt. xvii. 5, was an advertisement to the disciples present there, that God from heaven gave them this testimony concerning him who was transfigured before them: so the καὶ ἰδοὺ οὗτος, "And behold this," &c., Matt. iii. 17, must be an advertisement to the Baptist, that he on whom the Holy Ghost thus descended was the Son of God. And hence John's testimony is thus related, i. 32—34, "He that sent me to baptize said, On whomsoever thou (baptizing) seest the Spirit descending and abiding on him, he it is that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost; and I saw (this) and (hearing also at the same time the voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son) I testified, that this is the Son of God."

Nor is it any objection to the contrary, that St. Mark, i. 11, and St. Luke, iii. 22, give the words of the voice from heaven thus, "Thou art my beloved Son:" for as neither of them hath the advertisement to behold, which St. Matthew hath, so he that saith to another of Christ in his audience, "This is my beloved Son," saith in effect to him, "Thou art so."

Hence I infer, that the Baptist saw not the Holy Ghost descending upon Christ as a dove before Christ's baptism, and consequently, that his testimony of this matter, John i. 32, must relate to what he had seen at his baptism, since otherwise the Baptist must have seen him twice descending thus upon Christ, in the very same shape, and after the same manner; whereas if, by the first vision, the sign of the Messiah promised to him was so fully given him, that he declares that he had seen it, and by it was enabled to testify Christ was the Son of God, what need was there of a second vision, or to what end was it designed?

Secondly, There is no reason to say that the Holy Ghost descended twice in the same shape, and with the same circumstances, from heaven upon Christ, as this opinion doth suppose, since by the first descent upon him he must be suf-

---

* Οὐ πρὸ τοῦ βαπτίσματος εὐηγγελίσατο——ἀλλὰ τότε ἤρξατο Ἰησοῦς κηρύσσειν, ὅτε κατῆλθεν τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον σωματικῷ εἴδει ὡσεὶ περιστερᾶς. Catech. 3, p. 21, B.

† Hist. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 10. ‡ Hær. 51, n. 24.

§ Lib. ii. cap. 39. ‖ Phot. Nomoc. p. 758.

¶ Quod tanto omnium consensû approbatum, tantâ antiquitate nititur, id, sine omni dubio longè verissimum est, præsertim si non modo à scripturarum veritate nihil planè dissentiat, sed etiam apprimè cum illâ conveniat.

 Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 24.

ficiently sanctified and consecrated to his office. Moreover, he speaks of himself, John iii. 17, as of one sent into the world by the Father, and therefore sanctified already, John x. 36. And the Baptist speaks of him not only as one who testified "what he had seen and heard" (at his baptism), but also as one "sent from God," and filled with his Spirit above measure, and who had all things put into his hands, complaining that "no man received his testimony," though God the Father had "set his seal" upon it, ver. 31. 34. Now is it reasonable to conceive, as Mr. Whiston's opinion forces us to do, that all this should be said by Christ, and by the Baptist, before that baptism in which alone the Father had declared him to be his beloved Son?

Obj. It is objected, that when Christ came to be baptized of John, he not only knew him, but speaks thus to him, "I have need to be baptized of thee and comest thou to me?" Which words imply, not only his knowledge who he was, but also that he baptized as well as himself; yet, after his baptism was over, and not before, "Jesus went up out of the water, and the heavens were opened," &c. Since then the Baptist said, "I knew him not," but had this signal given me whereby to know him, viz. the descent and abode of the Holy Ghost, how comes he to be so well acquainted with him before his baptism, as the words above mentioned do imply?

Ans. 1. To this I answer, first, That as these words, "He it is that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost and with fire," do not intimate that Christ did then, or whilst he was on earth, do this, but only that he was to do it after his resurrection and ascension (John vii. 39, Acts i. 5. 11. 16): so the words of the Baptist, "I have need to be baptized of thee," do not intimate the Baptist's knowledge that Jesus then baptized (partly because it is not true, since Jesus baptized not whilst John was at Jordan, but only when he was baptizing at Enon, John iii. 23, partly because Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples only, John iv. 2, and surely John, who had commission from God to use this baptism, and probably had baptized these disciples, could not need their water-baptism); they therefore only signify, that Christ was the person who should afterward baptize with the Holy Ghost and fire, and that John needed that baptism which would enable him to work miracles, and to speak with unknown tongues.

Ans. 2. Secondly, I answer, that John the Baptist, being filled with the Holy Ghost "from his mother's womb" (Luke i. 15) knew by the afflatus of that Spirit, that he who then came to him was the very person on whom the Holy Ghost should descend so gloriously, and on whom he should abide, that he might impart him to others, such matters being frequently imparted to holy prophets by an immediate intimation of the Holy Ghost. So Simeon being told "he should not die till he had seen the Lord's Christ," Luke ii. 26, had also an afflatus declaring to him that our Lord was the Christ, ver. 27. 32. So Samuel being told by God that on the morrow a man should come to be captain over his people Israel, 1 Sam. ix. 15, when Saul appears, had another afflatus, resembling that of the Baptist's here, viz. "Behold the man of whom I spake to thee," ver. 17. In a word, the Baptist being moved to say, when he baptized with water, that "another was coming after him, who should baptize them with the Holy Ghost," God tells him, that of this he should see an evidence by the visible descent of the Holy Ghost upon that person, who, from his fullness, was to impart of this Spirit to all believers; and, when our Lord came to be baptized, tells him again this was that very person.

Ans. 3. Thirdly, It is not said, "I knew him not," but οὐκ ἤδειν αὐτὸν, "I had not known him," John i. 31. 33, and this is so said as to give us just reason to believe that this was said after our Saviour's baptism; for the words of the Baptist bear properly this sense, And I had not known him, but that I came for this cause to baptize with water, that he might be made manifest to Israel (by me): then follow the words of the evangelist, ver. 32, And John bare record, saying, I saw (Gr. have seen) the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him" (which, as I have proved, the Baptist saw at his baptism), and no man can prove that he saw this before. Then follow again the words of the Baptist, ver. 33, "And I had not known him (viz. by this sign of the Spirit's descending on him), but (that) he who sent me to baptize with water, the same (had) said to me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." Now why is the Baptist so particular in saying twice, that he had not known him, except he who sent him to baptize had given him this sign; if this sign had not been given him at his baptizing of Christ, but long before? Why doth he say, he came to baptize, that he might be made manifest to Israel (viz. by him baptizing); if he were not to be made manifest to him by his baptizing him, but long before? Why, lastly, should a thing of so great moment to the confirmation of Christ's mission, and the Baptist's testimony of him, as this descent of the Holy Ghost upon Christ in this manner, so long before his baptism, be never hinted in the least in any place of the New Testament, the scripture being as silent in it as in the ascent of Christ into heaven after his baptism, which the Socinians have imagined? To make this farther evident, consider that the Baptist only saith in the other evangelists, ἔρχεται, "One cometh," or is coming "after me, who shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost;" but the evangelist St. John begins his testimony thus, "John bare record, and cried, saying, This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me is preferred before me," i. 15. Plainly, according to the observation of the ancients, beginning his testimony after Christ's baptism, whither the other evangelists had only brought him: for when St. Matthew had introduced John saying, "One cometh after me, &c., whose fan is in his hand," &c., he immediately adds τότε, "Then cometh Jesus to be baptized of John in Jordan;" the words then, "This is he of whom I said this," must intimate, that this was spoken after Christ's baptism, and not almost two years before it. Moreover, when the priests and Levites, sent from Jerusalem to Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing, asked him, Why he baptized? the Baptist answers, "I baptize with water; but there standeth (Gr. ἕστηκεν, hath stood) one among you, whom ye know not; he it is, who, coming after me, is preferred before me." Now, First, When had Christ stood in the midst of them, but when he came from Galilee to Jordan, "to be baptized of John," seeing we find not in all the evangelists, that Jesus ever went any whither but to a feast at Jerusalem, when he was twelve years old, till he went "from Nazareth to Galilee, to be baptized of John in Jordan?" Mark i. 9, Matt. iii. 13. Whereas the evangelist St. John represents him first at Cana, then going thence to Capernaum, as to his abode, then to the passover, then to Samaria, which shows that this was done after his baptism. Secondly, These words, "whom ye know not," fairly intimate that the Baptist then knew him, as also doth the demonstrative pronoun οὗτος, "That is he who, coming after me," &c., and the words spoken the next day, "This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me is preferred before me;" which, as I have shown, were then said when Christ came to be baptized of John; whereas the Baptist saith, "I had not known him, had not God given me this sign of the descent of the Holy Ghost upon him," to know he was that very person. And therefore, when Christ came to his baptism, God saith first to John by an afflatus, This is the very person on whom thou shalt see the sign, and then instantly upon his baptism affords it to him: moreover, the evangelist adds, "These things were done at Bethabara, where John was baptizing;" they therefore must be spoken before the Baptist left that place to go to Enon, and therefore after Christ's baptism; for that the Baptist ever returned afterward to Jordan, where Christ was baptized, we read not.

Obj. 1. Christ was then only baptized when all the people had been so, Luke iii. 21.

Ans. To this I answer, that Christ "was baptized of John in Jordan, Mark i. 7, whereas John continued afterward at Enon, "and the people came and were baptized of him there," John iii. 23, so that when St. Luke saith, "When all the people were baptized, Jesus was baptized also," it is evident he meaneth only all the people then present, or baptized at Jordan by him, Matt. iii. 5, 6. And hence the scripture makes an exact distinction betwixt John's baptizing at Jordan and afterward at Enon, and perhaps at other places, by saying, John x. 40, that Christ "went again beyond Jordan, to the place, ὅπου Ἰωάννης ἦν πρῶτον βαπτίζων, where John was first baptizing," making it evident that John still followed his office after he had baptized Christ, baptizing still in other places: false therefore is the inference from St. Luke's mentioning the imprisonment of John before he speaks of Christ's baptism, that our Saviour was baptized at Jordan at the conclusion of John's ministry, that being only the place of John's first baptism; after which he comes to Enon, in the half tribe of Manasseh, within the precincts of Samaria, and baptizeth; and the people come to him there and were baptized; "for John was not yet cast into prison," John iii. 24. St. Luke therefore speaks of John's imprisonment by a long anticipation, that he might put all he had to say of the Baptist together; which perhaps St. John intended to intimate, by saying the Baptist "was not yet cast into prison."

Obj. 2. All the other evangelists, after Christ's baptism, say nothing of him more, but that he was tempted in the wilderness; and then when John was cast into prison, ὑπέστρεψεν, he returned into Galilee, came to Nazareth, and so to Capernaum (Matt. iv. 12, 13, Mark i. 14, Luke iv. 14). Whence it seems to follow, that Christ was baptized but a little before John was cast into prison.

Ans. 1. But how much more natural is the observation of the ancients, that the evangelist St. John observing this, begins where they had ended, viz. at the first appearance of our blessed Lord after his baptism John i. 29, and gave the testimony of him recorded ver. 15, and ver. 26, 27, a little before that.

Ans. 2. All the other evangelists speak only of the Baptist as the forerunner of Christ, or as one sent before him to prepare his way, and to preach the baptism of repentance to the people, πρὸ τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ, "before the entrance of Christ upon his office," Acts xiii. 24, which, all these three evangelists having told us what he did, and by what arguments he enforced his repentance on them, they all immediately subjoin our Lord's coming to Jordan to be baptized of him, and the history of his ensuing baptism: the Baptist being therefore only his forerunner till Christ by his baptism was anointed with the Holy Ghost, and consecrated by this unction to his office, they had no more to say of the Baptist afterward; and so they only speak of what Christ began to say after that John was cast into prison, viz. "The time is fulfilled," &c. Mark i. 14, 15. But the evangelist St. John speaks of the Baptist, not as the forerunner of, but as one sent to be a witness to Christ, i. 6, which he was enabled to be only by what he saw and heard at Christ's baptism, ver. 31. 33, before which time he only spake indefinitely of "one coming after him;" but when he had baptized him, he saith demonstratively, "This is he of whom I spake;" and therefore he had reason to speak of him as long as he bore witness of him, as he afterward amply did at Enon, and of our Lord's performances before John was cast into prison; they being also testimonies of Christ's mission, and that he was the Son of God, and yet entirely omitted by the former evangelists. And whereas,

Thirdly, It is said by the other evangelists, that "Christ returned again into Galilee;" this well agrees with St. John saying, after he had ended his whole history of the Baptist, that Christ, ἀπῆλθε πάλιν, "went again," or receded into Galilee, to avoid the fury of the pharisees, iv. 3. And it seems worthy of observation, that after Christ was baptized he came to Capernaum, saith St. Matthew, that what was spoken by the prophet of the land of Zabulon and Nephthalim, in the borders of which Capernaum lay, might be fulfilled; whereas, if Christ did what St. John mentions, ch. ii. before his baptism, he must have been there before, and probably have taken up his abode there, John ii. 12, and must have done many miracles there before; since, when he came to Nazareth, they spake thus to him, "What things we have heard done in Capernaum, do also in thy own country," Luke iv. 23, and so he needed not to come thither again after his baptism to fulfil that prophecy.

Obj. 3. From the connexion of the words of St. Luke concerning Christ's temptation in the wilderness, iv. 1, with those following, ver. 13, 14, "And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him throughout all the region round about;" it is argued that these two things must be immediately connected.

Ans. 1. This is said, not considering that both St. Matthew and St. Mark assure us that this was only done after that John was cast into prison; which, as I have shown already, was long after our Lord's baptism at Jordan.

Ans. 2. There is nothing more common in St. Luke than such connexion of things done a considerable time after one another: thus, when he had spoken of Christ's circumcision, he immediately speaks of his appearance at the temple when he was forty days old; and yet Mr. Whiston will have his flight into Egypt, and his return thence, to intervene. He introduceth John saying, "I baptize with water, but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose," i. 16, and then follows Christ's baptism, ver. 21, and yet the Baptist tells us, "this was he" of whom he had said this, John i. 17, and so, according to the opinion of Mr. Whiston, he must have said this almost two years before our Saviour's baptism. Again, he speaks of the Baptist's imprisonment by Herod, iii. 20, before Christ's baptism, and yet it is certain that he could not baptize Christ in Jordan after he was in prison. In fine, having spoken of Christ's presentment in the temple after he was forty days old, ii. 39, he adds, ver. 40, "that the child, being filled with wisdom, increased and waxed strong in spirit," which supposes him then of some years capable of wisdom.

Obj. 4. But, saith Mr. Whiston, this opinion that Christ was baptized before he did the things mentioned in the first four chapters of John, puts a chasm of almost two years betwixt Christ's baptism and his return to Galilee after the imprisonment of the Baptist.

Ans. 1. It is somewhat surprising to find that which hath been the observation of all the fathers who have writ upon this subject, from Clemens Alexandrinus* to Theophylact, that is, for a thousand years, turned now into an objection; their observation is this—that the other evangelists have passed over all that our Saviour did after his baptism till John was cast into prison; but the evangelist St. John, passing by all that they had said of Christ to his baptism and temptation, begins where they left off, and having told us of many things done after by Christ, he adds, that "John was not yet cast into prison;" clearly showing that, according to the tradition they had received, the evangelist speaks in these four chapters of what happened between the interval of Christ's baptism and St. John's imprisonment.

Ans. 2. Moreover, seeing there must be a like chasm of time in these evangelists, who speak not one word of Christ's leaving Nazareth till he came thence to be baptized of John; or of his preaching, miracles, or baptizing others before he was himself baptized, what absurdity is it to place this chasm after Christ's baptism, as the ancients do,† who also positively say, that "Christ preached not before he was baptized," rather than, against the suffrage of all antiquity, to place it before his baptism! This will be farther evident from the words of St. Peter rightly interpreted, viz. "Of those who have accompained with us all the time that our Lord Jesus went in and out among us, (ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ βαπτίσματος Ἰωάννου, he beginning so to do from the baptism of John till the day that he was taken up from us,) must one be chosen to be a witness of his resurrection," Acts i. 20, 21. For (1.) I have proved, note on ver. 20, that "to go in and out" is to perform his prophetic office. (2.) Those words, "beginning from the baptism of John," cannot be expounded truly of Christ's entrance on his office at the beginning of John's baptism; for then the Baptist could not be Christ's forerunner, nor could he represent Christ as one that was to come after him; nor could he say he came to baptize that "he might be made manifest to Israel," seeing his preaching and his miracles, by which he manifested his glory (John ii.

* Καίτοιγε μετὰ τὸ βάπτισμα οὐδὲν αὐτὸν ἀναγράφουσιν εἰρηκότα οἱ ἄλλοι εὐαγγελισταί· ἀλλὰ τὰ μεταξὺ σιωπήσαντες, τὰ μετὰ τὴν σύλληψιν Ἰωάννου γενόμενα τοῦ Χριστοῦ θαύματα λέγουσιν. Hom. xvii. in Joh. tom. ii. p. 624. Ὁ δὲ Ἰωάννης τούτοις μάλιστα ἐνδιατρίβει, &c. Ibid. p. 621. Vide Clem. Alex. apud Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 24. Sophron. Præfat. in Joh. Hieron. voce Johannes. August. Præfat. in Johan. et de Consensû Evangelist. lib. ii. cap. 18.

† Μετὰ τὸ βάπτισμα, φησὶ ὁ Ἰωάννης, τεθέαμαι τὸ Πνεῦμα καταβαῖνον, &c. Chrysost. hom. xvii. p. 601. Πρὸ γὰρ τοῦ βαπτίσματος οὔτε σημεῖα ἐποίησεν, οὔτε ἐγνωρίζετο. Theoph. in Joh. cap. 1, 31.

11, iii. 2), according to the opinion of Mr. Whiston, must be done long before his baptism; and much less could St. Paul say so emphatically, that John was sent προκηρύττειν πρὸ προσώπου τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ, "to preach first the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel before the entrance" of Christ upon his ministry (Acts xiii. 24): but, as Grotius truly saith, they are to be understood of the time, ex quo Jesus fuit à Johanne baptizatus, "from Christ's being baptized by John;" for it is reasonable to conceive St. Peter speaks of his baptism, of whose ascension he speaks in the same place, since otherwise the terminus à quo, the baptism, and the terminus ad quem, his ascension, will not respect the same person, it being, doubtless, Christ's ascension that is spoken of. In a word, if Christ preached two years before his baptism, he preached a year and a half before his forerunner; for it was only in the fifteenth of Tiberius, that "the word of the Lord coming to the Baptist, he went out and preached the baptism of repentance" (Luke iii. 2, 3). Now in this very fifteenth of Tiberius the baptism of Christ is placed by all the ancients, saying, that he was baptized, duobus Geminis consulibus, which fixeth his baptism to that very year. And hence Mr. Whiston's inference, that St. John's preaching and Christ's must begin in the same year, is confirmed by all antiquity declaring that Christ was baptized, and afterward began to preach, in the same fifteenth year of Tiberius; and the epocha of the Baptist's preaching ought to be made the beginning of the gospel; because, as St. Luke truly saith, John did εὐαγγελίζεσθαι τὸν λαὸν, "preach the gospel to the people, he preaching that men should believe on him that should come after him, that is, on Jesus Christ" (Acts xix. 4). He not only baptized with the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, but pointed to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world" (John i. 29). Now this faith, and this remission of sins through the blood of Christ, are the two great doctrines of the gospel.

And whereas, to avoid the testimony of St. Luke, who, when he had spoken of Christ's baptism after the people were baptized, and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon him in the shape of a dove, and of the voice from heaven, saying, "Thou art my beloved Son," which in St. Matthew and St. Mark are expressly said to follow Christ's baptism, immediately adds, "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age;" Mr. Whiston saith, "This relates, not to the time of his baptism, but of his ministry long before his baptism:" in this, as he contradicts all the ancients, so he makes St. Luke to relate first what happened at Christ's baptism, and, in his own opinion, at the end of the Baptist's ministry; and then, in the immediate ensuing words, to speak of what was done almost two years before; than which nothing can be more improbable. (2.) They who refer the word ἀρξόμενος to the beginning of Christ's ministry or preaching, as some chronologers and others do, still refer it to his ministry after his baptism; so that Mr. Whiston is still left alone with his new notion of Christ's ministry long before his baptism, and his groundless distinction betwixt Christ's private and his public ministry, for which there is neither foundation nor colour in scripture or antiquity. And, (3.) whereas Mr. Whiston will not allow the word ἀρχόμενος to refer to Christ's years, but will rather have it to refer to κηρῦξαι, or some such word, i. e. to a word not used, i. e. to a matter not so much as hinted by him, as I have in my note justified the Greek from the censure of the critics, and strengthened our version with the concurrence of all the Greek fathers who accord with it, and thence infer that Christ was beginning his thirtieth year at his baptism; so it may be confirmed by the concurrence of Jerome,* and of all the ancient versions, with the sense of our translation.

Lastly, Whereas he cites, for confirmation of his opinion, the words of the Jews, saying, Luke xxiii. 5, "He stirreth up the people, teaching through all Judea, beginning from Galilee to this place;" and those of St. Peter, Acts x. 37, "The word which ye know was published through all Judea, beginning from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached:"

Ans. 1. I answer, that these words agree exactly with our hypothesis, who say, that after Christ's temptation he returns to John, and receives his testimony that he was the very person of whom he had before indefinitely spoken, yea, that he was "the Son of God," John i. 34, which he had heard only at his baptism, and that he was "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," of all which things the other evangelists had given no account; then he goes into Galilee, manifesting his glory there; from thence to Jerusalem, then to Judea, where he baptizeth by his disciples, as John did, into the faith of the Messiah, whose kingdom was shortly to be set up, and for which they were to prepare themselves by the baptism of repentance, and then again goes back to Galilee (see the note on John iii. 22. 26).

Ans. 2. St. Peter plainly saith, that this word was spoken by Jesus of Nazareth, (1.) when he had been "anointed by the Holy Ghost and power," which after his baptism he was: for then "he returned from Jordan full of the Holy Ghost" (Luke iv. 1), "and into Galilee, ἐν δυνάμει τοῦ Πνεύματος, in the power of the Spirit" (ver. 14), whereas before his baptism nothing of this nature is said of him. (2.) That he is said to begin "from Galilee after the baptism which John preached," i. e. after that baptism was concluded by the imprisonment of the Baptist. Now, though our Lord was baptized above a year before, and by his disciples did baptize after the manner of John; and to the same ends, whilst John himself continued so to do, and no longer; yet it was after the ceasing of the baptism of John that he begins in Galilee to preach the kingdom of God, and declare that it was now coming. Thus St. Mark tells us, that "after John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time (of the coming of the Messiah to erect it) is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel" (Mark i. 14, 15): and in like manner St. Matthew, that "from that time (that the Baptist was cast into prison) Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iv. 17). The time before, recorded by the evangelist St. John, was spent in doing such miracles, and teaching such doctrines, as might prepare them to receive and believe in him, when he began to preach the doctrine of his kingdom, and to set it up. And hence we find, that though Christ had disciples or followers before, yet he had called none before to follow him, or be continually with him, as afterward he did, Matt. iv. 19. 21, Mark i. 17. 20. Here, therefore, seems to be a clear account of this whole matter; Christ cometh from Nazareth to Jordan to be baptized of John, that he might see the sign God had promised, and hear him styled from heaven "the Son of God;" and so by testifying these things might make him "manifest to Israel;" he hereupon declares what he had seen and heard, and so pronounces Christ "the Son of God:" then Christ goes on during the baptism of John at Bethabara, at Enon, and perhaps elsewhere, to work miracles, and to declare that "God had sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world" (but not yet saying that he was that Son), and by his disciples to baptize men as John did, to fit them for, and to prepare them to embrace, the doctrine of his kingdom when it was to be set up. When therefore John was cast into prison, and so his ministry was finished, and gave place to that of Christ's, Christ goes into Galilee, and there begins to preach that doctrine which was to commence at the cessation of John's baptism, and succeed to it: and therefore the first three evangelists, passing by what Christ did after his baptism to fit men for this kingdom, begin what they had farther to say of him when "Christ himself began" to preach the doctrine of that kingdom. And Christ himself saith, with relation to that epocha, "From the days of John the Baptist till now, the kingdom of heaven suffers violence," Matt. xi. 12, and Luke xvi. 16, ἀπὸ τότε, "From the time of John the kingdom of heaven is preached, and all men press into it."

Note also, that whereas in the preface to the gospel of St. John I have said, the passovers during the time of our Saviour's ministry were but four, I find now reason to conceive, with the right reverend bishop of Worcester, Dr. Allix, and Mr. Whiston, that they were five.

* Et ipse Jesus erat incipiens quasi annorum triginta. Hieron. Vulg. Ipse verò Jesus erat quasi filius annorum triginta. Syr. Et Jesus cœperat ingredi in trigesimum annum. Arab. Et erat Jesus circiter triginta annos natus. Pers.

First, From our Saviour's baptism, which by the suffrage of all antiquity was in the fifteenth of Tiberius, which began on the nineteenth of August, and so Christ's first passover must begin in the same fifteenth of Tiberius, and so his last passover, which according to the Greek chronicle of Eusebius was in the nineteenth of Tiberius, and according to Phlegon in the fourth year of the twenty-second Olympiad, must be his fifth passover.

Secondly, Christ was baptized in the fifteenth of Tiberius, *duobus Geminis consulibus, i. e. C. Rubellio Gemino et C. Fusco Gemino Coss. He dying therefore in the nineteenth of Tiberius, must die, Servio Sulpitio Galba et L. Cornelio Sullâ Coss; that is, in the fifth year following. And this I also gather from Dion,† who saith that Tiberius died after twenty-two years, seven months, 7 Kal. April, or the twenty-sixth of March; Cn. Proculo et Pontio Negrino Coss. Now reckon the consuls backward to the nineteenth of Tiberius, and you come to Galba and Sulla.

* Lib. lviii. p. 732. † Euseb. Chron. Tertul. adv. Jud. cap. 8.

CHAPTER I.

1 [1] In the beginning (of the creation) was the Word, and the Word was [2] with God, and the Word was [3] God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God (i. e. that divine person of whom I am to speak, neither began to be when he was born into the world, nor when

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν ὁ Λόγος. In the beginning was the Word.] Here note,

First, That ἐν ἀρχῇ, "in the beginning," cannot here signify in the beginning of the gospel, but, as Grotius saith, it being taken from the word berischeth, Gen. i. 1, translated by the Septuagint, ἐν ἀρχῇ, must signify cùm primùm rerum universitas cœpit creari, "from the beginning of the creation," as appears,

First, From the following words, declaring positively, that all things were made by the Word here mentioned, ver. 3, even "the world" itself, ver. 10, and negatively, that "without him there was not any thing made that was made;" which plainly shows, that the evangelist is here speaking of the creation, rise, or beginning, of all things created. And this interpretation is strengthened by all those other scriptures which speak of a glory this Word had with the Father "before the foundation of the world," and represent him as one "begotten before the whole creation," as being πρὸ πάντων "before all things:" so that they all were both at first created, and still subsisted by him (Col. i. 15—17), and that he "in the beginning framed the heavens and earth," even those heavens and that earth that shall "decay and perish" (Heb. i. 10, 11).

Secondly, The Socinian gloss makes a very plain and flat tautology in the words of the evangelist: for the sense of them, according to it, must be this—that Christ was, when John Baptist preached that he was, or, which is all one, that he was when he was, or when he was preaching his own gospel. Now, how can it be worthy of an inspired apostle to assert, that the Word had a being when he began to preach, or when he was twenty-nine years old, that is, when the Baptist came to make him "manifest to Israel," this being as true of any other man living, as of the Word, even of Judas who betrayed him, and of Pilate who condemned him, and being told as plainly by all the foregoing evangelists!

Thirdly, Can we imagine that the apostle, speaking of Christ as the Word, before he had begun his prophetic office, from which they do ascribe this name to him, and at the least as soon as he was made flesh, should constantly use this phrase, which belonged only to him as executing that office, and when, that office being ended, he assumed his kingly office, should again ascribe this title to him, by saying, "His name is the Word of God" (Rev. xix. 13); and yet in his large account of his prophetic office throughout this whole gospel, he never should be once mentioned by him under that name or title, which then so properly belonged to him? And,

Fourthly, All the philosophers, who speak περὶ τοῦ Λόγου, "of the Word," spake of it as that "principle καθ' ὃν ἀεὶ ὄντα, τὰ γινόμενα ἐγένετο, by whom ever existing all things were made:" this was the doctrine of the Platonists, saith Amelius, as it was also of Zeno, who styles the Λόγος "eternal," and all the other heathens, who speak of this Logos; and of all those Jews, who spake of him in the language of Philo, as πρεσβύτατος, "the most ancient of all beings;" and of all those Targumists who tell us, the Word was made by the Memra Jehovah, "Word of God;" and as the Jerusalem Targum, that it was he who said to the world, "Let it be, and it was:"—I say, all these Jews and heathens could not understand the apostle otherwise than Amelius did, when he said, This barbarian hath placed the Logos ἐν τῇ τῆς ἀρχῆς τάξει καὶ ἀξίᾳ, "in the order and dignity of a principle by whom all things were made."

Secondly, Note also from the same Grotius, that to be "in the beginning," is, in the Hebrew language, put for being from eternity, for sic mos est Hebræis æternitatem populariter exprimere, the being in the beginning, and before the world was, importing a being before time, and therefore from eternity: so Prov. viii. 23, "I was set up from everlasting, or ever the earth was," מראש מקדמי ארץ ἐν ἀρχῇ πρὸ τοῦ τὴν γῆν ποιῆσαι· Micah v. 2, "Whose goings forth are, mekedem, from the beginning, from everlasting." And "God that abideth mekedem," Ps. lv. 19, Hab. i. 12, is ὁ ὑπάρχων πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, "he that is from everlasting:" and so it may here signify, and, being spoken of him who was from eternity, must import.

Was the Word.] The plainest reason why this essential Son of God is styled "the Word," seems to be this; that as our words are the interpretation of our minds to others, so was this Son of God sent to reveal his Father's mind to the world.

[2] And the Word was, πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, with God. And ver. 2, he was in the beginning with God.] Πρὸς Θεόν, i. e. μετὰ Θεοῦ, Theophyl. that is, "Reason was in God," saith Mr. Le Clerc, but he gives no instance were the preposition πρὸς in the New Testament signifies in; whereas there be many instances where it hath the signification of παρὰ and μετὰ, with, as when it is said, Matt. xiii. 56, "His sisters are πρὸς ἡμᾶς, with us;" Matt. xxvi. 18, "I keep the passover πρός σε with thee;" Mark ix. 19, "How long shall I be, πρὸς ὑμᾶς; with you?" and, xiv. 49, "I was always πρὸς ὑμᾶς, with you:" see 1 Cor. ii. 3, xvi. 6, so in this evangelist: Eph. i. 2, πρὸς τὸν πατέρα, "With the Father:" so iii. 21, v. 14. And thus in Ignatius* Christ is mentioned as πρὸς αἰώνων παρὰ πατρὸς ὢν, καὶ ἀφ' ἑνὸς πατρὸς προελθὼν, "being with the Father before the world, and proceeding from him alone."

Nor will this phrase admit of either of the senses imposed on it by the Socinians; v. g. not of that, which saith, he was with God, that is, he was known to God alone: for (1.) this is not absolutely true, he being known, before his prophetic office was begun, to the angels, saying to the shepherds, Luke ii. 11, "To you is born this day a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord;" to the virgin Mary, to whom the angel had revealed, that he was "the Son of the Highest," one that should "sit on the throne of David," and was to be called "Jesus," Luke i. 30. 33, to Zachary, Joseph, Simeon, Anna, and the wise men. (2.) It is a gloss without example of any such import of the phrase, and without any probability; for who would think that, by saying only, "Titius the world and all things in it were made; for he then was, and so was not a creature, but was God, of the same nature with him, though as to personality distinguished from the Father).

* Ep. ad Mag. §. 6, 7.

was with Sempronius," I should mean that he was known to him alone? And (3.) this is as true of antichrist, of hypocrites latent among believers, of a secret thief, or murderer; but can it therefore properly be said, that they are with God? Wherefore this gloss being so plainly absurd, they fly to a second; viz. that Christ, before he entered into his prophetic office, was taken up into heaven, to be instructed in the mind and will of God, as Moses was into the mount, and upon that account it is here said that he was with God. But here lies the great difference betwixt Christ's supposed ascent to heaven, and that of Moses into the mount; that when Moses was called up into the mount, the people had public notice of it; and he took Aaron and his sons, and seventy elders of Israel with him, who saw the glory of God (Exod. xxiv. 10); and all Israel beheld "the glory of God," as a devouring fire on the top of the mount (ver. 17); and after the forty days were over, it is said that Moses came down from the mount, and the children of Israel saw him with his face shining (Exod. xxxiv. 30). Now, if Christ was taken up into heaven as Moses was into the mount, why was it not made public at that time? Why no witnesses? Why no appearance of the glory, to satisfy mankind of the truth of it? And yet we find, that when he was transfigured on the holy mount, he took Peter, and James, and John, with him, which circumstance is carefully mentioned by three evangelists; and Peter, who was one of the witnesses then present, lays great weight upon this being done in the presence of witnesses. "For," saith he, "we have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory.—And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount" (2 Pet. i. 16—18). Now let any one compare this with the account which they give of Christ's ascension into heaven; the transfiguration was intended only for a particular testimony of God's favour before his sufferings; but even in that he took care there should be very credible witnesses of it. And is it then possible to believe there should be such an ascension of Christ into heaven, for no less a purpose than to be instructed in his embassage, and to understand the mind and will of God as to his office; and yet not one of the evangelists give any account of the circumstances of it? They are very particular as to his birth, fasting, baptism, preaching, miracles, sufferings, resurrection, and ascension; but not one word among them all as to the circumstances of this his being taken up into heaven for so great a purpose. Now if it were necessary to be believed, why is it not more plainly revealed? Why not the time and place mentioned in scripture, as well as of his fasting and temptation? Who can imagine it consistent with the sincerity and faithfulness of the writers of the New Testament, to conceal so material a part of Christ's instructions and qualifications, and to wrap it up in such doubtful expressions, that none ever found out this meaning till the days of Socinus? In a word, had either of these senses been intended by the apostle, why speaks he so obscurely, and says not, as the Socinians, that he was taken up into heaven, or was known to God alone, but so as to have given so great occasion to that dangerous error, as they supposed it, of all Christians before Socinus, that Christ had a being before the world, or before any thing that was made, and therefore could not be a creature? For the words following, "All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made," must exclude him from being of the number of things made; and therefore evidence that he was so in the beginning with God, as to be before all created beings.

[3] And the Word was God.] He was so, say the Socinians, by office, not by nature, as being the legate and ambassador of God; but,

First, They have not yet, nor can they show, that any thing is in the scripture absolutely, and in the singular number, called God, for any other reason than that the divine nature was imparted to it. It is said indeed of Moses, "Thou shalt be to Aaron beheloim, in the place of God," τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, saith the Septuagint, "in things pertaining to God," Exod. iv. 16; and vii. 1, God saith, "See I have made thee elohim, a God to Pharaoh," viz. by giving thee authority to speak unto him in my name; but then in neither of these places is he called Jehovah, nor absolutely elohim, but only with respect to Aaron and Pharaoh, to whom he was to speak God's message. Grotius saith, that the same person is styled "Jehovah" in the Old Testament, who, in the New, is styled an "angel;" and that the same person is sometimes called in the Old Testament an "angel," and sometimes "Jehovah;" so also doth Mr. Le Clerc on Gen. xvi. 13, xviii. 1, xx. 1, but without just ground: for the angels being God's retinue, and always present with him when he made his glorious appearances, there is no reason to say the angel was God, because he appeared with him, or sometimes speaks or acts by his appointment, or in his presence; but only that God and his glorious angels appeared at the same time, and that they sometimes spake as from the Shechinah; v. g. Exod. iii. 2, we read that "an angel of the Lord appeared to Moses in the bush," and St. Stephen saith, that "the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses in the bush," Acts vii. 30, but neither of them say, that angel was Jehovah, or that the Lord was not present there himself; but, on the contrary, say expressly, that Moses "heard the voice of the Lord saying to him, I am the God of Abraham;" St. Stephen, Acts vii. 53, and St. Paul, Gal. iii. 19, say, the law was "delivered by the angels;" but hence it doth not follow, that any angel was so employed in the delivery of the law as to take upon him the person of God, or that any creature said, "I am the Lord thy God," &c. And when it is said, that "some have entertained angels unawares," Heb. xiii. 2, I own that Abraham and Lot did so; but hence it doth not follow, that any angel spake as if he were Jehovah, or that Abraham spake to them as such, or owned one of them to be "the Judge of the whole earth." I rather think, with the bishop of Ely, that it may be granted, that the three that appeared to Abraham were created angels; but then they appeared only as the retinue of the Shechinah, or divine majesty, styled "the Lord," ver. 1. 13: for after the same men, who came in, and did eat with Abraham, and rose from the table, were departed (ver. 16. 22), Abraham stands still before the Lord, that is before the divine majesty (ver. 1), and styles him "the Judge of the whole earth." And this agrees well with the opinion of the Jews, who, as they acknowledge that the three men whom Abraham entertained were created angels, so also do they own, that there was then a separate appearance, or divine majesty, which talked with Abraham. And this takes off the observation of Crellius, and others in this place, that the name Jehovah is given to angels: for, according to this interpretation, the name Jehovah is not given to any of the three angels, which were entertained by Abraham, but only to the Shechinah, or divine majesty, which appeared with them, and spake to Abraham, from ver. 10 to 17, and to whom, after the departure of these three, one into heaven, and two to Sodom, Abraham still speaks to the end of that chapter. It was an angel of, or messenger from, the Lord, that spake to Hagar, Gen. xvi. as appears from his saying (not I, but) "Jehovah heard thy affliction;" when therefore we read, ver. 10, that "the angel of the Lord said to her, Multiplying, I will multiply thy seed," it is to be understood thus—he said this to her in the name and words of the Lord, speaking not his own, but the Lord's words; and therefore R. Uziel here saith, "She gave thanks before the Lord, whose Word had spoken to her." Thus Solomon sent to Hiram, saying, either by letters, as Hiram returned his answer "in writing," 2 Chron. ii. 11, or commanding his servants to say in his name, "David my father;" for David was not the father of the messengers, and so they could not say, "My father." So the centurion sent first "by the rulers of the Jews," desiring Christ to heal his servant, and after, by other friends, saith to Christ, "I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof;" i. e. he desires them to say these words as from him, Luke vii. 2. 10, these two are, by Le Clerc, produced as instances of messengers and legates, speaking as if they were the very persons from whom they were sent; whence he and others infer, that an angel sent from God may say, "I am Jehovah, I am the God of Abraham," as Exod. iii., and "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt; thou shalt have no other gods but me:" whereas in truth they are but instances of messengers and friends, speaking in the name of them that sent them, the words which they had bid them say, as from them, and had put into their mouths; and so in like manner the words of the angel speaking to Hagar, and others, what belonged to God alone, most only be the words which God had commanded them to say in his name, and as from him: and this is a sufficient answer to all that is produced by Grotius, Le Clerc, and the Socinians, to prove that angels, representing God, are sometimes styled Jehovah, and speak as if they were the Lord of heaven and earth, or the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Secondly, That "the Word" is here properly styled God, is evident from the context: for (1.) When it is said in the precedent words, "The Word was with God," and when this is repeated in the following verse, the Socinians themselves own that the word God signifies him who truly and properly is so. The apostle then must either understand the same God, as to essence, when he saith, "The Word was God," or leave all Christians liable to a great and dangerous mistake, by reason of the ambiguity of his words. Moreover, the word God, in this chapter, is used eleven times in its proper sense; nor can one instance be produced from the whole New Testament, where, in the singular number, it is used in any other sense: is it then reasonable to conceive it is here used in that improper sense, in which it never is again once used throughout this gospel, or the whole New Testament, rather than in that sense in which it is continually used in all other places?

Obj. Yes, say the Socinians, because it is here said, the same "was in the beginning with God?" whereas God, properly taken, cannot be said to be "with God," that is, with himself.

Ans. But to this I answer, (1.) That nothing formally, and in the same conception, can be said to be with that which is one with itself; but yet that which is essentially the same, but hath this title from an internal relation to another, as, being "God of God," or as having the divine essence communicated to it, may be said to be with him: for (1.) The wisdom of God is identically God, according to the old axiom, Quicquid est in Deo, est ipse Deus, "Whatsoever is in God is God," and yet παρ' αὐτῷ, "With him are wisdom and power," saith Job, xii. 13; "I was, παρ' αὐτῷ, with him," says Wisdom, Prov. viii. 27. 30, "All wisdom is from the Lord, and μετ' αὐτοῦ, with him," Ecclus. i. 1. Thus Philo* observes, that when God saith he made man after the image of God, Gen. i. 27, speaking ὡς περὶ ἑτέρου Θεοῦ, "as of another God, he speaketh of," and πρὸς τὸν δεύτερον Θεὸν, ὃς ἐστιν ἐκείνου Λόγος, "to that second God, who is his Word."

Secondly, The primitive fathers do very plainly and frequently say, that the Word was strictly, and from all eternity, in God the Father: and yet that, before the creation of the world, there was a προβολὴ καὶ ἀπόῤῥοια, "a projection, or efflux of this Word from the Father," which made him Λόγος προφορικὸς καὶ προελθὼν, "a Word emitted, or coming forth from the Father;" but yet, because he came not so forth from him as to be separated from him, but was semper apud Deum et nunquam separatus à Patre, "not separated from the Father,"† they thought it was here said, against the Valentinians, that he was "with the Father." So Justin Martyr saith, he συνὼν, "was with the Father," as being ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς προβληθὲν γέννημα, "a progenies, projected from the Father," Apol. i. p. 44, D. Ap. ii. p. 66, E. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 285, D. 359, A. 284, B. 357, A. So speaks Athenagoras, p. 10, C, D, and Theophilus, p. 100, B, making him from eternity Λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, "an internal Word," and then saying that he was Λόγος ἐξερευξάμενος πρὸ τῶν ὅλων, "a Word emitted before all things:" and Tatian that the Word which was ἐν αὐτῷ προπηδᾷ, p. 145: and Tertullian speaks as of a time, cùm nondum Deus sermonem suum emiserat,—adv. Praxeam, cap. 5, 6. 8, adv. Hermog. cap. 18. 20. 45, and Lact. lib. ii. cap. 8. p. 177, 178, and lib. iv. cap. 6, p. 364—366, see Dr. Bull, sect. 1, 2.

Thirdly, This also is extremely evident from the third verse; whence ariseth this argument, He that made all things is God, in the proper acceptation of the word, Heb. iii. 4, but by the Word here spoken of were "all things made, and without him was not any thing made that was made: he in the beginning laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the works of his hands," Heb. i. 10, 11, "He created all things visible and invisible," Col. i. 16, he therefore must be God in the proper acceptation of the word.

Fourthly, It is very manifest, that the apostle here designs to tell us what the Word was, and where, before he came into the world, and what and where he was when he came into the world, as may appear from comparing his words together, thus,

In the beginning was the Word, ver. 1.	He came to his own, ver. 11.
The Word was with God, ver. 1, 2.	He dwelt with us, ver. 14.
The Word was God, ver. 1.	The Word was made flesh, ver. 14.
He was in the world, ver. 10.

And, Lastly, Whereas these words, expounded according to the Socinian sense, were utterly unintelligible to the Jews, and all the philosophers, who ever made mention of the Logos; according to our sense, which maketh the Word truly God, and a first principle of the creation, they agree perfectly with what they have asserted of the Logos. I say,

First, That they agree fully with the opinion of the Jews, nothing being more evident than that Philo* frequently styles the Λόγος God, and by the Targumist he is very often "God;" as when Jacob saith, in the Chaldee of Onkelos, Gen. xxviii. 21, "The Word of Jehovah shall be my God;" and Lev. xxvi. 12, "My Word shall be to you for God the redeemer." And nothing is more frequent with Onkelos, and all the Targumists, than, for "Jehovah," to put "the Word of Jehovah;" and of this Dr. Allix† gives above a hundred testimonies: from all which observations it is evident, that the evangelist used the language of his nation when he here said, "the Word was God."

Secondly, They accord as fully with the doctrine of the ancient philosophers, who lived before the times of this evangelist. Thus Porphyry‡ saith, that Plato "extended the divine essence into three hypostases," the supreme God called Optimus, μετ' αὐτὸν δὲ καὶ ἑτέρων δημιουργὸν, "and after him a second God, the maker of all things;" and Plato§ himself bids us swear by τὸν τῶν πάντων Θεὸν ἡγεμόνα ——τοῦ τε ἡγεμόνος καὶ αἰτίου πατέρα, "God, who is the governor of all things, and by the Father of him, who is the ruler and the cause." Zeno‖ the stoic, saith, "There be two principles of all things, matter, which is the patient, τὸ δὲ ποιοῦν τὸν ἐν αὐτῷ λόγον Θεὸν, and the efficient, God the Word, which, being eternal, goes through all matter, forming every thing." And hence Amelius,¶ having read these words of our evangelist, cried out, that the barbarian, by saying that this Logos was πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Θεὸν εἶναι, "was with God, and was God, and that all things were made by him," was of the same opinion with Heraclitus and Plato, who made him an eternal principle.

In a word, not only the orthodox but all the heretics did perfectly agree in this import, if Sandius may be credited,

* Apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. vii. cap. 13, p. 303.
† Tertul. adv. Prax. cap. 8.

* Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. iii. cap. 13. Leg. Alleg. lib. ii. p. 76. Idemque dicit de Dei duabus potentiis passim, nempe, earum unam Θεὸν, alteram Κύριον dici, De Somn. p. 357, F. De Vitâ Mosis, p. 517, F. De Victimis Offerent. 661.

† So Onkelos, Exod. vi. Lev. viii. 19, xvii. 20. 46, Numb. xi. 20, xxiii. 11, Deut. i. 30, ii. 7, iv. 24, xxxii. 6. 8, Judgment of the Jewish Church, cap. 12, from p. 181 to 182.

‡ Apud Cyril. cont. Jul. lib. i. p. 34.

§ Eph. vi. p. 1276. ‖ Apud Laert. lib. vii. p. 519.

¶ Apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. xi. cap. 19.

 Enucl. Hist. lib. i. p. 117.

3 [4] All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made (whether it be who saith expressly, that "all heretics agreed with the orthodox and catholics in this, that the Word was God, and was before all ages, and that the world was made by it." And as for the orthodox, scarce is there any Christian writer of bulk, from Justin Martyr to the Nicene council, except Arnobius, who doth not insist upon this text as a plain proof of the divinity of Christ.

[4] Ver. 3. All things were made by him.] The Socinian comment, which restrains "all things" here to all things belonging to the gospel state; and saith, that all things were said to be made by him, because all things were renewed, i. e. all believers were made new creatures by him, is sufficiently refuted by what hath been already proved; viz. that this Word is here said to have been in the beginning, not of the new, but of the old creation, and that he was properly and truly God, and so the maker of all things in heaven and earth; and from the parallel places produced already, that God "made all things by Jesus Christ," Eph. iii. 9, that he "created all things in heaven and in earth, visible and invisible," Col. i. 16, that "by him God made the world," Heb. xiii., that he, "in the beginning, laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens were the work of his hands," ver. 10, 11, and here, ver. 10, that "he was in the world, and the world was made by him," even the world into which he came, which doubtless was the material world, that world which "knew him not:" and therefore could not be renewed by him.

In a word, all the ancient Jews and paraphrasts agree in the common interpretation of the words, viz. that the Word was the maker of the material world, and all things in it: this doctrine is taught very frequently by Philo,* that it was the Logos by which the whole world was made.

The Targumists† say it was this Logos, or Memra, which first said to the world, "Be, and it was, and which shall again cause it to cease to be;" it was the Word which created the world and man in it. And where it is said,‡ "God created the world," it is usual for them to say, he did it bememrah, "by his Word."

This was taught by Aristobulus,§ a Jew, who lived in the time of Ptolomæus Philometor, as a doctrine received from Solomon, and delivered by him, Prov. viii., for he is represented by him there, αὐτῇ Σοφίᾳ καὶ αὐτῷ Θεοῦ Λόγῳ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀναντιῤῥήτως τῆς τοῦ παντὸς συστάσεως, "ascribing the beginning of the frame of the universe to the Wisdom and the Word of God:" so that Eusebius‖ had just cause to say, that the Hebrews, κατὰ τὸν ἄναρχον καὶ ἀγέννητον τοῦ Θεοῦ τῶν ὅλων οὐσίαν, "after the essence of the God of all things, which was without beginning, and unbegotten, introduced a second essence and divine power, ἀρχὴν τῶν γενετῶν ἁπάντων, which was the principle of all things that were made, Λόγον καὶ Σοφίαν, καὶ θείαν Δύναμιν αὐτὴν παραγορεύοντες, calling him the Word, and Wisdom, and a divine Power. And that on this account the evangelical doctrine of St. John, renewing that of the prophets and his country, ταῦτη διασαῤῥεῖ, illustrates it by saying, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; all things were made by it," &c.

As for the heathen philosophers, they did so plainly agree in that of Plato, that the Logos was the αἰτία, "cause," and that of Zeno, that he was τὸ ποιοῦν, "the efficient" of the world, that the primitive fathers pleaded this in favour of the Christian doctrine, that even the Logos was in their common language δημιουργὸς, "the maker of the world." "Many philosophers affirm," saith Origen,¶ "that there is one God who created the world; in this they agree with the

* Δι' οὗ σύμπας ὁ κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο. Alleg. lib. i. p. 44, B. De Plant. Noæ, p. 221, D. De Confus. Ling. p. 329, C. De Prof. 464, B. De Monarch. p. 823, B.

† Targum Jon. in Exod. vi. 3, iii. 14, 15. Targum Onkelos in Deut. xxxii. 27. Targum Hieros. in Gen. i. 1. 27.

‡ Targum Jonath. in Isa. xliv. 24, xlv. 12, xlviii. 13. Targum Hieros. et creavit מימרא דיי hominem, in Gen. i. 1. 27.

§ Apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. vii. cap. 12, p. 320.

‖ Ibid. lib. vii. cap. 12, p. 320, 321.

¶ Hom. 14, in Gen. f. 23, A.

law of Moses, aliquanti etiam hoc addiderunt, quòd cuncta, per Verbum facta, et fecerit, et regerit; and many add, that God both made and governed all things that were made by his Word; in hôc non solùm legi sed et evangelio consona sentiunt, in this they speak things consonant not only to the law but to the gospel."—"We teach that the Word was the artificer of all things," saith Tertullian;* hunc etiam Zeno determinat factitatorem, "and Zeno saith the same." Cyril, in his book against Julian, gathers up from the heathens many things of a like nature, to show ὅτι τὸν ἐξ αὐτοῦ κατὰ φῦσιν γενηθέντα υἱὸν τὸν δημιουργὸν αὐτοῦ Λόγον ἐγνώκασι καὶ αὐτοὶ, lib. i. p. 33, C, "that they owned the Son essentially begotten of the Good, that is the Father, to be the Word that made all things." And Eusebius† introduceth Plotinus and Numenius speaking of a second god, whom they called Νοῦς, as the artificer of all things; and Plato himself speaking of that world, ὃν ἔταξε ὁ Λόγος ὁ πάντων θειότατος, "which the most divine Word framed."

As for the Christian fathers, they from the beginning have asserted this as the rule of truth delivered to them from the apostles, and confounding the heretics,‡ Quia unus est Deus, qui fecit omnia per verbum suum, Verbum nempe quod extra eum non sit, sed in sinû Patris existit, "That there is one God, who made the world by that Word who is not separated from him, but is in the bosom of the Father" (see this largely proved note on Heb. i. 2). Though therefore it will still admit of a dispute whether the latter Jews did by their Memra mean the promised Messiah, yet two things cannot reasonably be doubted; viz. (1.) that the Jews did by their Memra understand a divine person, who was from the beginning, and who gave beginning to all things, and that the heathens had the same notion of their Logos. (2.) That the Christians did understand these words of the evangelist in the sense now received by the orthodox, viz. as asserting the pre-existence and divinity of the Word made flesh, and the production of all things by him. Whence,

Thirdly, It must follow, that the evangelist, who was a "Hebrew of the Hebrews," must here have spoken of the Logos in the received sense of Jews and heathens: for this being apparently the notion, which then obtained both among the Jews and gentiles, if they had been mistaken in it, it is incredible that the inspired evangelist, coming after them, should so conspire with them as to express the very same thing in the same style, and almost in the same words; much more that he should do it without giving the least caution to this purpose, that he meant quite another thing by it than what the Platonists and some Jews meant by such words as these. For instance, that by "the Word" he meant, not, as they did, "one that was for ever," but a person that never was in being till some few years since; and that by "all things that were made," he meant not, with them, "all the whole universe," but only all persons that were reformed by the faith of Christ; and that by "the beginning," he meant not "the beginning of the world," as they did, but only the beginning of the gospel, as the Socinians interpret these expressions. If, I say, the Word, of which St. John speaks, did not pre-exist from all eternity, and was not properly the creator of the world, certainly he would have prevented their concluding the contrary from his words by some very plain caution; because he used that style, and those words, under which the contrary had been taught by men of great reputation; and so he would not have affirmed the same things with them concerning the Word, without any farther interpretation or addition, saying this only, that Jesus was that Word. Again, all Christians, whether orthodox or heretical, being either Jews or gentiles, it is still more incredible that both should have conspired in this import of these words, had it not been received from the tradition both of the converts among Jews and gentiles, that this was really the import of them, or with such confidence have appealed to the prophetic and country theology of the Jews, and the concurring sentiments in heaven or in earth, visible or invisible, Col. i. 16).

* Apol. cap. 21. † Præp. Evang. lib. xi. cap. 16—19.

‡ Iren. lib. i. cap. 3, lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 237. 258, 259.

4 In him was [5] life (eternal, he having first brought it to light, 2 Tim. i. 10, promised it to those that believe in him, John vi. 40, purchased it by his death, Rom. v. 21, and being the giver of it); and the (doctrine of that) life (which he taught) was the light of men (directing them to it.)

5 And the light (now) shineth in darkness (the ignorant and vicious world); and the darkness comprehended it not (i. e. the lovers of darkness will not receive it, John iii. 19).

6 ¶ There was a man sent from God, whose name was John (the Baptist).

7 The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light (this Word was to exhibit), that [6] all men through (that testimony of) him might believe (in him).

8 He (himself) was not that Light (which came into the world), but (he) was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9 That (person to whom he bare witness) was the true Light, which [7] lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

10 He was in the world (from the beginning, preserving the men of it by his providence, and not leaving them without a witness of his care of them, Acts xiv. 17), and the world was made by him, (so that all men might by his works discern his eternal power and Godhead, Rom. i. 20,) and (yet) the world (through that wisdom he had given them) [8] knew him not (1 Cor. i. 21).

11 He came unto his [9] own (people the Jews, to whom he was sent), and (but) his own received him not.

12 But as many as received him, to them gave he (the) [10] power (or privilege) to become the sons of God, (by adoption to life eternal: see note on Rom. viii. 23,) even to them that believe on his name:

13 Which were born (to that inheritance), [11] not of blood (by circumcision rendering them the seed of

---

of the heathens, with the words of this evangelist, if they had understood them in a sense so much different from that, both of the Jews and heathens, as that is which the Socinians now put upon them: if then the universal church from the beginning did not err in their interpretation of these words, it is certain we, who continue to receive that sense and import of them, which they have from the beginning handed down unto us, must still retain the true and genuine signification of them.

Οὐδὲ ἓν ὃ γέγονεν.] Vide Examen Millii in locum.

[5] Ver. 4. In him was life.] That this is to be understood not of life natural, but of that life eternal which he revealed to the world, 2 Tim. i. 19, to which he taught the way, xiv. 6, which he promised to believers, x. 28, which he purchased for them, vi. 51. 53, 54, which he is appointed to give them, xvii. 2, and to which he will raise them up, x. 29, as having ζωὴν ἐν ἑαυτῷ, "life in himself," ver. 26, may be argued, (1.) from the like expression, 1 John v. 11, "This is the promise that God hath given us, eternal life, and that life is in his Son;" whence he is styled "the true God and eternal life," ver. 20, "the resurrection and the life," xi. 25, "the way, the truth, and the life," xiv. 6. (2.) From these words, ver. 7, "John came to bear witness of this Light, that all men might believe on him," viz. "to eternal life," 1 Tim. i. 16, for so John witnesseth, iii. 15. 36. And this answers the only objection against this interpretation, that the evangelist speaks not of the Word incarnate till ver. 14, and that in that respect alone was he the teacher of eternal life, for John bare witness of him when he was the Word incarnate: it was thus also he came "into the world," and "came to his own," and made believers "the sons of God," ver. 11—13, and yet all these things are spoken of him before it is said, ver. 14, "the Word was made flesh."

And hence it follows that this life must be the light of men, by giving them the knowledge of this life, and of the way leading to it, and in which they that walk are said to walk in the light, 1 John i. 7, to abide in the light, ii. 10, and to be the children of the light, according to those words of Christ, "Whilst ye have the light, walk in the light, and believe in the light, that ye may be the children of the light," xii. 35, 36; "I am the light of the world, he that follows me shall have the light of life," viii. 12, ix. 5, xii. 46, and then the words following, "The light shineth in darkness," must respect the heathen world, styled darkness, Eph. v. 8 (see the note on Rom. xiii. 12), and the blind Jews; and the darkness must be said not to comprehend it, because the vicious part of the world would not own, but hated the light, and "loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil," and so they were reproved by it, iii. 19—21.

[6] Ver. 7. He came to testify of this Light, that all men might believe on him.] See here the design of the Baptist's testimony, not only that some few elect, but that all men might believe in Christ.

[7] Ver. 9. Which enlightens πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐρχόμενον, every man that comes into the world.] The words in the Greek are ambiguous, and may be rendered, "which coming into the world enlightens every man," or as our translation doth; but that which countenanceth our translation, is the Hebrew way of speaking, that a man born, is "a man coming into the world;" see Dr. Lightfoot here, and the words of Christ, saying, "For this cause was I born, and came into the world" (xviii. 37): and though Justin Martyr, Apol. p. 84, and Origen, Hom. 14, in Jer. p. 138, interpret this of the light of nature, saying, with some of the Greek scholiasts, ποιεῖ νοεῖν τὸ θεῖον πάντα ἄνθρωπον, "He makes every man to know what he ought to do," since all men are by nature λογικοί, all have the knowledge of good and evil, all may, from the consideration of the creatures, advance to the knowledge of a Creator; yet it is certain, that Christ coming into the world could not thus enlighten any man, they being all thus enlightened from the beginning of the world: in this sense none of them could be called darkness, or said not to know, receive, or apprehend this light (ver. 4. 10), or when light is come into the world, to "love darkness more than light" (iii. 19): now hence it follows, that Christ must be said, ver. 4, to be "the light of men," by giving them the knowledge of eternal life, and of the way that leadeth to it, and in which they that walk are said to "walk in the light," 1 John i. 7, and to "abide in the light," ii. 10; and to be "the children of the light," John xii. 35, 36. To this Light the Baptist beareth witness, "that all men might believe in him," ver. 7, "to eternal life," iii. 36; and therefore with this light he, coming into the world, enlighteneth every man, viz. who doth receive him (ver. 12).

[8] Ver. 10. And the world was made by him, and (yet the men of) the world knew him not.] i. e. Owned him not either as their Maker or their Redeemer. Of this see note on ver. 3, and on Heb. i. 2.

[9] Ver. 11. He came to his own.] i. e. To the Jewish nation to whom he was promised, and to whom only he was personally sent; he being therefore styled "a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made to the fathers" (Rom. xv. 8), from whom according to the flesh he came (Rom. ix. 5), "and they received him not;" i. e. they generally would not own him as their Messiah and their Saviour.

[10] Ver. 12. But to as many as received him he gave ἐξουσίαν, power to become the sons of God.] Ἐξουσία here signifies the right, privilege, dignity, and prerogative: as when the apostle warns the strong Christians to see to it, lest their ἐξουσία, privilege or freedom from the Jewish rites, be used as a stumbling-block to the weak (1 Cor. viii. 9), and saith, (ix. 5, 6), "Have we not ἐξουσία, a right or privilege (by virtue of our office) to eat and drink?" This privilege to be the sons of God is, as Grotius well notes, a right to the inheritance of the saints: for "if children," saith the apostle, "then are we heirs, heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ" (Rom. viii. 17); a right to a blessed resurrection, the sons of God being "the sons of the resurrection" (Luke xx. 36); a right to abide always in our Father's house (John viii. 35), a right to a state of immortality and incorruption, the υἱοθεσία, "sonship," including "the redemption of the body" from corruption (Rom. viii. 23).

[11] Ver. 13. Being born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man.] i. e. We are born sons, not by virtue of the blood of circumcision, by which the Jews entered into covenant with God, and became his sons; not Abraham), nor of the will of the flesh (by carnal descent from their parents), nor of the will of man (by his adoption), but of (the will of) God (receiving us for his children through faith in Christ Jesus; for we are all the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. iii. 26, and by his Spirit sanctifying us: for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God, Rom. viii. 14).

14 And (that mortal men might attain this life) the Word was made [12] flesh, and [13] dwelt among us, (and we beheld his [14] glory, the glory [15] as of the only begotten of the Father,) (i. e. his power in doing such by reason of that carnal generation, which makes us sons by nature of such parents, who by their fleshy lustings are incited to beget us; not by the will of man, adopting another for his son and heir for want of natural issue; but this sonship ariseth from the good pleasure of God receiving us for his sons, through faith in Christ Jesus. Some, observing that the apostle saith, "God made all men ἐξ ἑνὸς αἵματος, of one blood" (Acts xvii. 26), refer this birth of blood to our natural production, and our being born of the will of the flesh, to the birth of the Jews by that circumcision which was made in the flesh; I prefer the former exposition, because, though circumcision be made in the flesh, it proceeds not ἐκ θελήματος σαρκὸς, from the will, desire, or lusting of the flesh, but was done by them in obedience to the command of God.

[12] Ver. 14. And the Word was made flesh, &c.] i. e. Man, according to the usual import of that phrase; as when it is said, Gen. vi. 12, "All flesh had corrupted their ways;" Ps. lvi. 4, "I will not fear what flesh," that is, what man, "can do to me," ver. 12; Isa. xl. 5, "All flesh shall see the salvation of God;" and, ver. 6, "All flesh is grass, and all the glory of man is as the flower of the field;" Jer. xvii. 5, "Cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm" (see Matt. iv. 22, Rom. iii. 20). And this phrase is used, say the fathers,* not only to express the great affection of the Word to man, declared in taking on him even his vilest part, but also to show he came to heal, and to recover from corruption that flesh which, by the sin of Adam, was made obnoxious to death and corruption; and that this flesh, which so inseparably was united to the divine nature, must be capable of salvation, which the Gnostics and Valentinians denied, and the Ebionites, who denied the union of the two natures.

The Socinian gloss upon these words is this, that Christ was born mortal, subject to infirmities, sufferings, and death, and so frail and infirm as flesh. But,

First, It is to be noted from Novatian,† that this is the gloss of those heretics, who denied the distinction betwixt the Son of God and man, lest they should be obliged from these words to own his divine nature; that is, this is a Socinian gloss. Note,

Secondly, That this gloss is contrary to the true import of the words: for it makes the words frail, infirm, and mortal, and all these epithets, to predicate of, and belong to, the Word. Now who can reasonably imagine that he, who had before told us, "the Word was God," and so immortal, the maker of the world, and all things in it, and so infinite in power, ver. 3. 10, should instantly add, "the Word was flesh," i. e. frail, infirm, obnoxious to death, and yet should immediately say again to this infirm, frail being, "We have seen his glory, as the glory of the only-begotten Son of God, and of his fullness have we all received grace for grace;" that he was one "in the bosom of the Father, and who alone had seen the Father" (ver. 14. 16. 18). Mr. Clerc interprets the words thus, "And that reason was made conspicuous by the man in whom it was," telling us that flesh signifies a conspicuous nature, in opposition to that which is spiritual, as 1 Tim. iii. 16, but there it is not said as here, "The Word was made flesh," but Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ, "God was manifested in," or made conspicuous in, "the flesh," that is, in the human nature, which is the import of the word flesh in all the other places where it is attributed to Christ, by way of distinction from his higher original; as when the apostle saith, the Son of God was of the seed of Abraham, κατὰ σάρκα "according to the flesh," Rom. ix. 5, and that the Son, whom he had proved to be God, Heb. i., was partaker also of flesh and blood, Heb. ii. 14, for it is manifest that in all these places, flesh signifies not the frailty or infirmity of flesh according to the Socinian gloss, nor flesh as conspicuous and visible, according to Mr. Clerc's gloss; but the human nature absolutely taken, according to the exposition of all the ancient fathers; of Ignatius,* who saith, "he was a physician, σαρκικὸς καὶ πνευματικὸς, fleshly and spiritual, ἐν σαρκὶ γενόμενος Θεὸς, being God in flesh;" of Justin Martyr,† who saith, he was the Son and the Λόγος, ὃς σαρκοποιηθεὶς ἄνθρωπος γέγονεν, "who, by his incarnation, was made man;" of Irenæus,‡ saying, Deus igitur homo factus est, "God therefore was made man;" of Tertullian,§ saying, that Christus verè hominem indutus, Deus perseveravit, "Christ, putting on the manhood, remained God;" and of Origen,‖ who saith that Christ, being in the form of God, and a Son of the Jerusalem which is above, "left his father and mother for his church, διὰ αὐτὴν γὰρ γέγονε καὶ αὐτὸς σὰρξ, being made flesh for her; it being said, The Word was made flesh."

Moreover, the wisdom of God was made conspicuous in the gospel, that being the wisdom of God (1 Cor. ii. 7), and by the church, by which "the manifold wisdom of God" was made known, even to the angels (Eph. iii. 10). If then that were the reason why the Word is said to be made flesh, the gospel and the church might also be said to be made flesh. It follows, [13] Καὶ ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, And dwelt, or pitched his tabernacle, among us.] This word ἐσκήνωσεν hath such an apparent affinity, both in sound and sense, with the Hebrew shacan, used in the Old Testament, when mention is made of God's dwelling by the Shechinah, or his glorious presence, in the tabernacle, and often shining forth there, and thence ἐν δόξῃ, "in glory" (see the notes on Rom. i. 23, Phil. ii. 6); that we have reason to believe this phrase relates to the divine nature, or to the fullness of the Deity dwelling in Christ's human nature. This Shechinah, say the Jews, was wanting in the second temple, and this defect was now repaired by the habitation of the divine nature in the temple of Christ's body, so as never to be separated from it, according to the prediction of the prophet Haggai (ii. 7), "The Desire of all nations shall come, and I will fill this house with glory." As then God said, with respect to the times of the Messiah, "I come to thee, ושכנתי, καὶ κατασκηνώσω, and will dwell in the midst of thee;" that is, saith the Chaldee paraphrast, ואשרי שכנתי, "and will put my Shechinah," or divine Majesty, "among you," Zech. ii. 10, 11; so did he fulfil his promise, by sending this Emmanuel, or Word made flesh, among them.

[14] And we have seen τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, his glory.] viz. Appearing in, and shining from, the tabernacle of Christ's body, as the glory of the Lord did from the tabernacle of old: for the glory of God, in the Old Testament, doth not barely

* Nam quemadmodùm initio plasmationis nostræ in Adam, ea quæ fuit in Deo inspiratio vitæ, unita plasmati, animavit hominem et animal rationale ostendit; sic in fine, Verbum Patris et Spiritus Dei, adunitus antiquæ substantiæ plasmationis Adam, viventem et perfectum effecit hominem capientem perfectum Patrem; ut quemadmodùm in animali omnes mortui sumus, sic in spirituali omnes vivificemur. Iren. lib. v. cap. 1. Vani igitur, qui, à Valentino, sunt hoc dogmatizantes, uti excludunt salutem carnis, et reprobent plasmationem Dei: vani autem et Ebionæi, unitionem Dei et hominis per fidem non recipientes in animam suam. Ibid.

† Sed erroris istius hæreticorum inde, ut opinor, orta est materia, quia inter filium hominis nihil arbitrantur interesse, ne, factâ distinctione, et homo et Deus Jesus Christus facilè comprobetur. Eundem enim atque ipsum i. e. hominem filium hominis, etiam filium Dei volunt videri, ut homo et caro et fragilis illa substantia eadem atque ipse filius Dei esse directur, ex quo dum distinctio filii hominis et filii Dei nulla secernitur, sed ipse filius hominis filius Dei vindicatur, homo tantummodò Christus, idem atque filius Dei asseratur, per quod nituntur excludere "Verbum caro factum est." Cap. 19.

* Ep. ad Eph. §. 7.
† Apol. ii. p. 74.
‡ Lib. v. cap. 23.
§ De Carne Christi, cap. 3.
‖ In Matt. tom. i. ed. Huet. p. 357.

works as none but he could do,) [16] full of grace (to procure that pardon of sin and justification which the law could not give) and truth (in opposition to those types and shadows of spiritual blessings and good things to come, of which Christ exhibited the substance and the truth, Heb. x. 1, giving us an inheritance in the celestial Canaan, and an entrance into the true tabernacle, ver. 19).

15 ¶ John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, (when I said) He that cometh after me is (to be) preferred [17] before me: for he was before me (both as to being and as to dignity).

16 And of his fulness have all we received, and (even) [18] grace for (according to the measure of the) grace (of Christ, Eph. iv. 7).

17 For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth (the grace of that gospel which is styled truth, see note on Rom. ii. 1) came by Jesus Christ.

18 (Nor is there any other means of coming to the knowledge of the truth, and the enjoyment of that grace; for) [19] No man hath seen God at any time (i. e. as to his essence, or that glorious light in which he dwells, and to which no mortal eye can approach, 1 Tim. vi. 16, or as to any full discovery or perfect idea of his signify the miracles wrought by God, but either the glory appearing in the cloud of glory, as Exod. xvi. 7. 10, by which God testified his presence with them, and Numb. xiv. 22, and ver. 21, or it signifies the miracles done by the glory of God then appearing; and in 2 Pet. i. 16, it signifies the bright cloud, or glory of God, appearing at our Lord's transfiguration; not any miracle then wrought, of which we have no mention in the history of Christ's transfiguration: here therefore the apostle saith, "We have seen the glory," or the divinity of the Word, conspicuous in the miracles wrought by him.

---

[15] Δόξαν ὡς μονογενοῦς παρὰ Πατρός, The glory as of the only-begotten Son of the Father.] Where note,

First, That the particle ὡς, as, is not here a note of similitude, ἀλλὰ βεβαιώσεως, "but of confirmation:" that this Son truly was the only-begotten of the Father, as Chrysostom here notes: so Neh. vii. 2, αὐτὸς ὡς ἀνὴρ ἀληθὴς, "He was a faithful man;" Matt. xiv. 5, "All men held John ὡς προφήτην, to be a prophet indeed" (see the notes on Rom. ix. 32). This particle ὡς sometimes answers to the Hebrew אך טוב, אך, ὡς ἀγαθὸς, "Truly God is loving to Israel:" sometimes to כ, when it is used, say the Jewish writers, לאמת הדבר, to confirm a thing (see Noldius de Particulis, p. 376, 2 Cor. ii. 17, 1 Pet. i. 19, iv. 11). This glory is said to be the glory μονογενοῦς, "of the only-begotten of the Father," i. e. of him who was begotten of him after that singular and extraordinary manner that this title can agree to him alone, as being, saith Lucian, "the unchangeable image, οὐσίας, καὶ βουλῆς, καὶ δυνάμεως, καὶ δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, of the essence, counsel, power, and glory of God." Hence is the Logos styled by Philo, ὁ πρωτόγονος υἱὸς, De Agricult. p. 152, B, ὁ πρωτόγονος καὶ γεννητὸς, De Confus. Ling, p. 228, A, "the begotten and first-born Son of God, ὁ ἐνδιάθετος υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, the internal Son of God" (Lib. de Nom. Mut. p. 824). By Plato* he is styled ὁ ἔγγονος τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ καὶ ὁμοιώτατος ἑαυτῷ, "one begotten of the Good, and most like to him." And Porphyry says, that, according to the doctrine of Plato, "of the Good," i. e. of the Father, "was begotten, in a manner unknown to men, an Understanding, in which are all things" (Apud Cyril. contr. Jul. lib. viii.).

[16] Πλήρης χάριτος καὶ ἀληθείας, Full of grace and truth.] Here πλήρης, the nominative case, is put for the genitive: so Eph. iii. 17, that "Christ may dwell" ἐν καρδίαις ὑμῶν, ver. 18, ἐρριζωμένος, for ἐρριζωμένων, and Rev. i. 5, ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ὁ μάρτυρ, for τοῦ μάρτυρος. See examples of the like construction in profane authors produced by Grotius on Mark vi. 40, and by Schmidius. Note also, that it appeareth from the following words, ver. 17, "For the law came by Moses; but grace and truth by Jesus Christ," that this Son of God is said to be full of grace and truth, in opposition to the law of Moses. Now grace, in the New Testament, implies two things; both which are declared to be wanting in the law of Moses: (1.) the mercy of God in the free pardon of our sins, or our justification or freedom from the guilt of sin, from which "we could not be justified by the law of Moses," Acts xiii. 38, 39, "For by the law," saith the apostle, "can no man be justified," Gal. iii. 11, Rom. iii. 20, "We being justified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Jesus," ver. 24, whence it is said to them who seek to be justified by the law of Moses, that they are "fallen from grace," Gal. v. 4. (2.) Grace doth in scripture signify the gifts of the Holy Spirit freely conferred upon believers, who is therefore styled ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι, "the gift by grace," Rom. v. 15, and his gifts are represented by the word grace, as when St. Peter saith, "As every man hath received the gift, so let him minister, as good stewards, ποικίλης χάριτος Θεοῦ, of the manifold grace of God," 1 Pet. iv. 10, 11, and St. Paul, Rom. xii. 6, "Having therefore gifts differing κατὰ τὴν χάριν, according to the grace given us, whether prophecy," &c. (see Gal. ii. 8, 9, Eph. iii. 7). Now this promise of the Spirit was the consequence of faith in Christ (Gal. iii. 14): hence are these two assigned as the great differences betwixt the law and the gospel; that the first was the "administration of the letter" only, the other "of the Spirit:" the first the "administration of condemnation," the second "of justification," 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8. Again, the law is said to have been only "a shadow of things to come," and "an image" of those things of which Christ exhibited the body, truth, and substance, Col. ii. 17, Heb. viii. 5, x. 1 (see the note there): and hence truth is here said to come by Christ; and he is here represented as full of truth.

[17] Ver. 15. He that cometh after me, is (to be) preferred before me; for he was before me, πρῶτός μου ἦν.] Here the critical note is this, that πρῶτος, first, here signifies, before; so 1 John iv. 19, "He loved us, πρῶτος, before;" Matt. xvii. 20, "Elias shall come πρῶτον, before" Christ; John xix. 39, "Nicodemus, who came πρῶτον, before to Christ by night;" 2 Thess. ii. 3, "There shall come an apostasy, πρῶτον, before Christ's coming;" and, John xv. 18, "They hated me, πρῶτον ὑμῶν, before they hated you."

Secondly, As for the words ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν, I find no instance where they signify, "He was preferred before me:" and therefore rather choose to retain the proper import of the words, and give the sense of the whole thus, "This is he of whom I said, He that cometh after me is before me; and this I said, because he indeed was before me, as being in the beginning with God," ver. 2.

[18] Ver. 16. And of his fullness we have all received, καὶ χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος, even grace for grace.] i. e. Of the fullness of grace in him to procure pardon for us, and of that fullness of the Spirit, which was in him without measure, John iii. 34, Luke iv. 1, according to the measure of the gift of Christ: so Jer. xi. 17, the Lord hath pronounced against thee, κακὰ ἀντὶ κακίας, "evil for the evil of the house of Israel and Judah:" so κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ, "evil for evil" done to us, or according to it, Rom. xii. 17, 1 Thess. v. 15, 1 Pet. iii. 9, so ἀντὶ τούτου, ob hanc rem, ἀνθ' ὧν, "for the sake of which" (see many examples of this kind in Stephanus): so Theoclymenus* saith to Helena, Let us forget what is past, and be reconciled, that so χάρις ἀντὶ χάριτος ἐλθέτω, "we may receive kindness upon kindness;" and one in Theognis† desires rather to die than to suffer, ἀντ' ἀνιῶν ἀνίας, "sorrow upon sorrow:" so that this phrase, "grace for grace," may either signify the abundance and continual influence of divine blessings conferred upon us; or, with relation to the spring and fountain of them, we have received grace, or tokens of the divine favour, agreeably to the grace of God vouchsafed to us in sending his Son, and suitably to the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, mentioned 2 Cor. viii. 9, and frequently in the beginning and the close of St. Paul's epistles, as that from which we derive all spiritual blessings in heavenly things (Eph. i. 2, 3).

[19] Ver. 18. No man hath seen God at any time, οὐδεὶς ἑώ-

---

* De Repub. lib. vi. p. 686, C.

* Euripid. Helen. v. 1254, Priestley's ed. of Euripid. vol. vi. p. 556 attributes); the only begotten Son, which is [20] in the bosom of the Father (i. e. most intimately acquainted with his secrets, and is the image of the invisible God, Col. i. 15), he hath declared him (i. e. his will and attributes to us in the most perfect manner).

† V. 342.

19 ¶ And this is the record of John (concerning Jesus, which he gave to him) when the (Sanhedrin of the) Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou? (i. e. art thou the Christ?)

20 And (then also) he [21] confessed, and denied not (the truth); but confessed (saying of himself), I am not the Christ.

21 And (when he had so said) they asked him, What then (art thou)? Art thou [22] Elias (the Tishbite, whom we expect to anoint him)? And he said, I am not. (When they inquired farther,) Art thou that prophet (raised from the dead whom we expect? Matt. xvi. 14.) And he answered, No.

22 Then said they unto him, Who (then) art thou? (tell us) that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

23 He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias (xl. 3, 4).

24 And they which were sent were of (the sect of) [23] the Pharisees, (and so exact, as they supposed, in all the rites and traditions which ought to be observed).

25 And they asked him (therefore), and said unto him, [24] Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet? (or by what authority dost thou this)?

26 John answered them, saying, [25] I baptize (you) with water (to call you to repentance, as I was sent by God to do, ver. 33): but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not;

27 He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose (i. e. to whom I am unworthy to be a servant).

28 These things were done in [26] Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

29 ¶ The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold (here is) the (true) [27] Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world (by making a full expiation for the guilt of them).

ρακε, Here Grotius thinks, that ἑώρακε, "hath seen," is put for "hath known," as iii. 32, and Eph. iii. 11, giving the sense thus, No man hath known the secret counsels of God at any time, concerning the redemption of mankind, which Christ now declareth to the world; but though this sense of the words be good, yet the phrase in the Old and the New Testament representing God as one, "whom no man can see, and live," as Exod. xxxiii. 20. 23, and "he who dwells in light inaccessible, to which no mortal eye can approach, and whom no man hath seen, or can see," 1 Tim. vi. 19, and the seeing of him in the cloud, the symbol of his glorious presence, being called "the seeing of him face to face," Gen. xxxii. 30, Numb. xiv. 14, and being deemed such a vision as would cause God to take away their lives, Judg. vi. 22, 23, xiii. 22, Isa. vi. 5), I would rather refer this here to the presence of the Word with the Father, mentioned i. 1, and his being with him in heaven in that glory in which he there dwells, and his coming down from thence as from the bosom of the Father, to declare heavenly things to us, which saith he, none can do but the Son of man who is in heaven, iii. 12, 13 (see the note there). For if this being in the bosom of the Father did only signify his friendship and intimate acquaintance with God, it may be ascribed to Abraham, who was "the friend of God," James ii. 23, to Moses, "who talked with him face to face, as a man speaking to his friend," Exod. xxxiii. 11, and to the apostles, who had the mind of God revealed to them (1 Cor. ii. 16). Whereas, in the other sense, it will be proper and peculiar to Christ, to be "in the bosom of the Father," as St. John seemeth here to represent it:

[20] Εἰς τὸν κόλπον, In the bosom.] Note, that εἰς τὸν κόλπον is here put for ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ. So εἰς πόλιν, "in the city," Matt. ii. 23, εἰς τὸν καίρον αὐτῶν, "in their times," Luke i. 20, εἰς ἣν, "in which," Acts vii. 4, εἰς χολὴν, "in the gall," Acts viii. 23 (see Mark i. 39, ii. 1, v. 34, Luke viii. 48, ix. 61, xi. 7, xvi. 8, Acts vii. 53, xiii. 42, Eph. i. 10, Heb. xi. 9).

[21] Ver. 20. He confessed, and denied not; but confessed.] Such pleonasms are frequent in the scripture. So 2 Kings xvii. 36, "The people held their peace, and answered nothing," Isa. xxxviii. 1, "Thou shalt die, and not live;" Ezek. vii. 6, "An end is come, the end is come, it is come:" and especially in the writings of this evangelist; so 1 John i. 1. 3, "That which we have heard, that which we have seen, that which we have beheld with our eyes;" and, xii. 27, "is true, and is no lie" (see here, ver. 3).

[22] Ver. 21. Art thou Elias? And he said, I am not (see the note on Matt. xi. 14). Art thou that prophet?] Jeremy, saith Grotius, there being a rumour among them, that he was to return to them (see the note on Matt. xi. 9, 10). When the people were musing among themselves, whether the Baptist were the Christ, he takes off that suspicion of his own accord, Luke iii. 15. Here he returns answer to the inquiries of the pharisees.

[23] Ver. 24. And they that were sent, were of the pharisees.] i. e. Of the patrons of tradition, who thought themselves so exact in all the ordinary rules, which were to be observed, that this new rite of baptizing, by way of preparation for the Messiah, of which their traditions were wholly silent, must be extraordinary; and therefore they inquire—

[24] Ver. 25. Τί οὖν βαπτίζεις; Why then baptizest thou?] Why usest thou towards us, Jews, who are already holy and in covenant with God, a rite only used by us towards heathen proselytes, to cleanse them from their impurity and to prepare them to enter into covenant with God? Note also, that τί here is put for διά τι, why, or for what cause, as Matt. xvii. 10, τί οὖν "Why say the scribes?" vi. 28, τί μεριμνᾶτε, "Why take ye thought?" so vii. 3, xvi. 8, xix. 7, xxii. 18, John iv. 17, vii. 19, ix. 27, x. 20, xviii. 21. 23, xx. 13. 15.

[25] Ver. 26. I baptize with water to repentance.] i. e. I am the messenger of which Malachi speaks, who am sent before the Lord to prepare his way, by bringing you to repentance and amendment of life, and therefore baptize you with water, to mind you of that purity of heart which is requisite to the reception of him; so that by my baptizing you with water, to produce in you that purity, will be fulfilled the promise of God by Ezekiel, xxxvi. 25, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean;" and, by his baptism, will be fulfilled the words following, ver. 37, "I will put my Spirit within you."

Ver. 27. Ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν.] See this reading vindicated, Examen Millii in locum.

[26] Ver. 28. In Bethabara.] That is, according to the import of the word בֵּיתעְבָרָה, about the place where the Jews passed over Jordan to go into the land of Canaan: it is situated, saith Dr. Lightfoot,* beyond Jordan, in the Scythopolitan country, where the Jews dwelt among the Syrophœnicians.

[27] Ver. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, ὁ αἴρων τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, who taketh away the sins of the world.] This Grotius refers to the reformation of men's lives; whereas it plainly respects the Lamb slain as a piacular victim (1 Pet. i. 19), to redeem us to God by his blood (Rev. v. 9), or to procure for us "redemption," that is, "the remission of sins" (Eph. i. 7, Col. i. 14), and to exempt all that believed in him from that sentence of death which came upon the world for the sin of Adam. To illustrate this, let it be noted, (1.) that when a sacrifice was offered for sin, he that brought it laid his hand upon the head of the victim, according to the command of God, Lev. i. 4, iii. 2, iv. 4, and by that rite transferred his sins upon the victim, who is said to take them upon him, and to carry them away: accordingly, in the daily sacrifice of the lamb, the stationary men, saith Dr. Lightfoot, who were the representatives of the people, laid their hands upon

* Page 494.

30 This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

31 [28] And I knew him not (till God revealed it to me, or when I said this): but (knowing) that he should (suddenly) be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come (came I first) baptizing with water.

32 And John bare record, saying, I saw (Gr. have seen) the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him (and by this sign given me of God, I knew him to be the Christ, from whom that Spirit should be derived on others, ver. 26).

33 And (before) I (thus) knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same (had) said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34 And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

35 ¶ Again the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples;

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith (to them), Behold the Lamb of God!

37 And the [29] two disciples heard him speak (this), and they followed Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou (that we may be there with thee)?

39 He saith unto them, Come and see. (And) They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day (and the night following): for it was about the tenth hour (or four in the afternoon).

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was [30] Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the (promised) Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, [31] Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, A stone (or rock upon whose preaching the foundation of my church shall be laid; see note on Matt. xvi. 18).

43 ¶ The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and (as he was going, he) findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow me.

44 Now Philip was [32] of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter (and so came next to be found by him).

45 Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses in the law (Deut. xviii. 18), and (of whom) the prophets, did write (as of the Messiah, which was to come), Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46 And Nathanael said unto him, Can there any good thing come out of (such a wicked, Luke iv. 28, and despicable place, see note on Matt. ii. 23, as) Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and (thou will) see (sufficient reason to believe there may).

47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and (instantly) saith unto him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile (but plain honesty towards men, and sincerity of affection towards God)!

48 Nathanael saith unto him, Whence knowest thou me (so entirely as to pronounce thus of my inward man, seeing thou hast not before seen or conversed with me)? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee (and this thou mayest believe, seeing I tell thee where thou wast, and how Philip called thee, though I never heard him call thee, nor saw thee there with my bodily eyes).

49 Nathanael answered and saith unto him, Rabbi, (this knowledge, so proper to a divine person, convinceth me that) thou art the [33] Son of God; thou art the King of Israel.

50 Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these (stronger and more convincing arguments than these to confirm thy faith in this particular).

51 And (then) he saith unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto you (my disciples, That)[34] Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, (as Jacob did, Gen. xxviii. 12), and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man (i. e. such extraordinary signs of the divine presence with, and his direction and assistance in, all the lambs thus offered for them; and these two lambs offered for the daily sacrifice were bought with that half shekel, which all the Jews yearly paid, εἰς λύτρον τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῶν, ἐξιλάσασθαι περὶ τῶν ψυχῶν αὐτῶν, "as the price of redemption of their lives, to make an atonement for them," Exod. xxx. 12. 14. 16. This lamb was therefore offered to take away the guilt of their sin, as this phrase signifies when it relates to sacrifices (see the note, 1 Pet. ii. 25). When therefore the Baptist had said, he baptized them for the remission of sins, he here shows them by what means that remission was to be obtained.

---

[28] Ver. 31. 33. And I knew him not.] By face, or any converse with him till he came to my baptism, God so ordering it, that there should be no suspicion that I thus testified of him by compact. Observe, also, that the Baptist said this at the same time that he saw the Spirit of God descending on him, ver. 30, and seeing this sign made good, he testifies this was that Son of God who should baptize them with the Spirit, ver. 33, 34 (see note on Matt. iii. 14).

[29] Ver. 37. Two disciples] Of the Baptist hearing this testimony of their Master, they come to him, either to abide with him, or to gain farther knowledge of him; and therefore they inquire where he dwelt, ver. 39, that they might repair to him thither, not thinking it proper to ask him in the streets concerning the Messiah and his kingdom.

[30] Ver. 40. One of the two was Andrew.] The other is thought to have been St. John himself, who usually conceals his name. Note hence, that these two were called before Peter.

[31] Ver. 42. Thou art Simon, &c.] Woltzogenius notes, that Christ here gives Peter a specimen of his divine virtue; and, ver. 47, he discovers the secrets of the heart of Philip, showing that he was able, by the Holy Spirit, to search into the most internal recesses of the heart.

[32] Ver. 44. Of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.] i. e. Where they dwelt. This seems to be added, to show the reason why Philip followed Jesus before he knew any thing of his doctrine, because what he had heard from them who dwelt near him had prepared his mind so to do; and from the following words of Philip and Nathanael, "We have found him," &c. we learn, that not only Peter and Andrew, but Christ himself had discoursed to Philip of the predictions of the law and the prophets concerning him. Note also ὅν, ver. 45, is put for περὶ οὗ, "of whom," as ver. 15.

[33] Ver. 49. Thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel.] These seem to be the two titles of the Messiah in the Jewish phrase, signifying the same thing: for though the Jews acknowledged the Messiah should be the Son of God, yet not in that high sense in which Christ was ἴδιος υἱὸς, "the proper and peculiar Son of God;" for this they look upon as blasphemy, John v. 18, but in that sense in which they style themselves his sons, John viii. 41.

[34] Ver. 51. Hereafter shall ye see the heavens opened, and the angel of God ascending and descending on the Son of man.] Christ here seems to allude to Jacob's ladder, of which we read Gen. xxviii. 12, 13, on the top of which was the divine majesty, and the angels ascending, saith Maimonides, to receive his commands, and descending to execute them; Christ therefore, by these words, seems to inform them, that the miracles which they should see performed by him should declare the divine majesty present with him, and giving him those commands he was to execute by his prophetic office, as clearly as if they had seen the angels of God ascending and descending on him. They who refer this to my works and words, as Jacob had of God's presence with him, when he saw the angels ascending to receive God's commands, and descending to be with him, and direct him in his way).

the day of judgment, did not consider this was to happen ἀπάρτι, "within a little while;" and they who refer it to Christ's passion and resurrection, must show how the angels then ascended and descended on Christ in the sight of the apostles.

CHAPTER II.

1 And the third day (from Simon's coming to Christ, i. 41,) there was a marriage (feast) in [1] Cana of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there (uncalled):

2 And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, (Gr. but both Jesus and his disciples were called) to the marriage.

3 And when they wanted wine, the [2] mother of Jesus (being concerned for this want of her relations) saith unto him, They have no wine (hoping, by this intimation, he, by a miracle, would supply this want).

4 Jesus saith unto her, [3] Woman, what have I to do with thee? [4] mine hour (i. e. that time for manifesting my glory by my miracles, ver. 11) is not yet come (and so I am not bound to have regard to thy solicitations in this thing).

5 His mother (expecting, notwithstanding this answer, that he might gratify her) saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

6 And there were set there six waterpots (or cisterns) of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews (who constantly washed before meals), containing two or three firkins apiece.

7 Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he saith unto them, Draw out now (of this liquor), and bear (it) unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it.

9 When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the servants which drew the water knew;) (i. e. not knowing it to be water miraculously turned into wine by Christ as the servants did;) the [5] governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning (of a feast) doth (use to) set forth good wine; and when men [6] have well drunk, then that which is worse

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. In Cana of Galilee.] To distinguish it from another Cana, which was in the tribe of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 8, xvii. 9; whereas this was in the tribe of Asher in Galilee, Josh. xix. 28, and probably where Alpheus or Cleopas, whose wife was Mary, the sister of the mother of our Lord, lived: for that this marriage was in his house, is conjectured, first, because the mother of our Lord is there uncalled, by reason of her near relation to them; whereas Christ and his disciples are bid to the wedding: secondly, because his mother is so solicitous for the supply of the wine.

[2] Ver. 3. The mother of Jesus saith to him, They have no wine.] Some conceive, by reason of this expectation of his mother, that Christ miraculously might provide wine for them, that, whilst he lived privately with his parents, he might, upon some occasion, in an extraordinary manner, supply their want of necessaries. St. Chrysostom says she was moved to this from the consideration of his miraculous conception and birth, the testimony of the Baptist, and his gathering disciples. Grotius thinks that Joseph was then dead, because he is not mentioned here.

[3] Ver. 4. Τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ, γύναι; Woman, what have I to do with thee?] The papists here contend, that these words are not to be deemed a reprehension to his mother, but only an instruction to his disciples, that in the things of God they ought not to have respect to the solicitations of earthly parents. But,

First, The word γύναι, woman, plainly shows these words were directed, not to his disciples, but to his mother. And,

Secondly, We never find this phrase used in scripture otherwise than by way of objurgation or reprehension; as when Jephthah says to the King of Ammon, Judg. xi. 12, τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ; "What have I to do with thee, that thou comest to fight against my land?" And David to the sons of Zeruiah, 2 Sam. xvi. 20, τί ἐμοὶ καὶ ὑμῖν, "What have I to do with you?" and again, xix. 22; and Pharaoh-Nechoh to Josias, 2 Chron. xxxv. 21, 1 Esd. i. 26, 1 Kings xvii. 18; and Elisha to Joram, 2 Kings iii. 13.

Thirdly, Maldonate* confesseth, that most of the ancient fathers do openly or obscurely intimate what Irenæus† plainly saith, "that she was guilty of some fault or error in inciting her Son to this miracle unseasonably." So Chrysostom,* Euthymius, and Theophylact,† upon the place.

[4] Οὔπω ἥκει ἡ ὥρα μου, My hour is not yet come.] Dr. Lightfoot thinks this is spoken, because Christ was to begin his public ministry, and to confirm it with miracles at Jerusalem; and therefore saith, vii. 8, ὁ καιρὸς ἐμὸς "My time of going up to Jerusalem is not yet." Others, with Dr. Hammond, say, this hour signifies the time of doing his miracles, ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, "openly," was not yet; and therefore, though he did this miracle, he did it so privately that neither the governor of the feast, nor the bridegroom, nor the guests, knew that he had done it, but the servants only. Lastly, it is observable that G. Nyssen reads these words by way of interrogation; viz. Woman, what have I to do with thee? I have begun to gather disciples, and to act as one sent from God; and is not the hour of my exemption from thy authority yet come?

[5] Ver. 9. Φωνεῖ τὸν νυμφίον ὁ ἀρχιτρίκλινος, The governor of the feast called the bridegroom.] To this governor of the feast it belonged to bless what was prepared, and having drunk of the cup thus blessed, to send it about to the whole company, whence Christ saith to the servants, "Draw out and bear it to the governor of the feast," ver. 8. Moreover, the word φωνεῖν, doth not necessarily signify to call the absent bridegroom, but may only intimate, that the ruler of the feast spake thus to him being present: for, as Phavorinus saith, this word, with an accusative case, signifies τὸ λαλῶ καὶ τὸ καλῶ, "both to call and to speak to." Thus in Sophocles, τί φωνεῖς; is, "What sayest thou?" and here, xiii. 13, ὑμεῖς φωνεῖτέ με Κύριον, is, "You say I am your Master:" so ἐκ τῆς κοιλίας φωνεῖν, is, "to speak out of the belly," Isa. viii. 19, ἐκ τῆς γῆς φωνεῖν, "to speak out of the earth," Isa. xix. 3, and οὐ φωνεῖν, "not to speak," Ps. cxiii. 15.

[6] Ver. 10. Καὶ ὅταν μεθυσθῶσι, And when men have well drunk, then that which is worse.] The word μεθύσκεσθαι, does not here signify to be drunk, but to drink to satiety; or, as Phavorinus saith, πληροῦσθαι, "to be filled with wine." So Gen. xliii. 34, "The brethren of Joseph drank, ἐμεθύσθησαν μετ' αὐτοῦ, and were merry with him;" saturati sunt cum eo, "they were satisfied," saith the Vulgate: so Ps. xxiii.

* Inter veteres auctores, paucos admodùm invenio, qui non aut apertè dicant aut obscurè significent, aliquam culpam aut errorem fuisse, quòd filium ad faciendum miraculum incitaverit, si non ob aliud, certè intempestivè et ante tempus, id fecit. Mald. in locum.

† Dominus repellens ejus intempestivam festinationem dixit, Quid mihi et tibi est, mulier? lib. ii. cap. 18, p. 277.

* Ὡς ἀκαίρως τι ζητεῖν καὶ ἐγκόπτειν τι τῶν πνευματικῶν Chrysost.

† Ἐπιπλήξας μικρόν. Theophylact.

(i. e. smaller): but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

11 This beginning of (his) miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and (thereby) [7] manifested forth his glory; and his disciples (who saw the miracle) believed on him.

12 ¶ After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days.

13 ¶ And (for) the Jews' passover was at hand, and Jesus went up (with them) to Jerusalem,

14 And (there he) found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves (for sacrifices), and the changers of money (or those who returned it by way of exchange) sitting.

15 And when he had made a [8] scourge of small cords (or of rushes), he drove them all out of the temple, and (that is) the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out (upon the ground) the changers' money, and overthrew the (counting) tables (no man making any resistance);

16 And (he) said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; (and) make not my Father's house an house of merchandise.

17 And his disciples (afterward) remembered that it was written (of him), The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up (Ps. lxix. 9, i. e. hath fed upon my spirits and consumed them).

18 ¶ Then answered the Jews and said unto him, [9] What sign shewest thou unto us (that thou art a prophet), seeing that thou doest these things (which only magistrates or prophets have authority to do)?

19 Jesus answered and said unto them, (This shall be a sign to you,) [10] Destroy this temple (of my body), and (when you have done this) in three days I will raise it up (again).

5, "My cup runneth over," ποτήριόν μου μεθύσκον, saith the Septuagint: so πίετε καὶ μεθύσθητε, Cant. v. 1, is, "Drink abundantly:" Hag. i. 6, ἐπίετε καὶ οὐκ εἰς μέθην, "Ye drank, but not to satiety:" so Ecclus. i. 16, "The fear of the Lord μεθύσκει, replenisheth men with her fruits;" and xxxii. 13, "Bless the Lord μεθύσκοντά σε, who filleth thee with good things:" so Jerome on Jer. xxxi. 14, καὶ μεθύσω τὴν ψυχὴν τῶν ἱερέων, "I will satiate the soul of my priests with fatness;" and ver. 35, ἐμέθυσα πᾶσαν ψυχὴν διψῶσαν, "I have satisfied every thirsty soul;" and on those words, Hosea xiv. 7, μεθυσθήσονται σίτῳ, tom. v. F. 151, H. 152, H. 1. See 1 Macc. xvi. 16. Moreover, these are not the words of Christ, but of the ruler of the feast, declaring, not how it was with the guests there present, but only that it was the usual custom to bring the best wine first, and when men had well drunk, then the meaner sort, and that this custom was not then observed. And, thirdly, admit some persons might exceed in drinking of this very wine miraculously made, which yet is more than can be gathered from the text, our Lord cannot be charged with ministering to that excess, by making this provision of it, unless we also charge the providence of God as being instrumental to all that gluttony and drunkenness which is committed in the world, because it doth afford that meat and drink which by the glutton and drunkard are abused to excess.

7 Ver. 11. Καὶ ἐφανέρωσε τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, And he manifested his glory.] i. e. His power of working miracles, which is styled his glory, John xvii. 22, 2 Cor. iii. 18, and for which "he was glorified of all," Luke iv. 15. And this was opportunely done to confirm the faith of the apostles, who were newly come to him; and therefore it is added, that "they believed on him."

8 Ver. 15, 16. He made a scourge of small cords, &c.] To what hath been said, note on Matt. xxi. 14, Mark xi. 17, add, (1.) that Christ, by making such a whip of bulrushes, which could hurt nobody, seemed to insinuate that he would not use external force to take away the abuses of men relating to his worship. And (2.) by calling the temple his Father's house, he distinguishes himself from other prophets, who sometimes style God their God (Isa. lvii. 21), but never their Father. And (3.) by purging the court of the gentiles from merchandise, not unlawful in itself, but necessary for the sacrifices which were to be offered in the temple, though not necessary to be brought there, he sufficiently insinuates that a distinction is to be made betwixt places sacred and profane, and that what may as well be done elsewhere, ought not to be done in the house of God, the place appointed immediately for his worship.

9 Ver. 18. Τί σημεῖον ἐικνύεις; What sign showest thou? &c.] This they ask, because it belonged only to the magistrate, as being God's minister and vicegerent, or to a prophet, to take away abuses in God's service. Now a prophet must show himself to be so by some miracles, or some prediction of a thing future: this last Christ doth, by saying,

10 Ver. 19. Λύσατε τὸν ναὸν τοῦτον, &c. Destroy this temple, and I will build it up in three days.] When elsewhere they require a sign, he remits them to the sign of Jonas the prophet, Matt. xii. 39, 40. And here he also seems in effect to do the same thing, by saying that, by raising the temple of his body after they had destroyed it, or by his resurrection from the dead, he would afford them a convincing demonstration that he had good authority for what he said and did, and that he was that prophet which was to come.

Note also, that these words are not imperative, i. e. Christ did not bid them destroy his body, but only permissive and predictive of what he saw they would do; and therefore he saith, λύσατε, "Ye will destroy this temple." Examples of like nature we have in the Old Testament, as Gen. xx. 7, "He shall pray for thee, and live thou;" and xlii. 18, "Do this, and live," i. e, "thou shalt live;" Deut. xxxii. 50, "Die in this mountain," i. e. "thou shalt die there" (see Isa. viii. 9, 10, liv. 1): and in the New, as in those words of Christ to Judas, "What thou doest, do quickly," John xiii. 27; and that of St. Paul, "Be angry, and sin out," Eph. iv. 26 (see the note there). Moreover, he seemeth here to call his body a temple, and elsewhere to declare he was one "greater than the temple" (Matt. xii. 6), because the Divinity dwelt always and inseparably in it, as the Jews thought the Divinity did in the temple built by Solomon. Josephus not only tells us, that Solomon prayed thus at the dedication of it, ἱκετεύω καὶ μοῖράν τινα τοῦ σου Πνεύματος εἰς τὸν ναὸν ἀποικῆσαι, "that some portion of the Divine Spirit might come down upon the temple," Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2, p. 264, F; but that, "in all men's opinion, there was ἐπιδημία Θεοῦ καὶ κατοικισμός, an advent to, and habitation of God in it," ibid. p. 263, and that God came down into the temple, and did κατασκηνοῦν ἐν αὐτῷ, "pitch his tabernacle in it," ibid. D, G (see the note on 1 Cor. vi. 19). In the second temple, say the Jews, were wanting the urim and thummim, the divine glory, the Holy Spirit, and the oil of gladness. Now Christ was that oracle from whom we might receive answers full of truth and light; in him dwelt the true Shechinah, he had the Spirit without measure, and he was anointed "with the oil of gladness above his fellows;" and so, in these respects, was greater than the temple. The temple, which you have polluted, saith he, I have cleansed; that temple of my body, which you will destroy, I will raise up. And that he did so, is evident from this, that "after his resurrection his disciples believed the words which Jesus had said," ver. 22, which, had not Christ raised his own body from the dead, they could not have done (see the note on x. 18). I confess, it is more frequently said in scripture, that the Father raised him from the dead; and this was necessary to be said, that it might appear that he had fully satisfied the divine justice for our sins, in that he was by him delivered from that death he suffered for them. But then, as the resurrection in general is often ascribed to God the Father, and yet it cannot be denied that God the Son shall raise the dead by his own power, as the Scripture testifies, John v. 28, 29, vi. 39, 40. 44. 54, 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. 25, 26, Rom. xiv. 19, Phil. iii. 21, Rev. i. 18, so is it to be owned that the Father raised Christ from the dead: nor yet is it to be denied that our Lord raised up himself, seeing he was "quickened by the Spirit," Rom. viii. 22, 1 Pet. iii. 18, and God raised him up διὰ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ, "by his Spirit," Rom. i. 4, and this Spirit, as he was the Spirit of the Father, so was he also the Spirit of Christ, 1 Pet. i. 11, and dwelt essentially in him. And thus it is easy to conceive how he raised up himself; and yet his ro-

20 Then said the Jews, [11] Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? (and this they said, thinking that Christ had spoken of the temple of Jerusalem.)

21 But he spake of the temple of his body.

22 When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the scripture (speaking of his resurrection), and the word which Jesus had said.

23 ¶ Now when he was in Jerusalem at the passover, in the feast day (Gr. ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, in the time of the feast), many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did.

24 But Jesus did not commit himself unto them (or confide in them as his sincere disciples), because he knew (the hearts of) all men,

25 And needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man.

---

surrection might be ascribed to God the Father, viz. because he did it by virtue of the Spirit of the Father dwelling in him.

[11] Ver. 20. Τεσσαράκοντα καὶ ἓξ ἔτεσιν ᾠκοδομήθη ὁ ναὸς οὗτος, Forty and six years hath this temple been building.] Mr. Whiston here saith, the words should be rendered, "Forty-six years hath this temple been built;" but our version is justified from the use of the same words in the Septuagint in the same case, Ezra v. 16, ἀπὸ τότε ἕως τοῦ νῦν ᾠκοδομήθη, καὶ οὐκ ἐτελέσθη, "This temple hath been building from that time to this, and hath not yet been finished." (2.) The argument of the Jews requires this sense, which our translation giveth of these words; for it is plain folly to state thus the years from which it had been built, to prove it could not be built again in three days; since this could have no more force to prove it could not be built in three days, than its being built at any other time; but the argument is plain and strong according to our version, viz. that it could not reasonably be thought that Christ himself, or with his small retinue, should do that in three days, which had already cost many thousand labourers forty-six years to build.

Mr. Whiston's computation, I confess, is very plausible at the first view: it begins thus, "Josephus* assures us, that the ναὸς, or temple, was begun in the eighteenth year of Herod, from the death of Antigonus, and that it was finished in a year and six months: now from these circumstances we may certainly find the year we inquire for; Antigonus was slain about July, A. P. J. 4677; and so Herod's eighteenth year must begin about July 4694, and continue till July 4695." Let us suppose the temple begun about the feast of tabernacles in this eighteenth year 4694; add a year and six months, the space in which it was building, and it will appear to have been finished at the passover Nisan 4696; from the passover let us count forty-six years, and this will bring us to the passover we inquire for, Nisan 4742, which is A. D. 29. But yet from an exact view of this computation, I find it fails in almost every particular. For,

First, It is certain from Josephus,† that Antigonus neither was nor could be slain in the month of July; because the temple was not taken by Herod and Sosius till the tenth day of September, it being taken, saith Josephus, τῇ ἑορτῇ τῆς νηστείας, "on the feast of the fast;" by which words, saith Langius,‡ he intends no other than the fast prescribed by the law of Moses, and mentioned in his own history as a fast; for he names the day, that every one might know certainly when the city was taken: which, had there been more fasts, they could not have done by this character, sed omnem dubitationem eximit apposita vox ἑορτῇ; but the word "feast" added to it, puts the matter beyond doubt; for there was but one fast so called in a year. This, say I, is demonstrable from the word ἑορτὴ, "the feast of the fast," the tenth of Tisri, being the only fast mentioned among the feasts of the Lord, and called a sabbath of sabbaths, Lev. xvi. xxi., and being by all writers called "the feast of expiation." And this is also evident from the word νηστεία, for this being the only fast of God's appointment, is, by the scripture, Philo, and Josephus, emphatically styled "the fast-day:" thus, "Sailing was dangerous," saith St. Paul, "because the fast was past," Acts xxvii. 9, for "On the tenth day of the seventh month we fast till eventide," saith Josephus;§ and on the fifteenth day of the said month τρέπεται ὁ καιρὸς εἰς τὴν χειμέριον ὥραν, "begins the winter." Ἡ λεγομένη νηστεία, "The day by us called a fast is reverenced every where," saith Philo.‖ This, saith Josephus,¶ is the day ἣν Ἰουδαῖοι νηστείαν ἄγουσιν, "on which the Jews fast;" which, had they then observed any other annual and stated fasts, could have been no character of time, as in Josephus and St. Paul it is. This is yet farther evident from what Josephus saith in the same place, viz. that the city was taken ρπε' Ὀλυμπιάδος τῷ γ' μηνὶ, "in the third month of the hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad." Now the year of the Olympiads beginning in July, the third month of any year of an Olympiad must answer to the Julian September. Mr. Whiston, indeed, will not allow that ancient writers use to cite the month of an Olympiad; but he may be convinced of his mistake in this matter from the testimony of Diogenes Laertius, who saith that Socrates was born in the fourth year of the seventy-seventh Olympiad Θαργηλιῶνος ἕκτῃ, "on the sixth of Thargelion," that Plato†† was born in the eighty-eighth Olympiad, Θαργηλιῶνος ἑβδόμῃ, "on the seventh of Thargelion," and that Epicurus‡‡ was born in the third year of the hundred and ninth Olympiad, on the seventh of Gamelion.

Mr. Whiston, to avoid this, saith the city was taken on the day of a solemn fast, in the twenty-third of the third month Sivan, kept for the defection and idolatry of Jeroboam. But (1.) Josephus doth not say it was taken in a fast, on the third Jewish month, but Ὀλυμπιάδος τῷ γ' μηνὶ, "on the third month of the eighteenth Olympiad," which answers to September; and then by way of apposition, τῇ ἑορτῇ τῆς νηστείας, "at the feast of the fast," which plainly fixes the taking of it to the tenth of September. (2.) As Jeroboam celebrated a feast in the eighth month, which "he devised of his own head," so Mr. Whiston hath devised a fast of his own head in the month Sivan, not mentioned by Josephus, nor any Jewish writer of or near those times, nor extant in Buxtorf's§§ history of their feasts and fasts; but a pure product of that famous chronicle Megillah Taanith, of which I have already given an account. (3.) When Herod began to batter the wall, it was then summer, saith Josephus,‖‖ and so he had no hindrance from the weather: now there being three summer months, let us take the middle of them, July the fifteenth; the first wall, saith Josephus,¶¶ was taken "after forty days," i. e. August the twenty-fifth; the second, "fifteen days after that," i. e. on the tenth of September; ergò, not on the month Sivan, when summer was but just begun. (4.) Josephus adds, that Herod began the siege λωφήσαντος τοῦ χειμῶνος, "when winter was over," suppose about the midst of March; that he went soon back to Samaria, and married the daughter of Aristobulus; that then he gathers a greater army, and Sosius comes to him with auxiliaries; and then he places his camp near the north wall: let all this be done by the tenth of April; and then he adds, that after this, the party of Antigonus endured the siege πέντε μησὶ, "five months," i. e. till the tenth of September; how, therefore, is it possible, that the city should be taken in the month Sivan, or the third month? Nor was Antigonus slain till about a month or more after the city was taken: for Josephus††† informs us, that he was afterward carried by Sosius to Antioch, where Antony then was, and that he kept him there, intending to reserve him to his triumph at Rome; but when he heard that the Jews had so great favour for him, and so great hatred to Herod, that they would not be prevailed upon by torments to own him as their king, he beheaded him at Antioch; Antigonus therefore, in all probability, could not be slain till about the tenth or fifteenth of October, and so Herod's eighteenth year could not begin till

---

* Page 144. † Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 27, p. 506, A.
‡ Cap. 2, p. 337. § Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 10, p. 92, l, 2.
‖ De Vitâ Mos. p. 508.
¶ Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8, p. 597, D, bis.

* Lib. ii. p. 107. † Lib. iii. p. 164.
‡ Lib. x. p. 610. § Synag. Jud. cap. 30.
‖ Θέρος ἦν, Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 28, p. 506, G. ¶ Ibid. p. 507.
 De B. Jud. lib. i. cap. 13, p. 740, 741.
†† Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 28, p. 508. lib. xv. cap. 1.

that time. And so, if Herod began his project of building the temple on the very first day of his eighteenth year, which yet is both uncertain and improbable, he could not begin it at the feast of tabernacles, that being fixed to the fifteenth day of September.

Secondly, Josephus* doth not say that Herod began to build the temple in his eighteenth year; but only that ἐπεβάλετο, "he cast in his mind" to do so: and when he had proposed this to the rulers of the Jews, he engages not to attempt the work till he had prepared all the materials for it, nor doth he say how long he was preparing these materials, though, saith Casaubon, all men will think it reasonable to allow him at least a year for that; and Bishop Usher saith they were only provided in two years' space: so that Herod could not begin the work till the middle of his nineteenth year.† Now admit the fancy, that the ναὸς was first built in eighteen months, he could not finish the building of it till his twenty-first year from Antigonus; from thence he reigned only thirteen years: now thirteen and twenty-nine will never make forty-six years.

But, Thirdly, That which entirely confoundeth this account is this consideration, that when Herod began to build, he first built the ἱερὸν, i. e. the court of the gentiles and lay Jews; and the building of this, saith Josephus, took up eight years: absolutoque octo annis reliquo ædificio, tandem etiam templum ipsum sacerdotum operâ sesquianno perfecit; and having finished that in eight years, he afterward, by the assistance of the priests, built the ναὸς, or the inward temple, in a year and half more; so that, according to Josephus, the ναὸς was not built till the twenty-eighth of Herod, i. e. but six years before his death: now six and twenty-nine make only thirty-five years.

Mr. Whiston, indeed, saith that I perplex the matter, when I place the building of the ἱερὸν before the ναὸς, i. e. the outward before the inner temple. But this I do with good authority, and with better reason; for Josephus saith, the ἱερὸν was finished in eight years, and then follow these words,‡ τοῦ δὲ ναοῦ ἐπὶ τῶν ἱερέων οἰκοδομηθέντος ἐνιαυτῷ καὶ μησὶν ϛ', ἅπας ὁ λαὸς ἐπληρώθη χαρᾶς, καὶ τοῦ τάγους πρῶτον τῷ Θεῷ τὰς εὐχαριστίας ἐποιοῦντο, "Then the temple being built by the priests in a year and six months, all the people returned thanks to God, and celebrate the encænia." Who sees not now, that the work done about the ναὸς was done last of all, and that instantly thereupon follow the encænia for the dedication of the whole? And this is also suitable to reason: for the Jews, fearing that Herod would not be able to perform his promise, would surely keep that part of the temple on which their daily sacrifices and the service of the great day of expiation depended, standing; till they saw, by what he had done about the other temple, that he was likely to accomplish his undertaking, and would not have suffered themselves to be deprived of the benefit of those sacrifices for nine years and a half, as they must have done if either the temple of the priests had not been standing, or not dedicated till that time. Wherefore, for the right stating this matter, let it be noted,

First, That, whether this computation of the Jews be true or false, neither Christ nor the evangelist is concerned in the matter, seeing St. John only relates what the Jews said to Christ; and if they said any thing that was not true, he, who relateth truly what they said, can lose no credit by it. Note,

Secondly, That the opinion of them who say the second temple was (including the times of the interruption to its complete finishing) forty-six years in building, though it may not be true, as Drusius thinks it was; yet it was so, as here he saith, ex opinione vulgi et sapientum, "according both to the opinion of their wise men and the common people;" and it is certain from Josephus,* that they had not completely finished it till long after: for he having told us that the foundation of it being laid in the close of the reign of Cyrus, it was interrupted nine years, till the time of Darius; that Ezra† finished the temple for service, in the ninth year of Darius, in whose second year they began again to build; adds,‡ that in the twenty-fifth year of Xerxes (i. e. Artaxerxes) Nehemias was sent with his commission to repair the walls of Jerusalem, and τὸ λείψανον τοῦ ἱεροῦ τελειῶσαι, "to finish the remainder of the temple," the court of the sanctuary being not yet built (Neh. ii. 8). And seeing they constantly called the temple built by Zorobabel, and restored by Herod, "the second temple," till the destruction of it by Titus; and of necessity it must be so, in some true sense, that the prophecy of Haggai, concerning Christ's coming to that very temple, might be fulfilled; they, who always called this "the second temple" built by Zorobabel, why might they not say of that, according to their received computation, "Forty-six years was this temple in building!"

But, Thirdly, The opinion of Ludovicus Capellus, Dr. Allix, and others, who understand this of the temple of Herod, is exact, plain, and evident: for if you begin the time of the building in the eighteenth of Herod, when he began to set about it, and employed a thousand carts to bring the materials, and provided the most skilful artificers for that work, from that time to his death is exactly sixteen years: this was said of Christ in the thirtieth year of his age, at the first passover after his baptism: now thirty and sixteen make forty-six years.

Obj. If it be here objected, that Josephus informs us that Herod's temple was finished in nine years and a half:

Ans. The answer is, that it was then finished as to use; but, saith Capellus, Planum est ex eodem, semper aliquid additum, et exstructum ab eo tempore fuisse in illo templo, "It is plain from the same Josephus, that from that time there was always something added to, or new built in the temple, even till the time of Agrippa junior;" i. e. about the space of sixty years. Bishop Usher adds, that "all Herod's wealth was not sufficient for the building," but that "It was continued still by the gifts consecrated to God:" and this is confirmed by the saying of Josephus,§ "That all the holy treasures, and the tributes sent from all parts of the world, were spent in building and adorning the temple." And that "the abundance of money and the largesses of the people were beyond expression, and so τὸ μηδὲν ἐλπισθὲν ἔξειν πέρας, ἐπιμονῇ καὶ χρόνοις ἦν ἀνύσιμον, that which men thought would never be finished (the attempt of Herod‖ being τὸ μετὰ τῆς ἐλπίδος ἄπιστον, beyond all men's hopes) was, through patience and length of time, expedited." Yea, he farther saith,¶ "In the time of Florus," or the tenth of Nero, τότε τὸ ἱερὸν ἐτετέλεστο, "then was the temple finished."

* Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 14. † A. M. 3987.
‡ Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 14, p. 535, G.

* Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 3.
† Ibid. cap. 4, p. 366. ‡ Cap. 5, p. 371.
§ Οἱ ἱεροὶ δὲ θησαυροὶ πάντες, οἷς ἀνεπίμπλασαν οἱ παρὰ τῆς οἰκουμένης ἅπασαι πεμπόμενοι τῷ Θεῷ, τοὺς δὲ τε ἄνω περιβόλους καὶ τὸ κάτω ἱερὸν ἀμφιεζέσμαντο. De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 14, p. 916, A, B.
‖ Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 14, p. 543.
¶ Ibid. lib. xx. cap. 8, p. 699.

CHAPTER III.

1 There was (at Jerusalem) a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, (who was) a ruler of the Jews (i. e. one of the Jewish Sanhedrin, John vii. 50);

2 The same (οὗτος, he) came to Jesus by night (that he might not offend his colleagues), and said unto him, Rabbi, [1] we know (i. e. I know, see note on xxi. 24,

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 2. Οἴδαμεν, We know that thou art a teacher come from God.] This could not be said of his brethren, the pharisees and rulers of the Sanhedrin; for "none of the pharisees or of the rulers believed on him," vii. 48; οἴδαμεν therefore here may relate chiefly to Nicodemus, and only signify "I know," as it often doth (see note on xxi. 24): or else may signify "it is, or may be known;" as when the blind man saith, "We know God heareth not sinners," or, it may be certainly known) that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him (the power that enables thee to perform them exceeding all that men or devils can do).

3 Jesus (observing that he said nothing of the excellency and power of his doctrine, to change the hearts and reform the lives of men, but only of his miracles by which it was confirmed) answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, (This acknowledgment will not be sufficient to render thee a member of that kingdom I am to set up, for) except a man [2] be born again, (i. e. renewed in his mind, will, and affections, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, and so become a new creature, 2 Cor. v. 17,) he cannot see (i. e. enjoy the blessings of) the kingdom of God.

4 Nicodemus (being a pharisee, exact in the observance of their traditions, and ritual observances, but having no knowledge of this spiritual regeneration) saith unto him, How can a man be born (again) when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

5 Jesus answered, (Though you so little understand it, yet I have told you a great truth, which farther to explain) Verily, verily, I say unto thee, [3] Except a man be born (again) of water (and so become one of my disciples by that baptismal regeneration, by which your proselytes are said to become as infants new born) and of the Spirit (purifying his heart from all worldly and carnal lusts, and enabling him to live a spiritual life according to my doctrine) he cannot enter into the kingdom of God (or enjoy the blessings of my kingdom.

6 And the reason and necessity of this regeneration by the Spirit is evident, as also that it cannot be sufficient to this end to be of the seed of Abraham, he being only the father of our flesh; for) [4] That which is born of the flesh (only) is flesh (still mindeth chiefly carnal things, and lives after the motions of the flesh);

---

ix. 31. (See Matt. xxvi. 2, Luke xx. 21, Rom. ii. 2, iii. 19, vii. 14, 1 Cor. viii. 4, 1 Tim. i. 8.)

[2] Ver. 3. Ἐὰν μή τις γεννηθῇ ἄνωθεν, οὐ δύναται ἰδεῖν, If a man be not born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.] It is here needless to inquire whether the word ἄνωθεν should be rendered "from above," or "again," as our translation doth, and as Nicodemus understood Christ's words, since every one who is born again is also born from above (James iii. 17), as being born of that Spirit which cometh from above.

Note also, That to "see the kingdom of God" here, and to enter into it, ver. 5, is the same thing, and both these phrases signify to be a real member of that kingdom, and to enjoy the blessings belonging to them who are so; thus to "see good," Eccles. vi. 6, to "see good days," Ps. xxxiv. 12, and to "see life," ver. 36, is to enjoy them; and to "see God," Job. xix. 26, Matt. v. 8, and to "see the Lord," Heb. xii. 14, is to enjoy him.

Note, Thirdly, That Christ seems to speak this not primarily of that heavenly kingdom into which the blessed shall enter at the day of judgment, but of that spiritual kingdom which was to be erected by the Messiah, and into which men entered by baptism: whence it must follow, that no man is indeed a member of Christ's kingdom who is not truly regenerate. "If you continue in my word," saith Christ, "then are ye my disciples indeed," John viii. 31, and, "if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," Rom. viii. 9.

Note, Lastly, That this seems to be directed against the false and pernicious conceptions of the Jewish doctors, the scribes and pharisees, who thought they had a title to the kingdom of heaven, and the blessings of it, as being the "seed of Abraham according to the flesh;" and promised to all Israelites on that account, a portion in the world to come; declaring, saith Justin Martyr,* that "to all that were of the seed of Abraham, though they were sinners, and disobedient to God's laws, should be given an eternal kingdom."

[3] Ver. 5. Ἐὰν μὴ γεννηθῇ ἐξ ὕδατος, If a man be not born of water.] That our Lord speaks here of baptismal regeneration, the whole Christian church from the beginning hath always taught, and that with very good reason; for,

First, Though water is sometimes put to signify or represent the purifying operations of the Holy Spirit, yet to be "born of water" is a phrase never used in scripture for being born of the Spirit; but very properly is it used of that baptism which is the laver of regeneration (Tit. iii. 5), and was by all the ancients styled παλιγγενεσία, or "regeneration" (see note on 1 Cor. vii. 14).

Secondly, To be "baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Matt. iii. 11, Luke iii. 16), is to be baptized with the Holy Ghost descending on the apostles in the symbol of fire, as the event declared, the Holy Ghost falling upon them "in the shape of cloven tongues like as of fire" (Acts ii. 2, 3), and therefore, in like manner, to be baptized "with water and the Holy Ghost," most likely signifies to be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with the symbol of water.

Thirdly, The question betwixt Christ and Nicodemus was about that which was requisite to fit a man to enter into the kingdom, that is, the church of God, and to make him partaker of the blessings of the gospel. Now it is certain that baptism by water is by our Lord declared to be the ordinary means of entering into his kingdom; for he saith, Mark xvi. 16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," or of becoming one of Christ's disciples; for he not only made disciples by baptism (John iv. 1), but gave commission to his apostles "to make disciples in all nations by baptizing them" (Matt. xxviii. 19), and therefore must here speak of that: hence, even when the Holy Ghost was actually fallen upon Cornelius and his friends, St. Peter commands them "to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus," i. e. to be admitted to be Christ's disciples by that rite, and looks upon it as a necessary consequent of that higher baptism (Acts x. 47, 48). Christ therefore here declares it to be a rite necessary for the entrance of adult persons into his kingdom; and it seems highly reasonable to esteem so of it: for what salvation can be expected by them, who, after he hath told them they must be baptized with water, that they may enter into his kingdom, do by refusing that sacrament, too plainly show that they refuse that way of entering into his kingdom, and becoming his disciples, which he had appointed for that end? But then here,

First, Infants must be excepted from this necessity, as being incapable of knowing, and therefore of transgressing, this command; they therefore shall not suffer in their eternal interests for the mistake or neglect of any of their parents.

Secondly, They also are to be excepted, who want that baptism they desire, not out of contempt, but of necessity, as dying before they can procure it: thus, though the infants who died before the eighth day died without the sign of the covenant, the Jews never thought fit to circumcise them before that day; and since it is not the washing of the body, but the "stipulation of a good conscience," that renders baptism saving (1 Pet. iii. 21), it cannot be purely the want, but the contempt of that, which must condemn us. And,

Thirdly, Whatever ignorance of the precept, or mistake about the nature of it, renders not men incapable of baptism by the Holy Ghost, can never render them incapable of the salvation promised to the baptized.

[4] Ver. 6. Τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς σάρξ ἐστι, That which is born of the flesh is flesh (only).] Our parents being only the fathers of the flesh, Heb. xii. 9. Whence it is that it cannot be sufficient to entitle infants to the blessings of the kingdom without baptism, that they are born of Christian parents according to the flesh, but that some operation of the Spirit is necessary to fit them for the kingdom of heaven. Hence some infer, that man in his natural estate can do nothing but

---

* Ὑπολαμβάνοντες ὅτι πάντως τοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς σπορᾶς τῆς κατὰ σάρκα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ οὖσι, καν ἁμαρτωλοί εἰσι, καὶ ἄπιστοι, καὶ ἐπιζεῖς πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, ἡ βασιλεία ἡ αἰώνιος δοθήσεται. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 369, C.

and (but) that which is born of the Spirit is spirit (i. e. is acted by, and lives after, the motions and directions of the Holy Spirit, Rom. viii. 5.

7 And) Marvel not that I (have) said unto thee, Ye must be born again (because this birth is not discernible by the eye of sense, nor do men fully know the manner how this new birth is wrought within them by the Spirit; for thus it is in other matters: as, for example,)

8 The [5] wind bloweth where it listeth (as the vapours move it), and thou hearest the sound thereof (and by that discernest the thing itself), but (yet thou) canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth (though it certainly came from one place, and goeth certainly to another): so is (it with) every one that is born of the Spirit. (The effects produced in him by the Holy Spirit plainly show a great change in him, and he himself perceives it: but the operations of the Spirit, producing this change, are not perceptible to others, nor is the renewed person always able to perceive and distinguish them from the inward workings of his own mind.)

9 Nicodemus answered and said unto him, (I apprehend not:) how can these things be?

10 Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou [6] a master (διδάσκαλος a teacher) of Israel (one of those who say of their baptized proselytes, they are as new-born babes, and of wisdom, that it comes from above), and (yet) knowest not these things?

11 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; (that is, I deliver to you what I know certainly to be true;) and ye receive not our witness (i. e. you do not believe and own that truth which, by my miracles, is confirmed).

12 If I have told you (of) earthly things (or that which may be represented to you by similitudes taken from earthly things, or things done by you here on earth), and ye believe (them) not, how shall ye believe, if (when) I tell you of heavenly things (i. e. of things which cannot be thus represented, viz. of my descent from heaven, and abode still there)?

13 And (yet no other person can acquaint you with these heavenly things, for) [7] no man hath ascended up to heaven (to learn them there, see note on Rom. x. 6), but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man, which (according to his divine nature) is in heaven (while ye see him here on earth).

14 ¶ And (yet, as great as this Son of man is, he must die for the sins of men; for) as Moses lifted up the

---

what is carnal, and therefore sinful, and only can begin to do what is truly good when he is born again of the Spirit: whereas,

First, This exposition renders it impossible for a man to do any thing towards his own conversion; and so renders all God's commands and exhortations to the wicked, to turn themselves from their iniquity, all his promises of pardon to them that do so, and all his threats of death if they neglect to do so, and all his complaints against them that they would not do so, vain and absurd; and, as Cyril of Alexandria saith, βαψῳδημα κενὸν, "a vain rhapsody," they being then only commands and exhortations to others, to perform that which, if it ever be done, he must do himself.

Secondly, This exposition makes the word "flesh" and "fleshly birth" to signify one corrupted by his fleshly appetite, and so led and governed by the motions of the flesh; whereas Tolet* well observes, that to be "born of the flesh" here only signifies that natural generation by which a man is born into the world of the will of the flesh, this being the only birth Nicodemus spake of as of a thing incredible; because then a man must enter twice into his mother's womb. This therefore is the plain meaning of our Lord, that besides that natural birth, by which we receive only our flesh and body from our parents, there is need of a spiritual birth to fit us for the kingdom of God; but he saith nothing of any necessity lying upon us, till we are thus born again, to do only evil, or of our incapacity to do any thing which may contribute to this new birth.

[5] Ver. 8. Τὸ πνεῦμα, The wind bloweth where it listeth.] They who would say that the word πνεῦμα signifies here, not the wind, but the Holy Spirit, first destroy the comparison intimated in the word οὕτως, so; and secondly, they make Christ say that Nicodemus heard the voice of the Spirit, which is not very probable.

[6] Ver. 10. Art thou ὁ διδάσκαλος, a master (or teacher) in Israel?] These being received maxims among the Jews that "wisdom is given from above" (Targ. in Eccles. vii. 7), and that "when a man is a proselyte he is reputed as an infant new born" (Seld. de Jure Nat. lib. ii. cap. 4), our Saviour might well admire, that a teacher of Israel should have no notion of a new birth by water, or a birth from above.

[7] Ver. 13. And no man hath ascended into heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man, ὁ ὢν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, who is in heaven.] The Jews say, for the honour of their prophet Moses, that he ascended לשמיא מרומא, "into the high heavens," Targ. in Cant. i. 5. 11, 12. That this was not true of Moses these words of Christ show, and the history of Moses, which saith he only ascended to mount Sinai; but of Christ, who in the beginning was with the Father (i. 1), and "who came down from heaven" to do and to declare his Father's will (iii. 35), this is most true: but then he is said, as to his divine nature, to descend from heaven, not by a local descent, or by quitting heaven, but only by a manifestation of himself on earth; in which sense God himself is said, in the Old Testament, to descend to see the tower of Babel, Gen. xi. 5, and to confound the lips of them that built it, ver. 7, and to see the iniquity of Sodom, Gen. xviii. 21, and to deliver his people from the hand of the Egyptians, Exod. iii. 8, and to give them the law, Exod. xix. 18. And thus, saith St. Austin, he is said to descend, not when he from heaven observes what is done on earth, for that is metaphorically to "look down from heaven;" but when he doth something upon earth beyond the usual course of nature, which therefore seemeth to require his more than ordinary presence there; and then he is usually said to appear, either attended by his holy angels, or in a flame or cloud of glory, the symbol of his majestic presence. Note,

Secondly, That those things are frequently ascribed by this evangelist to Christ, which neither do nor can agree, and which elsewhere are not ascribed, to any creature, viz. that he is he who "in the beginning was with God," i. 1, ὁ ὢν, "that is in the bosom of the Father," ver. 18, ὁ ὢν παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ, "that is with God," vi. 46, and here, "who is in heaven." Now this never was nor could be said of a mere creature: for, as Woltzogenius confesseth, no creature can be in heaven and on the earth at the same time. The gloss of Grotius here is this, Singulari Dei dono nobis concessus est, "He is given to us by the special gift of God;" but this answers not the fullness of the phrase, "He came from heaven;" for all the prophets were sent to the Jews, and the apostles both to Jews and gentiles, by the especial gift and kindness of God, and yet none of them are said to "come down from heaven;" Christ is styled "the Lord from heaven," 1 Cor. xv. 47, as coming down from thence to judge the world, 1 Thess. iv. 16; the new Jerusalem is said to come down from heaven, Rev. iii. 12, xxi. 2. 10, because it was represented so in a vision to St. John: the baptism of John is said to be from heaven; but neither he nor his doctrine to descend from heaven (see the note on John vi. 32). In vain do some Socinians produce, as parallel expressions, those words of St. Paul, "He hath seated us in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus," Eph. ii. 6, and "Our city is in heaven," Phil. iii. 20, for the last only signifies that heaven is the place where we are to dwell for ever; the first, that Christ hath exalted the human nature thither. Their strength consists in their second answer, viz. that ὁ ὢν is to be rendered "who was with God," and "who was in heaven;" and this, say they, is here apparent, because Christ

---

* Multùm à vero sensû loci hujus aberrant, qui carnem hôc loco exponunt de peccato, cùm nihil hic de peccato agatur: et quamvis nullum esset peccatum, verum esset, "quod natum est ex carne, caro est."

serpent in the wilderness, (that they, who were bitten by poisonous serpents, and so would otherwise have died, looking up to it, might live, Numb. xxi. 8, 9,) even so must the Son of man be [8] lifted up (upon the cross):

15 That whosoever believeth in him should not perish (by that death, which the temptation of the old serpent brought upon all the sons of Adam), but (being delivered from it by the death of this Son of man, who is the antitype of that brazen serpent, might) have eternal life.

16 ¶ (Nor is it to be wondered, that God should thus suffer his only begotten Son to die, this being only the effect of his great love to mankind;) For [9] God so loved the world, that he gave (up) his only begotten Son (to death for us all, Rom. viii. 32), that whosoever believeth in him should not perish (by lying still under the power of death), but (by rising from it, John v. 28, 29, should) have everlasting life.

17 For (surely) God (acting thus in pursuance of his great love to the world) sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the [10] world through him might be saved (by faith in him.

---

speaks of himself as "the Son of man," both here and vi. 62. To which it might be answered, that Christ in these places saith, "The Son of man is in heaven," as St. Peter saith, "The Prince of life was crucified," Acts iii. 15; St. Paul, that "the Lord of glory suffered," 1 Cor. ii. 8, and that "God" purchased a church "with his own blood," Acts xx. 28, viz. the Son of man is in heaven, not as the Son of man, but as the Son of God. But that which fundamentally destroys this answer, is this consideration, that it is not true that Christ, as to his human nature, "in the beginning was with God, or was in heaven:" yes, say they, after his baptism he was taken up into heaven, there to be made acquainted with the will of God. But,

First, This sophism is sufficiently confuted by the profound silence of all the evangelists concerning it; for they tell us very particularly of very many things concerning Christ which are comparatively of little moment, of his circumcision, of the flight with him into Egypt, of his stay in the temple, of his being carried by the tempter into a very high mountain, and his being placed by him on a pinnacle of the temple; can we then reasonably think the wisdom of the Holy Spirit would neglect to record that ascent of Christ into heaven on which his divine wisdom, and the truth of his whole prophetic office did so much depend? It is true the argument is negative; but then in matters of great moment to the establishment of our faith in what this our great Prophet taught, and to advance him above all other prophets, as this ascent must be, even Schlictingius allows such arguments; it being not reasonable, saith he, to suppose the wisdom of the Holy Ghost, in matters of this nature and importance, should be wholly silent.

Secondly, To what end should our Saviour be thus snatched up into heaven, or what necessity was there of it? Could not the Father declare his will to him, as to other prophets, while he was on earth? Surely an almighty and all-present God could as well do this out of heaven as in it; or was it because he would not do this to him upon earth? This cannot truly be affirmed, seeing Christ was anointed, and filled with that Spirit by which he performed his prophetic office, not in heaven, but on earth: there was it that "the Spirit descended on him as a dove," Matt. iii. 16, and by virtue of this Spirit he received at Jordan, "he taught in the synagogues, and was glorified of all," Luke iv. 14, 15; by this Spirit he was "sanctified" for his office, and "sent into the world," John x. 36; by this unction the Father sent him to "preach remission of sins, and the acceptable year of the Lord," Luke iv. 18, 19; on this account he spake the words of God, "because the Father had given him the Spirit not by measure," here, ver. 34: whence it appears that Christ was fitted for this prophetic office by that Spirit he received on earth. Well, then, either our Lord was taken up into heaven to be thus instructed, before this unction he received on earth, or afterward; if before, this unction of the Spirit must be needless, unless God did his work imperfectly in heaven, and gave him there no full and perfect knowledge of his will; if after this unction, this ascent was needless, he being by it filled with the Spirit of wisdom, counsel, and power, above measure. What therefore could be wanting to him, who, from this Spirit, had received all the treasures of wisdom and power to perform the greatest miracles for the discharge of his prophetic function? (see Placæus, Disp. prima et secunda, and note on John vi. 61.)

[8] Ver. 14. Οὕτως ὑψωθῆναι δεῖ υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, &c. So must the Son of man be lifted up, that all that believe in him may have eternal life.] He saith not here, as the Socinians, that the death of Christ was necessary for the confirmation of the gospel; but with the fathers, that it was necessary to procure to us life eternal, by removing that death which sin had brought upon us. Note also, that as ὑψωθῆναι here and viii. 28, xii. 32, is to be lifted up upon the cross, so Rabbi Solomon interprets the pole on which the serpent was lifted up, "a fork;" and Justin Martyr,* Tertullian,† and Barnabas‡ say this was a figure of the cross, and that it was a symbol of salvation; he that turned to it being preserved from death, not by what he saw, but by the Saviour of all men.

[9] Ver. 16. God so loved the world, &c.] Two things in scripture are noted as indications of God's especial love to man: (1.) that he sent his Son into the world to die for him: (2.) that he who was thus sent, was υἱὸς ἴδιος καὶ μονογενὴς, "his proper and only Son," Rom. viii. 32, 1 John iv. 9, 10.

Obj. Woltzogenius here saith, (1.) that this Son of God could not be God, since then he must be his own Son.

Ans. It only follows hence, that he could not be God the Father; but yet he might be God of God by the union of the Λόγος, or the divine nature, to his human nature.

Obj. But then, saith he, God must have suffered.

Ans. It follows only hence, that he who suffered was God, but not that he suffered as God; and this those ancient fathers well understood, who read Heb. ii. 9, that Christ suffered, χωρὶς Θεοῦ, "his divinity suffering nothing."

Obj. Hence he objects against Christ's satisfaction thus; seeing God showed the highest love to men in sending thus his Son to die for them, he could not then be angry with them, and therefore could require no atonement to be made to him for them; Christ therefore could not die to reconcile this kind and loving God to the world.

Ans. To this I answer, that we are taught by plain examples of holy scripture, that love or benevolence in God towards the sinner is well consistent with his displeasure against him for his sin, as in the case of Job's three friends; "For the Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My anger is kindled against thee and thy two friends, because ye have not spoken of me the things which are right" (Job xlii. 7); in which words there is a declaration of God's anger against them for their sin, exactly parallel to that of God supposed by us in this case; and yet we find a like expression of his love in the ensuing words, "Therefore take to you now seven bullocks and seven rams, and go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering, for him will I accept, lest I deal with you after your folly." God's love is visible in directing them to that sacrifice which would obtain his favour, but it was only after the oblation offered, and the prayer of Job, that ἔλυσε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτοῖς, "he forgave their sins." Again, did not God show his kindness to his people Israel, in admitting a beast to suffer in their stead, and appointing his blood to make atonement for them; and yet did not he himself require this atonement to be made, that so their sins might be forgiven? Did not he appoint this blood to be offered to him as a propitiation for their sins? And did not then the victim die? And was not his blood offered to reconcile this loving God to sinners? And is it not hence evident, that God's love to sinners is well consistent with his displeasure against them for sins?

[10] Ver. 17. For God sent not his Son to condemn the

---

* Τύπος σταυροῦ. Apol. ii. p. 91.

† Figuram designâsse Dominicæ Crucis. Tertul. De Idol. cap. 5.

‡ Barn. i. 12. Σύμβολον ἔχοντες σωτηρίας——ὁ γὰρ ἐπιστραφεὶς οὐ διὰ τὸν θεωρούμενον ἐσώζετο, ἀλλὰ διὰ πάντων σωτῆρα. Just. Dial. p. 321, 322

18 ¶ And therefore) He that (having heard his doctrine, and seen the miracles by which it is confirmed) believeth on him is not condemned (there being no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, Rom. viii. 1): but he that (after the knowledge of this salutary doctrine) believeth not is condemned already, because he (after such conviction) hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

19 And this is (the ground of) the condemnation (of such a man,) that (he continues in his infidelity, not for want of light, but from a love to his sins; for) light is come into the world, and (these) men (have) loved (to continue in) darkness [11] rather than (to embrace the) light, because their deeds were evil.

20 (And this is the proper effect of a prevailing love to sin,) For every one that doeth evil (naturally) hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest (the evil of) his deeds should be (discovered and) reproved (by it).

21 But he that doth (sincerely love) the truth cometh to the light, that (by it) his deeds may be made manifest (both to himself and others), that they are wrought in (the fear, and according to the will of) God.

22 ¶ After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judæa; and there he tarried with them, and (by them) [12] baptized (iv. 2, to prepare the Jews by the baptism of repentance, as John did, for the reception of the Messiah; see the note on this verse).

23 ¶ And John also was baptizing in Ænon, near to Salim (the place being convenient for that purpose), [13] because there was much water there: and they (the people) came (to him), and were baptized (of him there).

24 For John was not yet cast into prison (by Herod).

25 ¶ Then there arose a question (or dispute) between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. (It being without example to baptize a Jew; and they being styled δοῦλοι Θεοῦ καθαροί, the pure servants of God, Neh. ii. 20, and thought to be born in holiness, the pharisees might ask what need there was of any baptism to purify them; and if John's baptism was sufficient for this end, why did Christ set up another after it, which seemed to argue him greater than John, and that his baptism must confer some higher degree of purity?)

26 And (upon this) they came unto John (for satisfaction in this matter), and (by way of complaint) said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan (to be baptized of thee), to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth (i. e. he takes upon him thy office, as if thy baptism were imperfect), and all men come to him (i. e. the concourse to him is so great, that we fear thy baptism will be neglected).

27 John answered and said, [14] A man can receive nothing (of power or authority), except it be given him from heaven.

28 Ye yourselves (can) bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but (only) that I am sent before him (to prepare his way: seeing then God hath only made me his forerunner, I must not pretend to an equality with him, whose forerunner and servant I am).

29 He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him (Gr. standing and hearing him caress and express his affection to his spouse), rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice (Christ is this bridegroom, and the church is his bride, I only am the bridegroom's friend): this my joy therefore is fulfilled (by hearing that he is thus graciously speaking to his church, and calling her, by this and other methods, to fit herself for his embraces).

30 He must increase (in his glory, and the extent of his government, Luke i. 32, 33), but I (his forerunner, whose office ceaseth, when he comes and manifests himself to the world) must decrease.

---

world, but that ὁ κόσμος the world by him might be saved.] The Jews imagined that God first made the world only for their sakes (2 Esd. vi. 55, 56. 59), and also, that the redemption of it was only designed for their good, and that their Messiah would come to subdue and condemn the nations whom he hated. Christ, on the contrary, here declares, that God was so far from hating or condemning them, that he sent the Messiah into the world to save them, and consequently to die for them.

Vain here is their imagination, who by the world understand only the elect out of the world: for then Christ here must only say, that he was sent, that the elect who believed in him should not perish; as if any who were absolutely elected to salvation by faith in him could either perish or not believe. No, it is apparent from these words, that of this world, thus beloved by God, some would not believe, and so would perish. And this is more apparent from the words immediately following, in which the world, which he was sent to save, is divided into believers and unbelievers, and into those that will be saved and condemned: for thus they run, "He (of this world) who believeth in him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is now condemned," which must be false, if you restrain this "world" to such elect as cannot perish, and cannot but believe to life eternal. And, lastly, he that believeth not, saith Christ, shall therefore be condemned, "because he believeth not in the name of the only Son of God." Now, is it not absurd to say, men shall eternally be condemned for not believing in him, who died not for them, and was not sent for their salvation? Since then Christ frequently declares, that all to whom the gospel is propounded, shall be condemned, if, and because, they believe not in him (John iii. 18), it is certain that he died for the salvation of them also.

[11] Ver. 19. And men have loved darkness more than light, μᾶλλον τὸ σκότος ἢ τὸ φῶς.] Here the critics note, that μᾶλλον ἢ is not comparative, as if the workers of iniquity did, in some measure, love the light; for ver. 20, they are said to hate it; but, as in other places, is a negative: so xii. 43, "They loved the praise of men, μᾶλλον ἤπερ, more than the praise of God," i. e. and not the praise of God: so 1 Tim. i. 4, 2 Tim. iii. 4, Heb. xi. 25, in which places μᾶλλον ἢ may be rendered, as here, "and not light;" and this they did not only in those times of ignorance at which God winked (Acts xvii. 30), but after the clear light had shined upon them; by which it appeared, that the deeds of darkness were so pleasing to them, that, when they were discovered to them so to be, they still bore that affection to them which rendered the light displeasing to them, because it did reprove them: whereas they who had hearts disposed to obey that light which would direct them in the way to happiness, came to it, that they might be the more assured they were doing the works of God, i. e. those works which were performed according to his will, which tended to his glory, and chiefly did respect him as the end and object of them.

[12] Ver. 22. Καὶ ἐβάπτιζεν, And he baptized.] By his disciples (iv. 2), not, as most interpreters conceive, into his own name, or so as to exact from them a belief, that he was the Christ: for this he forbids his disciples to divulge till he was risen from the dead, Matt. xvi. 20, xvii. 9. He therefore only did baptize as John had done, into the faith of the Messiah, which was to come, and with that baptism of repentance which prepared the Jews for the reception of his kingdom.

[13] Ver. 23. Ὅτι ὕδατα πολλὰ ἦν ἐκεῖ, Because there was much water there.] In which their whole bodies might be dipped; for in this manner only was the Jewish baptism performed, by a descent into the water (Acts viii. 38), and an ascent out of it (ver. 39), and a burial in it (Rom. vi. 3, 4, Col. ii. 12). Some here inquire, why Christ should thus baptize when John had not desisted so to do? But since both, by their baptism, intended the same thing, I see no reason why our Saviour might not as well baptize as preach repentance (Matt. iv. 17), whilst the Baptist was doing the same thing.

[14] Ver. 27. A man can receive nothing of himself.] i. e. One who, by divine authority, is intrusted with any commission, cannot exceed that commission; since therefore God hath only made me the forerunner of the Messiah, as 31 (And it is reasonable to own him superior to me, and all the other prophets, which ever came into the world, even than Moses himself; for) He that cometh from above (not only by his mission from God, as I and they did; but by his original, ver. 13) is above all (that are descended of earthly parents only: and) he that is (thus) [15] of the earth is earthly (as to his rise), and speaketh of the earth (i. e. things which, comparatively, are earthly, Moses of carnal ordinances, I of water-baptism, the prophets of obedience to the law of Moses: but) he that cometh from heaven (to reveal the will of God to man) is above all (not only in the excellency of his person, but in the spiritual and heavenly nature of his doctrines and promises).

32 [16] And what he hath seen (by the irradiation) and heard (by the immediate dictate of the Holy Ghost dwelling in him), that he testifieth (to the world); and (yet) no man receiveth his testimony (i. e. they who receive it, compared with them that do not, are as none).

33 He that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal (i. e. declared his assurance) that God is true (both in his promises concerning the Messiah, and in his testimonies that he hath given to him, that this is his beloved Son; it being as impossible, that he who is sent with such heavenly doctrine, confirmed by so great testimonies from heaven, should be a deceiver, as that God himself should lie).

34 For he whom God hath sent (so as no other prophet was sent) [17] speaketh the words of God (so as no other prophet did): for God giveth not the Spirit by measure (or, in a limited manner) unto him (as he did to them, so as to come to them only at such times, and to impart such a particular revelation; for in him were all the hidden treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. ii. 3.

35 And) The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand; (the entire knowledge and revelation of his will, and the power to give eternal life to those that believe and obey it, John xvii. 2, and to condemn everlastingly those that obey not his gospel, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8.

36 And therefore) He that believeth on the Son (may be sure he) hath (a present right to, and shall hereafter receive) everlasting life: and (but) he that believeth not the Son (but rejecteth his authority and doctrine) shall not see (i. e. enjoy this) life; but the wrath of God abideth on him (for ever).

I have told you, ver. 28, I cannot pretend to be equal with him.

[15] Ver. 31. Ὁ ὢν ἐκ τῆς γῆς, &c. He that is of the earth is earthly.] See the paraphrase; and note, that ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων is an epithet proper to God alone, and yet ascribed to Christ, Rom. ix. 5.

[16] Ver. 32. Καὶ ὃ ἑώρακε καὶ ἤκουσε, τοῦτο μαρτυρεῖ, And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifies.] i. e. What he fully knows; for by seeing and hearing we come to the most perfect knowledge of things; or what he hath inwardly heard and seen by the dictate and irradiation of the Holy Spirit.

[17] Ver. 34. He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not to him the Spirit by measure.] i. e. He that hath the Spirit in a limited manner, at such times only, and with respect to such particular revelations only, may sometimes speak from his own self; but he who hath the Spirit always residing in him, without stint or measure, must always speak the word of God. To give a thing "in measure," in the scripture phrase, is to do it sparingly; as when it is said, "They shall drink water by measure," Ezek. iv. 16, and to correct "in measure," Jer. xlvi. 28, xxx. 11, is to do it sparingly, or in such a proportion: in which sense we read of the "measure of faith," Rom. xii. 3, and the "measure and gift of Christ," Eph. iv. 7; so that to give the Spirit "without measure," is to give him in the greatest affluence, and without restraint.

CHAPTER IV.

1 When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John (the Baptist),

2 (Though (in truth) Jesus himself baptized not, but (only) his disciples,) (see the note on iii. 22,)

3 He (in prospect of the danger this might bring upon him from the envy and malice of these pharisees) left Judæa (where the power of the Sanhedrin, of which many of them were members, prevailed), and departed again into Galilee (where they had less interest with Herod, and could less observe or be offended with his actions).

4 And he must needs go [1] through Samaria (that lying betwixt Judea and Galilee).

5 Then cometh he (Gr. he cometh therefore) to a city of Samaria, which is called (by them Sichem, but by the Jews, see the note,) [2] Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob [3] gave to his son Joseph (at his last benediction, Gen. xlviii. 22).

6 Now Jacob's well (i. e. a well bearing his name) was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat [4] thus (weary and thirsty as he was) on (or by) the well: and it was about the sixth hour (i. e. it was then about noon.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 4. He must go through Samaria.] For, saith Josephus,* "the Galileans going up to Jerusalem at the feast, went through the country of Samaria."

[2] Ver. 5. He cometh to a city of Samaria called Σίχαρ, Sichar.] It is certain from the son of Sirach (l. 26), and from Josephus (Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 8), that the name of the city was Sichem. This therefore is either a corrupt pronunciation, as Βελιὰρ for Βελιὰλ, or a name of reproach put upon it by the Jews, שכר, as if it were a city of drunkards, as Achan, Josh. vii. 25, is called עכר, 1 Chron. ii. 7, as being a "troubler of Israel."

[3] The parcel of ground which Jacob gave to his son Joseph.] i. e. That piece of ground which he bought of Hamor, the father of Sichem, Gen. xxxiii. 19, for that was near Sichem, saith the text here: and hence this place became not only the inheritance of Joseph, but his own burial-place; he being buried, not in the cave of Machpelah, as his father Jacob was (Gen. l. 13), nor saying, "I will lie with my fathers," as Jacob did (Gen. xlvii. 30), but being buried in this place: for the bones of Joseph, "which the children of Israel brought out of Egypt, buried they in (i. e. near to) Sichem, in a parcel of ground, which Jacob bought of Hamor, the father of Sichem, for a hundred pieces of silver; and it became the inheritance of the children of Joseph," Josh. xxiv. 32 (see Bochart. Hierozoic. par. i. lib. ii. cap. 43, p. 435, 436).

[4] Ver. 6. Ἐκαθίζετο οὕτως, He sat thus on the well.] i. e. Either weary or thirsty as he was; so Acts vii. 8, οὕτως, "So Abraham begat Isaac," i. e. being circumcised; 1 Kings ii. 7, "Show kindness to the sons of Barzillai, for οὕτως, so they came to me," i. e. with kindness; or, as Chrysostom and Theophylact have it, he sat ἁπλῶς ὡς ἔτυχε, "as he found a

* Ἔθος ἦν τοῖς Γαλιλαίοις ἐν ταῖς ἑορταῖς εἰς τὴν ἱερὰν πόλιν παραγενομένοις ὁδεύειν διὰ τῆς Σαμαρέων χώρας, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5.

7 Then) There cometh a woman of Samaria (to that well) to draw water: (and) Jesus saith unto her, Give me (some water) to drink.

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat) (and so could not draw it for him).

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? (this she had cause to wonder at,) [5] for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans (they would buy of them any thing: but they would receive no gratuity or kindness from them: see the note).

10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest [6] the gift of God (i. e. what an excellent gift the Holy Spirit is), and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink (i. e. how able he is to impart this gift to thee); thou wouldest have asked of him, and (then) he would have given thee (this) living water (which shall spring up so continually in him that hath it, that he shall thirst no more, ver. 15; see John vii. 38, 39).

11 The woman (thinking Christ only meant spring-water, that being, in the Hebrew idiom, living water, Gen. xxvi. 19) saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water (of which thou speakest)?

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well (for we claim our descent from him), and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall (soon after) thirst again:

14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him [7] shall never (have cause to) thirst (more); but the water that I shall give him (i. e. the Holy Spirit abiding in him) shall be in him (as) a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

15 The woman (still understanding him as grossly as she did before) saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not (any more), neither (may have farther need to) come hither to draw (water).

16 Jesus (being willing to prepare her to receive his doctrine, by convincing her that he was a prophet) saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come (ye both) hither.

17 The woman answered and saith, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well (i. e. truly) said, I have no husband:

18 For thou hast had five husbands (from whom thou hast been divorced for thy adulteries); and he whom thou now hast (i. e. cohabitest with) [8] is not thy husband (thou living with him in fornication): in that (therefore) saidst thou truly.

19 The woman (then) saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou (who so exactly knowest the secrets of my life, and that which I thought was known to God alone) art a prophet.

20 [9] Our fathers worshipped in this mountain (as we do); and ye (Jews) say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship (God; I ask therefore thy opinion in this case).

21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour (shortly) cometh, when ye shall [10] neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

22 (But to your question I answer, That) [11] Ye worship ye know not what (i. e. that God which you do not truly and savingly know; because ye know him place:" it follows, it was ὥρα ἕκτη, that is, saith one, six o'clock in the evening; St. John counting by the Roman hours in the gospel. But this mistake is plainly evident from i. 39, "They abode with him that day; for it was about the tenth hour;" viz. four in the afternoon, not ten of the night, according to the Romish computation.

---

[5] Ver. 9. Οὐ γὰρ συγχρῶνται Ἰουδαῖοι Σαμαρείταις, For the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.] So in the Jerusalem Talmud the Samaritans say, "Your fathers dealt with our fathers, why therefore do not you so likewise with us?" (Buxt. Lex. Tal. p. 1370.) By the traditions of the pharisees they might buy of them; and therefore Christ's disciples do not scruple at this (ver. 8); but they were not to borrow any thing of them, or receive any kindness from them, or drink of their water, or eat of their morsels; for they bound them under an anathema, not to eat of the fruit or morsel of a Cuthean, and held the eating of their flesh to be as bad as eating swine's flesh (R. Eliezer, cap. 38). But Christ, despising such traditions as had no foundation, either in the law of God or equity, and tended to the impairing the laws of common friendship or humanity, asks drink of this Samaritan woman, and eateth with them.

[6] Ver. 10. If thou hadst known τὴν δωρεὰν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the gift of God.] By "the gift of God" and "living water," Christ seems here to understand the Holy Spirit, represented in the Old Testament by "clean water," Ezek. xxxvi. 25. 27, and in the New, by "living water," John vii. 38, Rev. xxi. 6, xxii. 1. For (1.) spring-water is in the Hebrew idiom called living water, in opposition to that which stagnates: for life consisting in continual motion, by reason of the continual ebullition of this water, it is said to live (see Lev. xiv. 5. 50, xv. 13, Numb. xix. 17); hence it is here said to be water springing up (ver. 14). And (2.) this Holy Spirit, to be communicated to believers, is styled δωρεὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the gift of God," Acts viii. 20, ἡ δωρεὰ ἐπουράνιος, "the heavenly gift," Heb. vi. 4, ἡ δωρεά, "the gift," Acts xi. 17 (see the note on Rom. v. 17).

[7] Ver. 14. He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.] i. e. He never shall have need to thirst for the enjoyment of this Spirit, he being to abide with them for ever who have once received him (John xiv. 16), if they do not expel, quench, or grieve him; or, he shall thirst no more, because this Spirit will be in him the earnest of, and bring him to, that happy life, where there is no more thirst (Rev. vii. 16).

[8] Ver. 18. Is not thy husband.] See one reason in the paraphrase; others say, this is spoken, because she had divorced herself from her husbands, contrary to the law, which permitted not women to begin the divorce, and so was really the wife of some former husband then living (so Grotius).

[9] Ver. 20. Our fathers worshipped in this mountain.] We learn from Josephus* and from this woman, that the Samaritans, when they saw it for their advantage, pretended to be συγγενεῖς τῶν Ἰουδαίων, "allied to the Jews, to have Jacob for their father (ver. 12), καὶ ἐκ τοῦ Ἰωσήφου γενεαλογοῦντες αὐτοὺς ἐκγόνων Ἐφραίμου καὶ Μανασσεινοῦ, and deduced their genealogy from Ephraim and Manasses, the sons of Joseph;" they also contended, that mount Gerizim was the most ancient place of worship, because Abraham built there an altar to God (Gen. xii. 6, 7), and so did Jacob (Gen. xxxiii. 18), and therefore that was the place where sacrifices were to be offered before the temple at Jerusalem was built. But the Jews answered that the temple was built on the mountain of Moriah; in the place where Abraham offered up Isaac (Joseph. Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 10, p. 254, F), and that that was the place of worship throughout all generations (Targum in Chron. iii. 1; see Maimonides de Ædificio Templi, Tract. 1, cap. 2, §. 2).

[10] Ver. 21. Ὅτι οὔτε ἐν τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ, οὔτε ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις, Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem.] Josephus saith the contention betwixt the Jews and Samaritans was about the place to which they ought to bring those sacrifices and oblations by which God was then chiefly worshipped, the Jews declaring that it was their temple,† καὶ τὰς θυσίας ἐκεῖ πέμπειν ἀξιούντων, "and requiring that the sacrifices should be brought thither;" the Samaritans, that they should be brought to mount Gerizim. This controversy, saith Christ, will shortly be decided by removing the occasion of it, viz. this way of worshipping God by sacrifices; and by giving liberty to worship God with spiritual sacrifices in every place, as the prophet Malachi foretold, i. 11.

[11] Ver. 22. Ὑμεῖς προσκυνεῖτε ὃ οὐκ οἴδατε, Ye worship ye know not what, &c.] This, many think, is spoken with rela not according as he is revealed in his word): we know what (i. e. τὸ θεῖον ὃ, the divinity which) we worship (serving him according to those laws to which he had promised salvation): for salvation is of the Jews (and the terms of it are to be derived from them to others).

---

* Antiq. Jud. lib. xi. cap. 8, p. 386, B.

† Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 1.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is (instant), when the true worshippers shall worship the Father (not with carnal sacrifices as both now do, but) in [12] spirit (ual sacrifices: acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 5) and (not in the types and shadows of the law, as the Jews now do, nor in that erroneous manner as ye do, but) in (the) truth (of the gospel, John i. 17): for the Father seeketh such to worship him (Gr. such worshippers of him: for)

24 [13] God is a Spirit: and they that worship him (aright) must worship him in spirit and in truth (i. e. agreeably to his spiritual nature, by giving up their hearts and spirit to him; and according to his will, by serving him according to the precepts of the gospel).

25 The woman saith unto him, I know that Mes-

tion to some false objects of the worship, or to some idolatrous way of worship, which obtained among them. The Jews gave it out, that they worshipped God* "in the image of a dove;" but this seems plainly fabulous, and invented by the Jewish rabbins out of hatred to them: for, (1.) among the idols which they worshipped, when they came from Assyria to Samaria, there is not the least hint of any image of a dove worshipped by them. (2.) Josephus,† though he, in several places, inveighs against them sharply upon other accounts, doth never charge them with this crime, which shows it to be a later invention of their rabbins: and, (3.) it is a thing wholly inconsistent with the laws of Moses, which they then owned; for, as all images are forbidden by it, so it did require them to sacrifice the dove to God, and it was always judged an absurd thing to worship that which they did sacrifice (see Bochart. Hieroz. par. ii. lib. i. p. 6. 8).

Others say they worshipped God only as the topical god of that country; but though this may be true of them when they first came into Samaria, and retained their heathen sentiments; yet it could not be true of them after that, rejecting all their heathenish superstitions, they had embraced that law in which Jehovah is continually styled "the Maker of heaven and earth," and "the God of all the earth;" and when, as Epiphanius‡ saith, "They endeavoured to renounce all idolatry, and to own but one God."

But whereas Epiphanius and many of the Jews pronounce them guilty of latent idolatry, for worshipping God in that mountain where Jacob hid the idols of the nations, according to those words, Gen. xxxv. 4, "And they gave to Jacob all the strange gods that were in their hands, and Jacob buried them under the oak which was by Sichem:" it is not probable, that Christ should accuse them of false worship on the account of idols under ground, which they knew nothing of, and which they never did intend to worship. Observe then,

First, That the inquiry of the woman, and the dispute was, saith Josephus, only about the place of worship; and therefore it is very probable Christ's answer chiefly doth respect the place.

Secondly, That Christ, by saying to the Samaritan woman, that shortly they should not "worship the Father in that mountain," does tacitly own, that the Samaritans did worship the Father; nor doth he instruct her who was the true object of her worship, but only how she was to worship the true God.

Thirdly, When they came first to Samaria, it is observed that they knew not mishpat, the manner of worshipping the God of Israel (2 Kings xvii. 16). In this, saith Christ, you are still deficient, as not worshipping the God of Israel according to his prescription in the law, but according to your own inventions. You therefore may be truly said not to know him, whose will you observe not, neither worshipping him according to his nature in the spirit, nor according to that law, which is the rule of his worship, and according to which alone you can do him acceptable service: if then you would obtain salvation by the worship of him, you must do it according to the revelations made to the Jews, to whom, as the promise of a Saviour was given, so from them is salvation to come to the world, according to the promise made to their father Abraham, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

[12] Ver. 23. Shall worship the Father ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, in spirit and in truth.] That is, saith Origen, οὐ σαρκικαῖς θυσίαις, "not with carnal sacrifices, but with spiritual worship," or with those spiritual sacrifices, which are acceptable to God through Jesus Christ (1 Pet. ii. 5); οὐκ ἐν τύποις, "not in types, but according to the truth contained in them; for the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," John i. 17. Thus Philo saith, he brings to God, γνήσιον θεραπείαν, "the true worship, who brings, τὴν ἀληθειαν, ἁπλῆν, καὶ μόνην θυσίαν, truth, the simple, and the only sacrifice;" not he who uses washings and purgations of body, but defiles his soul; or who builds and adorns temples, and offers hecatombs upon the altar, περιπλάνεται γὰρ οὗτος τῆς πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ὁδοῦ, θρησκείαν ἀντὶ ὁσιότητος ἡγούμενος, "for he errs from the way of piety, as thinking outward worship is to be preferred to holiness" (L. quod deter. pot. p. 123, C, D).

Now, that we may thus worship God in spirit, we must lay, as the foundation, not only purity of body from all uncleanness, but of the soul also from all spiritual defilements, all pride and haughtiness of mind, all malice, envy, bitterness of spirit, all impure thoughts, and evil concupiscence; for these are styled "works of the flesh," Gal. v. 19. 21. Now, "they that are in the flesh," saith the apostle, "cannot please God" (Rom. viii. 8), nor can they "mind the things of the Lord," who are not pure in body and in spirit (1 Cor. vii. 34, 2 Cor. vii. 1), and with this the very heathens were so well acquainted, that they often taught that God was purâ mente colendus, "to be worshipped with a pure mind;" this was the best offering we could give,* and the best habitation we could build him.

Secondly, We must have just and awful thoughts of the divine Majesty, oft representing him to our thoughts as a God of infinite purity and justice, as well as power and wisdom, one who is always present with, and beholds all our secret thoughts and actions, in order to a future recompense; for by these apprehensions fixed in our hearts we shall be naturally induced to glorify him in our spirits (1 Cor. vi. 20): having laid this foundation, we must endeavour to walk humbly with God, subjecting ourselves wholly to his providence, being contented in all conditions in which he doth think fit to place us, and submitting our own wills to his good pleasure, which is in scripture styled poverty of spirit, Matt. v. 4, and the wisdom of the Spirit, Rom. viii. 26.

Thirdly, We must endeavour to resemble him as much as may be in holiness and righteousness, in truth, in goodness, and in mercy; for even the heathens say,† τιμήσεις τὸν Θεὸν ἄριστα, ἐὰν τῷ Θεῷ ὁμοίαν ὁμοιώσεις, "We then worship God best, when we are most like to him."

Fourthly, We must worship God from spiritual principles, a sincere love and filial reverence of him; and to spiritual ends, that we may promote his glory, and do what is well-pleasing to him; and after a spiritual manner, serving him with the whole heart, soul, and mind, and with a fervency of spirit.

[13] Ver. 24. Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς, God is a Spirit.] The article ὁ here shows, that God is the subject, and the Spirit is the pre-

* Talmud, Tr. Cholmi, cap. 1, f. 6.

† Lib. ii. et xi. fine; lib. x. cap. 1, 7, lib. xiii. cap. 6, lib. xviii. 35, lib. xx. 5.

‡ Εἰς τὸ μετατεθῆναι τῆς εἰδωλολατρίας, καὶ τὸν ἕνα Θεὸν ἐπιγνῶναι, Lib. i. Hær. 9, §. 2.

* Cultus autem Deorum est optimus, idemque castissimus, atque sanctissimus, plenissimusque pietatis, ut eos semper purâ, integrâ, incorruptâ et mente et voce veneremur. Cic. de Nat. Deorum, lib. ii. p. 53. Ὡς γὰρ οἱ αὐτοὶ ἄνδρες φασὶ ψυχῆς καθαρᾶς οἰκειότερον τόπον ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς Θεὸς οὐκ ἔχει. Hier. in Carm. Pyth. p. 15, et Seneca apud Lact. de Vero Cultû, lib. vi. cap. 25.

† Hier. in Carm. Pyth. p. 22. 25.

sias cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things (that we are to believe and do).

26 Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he (viz. the Messiah).

27 ¶ And upon this came his disciples, and [14] marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man said (to him), What seekest thou (of)? or, Why talkest thou with her?

28 The woman then left her waterpot (at the well), and went her way into the city, and saith to the men (of the city),

29 Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this (an evidence that he is) the Christ?

30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

31 ¶ In the mean while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

32 But he said unto them, [15] I have meat to eat that ye know not of (i. e. somewhat more valuable and pleasant to me than meat or drink).

33 Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat?

34 Jesus saith unto them, My meat (i. e. my delight) is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.

35 [16] Say not ye (proverbially, as an encouragement to the sower), There are yet four months, and then cometh (on the) harvest! behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest (i. e. look upon the Samaritans flocking to me to hear my doctrine, and you will see that the time of my spiritual harvest is already come).

36 And he that reapeth (this spiritual harvest, by bringing men to the faith) receiveth wages (for his labour), and gathereth fruit (not to sustain this mortal life, but) unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth (he that laboureth to prepare men for, and he that brings them to, the faith) may rejoice together (in the fruit of their labours).

37 And herein is that (proverbial) [17] saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth.

38 I (have) sent (or, do send) you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: other men laboured (the prophets, by foretelling the Messiah; the Baptist, by calling men to repentance, that they might be prepared to receive him), and ye are entered into their labours (and only are to perfect what they have begun).

39 ¶ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, (saying) He told me all that ever I did.

40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and [18] he abode there two days.

41 And (in that time) many more believed because of his own word;

42 And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know (by the excellency of his doctrine, and the holiness and goodness of his precepts) that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the [19] world.

43 ¶ Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee (passing not by Nazareth, the place of his education, but another way).

44 For Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath (comparatively) no honour in his own country.

45 Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galilæans received him (gladly), having seen all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast (of the passover): for they also went unto the feast.

46 So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman (a great man of Herod's court), whose son was sick at Capernaum.

47 (And) when he heard that Jesus was come out of Judæa into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

48 Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see [20] signs and wonders (done before your eyes), ye (Jews and Herodians) will not believe (on the account of the excellence and goodness of my doctrine, as the Samaritans did).

49 The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

50 Jesus saith unto him, (There is no need of my

---

dicate; and this opinion obtained among the Platonists, who style him Νοῦς, "a mind;" and among the Pythagoreans,* who said, ἀσωμάτους πρὸ παντὸς ἡγοῦ θεοὺς ὑπάρχειν, "Before all things you must hold the gods to be incorporeal." Aristotle also thought it necessary to assert, that the first mover was ἀμερὴς, or "without parts;" yea, even the stoics, saith Plutarch,† determined, that God was an "intelligent Spirit, without form."

[14] Ver. 27. They marvelled that he talked with the woman.] This being one of the six things, say the rabbins, which render a disciple impure, viz. that he talks with women (Buxtorf. Lexic. p. 1145).

[15] Ver. 32. I have meat to eat, &c.] This phrase is used by the ancients concerning things which were done by them with pleasure,‡ Istic mihi cibus est quod fabulare, "Thou sayest that which is meat to me." So the servant in Plautus, and another in Aristophanes,§ μάλα γ' ἐποπτεύειν ἔοικῶ, ὅταν καταράσωμαι λάθρα τῷ ἐσπότῃ, "It is meat to me to curse my master secretly."

[16] Ver. 35. Say you not, There be yet four months of the harvest, &c.] The sense of these words seemeth to run thus —In your common harvest you usually say, after your seed is sown, four months hence will come the harvest, or the time when you shall reap the fruit of the seed sown; but in this spiritual harvest it is otherwise: for the seed of the word sown in the heart of the woman of Samaria, in your absence, hath made the Samaritans already ripe for the harvest.

[17] Ver. 37. Ὁ λόγος, This saying.] So the scholiast in Aristophanes, κατὰ τὸν παλαιὸν λόγον, ἄλλοι μὲν σπείρουσι, ἄλλοι δ' αὖ ἀμήσονται, "According to the old proverb, One soweth, but another shall reap."

[18] Ver. 40. He abode there two days.] He abode there so long, that he might not contemn persons so desirous to learn of him; he stayed no longer, that he might not neglect the Jews, or seem to prefer the Samaritans before them; and he commanded his apostles not to go to any city of Samaria (Matt. xiii. 5), because the gospel was first to be preached to the Jews, and then to the Samaritans (Acts i. 8).

[19] Ver. 42. The Saviour of the world.] That is, saith Mr. Clerc, of the Jews; "for it is not likely the Samaritans thought of the salvation of the gentiles;" but why might they not think so, who knew, that "in the seed of Abraham were the families of the earth to be blessed?" and seeing the Samaritans were not Jews, had they used these words in that restrained sense, they had excluded themselves from this salvation. The word doth sometimes signify the multitude, or the public; as when Christ's brethren say to him, "Show thyself to the world," i. e. publicly, John vii. 4, and the pharisees, "The world is gone after him," John xii. 19, but never the Jews in opposition to the gentiles.

[20] Ver. 48. If ye see not signs and wonders ye will not believe.] Hence some interpreters conclude this nobleman was a Jew; it being no wonder, that a heathen should not believe without a miracle.

---

* Jamb. Protrept. p. 151.

† Phys. lib. viii. cap. 10. De Placit. Philo. lib. i. cap. 6.

‡ Cistel. act. iv. sc. 2. ver. 49.

§ Ib. Rams.

going down,) go thy way; (and thou shalt find) thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

51 And as he was now going down (to his house), his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth.

52 Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

53 So the father knew that it was at the same hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and (he) himself believed, and [21] his whole house.

54 This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judæa into Galilee.

[21] Ver. 53. Himself believed and his whole house.] i. e. All that by age were capable of doing so.

CHAPTER V.

1 After this there was a (nother) feast of the Jews; (viz. that of the passover, requiring the appearance of all the adult males at the temple, Deut. xvi. 16,) and (therefore) [1] Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

2 Now [2] there is at Jerusalem by the sheep market (or gate) a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda (the house of mercy), having five porches (in which the sick lay to be cured; for)

3 In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, (viz.) of blind, halt, withered (persons), waiting for the moving of the water.

4 For an [3] angel (visibly) went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled (i. e. shook) the water: whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.

5 And a certain man was there, which had (lain under) an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and knew (by his divine spirit) that he had been now a long time in that case, he (looking on him as an object worthy of compassion) saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

8 Jesus saith unto him, [4] Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

9 And immediately (at his word) the man was made whole, and (to show that he was so) took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day (that he did this) was the sabbath.

10 ¶ The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the sabbath day: it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed (on that day of rest).

11 He answered them, He that (with a word) made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk (and surely he that could heal me with a word, must be a prophet; and, therefore, must have authority to bid me do this).

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk? (that, knowing him, we may be the more able to judge of him.)

13 And he that was healed wist not who it was: for Jesus (having done this) had conveyed himself away (without being observed by him, as he might easily do), a multitude being in that place.

14 Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple (giv-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. Jesus went up to Jerusalem.] To hold communion with the Jewish church at the feast of the passover, by observing with them the rites to be observed at the feast; he therefore refused not communion with a church that had clogged these festivals with human traditions, though, perhaps, he performed only the rites required by the law at these festivals (see Dr. Lightfoot).

[2] Ver. 2. Ἔστι δέ, There is at Jerusalem by the sheep-gate a pool, called in the Hebrew Bethesda.] That is, "the house of mercy:" because of the mercy of God shown there in curing their diseases. Moreover, if ἔστι δέ, "there is," be the true reading, as the consent of almost all the Greek copies argues, it seems to intimate, that Jerusalem and this pool were then standing when St. John wrote this gospel, and therefore that it was written, as Theophylact and others say, before the destruction of Jerusalem, and not, as the more ancients fathers thought, long after.

[3] Ver. 4. An angel went down, κατὰ καιρὸν, at a certain season, and then he that first went down was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.] All the circumstances of this history show, that Dr. Hammond's conjecture, that "this angel was only an officer sent at a certain time to stir this pool," and that "the warm entrails cast into it communicated this healing virtue to these waters," though it seems to be supported by the authority of St. Chrysostom and Theophylact, is highly improbable. For (1.) how unlikely is it that this should be a natural means of curing all sorts of diseases without exception, "the blind, the halt, and the withered," ver. 3. (2.) That it should only cure the person that first stepped in, though he might be followed by others the same instant; for how should the natural virtue of this pool, impregnated with the warm entrails of so many sacrifices, extend itself only to one man? And (3.) how unlikely is it that it should do this only at one time of the year, viz. at the feast of passover? For this was done, not at several times, but only κατὰ καιρὸν, "at a certain time" (ver. 4). And, lastly, the very foundation of this surmise is taken away by that observation of Dr. Lightfoot, that there was a laver in the temple for the washing of those entrails, and so they were not likely to be washed in this pool.

It is farther to be noted, that these waters of Siloam were a type of the kingdom of David and of Christ; of the kingdom of David, according to these words, Isa. viii. 6, "Forasmuch at this people refuseth the waters of Siloah, that go softly," that is, saith the Targum, "the kingdom of David that rules them quietly;" and of Christ, according to those words of the same prophet, xii. 2, "With joy shall they draw water from the wells of salvation," whence Siloah is interpreted "sent" (see note on ix. 7). To this type of the Messiah God might therefore give this virtue about that time, to prepare the Jews to receive his advent who was sent to them; and when a fountain was to be "opened for sin and for uncleanness," Zech. xiii. 1, viz. that of the blood of Christ, might communicate this virtue to this pool, as a prefiguration of it; whence, as Tertullian* notes, "the virtue of this pool then ceased, when they, persevering in their infidelity, rejected our Saviour." And this might be one reason why the Jewish writers are so silent as to the virtues of this pool; because, by its signification, it related to Christ; and, by this miracle, confirmed his doctrine (see here Examen Millii in locum).

[4] Ver. 8. Arise, take up thy bed and walk.] Christ here requires not faith of him, because he had seen, and, perhaps, heard of none of his miracles; but he requires him to do that on the sabbath which was contrary to the letter of the law, to show he was a prophet, who, by their own rules, had power to require what was contrary to the ceremonial rest ing thanks to God for his cure), and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole (of a distemper laid upon thee for the punishment of thy sins): sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee (for thy insensibility and contempt of this mercy).

* Piscina Bethsaidæ, usque ad adventum Christi curando valetudines Israel, desiit à beneficiis deinde, cùm ex perseverantiâ furoris sui nomen Domini per ipsos blasphemaretur. Adv. Jud. cap. 13

15 The man (knowing now who had done this, and perhaps thinking himself obliged in gratitude to own the author of his cure, and hoping hereby to convince them that he was a prophet) departed (from the temple), [5] and told the Jews (who inquired after him that had done this) that it was Jesus, which had made him whole.

16 And (but though this cure demonstrated that he was sent from God, because no man could do these things except God were with him, John iii. 2. 9. 30—33, yet) therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath day (the doing any work on the sabbath-day being, by the law, as they thought, a capital crime, Exod. xxxi. 14, 15).

17 ¶ But Jesus answered them, [6] My Father worketh hitherto (he, from the beginning of the creation, till this present time, continues to give and preserve life, and do good on the sabbath-day), and I (after his example) work (that which is good and salutary to mankind on that day).

18 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was [7] his Father, (in a peculiar manner proper to him alone, πατέρα ἴδιον ἔλεγε τὸν Θεὸν, thereby) making himself equal with God (in nature, as a son to his father).

19 Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The [8] Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do (ing, Gr. i. e. without commission from him to do it, and certain knowledge that he doth what the Father would have done): for what things soever he doeth (ποιῇ, or ποιήσῃ, he would have done), these also (καὶ even) doeth the Son likewise (i. e. after his example as to the kind of them, according to his will as to the manner of doing them; whence you may be assured this action was done after his example, and according to his will, as to the time, as well as to the manner of it; and therefore cannot be worthy of blame).

20 For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him (by the Spirit with which he hath anointed him) all things that himself (his Son) doeth: and he will shew (i. e. incite and enable) him (by the same power, to do) greater works than these, (so) that ye may (i. e. will) marvel (at them, though you will not be convinced by them).

---

of the sabbath (see note on ix. 18); and to instruct them that to do this, not in contempt of the law, or for bodily advantage, but as a public testimony of the great goodness of God to us, tended rather to the sanctification than to the profanation of the sabbath, that day being sanctified to this very end, that men might employ it in glorifying and praising God for his benefits.

[5] Ver. 15. Told the Jews that Jesus had done this.] Not to accuse him to them, but partly out of gratitude, to own the author of this cure; and partly to excuse himself, as only doing this at the command of so great a prophet.

[6] Ver. 17. My Father worketh hitherto, &c.] Even from the time he rested from the works of the creation, continuing to preserve and govern all things he created, and do those things which tend to his glory and to the good of his creatures, even on the sabbath-day; and, in imitation of him, I do my wondrous works of mercy, to the glory of his name, upon that day; which, being divine, and done by his power and assistance, show that I do nothing in them contrary to his will. Thus Philo,* speaking of God's resting on the seventh day, saith, "We have declared, that God ceaseth not to work, but proceeds to the production of other things, as being not the artificer only, but the father of them."

[7] Ver. 18. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, ὅτι πατέρα ἴδιον ἔλεγε Θεὸν, ἴσον ἑαυτὸν ποιῶν τῷ Θεῷ, because he said, God was his own Father, making himself equal to God.] Here note,

First, That he is here said to style God his Father, after a manner proper and peculiar to himself, as being ὁ ἴδιος Θεοῦ υἱὸς, "the proper Son of God" (Rom. viii. 32), and so as being his son, not as Adam and the angels were, by creation, nor as good men are, by adoption only; in which sense the Jews pretended to have God for their Father (viii. 41), and in which sense both Philo† and the Jewish writers‡ speak of him as the Father of Israel, and of those who had a true knowledge of him; for, in this sense, to call himself "the Son of God," could neither be worthy of death, nor worse than the violation of the sabbath. It is therefore evident the Jews thought Christ, by saying "God was his Father," made himself his Son in such a manner as rendered him equal to God in nature, as a son is to his father; and yet they thought he did this, not as the Socinians say, by saying he did the works of his Father, but, as their words testify, by calling God his Father, in a sense peculiar to himself: and hence they accuse him of blasphemy, for saying that he was the Son of God, Matt. xxvi. 63—65, John x. 33. 36, which they never do, for saying he was the Messiah, or that he did the works of God. Note,

Secondly, Hence, that the Jews did not then think that their Messiah was to be God, or, in the sublimer sense, "the Son of God." Hence Origen* declares, that having discoursed with many wise men of the Jews, he "could find none of them who allowed Θεὸν ὄντα, ἢ Θεοῦ υἱὸς, that he was God, or the Son of God." And Jerome, on those words, Jer. xvii. 5, "Cursed is he who putteth his trust in man," saith, "The Jews are accursed, qui spem habent in homine Christo, videlicet suo, quem non Filium Dei, sed purum hominem putant esse venturum, who trust in a man, viz. in their Messiah, whom they expect to come as a mere man, and not as the Son of God."

[8] Ver. 19. The Son of Man can do nothing ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, of himself, ἐὰν μὴ τι βλέπει, but what he sees the Father doing.] The Jews concluding Christ to be a false prophet, because he, in this peculiar manner, styled "God his Father," Christ here undertakes to show, (1.) that he exercised his prophetic office according to the will of the Father: (2.) that he confirmed it by miracles done by the power of God residing in him. Christ therefore here seems not to speak of his essential power, but of his prophetic office, and of the doctrine which he taught and confirmed by miracles. (1.) Because as to his essential power, the action of the Father and the Son being one and the same, both as to power and time, he cannot properly be said to do nothing of himself, or to do nothing but what he sees the Father do. (2.) Because, as to speak nothing of himself is to speak nothing of his own instinct and will, without commission from God (see note on vii. 17): so to do nothing of himself, is to do nothing without commission from, and knowledge of the will of God, that he should do it, and so respecteth his prophetic office, and the things done in confirmation of it; and then the words following, "Unless he sees the Father doing them," must bear this sense; Unless he, by the Spirit of the Father residing in him, sees that the Father would have them done by him: for what the Father ποιῇ, "would have done," he doth according to his will, or as he would have them to be done. And this import of the words seems to be confirmed,

First, From the following words; "For the Father loveth

---

* Ἐληλύθασιν ἐὶ, ὅτι ποιῶν ὁ Θεὸς οὐ παύεται, ἀλλ' ἑτέρων γενέσεως ἄρχεται, ὅτε οὐ τεχνίτης μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάτηρ. L. primo Legis Alleg. p. 32, A. 33, D.

† Οἱ ἐὲ ἐπιστήμη κεχρημένοι ἑνὸς υἱοὶ Θεοῦ ἐεόντως προσαγορεύονται, καθὰ καὶ Μωσῆς ὁμολογεῖ φάσκων, Υἱοὶ ἐστε Κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ οὐκ αὐτός σου πατήρ. De Confus. Ling. p. 267.

‡ Est quidem cui nec filius, nec pater, hic est sanctus benedictus, nisi quòd Deus dilexit Israelem, et vocavit eos filios. Midrash Coheleth, fol. 93, 4.

* Lib. ii. p. 70, lib. iv. p. 162.

21 For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so (shall ye see that) the [9] Son quickeneth whom he will.

22 (And this power of quickening and raising whom he will the Father hath given him, because he hath made him the judge of all men;) For the Father judgeth no man, [10] but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: (who yet cannot judge them till he hath raised them from the dead.

23 And this he hath done) that all men should [11] honour the Son (for his power and authority over them), even as they honour the Father (the great Judge of all the earth, Gen. xviii. 25). He that honoureth not the Son (invested with this power) honoureth not the Father which hath sent (and authorized) him (to exercise it.

24 And having all judgment committed to me,) Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that (obediently) heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath (an assurance of) everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation (for his past sins); but is passed from (the) death (threatened to him) unto life.

---

the Son καὶ πάντα δείκνυσιν αὐτῷ ἃ ποιεῖ, and showeth him all things, which he (the Son) doeth;" and he will show him greater works than these (which are to be done by him, even that of raising the dead, ver. 21). For because we receive all our knowledge from our eyes, or ears, therefore Christ, speaking of the execution of his prophetic office, useth these metaphors, declaring that he spake and testified what he had seen (iii. 11), "what he had seen with the Father" (viii. 38), and so the Baptist saith, "What he hath seen he testifies;" and again, that he spake "what he had heard from the Father" (viii. 26, x. 15, 16). And because they who teach or declare things, do by that show them to us; therefore Christ uses this metaphor here, and saith, viii. 28, "I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, so I speak;" and again, xii. 49, 50, "I have spoken nothing of myself; but as the Father, who sent me, gave me commandment what I should say and speak; the things therefore which I speak, as the Father said to me, so I speak." Now, that he spake this with respect to the Spirit of prophecy, with which he was anointed, and by the Father sent to preach the gospel to the poor, &c., Luke iv. 11, the Baptist teacheth in these words, "What he hath seen and heard, that he testifies; for he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for the Father giveth not him the Spirit by measure" (iii. 32—34), and he himself intimates, by saying, xiv. 10, "The words that I speak to you, I speak not of myself; the Father abiding in me, he doeth the works" (see the note there).

Secondly, That he said truly, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," he proves from the divine works God the Father had given him power to do; though he was to do them after his resurrection and advancement to his kingdom, viz. the resurrection of the dead and the future judgment: and therefore adds, [9] Ver. 21. As the Father raiseth the dead, and quickeneth them, so the Son quickeneth whom he will.] This is more than ever was said of any prophet or apostle, that he did such works at his will; and here chiefly respects Christ, not acting as a prophet, but as a king, sitting at the right hand of power: and this being an action represented as proper to God, who saith, "I am, and there is none besides me; I kill and make alive," Deut. xxxii. 39, 1 Sam. ii. 6, a work to be performed by his sole power, Matt. xxii. 29, Acts xxvi. 8, and by the "strength of his power," Eph. i. 19, who is a God "quickening the dead," Rom. iv. 17; hence it is evident that Christ, who will not only "raise our mortal bodies," but also make them "like to his own glorious body, by that power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself," Phil. iii. 21, must be God; and that the Father, by giving him, "power to have life in himself, as he hath it in himself," ver. 26, must have given him the fullness of the Deity, from which this power is inseparable.

[10] Ver. 22. For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment to his Son.] Seeing this judgment is committed to him, it is evident, saith Woltzogenius, that he cannot be God the highest, because he reigns and judges by his own power, derived from none; and yet he owns, that in this judgment is comprehended totum regimen, et divinum totius mundi imperium, "an entire government and divine empire over the whole world, and especially over the whole church of God;" from whence it is demonstrable, that he must be God: for this government must be attended with a power of raising all them from the dead, whom he shall place before his judgment-seat, and with the perfect knowledge, not only of the actions of all men from the beginning of the world, but also of their secret thoughts; since otherwise he cannot "bring every secret thought and work into judgment," nor "bring to light the hidden things of darkness," or "manifest the secrets of the heart," 1 Cor. iv. 5, or "judge every man according to his works," 2 Cor. v. 10. He also must be omnipresent and omniscient, even the searcher of all hearts, that he may know and answer the prayers of all his servants in all corners of the earth, as the Socinians grant he doth; and almighty, that he may be able to supply all their wants, assist and enable them to do every where the greatest miracles in his name, defend and preserve them against all the powers on earth, and even the "gates of hell," raise and condemn their enemies, with the devil and his angels, to eternal destruction from his presence, and also crown his servants with everlasting glory. Now how all these things can be done by a mere creature, is as difficult to conceive as any mystery of the blessed Trinity. I answer, therefore, in that distinction of the schools, that the principium quod, or the person thus judging, is the Son of man, ver. 27, this judgment being to be exercised by the man Christ Jesus, Acts xvii. 31, but the principium quo, i. e. the power or the principle by which he does it, is the whole fullness of the Deity, individually united to his human nature, or the Word made flesh, John i. 14. This therefore hinders not, but he to whom this judgment is thus given, may be God of God.

[11] Ver. 23. That all men may honour the Son as they honour the Father.] That is, saith Woltzogenius, "that they owning this dignity and power, per quam Deo æqualis est, by which he is equal to God, may give him that obedience, honour, and worship, which are due to a divine and heavenly King: for that the honour and worship due to Christ, is divine honour, is evident from this, that it is such, qualis Patri debetur, as is due to the Father; to whom, by the consent of all men, belongs divine worship:" and hence he proves that Christ is to be worshipped with invocation; "because he who refuses to pray to him, doth not honour him as he honours the Father: in this (saith he) consists the highest honour we give to the Father, that we own him for the chief monarch, and Lord of all things, in whose power is our salvation and destruction; and therefore, by prayer, endeavour to obtain from him the enjoyment of good things, and the deliverance from evil: Qui hæc eadem in Christo agnoscit, et eum sic colit, is honorat, et colit eum sicut Patrem; He that owns these things to belong to Christ, and doth thus worship him, he honoureth the Son as he doth the Father;" so he: now can he be equal to God, who is only a creature, or be worthy of divine worship, who is no God? The precept being plain, and owned by Christ himself, "The Lord thy God is one Lord, and (therefore) thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve" (Deut. vi. 13, Matt. iv. 10). Can he, who said "Thou shalt worship no other gods but me, and I will not give my glory to another" (Isa. xlii. 8), himself appoint, that any creature should be worshipped as God, or have that honour, worship, and obedience, in which his glory doth consist? It is therefore no unjust imputation to call them idolaters, who give this worship to one who, say they, is by nature only man; seeing they do the very things charged on the heathen idolaters; "they worship them which by nature are no gods" (Gal. iv. 8); and do that to a creature, which God requires to be done to himself alone, viz. that they should "glorify him as God" (Rom. i. 21); and do that with which God upbraided his own people, viz. "the worshipping a new God, which their own fathers had not known" (Deut. xxxii. 17). If you say here, they give him the same worship, not as the first, but only as the intermediate cause of our salvation: it may be easily replied,

25 (And that you may have reason to believe I can thus raise the dead, ye shall see an instance of it shortly, not only in my resurrection, but in the rising of many others with me by my power; for) Verily, verily, I say unto you, [12] The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear (it) shall live.

26 For as the Father hath (the fountain of) life in himself (and so can impart life to others); so hath he given to the Son [13] to have life in himself;

27 And hath given him authority to execute judgment also (on the dead thus raised), because he is [14] the Son of man (whom he hath appointed the judge of the world, Acts xvii. 31).

28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which (not these few only, but) all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

29 And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and [15] they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

30 (And in passing this judgment of absolution and condemnation upon men,) I (the man Christ Jesus, Acts vii. 31, the Son of man, ver. 27,) can of mine own self (my own impulse and pleasure) do nothing: (but) as I hear, (i. e. receive the terms of absolution and condemnation from my Father, so) [16] I judge: and my judgment is (therefore) just; because I seek (i. e. pursue) not (in it) mine own will, but the will of the Father which which hath sent me.

31 (And) If (in ascribing this honour and power to myself) I (did) [17] bear witness of myself (and had no credentials from my Father, or those whom he hath sent), my witness is not true. (For he that pretends to be sent, or delegated from God, and hath not his testimony to confirm his mission, cannot be true; but this is not my case; for) that then they cannot honour him as they honour the Father; and much less as the chief monarch, and Lord of all things. Moreover, I inquire, Whether this middle cause be created, or uncreated? If uncreated, he is, by nature, God, and, since there is but one God, of the same essence with the Father; but if created, they must be guilty of idolatry who give him the same worship with the Father; and therefore give the creature the worship due to the Creator.

---

[12] Ver. 25. The hour—now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and live.] That Christ here speaks not only of a spiritual resurrection from the death of sin, is evident; (1.) because he speaks of it as a thing shortly future; whereas the spiritual resurrection was in some already past: (2.) because he promises this resurrection not to them that should hear his word, but φωνὴν, "his voice:" and that he speaks of a proper resurrection, appears, (1.) from the gradation he here makes from the resurrection of some to the resurrection of all, ver. 28; (2.) because he adds that "they who hear, shall live;" and that because the Son, whose voice they hear, "hath life in himself" (ver. 26); I therefore think that our Lord speaks of that hour, when, he rising from the dead, many bodies of the saints arose with him (Matt. xxvii. 52, 53).

[13] Ver. 26. He hath given the Son to have life in himself.] i. e. The power of raising whom he will (ver. 21). Hence, though the apostles and others raised men from the dead, it is said of none of them that they had life in themselves; because they did this, not by their own, but by the power of Christ. Note also, that the same thing is, in both places, said both of the Father and the Son: for it is not said, "The Father hath life from himself, the Son in himself," but both hath life, ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himself; and that as the Father, so the Son, "quickeneth whom he will." Now the operations follow the essence; so that where the same operation is, there must be the same essence.

[14] Ver. 27. Because he is the Son of man.] i. e. The Messias to whom all power and dominion is given (Dan. vii. 13, 14), and of whom the Jews* said, that he "should raise the dead;" or, because he took the human nature on him, he suffered in it, and, by that passion, became "the author of salvation to all that obey him" (Heb. v. 8, 9), and, lastly, in that nature only could be a visible judge (see Examen Millii in locum).

[15] Ver. 29. And they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation.] This seems to be spoken in opposition to the doctrine of the pharisees, who, saith Josephus,† thought "the resurrection pertained only to the just;" and that the wicked and antediluvian sinners were to be excluded from it.

"The hour is coming in which all they that are in the grave shall arise, and shall come forth, οἱ τὰ ἀγαθὰ ποιήσαντες, they (of them thus arising) who have done good, to the resurrection of life; οἱ δὲ τὰ φαῦλα πράξαντες, they (of them) who have done evil, to the resurrection of condemnation."

A late author* hath endeavoured to avoid the clear evidence of this text for a general sentence of all men to a life of future happiness or misery. I shall not here consider all his evasions, but observe only, that he is obliged, from the force of these words, "All that are in the graves shall come forth," to own, that all mankind shall arise; but yet he will not own, that the distribution of them, who thus come forth, into them "that have done good," and into them "that have done evil," contains all, but some of them only, viz. such as have had the gospel made known to them; which is as great an instance of a man, who shall say any thing ἐουλεύειν ὑποθέσει, to serve his hypothesis, as can be offered: for what instance can be given through the scripture of a universal proposition distributed into two parts, in which the opposite members do not contain the whole general? What is this, in effect, but to allow the truth of this general proposition, Omne animal est sensibile, "Every living creature is sensible," and yet to deny the truth of this distribution, τῶν δὲ αἰσθητῶν τὰ μὲν λογικὰ, τὰ δὲ ἄλογα, that "of sensible creatures, some are rational, some irrational?" Let us see the absurdity of it in some scripture instances: Matt. xxv. 32, "The Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory and, πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, all nations shall be gathered before him, and he shall place τὰ μὲν πρόβατα, the sheep on his right hand, τὰ δὲ ἐρίφια, but the goats on his left," ver. 33: now, must not here the sheep and the goats be equal to all nations? So again, Rom. ii. 6, God, saith the apostles, "will render ἑκάστῳ, to every man according to his works, τοῖς μέν, to them who, by patience in well-doing, seek for glory, honour, and incorruption, eternal life; τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας, but to those that are contentious, and obey not the truth, tribulation:" now, doth not this distribution, into the obedient and disobedient, contain all that are comprehended in the general word, "every man?" And doth not the apostle interpret the words so, ver. 9, 10, by saying, ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ψυχὴν, "Upon every soul of man that worketh evil shall be tribulation;" and πάντι τῷ ἐργαζομένῳ τὸ ἀγαθὸν, "to every one that worketh good, glory, honour, and peace?"

[16] Ver. 30. As I hear, κρίνω, I judge.] i. e. I pronounce sentence according to the will of my Father; for κρίμα and κρίσις is a sentence; so βλάσφημος κρίσις is "a blasphemous accusation," or sentence, 2 Pet. ii. 11, κρίμα θανάτου, "the sentence of death," Luke xxiv. 20, κρίμα τῆς πόρνης, "the sentence upon the whore," Rev. xvii. 1; and κρίνω, "I give sentence;" so ὀρθῶς ἔκρινας, Luke vii. 43, "Thou hast judged," or given sentence aright: "Out of thy mouth, κρινῶ σε, will I pronounce sentence upon thee," Luke xix. 22 (see Matt. vii. 1, 2, John vii. 24, viii. 15, Acts xv. 19, Rom. ii. 1. 3, iii. 4. 6, 7, Ps. li. 4).

[17] Ver. 31. If I bear witness of myself (only), my witness is not true:] i. e. Say most interpreters, it is not valid, the law requiring two witnesses. But to bear witness of himself here, is to declare himself a prophet without attestation from God, as the false prophets did; and had Christ done this, he must have been like them, and so his testimony would have been false; God never sending any prophet to

---

* R. Eliezer, cap. 34, p. 38.

† De Bello Jud. lib. iii. cap. 12.

* Mr. Dodwell.

32 ¶ There is [18] another that beareth witness of me (to wit, John the Baptist); and I know that the witness which he (being a prophet) witnesseth of me is true. (Ye also have heard his testimony, for)

33 Ye sent unto John (i. 22, 23), and he bare witness unto the truth (iii. 29, 30).

34 But (I appeal not to his testimony for my own sake, but for yours; for) I receive not testimony from man: but these things I say, that [19] ye (believing his testimony) might be saved.

35 He was a burning and a shining light (as Elias is by you represented, Ecclus. xlviii. 1, his word being clear and powerful): and ye were willing for a [20] season to rejoice in his light (owning him as a prophet, and a just man; and therefore I insist upon his testimony, as hoping it may have some influence upon you, to work that faith in you, by which you shall be saved, John x. 41).

36 ¶ But I have a greater witness than that of John: for the works which [21] the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do (by his power residing in me), bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

37 [22] And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me (by a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son; and by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon me, in the Shechinah, or bright light, which is the symbol of his presence; but on this I insist not, for) Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape (Ezek. i. 28, the likeness of the glory of God).

38 And (as ye have not known his will this way, so neither will ye do it by his revealed will; for) ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not (as his word would induce you to do).

39 ¶ [23] Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have (the words of) eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.

40 And (yet) ye will not (by them be persuaded to) [24] come to me (i. e. believe in me), that ye might have (the) life (I promise to them that believe in me.

41 And yet ye have no reason to disbelieve me; for) I receive not honour from men (I do nothing from desire of their applause, but purely for the honour of God, and out of love to him, and so act not like a false, but a true prophet).

42 But (this I cannot say of you; for) I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43 I am come in my Father's name (i. e. with his authority and testimony), and ye receive me not (i. e. ye do not own me as the promised Messiah): if another shall [25] come in his own name, (without any evidence of divine authority, even Barchochebas, and) him ye will receive (as such.

44 And indeed) How [26] can ye believe, which (strive to) receive honour (and glory) one of another, and seek not (rather) the honour that cometh from (the approbation of) God only?

45 Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: (I shall not need to do it; for) there is one that accuseth you (to him), even Moses, in whom ye trust (that, by obedience to his law, you shall have life, ver. 39).

46 For had ye believed (the words of) Moses, ye would have believed me: for [27] he wrote of me (saying, I will raise up a prophet like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, Deut. xviii. 18).

47 But if ye believe [28] not his writings (whom you own as a great prophet sent from God), how shall ye believe my words) when you have no such opinion of me, or respect for me)?

---

men without sufficient testimonies, that he was sent from him.

[18] Ver. 32. There is another that beareth witness of me.] viz. Whom ye counted as a prophet (Matt. xiv. 5, xxi. 26), and, upon that account, received his baptism: now, according to your own rules, "he is to be owned as a prophet, to whom a prophet gives his testimony."

[19] Ver. 34. But I spake these things, that ye might be saved.] Hence it is evident, that Christ seriously willed and intended the salvation of them, who "would not come to him that they might have life" (ver. 40), and therefore were not actually saved.

[20] Ver. 35. For a season ye rejoiced in his light.] He was a burning light, saith Christ here; "His word burned as a lamp," saith the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xlviii. 1, and yet in this light they rejoiced but for a season; for when he had freely given testimony to Christ, and reproved their vices, they blasphemed him, and said, "he had a devil" (Luke vii. 30. 33).

[21] Ver. 36. The work which my Father hath given me to do, &c.] He saith not, "Which I do," but "Which the Father hath given me to do;" so Woltzogenius: and yet the following words are ἃ ἐγὼ ποιῶ, "which I do." He therefore here declares, that he had sufficient testimony of his mission from the works done by him through the Father dwelling in him (Matt. xii. 28), and that the Father had given him to do them, by giving him his Spirit and his power, together with his essence (John iii. 34, 35, xiv. 10).

[22] Ver. 37. And the Father that sent me, beareth witness of me. You have neither heard his voice, nor seen his shape.] As in the paraphrase; or thus, Nor are you to expect the Father should testify of me otherwise than by his works: for that which was granted to your fathers belongs not to you, viz. to see his glory, and hear his voice out of the middle of the fire, Deut. v. 24, so that he cannot now be otherwise seen than by his works.

[23] Ver. 39. Ἐρευνᾶτε τὰς γραφὰς, Search.] Or, "Ye search the scriptures." Which of these two senses the Greek bears, I will not contend: only note, (1.) that Origen, Philoc. cap. 1 et cap. 5, Chrysostom, hom. 24 et 37, in Genesin, and St. Austin, in Ps. cviii. col. 1269, and Epist. 80, col. 365, confirm our version: note, (2.) that if the Jews did truly think the doctrine of life eternal was contained there, and that they, by searching, might find it there, it must be to them a sufficient rule of faith: if in this they erred, it behoved Christ to correct in them an error so pernicious.

[24] Ver. 40. Ye will not come to me.] i. e. After the clear testimonies which the prophecies and characters of the Messiah in the Old Testament afford, that "I am he," ye will not believe in me, which shows your infidelity is the result, not of simple ignorance, but of wilful obstinacy.

[25] Ver. 43. Another shall come in his own name.] Without commission or testimony from God: so did Barchochebas, working no miracles. Many of the fathers thought antichrist was here meant.

[26] Ver. 44. How can ye believe, who seek honour one of another?] And so cannot bear the reproach of the pharisees, and the chief of the Jews, or endure the infamy of being cast out of the synagogue, which is the sentence they have passed upon all that shall believe in me (xii. 42, 43); till you prefer the approbation of God before that of man, it is not to be expected ye should do it.

[27] Ver. 46. For he wrote of me.] viz. Deut. xviii. 17—19. Hence it follows, that those words of Moses are not primarily to be understood of a succession of prophets, but of a single person, even Christ; for "a prophet," saith he, "shall the Lord raise up to you like to me:" whereas no other prophet rose up to them like to Moses (Deut. xxxiv. 10), besides Christ (see the bishop of Ely on that place).

[28] Ver. 47. If ye believe not Moses.] For whom you pretend so great respect. Their pretences for not believing in Christ, were these two—their love to God, and reverence for the law of Moses: Christ proves they could have no true love to God, ver. 42, nor faith in Moses, ver. 46, for this very reason, that they believe not on him.

CHAPTER VI.

1 [1] After these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is (also named) the sea of Tiberias.

2 And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased (and because some of them also needed healing, Luke ix. 11).

3 And Jesus [2] went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

4 And the passover, (which was) a feast of the Jews (which all their males were bound to celebrate at Jerusalem), was nigh (to which the people were therefore hastening).

5 ¶ When Jesus then lifted up his eyse, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that (all) these may eat?

6 And this he said to prove him (who was slow of faith, xiv. 9): for he himself knew what he would do.

7 Philip answered him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 (Then the disciples desiring him to send the multitude away, that they might go into the villages, and buy themselves bread: and Christ answering, that they should give them to eat: and they inquiring, how they should do this? He asks them also, How many loaves have you? Mark vi. 36, 37.) One of his disciples, (to wit) Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, 9 There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?

10 And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11 And Jesus took the loaves; and when he had given thanks, he distributed (of them) to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes (both which were so miraculously increased as they went through his hands, that every one of that great company did eat) as much as they would.

12 (And) When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, [3] Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing (of God's good creatures) be lost.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and (to evidence the truth and greatness of the miracle) filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did (resembling that of Moses, who fed them with manna in the wilderness; and knowing he had told them, that God would raise them up a Prophet of their brethren like to him), said, This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world. (And having got a false notion that their Messiah was to be a temporal king; they, finding him so able to supply them with provisions, were minded to set him up for their king.)

15 ¶ When Jesus therefore [4] perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he (first sent away his own disciples, to whom he knew that motion would not be unacceptable, and then dispersed the multitude, Mark vi. 46, and so) departed again into a mountain himself alone.

16 And when even was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea,

17 And entered into a ship, and [5] went over the sea toward Capernaum. And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

18 And the sea arose (and was tempestuous) by reason of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about [6] five and twenty or thirty furlongs (about the fourth watch of the night, Mark vi. 48), they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh unto the ship: and (taking him for an apparition, ver. 49) they were afraid.

20 But he saith unto them, It is I; be not afraid.

21 Then they [7] willingly received him into the ship (believing that then all things would go well with them): and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

22 ¶ The day following, when [8] the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that (last night) there was none other boat there, save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone;

23 (Howbeit there came other boats (afterward) from Tiberias (which in the morning were found) nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks:)

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping (in those boats), and came to Capernaum (his usual habitation), seeking for Jesus (there).

25 And when they had found him on the other

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI

[1] Ver. 1. After these things.] Related in the former chapter; i. e. the year following (for he healed the man at the pool of Bethesda at the passover, saith Dr. Lightfoot, and fed the Jews with the five loaves the following passover, ver. 4), "he went over the sea to Galilee" (see the note on Matt. xiv. 13).

[2] Ver. 3. He went up into a mountain.] When Jesus went out of the ship, he saw the multitude come to the place (Matt. xiv. 14): but it was only when he sat down upon the mountain that he saw them come to him.

[3] Ver. 12. Gather the fragments, that nothing be lost.] That, by the nature of the bread remaining, it might appear, that there was no illusion in the miracle; and, by the command to save this bread, it appears, it is not simply unlawful to save any thing till the morrow; but only to be anxious for the morrow, Matt. vi. 14 (see Examen Millii).

[4] Ver. 15. Christ therefore knowing that they would come and make him a king.] He knew this, saith Stegmannus, by that Spirit and divine virtue, by which he was able to discern the secrets of men's hearts, and, knowing this, he would not be made a king, because his kingdom was not of this world (xviii. 38).

[5] Ver. 17. They went over the sea to Capernaum.] Into the land of Gennesaret, Matt. xiv. 34, they went over πρὸς Βηθσαϊδάν, "towards Bethsaida," Mark vi. 45. The desert of Bethsaida lying on the side of the sea of Galilee opposite to the city, they first crossed over that sea towards the city, and then sailed on along that sea to Capernaum, which was in the region Gennesaret (see Dr. Lightfoot's map, p. 308).

[6] Ver. 19. About five and twenty or thirty furlongs.] In matters of so small importance, the Spirit of God did not think it necessary to suggest the exact measure to them.

[7] Ver. 21. Ἤθελον, They were willing to take him into the ship.] Though Peter first walked to him on the sea, and then they came both into the ship (Matt. xiv. 30).

[8] Ver. 22. The multitude which stood on the other side of the sea.] For though Christ then sent them away (Matt. xiv. 43), they might return again the next morning.

side of the sea, they said unto him, [9] Rabbi, (thou wentest not last night with thy disciples, nor saw we thee this morning where last night we left thee,) when (therefore) camest thou hither?

26 (But) Jesus (without satisfying their curiosity in this matter) answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles (as being so convinced by them as to hear and to obey my doctrine, from a desire to obtain by it eternal life, as ye should do), but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled (and expect the like benefit again: and therefore I say to you,)

27 [10] Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which (if you believe in him) the Son of man shall give unto you: for him hath God the Father sealed (i. e. hath shown that he hath authorized him to do this; and by giving him this miraculous power to feed your bodies, hath fully testified he is the person by him appointed to convey these blessings to the souls of men).

28 Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? (We have already the law of Moses, and know what God requires by that law: what farther duties, or what more pleasing to him, canst thou instruct us to perform?)

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work (most acceptable in the sight) of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.

30 They said therefore unto him, What sign shewest thou then (greater than Moses hath done), that we may see (it), and believe thee? what dost thou work (above what Moses did?

31 Thou hast indeed fed us one day in a desert, but) Our fathers did eat manna in the desert (through which Moses led them, forty years; and that was heavenly food); as it is written (Ps. lxxviii. 25), He gave them [11] bread from heaven to eat (and so they had by Moses a sign from heaven of his commission: such a one would we see from thee, Mark viii. 11).

32 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven (which I exhort you to labour for, and of which the

---

[9] Ver. 25. Rabbi, when camest thou hither?] It was usual with Christ to answer nothing to curious questions, not tending to edification, but to divert them from them to more profitable subjects (so Luke xiii. 23, 24, John xii. 34, 35).

[10] Ver. 27. Labour not for the meat which perisheth.] The Massalian heretics, say Chrysostom and Theophylact, abused these words, to prove it was not lawful for them to work to sustain this present life: by which doctrine, saith Chrysostom, they do ὅλον διαβάλλειν τὸν Χριστιανισμόν, "wholly subvert Christianity," commanding Christians to "work with their hands that which is good" (Eph. iv. 28), "to do their own business, and to work with their hands" (1 Thess. iv. 11); and he confutes them with the example of St. Paul, "labouring with his own hands night and day" (Acts xviii. 3, xx. 34, 1 Thess. ii. 2, 2 Thess. iii. 8), and of the other apostles (1 Cor. iv. 12). These words are therefore to be taken not absolutely, but comparatively; i. e. Do not chiefly and primarily labour for the meat that perisheth; but let your regard for that meat which nourisheth to eternal life, be so great, as that your concern for perishing enjoyments shall be comparatively as nothing: in which sense only we are bid not to take thought for food and raiment (Matt. vi. 28. 31), not to fear them who can kill the body (Matt. x. 28), not to seek earthly things (Col. iii. 2).

But chiefly here observe, that whereas Christ, in this whole chapter, speaks of believing in him, and in his salutary passion, and of receiving his doctrine, under the metaphor of meat and drink, he doth this by a metaphor very familiar to the eastern nations, and frequent in the Jewish writers; thus Wisdom "crieth in the streets, Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine that I have mingled," Prov. ix. 5, that is, "Go in the way of understanding," ver. 6, "Eat you that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness," Isa. lv. 2, that is, "Hear, and your soul shall live," ver. 3. Thus doth the son of Sirach introduce Wisdom, saying, "They that eat me shall yet be hungry, and they that drink me shall yet be thirsty," Ecclus. xxiv. 21, i. e. they that obey me (ver. 22). Hence Philo* often speaks of prudence, wisdom, virtue, as the food of the soul, or that spiritual meat and drink which nourisheth to life eternal. So to eat of "every tree in paradise" is, saith he, "an exhortation, τὴν ψυχὴν μὲν ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν ἀρετῶν ὠφελεῖσθαι, that the soul should receive advantage by all virtues. The soul," saith he, "is nourished with knowledge, not with meat and drink; for the scripture testifies,† ὅτι οὐ γῆϊνοι ἀλλ' οὐράνιοι αἱ ψυχῆς τροφαί, that the food of the soul is not earthly but heavenly, by saying, I rain down bread from heaven;" and this principle, "that God is the beginning and the end of all things, brings forth piety,‡ κάλλιστον καὶ τροφιμώτατον καρπόν, which is the best and most nourishing food." And the Talmudists* say, that "all eating and drinking, mentioned in the book of Ecclesiastes, relates to the law and good works;" and that their wise men are that "staff of bread," of which Solomon saith, "Come, eat of my bread" (see ver. 32). So that the sense of these words is this, Labour by faith in me, and embracing my doctrine, to obtain that eternal life, which the Son of God will give to you; for he is to be lifted up upon the cross, "that every one that believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life" (iii. 16, 17), and "him hath God the Father sealed," i. e. he hath by his authority commissioned, and by his testimony owned him to be that Prophet and Messiah, from whom all blessings are to be expected; and, by anointing him with his Spirit above measure, hath, as it were, set his seal in confirmation of his message; so that you may be sure the life he promises, in his Father's name, shall be given you: so Christ expounds himself, ver. 29, saying, "This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent," i. e. this is that which he commands, and which is highly acceptable to him; so "the sacrifices of God are a broken and a contrite heart," Ps. li. 17, i. e. these are the most acceptable sacrifices to him; and "the righteousness of God" (Rom. i. 17, 2 Cor. v. 21), is that righteousness, which he alone accepts.

[11] Ver. 31, 32. He gave them bread from heaven: Moses gave them not that bread from heaven, &c.] That we may the better understand what Christ here saith of himself, as the "true bread coming down from heaven, that they might eat of it, and live;" note,

First, From what hath been observed on ver. 27, that, among the orientals and Jewish writers,† to eat ἐστὶ τὸ φαγεῖν σύμβολον τροφῆς ψυχικῆς, "is used as a symbol of the food of the soul;" because the soul, saith Philo,‡ "is nourished by receiving and practising good things;" and "wisdom, temperance, and piety, are ψυχῆς τροφαὶ τῆς θηλάζειν ἱκανῆς, the food of a soul that can suck them in."

Secondly, They say, that divine wisdom was this meat and drink of the soul, according to that exhortation of wisdom, Prov. ix. 5, "Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine that I have mingled." Thus Philo§ saith of the ascetic employed in divine contemplations, ὑπὸ Θεοῦ ποτίζεται κάλλιστον πότον, σοφίαν, "God gives him to drink of the best drink, wisdom, even from the fountain of his own wisdom." Accordingly Christ, the wisdom of the Father, saith, "He that drinketh of the water which I shall give him, shall never thirst," John iv. 14, vii. 38, 39 (see ver. 35).

Thirdly, They add, that this meat and drink comes down

---

* Lib. de Leg. Alleg. p. 44, E, F, G.

† Lib. ii. de Alleg. p. 64, B. 69, B, C.

‡ De Plant. Noæ, p. 175, E. Vide de Cherub. p. 94, E. Et reapuit Noa, p. 216.

* Midrash Coheleth, f. 88, 4. Hagigah. f, 14, 1. Maim. More Nev. lib. i. cap. 30.

† De Legis Alleg. p. 44, E.

‡ L. quod deter. p. 137, A.

§ Lib. iii. de Leg. Alleg. p. 153.

manna only was a type); but my Father (now) giveth you the true bread from heaven.

33 For [12] the bread of God (of which you spiritually are to eat) is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth (not a fading life, as manna did to the Jews, but everlasting) life unto the (whole) world.

34 Then said they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread (which will preserve our lives; still thinking that he only spake of this present life).

35 And (then) Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that [13] cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst (he being, by that faith, united to me, who am the life, xiv. 6, and partaking of that Spirit, which will be in him as a well of water springing up to eternal life, iv. 14, vii. 38, and so shall need no more to hunger or thirst after it).

36 But I said unto you, That ye also have seen me (doing works sufficient to convince you of the truth of what I say), and (yet) believe (me) not; (and I shall find still cause to say so to men so worldly-minded, and prejudiced against the truth.

37 But though it be thus with you,) [14] all that the Father sending his Son, the true heavenly manna, to them.

from heaven, and proves this from the words here cited by our Lord. So Philo* proves, that God only gives heavenly blessings, from those words of Moses, "I rain down bread from heaven; for what food," saith he, "can be rained down from thence, ὅτι μὴ τὴν οὐράνιον σοφίαν, but heavenly wisdom, which he sends down upon the soul desirous of it, who hath the fullness and abundance of it in himself!"

Fourthly, They declare, that this meat and drink is therefore to be preferred to corporeal food, because it nourisheth to eternal life, or renders them immortal, who partake of it. So Philo saith, that the "wisdom of God is the nurse and nourisher,† τῶν ἀφθάρτου διαίτης ἐριεμένων, of those that desire incorruptible diet." He adds, that "seeking what was the food of the soul, they found it was the Word of God, ‡καὶ θεῖος Λόγος, and the divine Word, ἀφ' οὗ πᾶσαι παιδείαι, καὶ σοφίαι βίουσιν ἀένναοι, from whom all eternal wisdom and instruction flow, and that this was the heavenly food of which Moses said, I rain down bread from heaven;" and that this "wisdom of God gives to the soul that drinketh of it,§ ἀμετάβλητον ὑγίειαν, an unchangeable health." And even Pythagoras instructed parents to provide for their children, not what would preserve the body to old age, but τὰ τὴν ψυχὴν θρέψαντα ἀϊδίῳ τροφῇ, "what would nourish their souls with eternal food" (Stob. Serm. 1, p. 3).

Lastly, They say, this meat and drink is the wisdom of God, and the Word of God, signified to them by that manna which fed the Jews, and by that rock which gave them drink; thus Philo‖ having said the wisdom of God was a solid rock, which could not be broken, he adds, τὴν πέτραν ταύτην ἑτέρωθι συνωνυμίᾳ χρώμενος καλεῖ μάννα τὸν πρεσβύτατον τῶν ὄντων Λόγον θεῖον, "that Moses called this rock, which was the most ancient of beings, the divine Word, by the synonymous name of manna; the good man," saith he, "lifts up his eyes to heaven, ἀφορῶν τὸ μάννα, τὸν θεῖον Λόγον τὸν οὐράνιον, τῆς φιλοθεαμένης ψυχῆς ἄφθαρτον τροφὴν, looking to the manna, the divine and heavenly Word, the incorruptible food of the soul, which loves God." Ainsworth¶ also notes from R. Isaac and R. Menahem, that manna signified "the food of the just in the world to come," and others, that it was "a type of life eternal" (see Buxtorf's History of Manna, p. 336. 339. 352). From which observations it is easy to discern, why Christ here styles himself, "the bread which came down from heaven, and gave life to the world," viz. because he was that spiritual bread prefigured by the manna coming down from heaven; and why he saith, that not Moses, but his Father, "gave them the true bread from heaven," viz. because he only, by sending his Son from heaven, gave them that bread, which nourished to life eternal (ver. 49—51); and, lastly, why he insists so much upon this metaphor, viz. because it was familiar to the Jews, and used by their most celebrated writers.

Hence also we may see a probable reason why they desire a sign, i. e. "a sign from heaven" (Matt. xii. 38, Mark viii. 11), and do it for this reason, that their fathers "did eat bread from heaven" (ver. 30, 31); viz. they do it seeking an experiment, whether he was the Messiah, or not, they being used to say, that "as their first Redeemer made manna descend from heaven for them, so should their second Redeemer do;" and how appositely our Lord answers, that what they desired was already done, by his [12] Ver. 33. For the bread of God is he that cometh down from heaven, &c.] The oblations made to God are styled in the Old Testament, "the bread of God," though they were sacrifices of living creatures, and by the Septuagint δῶρα Θεοῦ, "the gifts of God," Lev. xxi. 6. 8, accordingly Christ styles his piacular victim by the same name; and whereas the Socinians say, Christ is here only said to "come down from heaven," not as being in heaven first, and then condescending to dwell on earth, but only as every "good and perfect gift" is said to "descend from above," James i. 17, I know not why the gifts of the Spirit, imparted then to believers by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and being gifts of illumination, may not be properly said to descend from above, even from the "Father of lights." That the Jews understood him in a sense intimating his coming down from heaven in a real sense, as from a place of his abode, appears from their murmuring at his words, on account of his earthly parentage (ver. 41, 42), which yet they could have had no cause to have done, had he meant this in such a sense only, in which all their own prophets must be allowed to come from heaven: moreover, thus even the Baptist came down from heaven, his authority, commission, and doctrine, being from heaven (Matt. xxi. 25); and yet he maketh this distinction betwixt himself and Christ, that he "was from earth;" but Christ was emphatically ὁ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐρχόμενος, "one coming from heaven." Secondly, The antithesis put here betwixt Christ and manna, and the declaration, that Christ was that bread, which the psalmist says was given them from heaven, shows the phrase must be used as a true descent from heaven, that manna and bread, of which the psalmist and Moses speak, coming down truly from the clouds of heaven. And, Thirdly, This is farther evident from Christ's question (ver. 62), "What if you shall see the Son of man ascending where he was before," i. e. to his Father? (xiv. 2) unless they will say, that, as his descent signified his having his commission, wisdom, and power from heaven, so his ascent signifies his deprivation of that commission, wisdom, and power.

[13] Ver. 35. He that cometh to me shall not hunger.] See note on iv. 14.

[14] Ver. 37. All that my Father giveth me shall come to me.] For explication of these words, let it be noted,

First, That to "believe in Christ," and to "come to him," is the same thing; so John v. 38, "In him whom the Father hath sent, ye believe not," is, ver. 40, "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life:" so John vii. 37, "If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink;" and, to encourage them to embrace this invitation, he adds, "He that cometh to me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water," ver. 38: so ver. 35 of this chapter, "He that cometh to me shall not hunger," is the same with the following words, "He that believeth in me shall not thirst:" so when Christ had said, "Ye have seen me and have not believed," he adds this reason of their incredulity, "You come not to me, because you are not given of the Father;" and ver. 40. saith, "He that cometh to me I will not cast forth: for this is the will of my Father, that he, who hath seen the Son, and believed in him, should have eternal life." Note,

Secondly, That to be given of the Father cannot here signify to be absolutely chosen by him to eternal life: for then the Jews could not reasonably be accused for not coming to Christ, or not believing in him, much less that they would not believe or come to him; seeing, upon this supposition, that only they, whom God had absolutely

* De Nom. Mut. p. 839, F.
† L. quod deter. p. 137, A.
‡ De Profug. p. 367, A, B.
§ Lib. iii. Alleg. p. 853, A.
‖ L. quod deter. p. 137, C.
¶ On Exod. xvi. 14.
 Midr. Coheleth, f. 86, 4.

Father giveth me (i. e. all that he prevails on by the miracles he works by me, and the doctrine he teacheth me to deliver to the world, to judge of me as one sent from him to propound the terms of life eternal) shall come to me (i. e. embrace my doctrine, and believe in me); and him that cometh (thus) to me I will in no wise cast out (i. e. reject from that life).

38 For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.

39 And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, chosen to eternal life, could come to him, it was impossible they should believe who were not thus elected, and so it could not be imputed as their crime that they did not that thing which it was impossible for them to do; whereas it is certain that our Saviour represents it as their great sin, that "in him whom the Father had sent, they believed not" (John v. 38), and that they "would not come unto him that they might have life" (ver. 40), telling them, that the Spirit would convince them of sin, because they believed not in him" (John xvi. 9), and that they had "no excuse for that sin" (John. xv. 22. 24): whereas what better excuse could be made for them than this, that they could not come unto him, as not being elected by God to that life he offered, to induce them so to do? (2.) Hence it must follow, that Christ could not rationally have invited them to come to him, or called them to believe in him, who were not given him by the Father: for this was to invite them to come to him, that they might live, who, he well knew, could never come, as being never chosen to obtain that life; much less could he have told them, that this was the work which God required them to do, or that the Father had "given them this bread from heaven;" this being to require them, according to this supposition, to believe a lie, viz. that Christ was sent to be "the bread of life," and a Saviour to them for whom the Father never did intend salvation by him; and yet Christ manifestly says to them, who, seeing him, did not believe, and therefore were not given to him by the Father, "Labour for that meat which nourisheth to life eternal, which the Son of man shall give to you" (ver. 27), and that "this is the work of God, that ye believe in him that he hath sent" (ver. 29), and, "My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven, even him that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life (not to the elect only, but) to the world" (ver. 32, 33). I therefore here inquire thus, Was our Lord truly willing that those he speaks to should have life? If not, why doth he say, "These things I speak unto you, that ye might be saved (John v. 34); but ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life?" If so, why did he say, that "he did always those things which pleased him" (John viii. 29), and "could do nothing but what he saw his Father doing?" seeing it was not the Father's will that they should be saved, or come unto him, that they might have life, whom he had not given to him, that is, had not elected to salvation. Note,

---

Thirdly, That Christ here gives a reason why they believed not, viz. "You have seen, and yet believe not; because ye are not given to me of my Father:" now it is reasonable to conceive this reason should agree with all his other reasons assigned of their infidelity, which yet are manifestly founded, not on any thing wanting on the part of God, but on something wanting in themselves, that they might do so, viz.

1. That they came not to the light, "because their works were evil;" and, being so, they "hated the light, and would not come to it" (John iii. 19, 20); that they believed not in him, "because he spake the truth," which was distasteful to them (viii. 45).

2. Because "they had not the word of God abiding in them," nor believed God bearing witness to him, nor Moses speaking of him (John v. 38. 46), and so, not being taught of God, they would not learn.

3. Because they were not of God; "Ye therefore do not hear his word, because ye are not of God" (John viii. 47), and because they "had not the love of God in them" (John v. 40. 42).

4. Because "they preferred the praise of men before the praise of God," not seeking that glory which cometh of God only (John v. 44).

5. Because they were "not of his sheep," i. e. not docile nor disposed to hear his voice; "Ye therefore believe not, because ye are not of my sheep" (John x. 26).

6. Because, through the perverseness of their hearts, they could not hear his word; "Why do you not know my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word" (John viii. 43): and this they could not do, because "they were of their father the devil," and his works they would do. And therefore,

Fourthly, To be given of the Father, is, (1.) to be convinced by the miracles which God had wrought by him, to testify the truth of his mission, and thereby to set his seal unto him, that he was the Messiah and the Son of God, and to be willing, upon these testimonies, to own him as such; laying aside all those unreasonable prejudices and carnal affections which obstructed their coming to him. This appears (1.) from the description which Christ gives of those whom God had given him, viz. "They were thine, and thou gavest them to me; and they know that I came from thee, and they have believed that thou hast sent me" (John xvii. 6. 8): for this is spoken of Christ's disciples, of whom it is so often said, "They saw his miracles, and believed on him" (John ii. 11); by them they therefore knew that he came forth from God, and so are said to be given him of God, who, by these miracles, convinced them of this truth, and so they believed that he had sent him. (2.) This appears farther from these words, "There are some of you that believe not; for Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not" (sincerely), and saith, "Therefore I said to you, No man can come unto me except it were given him of my Father" (ver. 64, 65): for these men had not laid aside their prejudices against his words; they could not believe that he came down from heaven who was the son of Joseph (ver. 42); they murmured at his words, and were scandalized (ver. 61); "they went away from him, and walked no more after him;" and therefore, through their prejudices against his person and his doctrine, they could not prevail with themselves to think that he came forth from God; and, upon that account, Christ here informs us that he said, "No man can come unto me, unless it were given him of the Father." And (3.) this we may learn from a like expression in the book of Deuteronomy, xxix. 2—4, "Ye have seen all the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt, the great temptations, signs, and miracles which there he wrought; yet the Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day, ולא, and the Lord hath not given," or rather, "hath not the Lord given you?" ולא being put for הלא. So "Shall not Ammon go with us?" 2 Sam. xiii. 26; ולא ילך לבי הלך "Went not my heart with thee?" 2 Kings v. 26; so also Job ii. 10, Mal. ii. 15. For here it is manifest, that the way of God's giving them a heart to perceive, was by working those signs and miracles before their eyes which might induce them so to do; and yet, for want of this improvement of them to this end, it is admired that "the Lord hath not given them this heart," or is imputed as their great fault, that he had not given it; i. e. that after all he had done to produce it in them, they had it not.

(2.) Christ being sent by God the Father, that the world through him might be saved; and he having sent his Son to propound to them that eternal life which "was with the Father, and was manifested to us by his Son," and to propose to us the terms on which this life might be obtained (as Christ doth throughout this chapter); he is said to have "given us eternal life, and that this life is in his Son," 1 John v. 11, and that this is his record concerning him, and here, that "the Father had given him, the true bread from heaven, that giveth life unto the world" (ver. 32, 33). And they, who were so convinced of the truth of this promise by our Saviour's miracles, as to expect to receive it by faith in him, and obedience to his doctrine, and so affected with this promise of eternal life, as to esteem it above all other things, and so were willing to apply themselves to the performance of those duties which he required to obtain it, and to reject and quit those things which might obstruct them in the prosecution of it, are said to be "given to him of the Father;" because he wrought those miracles which that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing (i. e. should suffer none to perish, xvii. 12), but should [15] raise it up again at the last day.

40 And this (also) is the [16] will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son (i. e. discerneth him to be the prophet sent from God), and (therefore) believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I (for that end) will raise him up at the last day.

41 The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.*

42 And they said (one to another), Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he (being born of earthly parents) saith, I came down from heaven?

43 Jesus therefore answered and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves (on the account of these words; for it is not want of truth in my words, but want of affection to my doctrine, and due consideration of the testimonies God hath given to it, that makes you thus murmur at and reject them.

44 And indeed) No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me (by thus confirming my testimony, and disposing you to prize and value that eternal life I promise) [17] draw him (to believe and embrace my doctrine, and live according to it): and I will raise him up at the last day (who is thus drawn to believe and embrace it).

45 It is written in the prophets (That the kingdom

---

gave them this conviction; on which account, when Peter had confessed that he was the Christ, Christ answered, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this to thee, but my Father which is in heaven," Matt. xvi. 17 (see the note there); and because he gave this promise of eternal life, and sent his Son to reveal it to the world; and therefore when he saith to his apostles, whom the Father hath given him, "Will ye also go away?" Simon Peter answers, ver. 68, 69, "Lord, to whom should we go, seeing thou hast the words of eternal life? and we have believed, and know, that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Now it is evident, that all who have this strong conviction, that our Saviour came from God, and this concernment for that eternal life he promised, as the encouragement to come to him, will believe on him; because such persons can neither want assurance that they ought to do so, nor the most prevalent engagements so to do, as having that eternal life before their eyes, which they more value than all worldly things, and for which they are willing and prepared to quit all their lower interests.

[15] Ver. 39. But I will raise it up at the last day.] This being said of all who are given to Christ by the Father, it follows, that none of them shall rise till that day; and it being here said, they are to be raised to receive eternal life, which life is only to be enjoyed in the heavens, it follows, that none of them are to be raised to "reign with Christ a thousand years."

[16] Ver. 40. It is the will of him that sent me, that every one that believeth in me should not perish, but have everlasting life.] Some hence infer, that every true believer must persevere unto the end, since otherwise he cannot have this life eternal.

But to this, and to all other promises and declarations of a like nature, which engage, that God will give eternal life to the believer, I answer, that nothing is more evident, than that they can only be understood of such a faith as doth "endure to the end" (Matt. xxiv. 13), and so includeth perseverance in it: for either these promises are made to temporary believers, and so to those who after fall away, which is contrary to the tenor of the scripture, and makes the promises of eternal life, and the threats of perdition, belong to the same persons, viz. to them who, having lived by faith, draw back (Heb. x. 38, 39); or else they depend on this condition, that such men do continue in the faith, according to those express words, "He hath reconciled us to God, if we continue in the faith rooted and grounded, and be not drawn away from the hope of the gospel," Col. i. 21, 22; "We are Christ's household, if we hold our confidence and rejoicing of hope firm to the end," Heb. iii. 6, and ver. 14, "We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence firm to the end;" and then it is demonstratively certain, that perseverance is included in them, and made the condition on which the blessing promised doth depend, and therefore cannot be proved from them.

[17] Ver. 44. No man can come unto me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him.] For explication of these words, consider,

First, That to be drawn of God, cannot import our being moved by any inward and irresistible impressions from God, to believe in him: for then no man could come to Christ without these irresistible impressions; and therefore none could be blameworthy for not believing in him, because they could not do it without powerful impression, which God was not pleased to afford them; nor could it be praiseworthy to believe in him, because they only did so, when they could not choose but do it, as being acted in so doing by a force which they could not resist. And therefore,

Secondly, To be drawn of God, can only signify to be persuaded and prevailed on so to do, by the consideration of those mighty works, which God had done, to testify, that Christ was the true Messiah, and that prophet which he had sent into the world; to these Christ still appeals, as divine testimonies concerning him, by saying, "The works which my Father hath given me to do, bear witness of me," x. 25, by the consideration of them he persuades others to believe in him, saying, "Believe in me for my works' sake," John xiv. 11, and upon this account he represents the unbelieving Jews as inexcusable, that "he had done those works among them which never man did," xv. 22. 24, and all those works are said to be recorded, that "men might believe that Jesus is the Son of God; and, believing, might have life through his name," xx. 31, all which must convince us, that these things were sufficient to draw men to Christ; whence he himself speaks thus, "When I am lifted up, I will draw all men after me," xii. 32, viz. by the power of my resurrection, by which I shall so fully be demonstrated to be the Son of God, by the mission of the Holy Ghost, to confirm my resurrection and the truth of my doctrine, by signs and wonders, and powerful distributions of the Holy Ghost, as to be sufficient to prevail with all men to believe in me; though the event showed, that all men were not actually drawn to him by these means. Or,

Thirdly, To be moved by the great promise of eternal life to do it; for wheresoever there is any lively sense of that inestimable blessing, it strongly must engage us to use the means by which we may obtain it, and so to come to Christ, if from him only this blessing is to be expected; and this is a familiar sense of the word draw, both in the scripture and in other writings: thus God is said to "draw them by the cords of love," Hos. xi. 4, who yet were "bent to backsliding from him," ver. 7, and men are said to be "drawn away by their own lusts," Jam. i. 14. For, saith the poet, Trahit sua quemque voluptas, "Every man's pleasure draws him" to a compliance with it. Thus say the Jews,* "The master draws the scholar by his parables," i. e. incites him to learn; and a man is driven by wine, and by his pleasures; and it is a celebrated saying among them, that "a precept draws a precept, and a transgression draws on a transgression," i. e. one sin disposeth us to commit another, and obedience to one precept to obey another: and that we are only said to be "drawn" by the Father to Christ, viz. by his miracles and divine instructions, is evident from the words following: as the proof of this, "It is written, They shall be all taught of God; he therefore, who hath heard of the Father," i. e. perceived him speaking and doing his mighty works by me, "cometh to me." Without this drawing none can come to Christ; for none but God can give this promise of eternal life to encourage us to do so, and no power but that of God can work those miracles, which proved his commission from God; and hence Christ owns, that if he "had not done those miracles among them," they had had no sin of infidelity, John xv. 22. 24.

---

* Buxtorf. voce גרר p. 484.

of the Messiah shall be set up), and (then) they shall be all [18] taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard (the Father speaking in and by me), and hath learned of the Father (the truth of my doctrine), cometh unto me.

46 (This I say) Not that any man hath seen the Father (and so immediately is taught by him, this privilege none can claim), save (but) he which is (the only-begotten Son) of God, he (only) hath (thus) seen the Father.

47 (Being therefore thus alone acquainted with his will,) Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath (an assurance of) everlasting life.

48 (For) I am that bread of life (of which, if a man spiritually eat, he shall not die, ver. 50).

49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and (notwithstanding this they) are dead (most of them in their sins, and for their unbelief; and all of them, because it could neither preserve life nor restore it).

50 This (bread of which I speak) is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die (for the punishment, but for the abolition of sin, and then be raised to a state in which he can die no more).

51 I am the living (or life-giving) bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread (though he die), he shall live (again) for ever (by virtue of his eating of it): and the [19] bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give (up to the death) for the life of the world (that whosoever believeth in me thus dying for him may not perish, but have everlasting life, iii. 16).

52 The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat?

53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye (by faith in my death) [20] eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you (no spiritual life at present, nor any right to life eternal).

---

[18] Ver. 45. It is written, ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, in the prophets.] viz. Expressly, Isa. liv. 13, and in effect, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, in these words, "I will put my law in their hearts, and write it in their inward parts, and they shall not teach every man his neighbour, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall know me from the greatest unto the least."

They shall be taught of God.] Isa. liv. 13. Thus we are taught by his example; thus we are Θεοδίδακτοι, taught of God to love one another: (2.) by his Spirit, that unction, which taught the primitive Christians all things needful to be known, 1 John ii. 27: (3.) by his word; so, saith Clemens of Alexandria,* "are we taught of God:" and, lastly, by his Son delivering the mind of God to us as his prophet, and so giving us the knowledge of what he requires us to believe and do, in order to salvation: and, secondly, confirming the truth of what he thus delivered in his name, by miracles done by the finger of God, and so setting his seal to the doctrine taught. And of his teaching by God are these words to be understood; (1.) because the prophet Isaiah is there speaking of the setting up the kingdom of Christ, and of the teaching then promised. (2.) Thus is it that the Father draws men to Christ, of which these words are made the proof: see note on ver. 37. (3.) From the argument following, ver. 46, That they were not to expect to be taught immediately by the Father, as a scholar is taught by his master, seeing him present, and hearing him speak, but only by him that had seen the Father, and so spake, and did those things, which he had seen of the Father (John iii. 12, viii. 28, xii. 50): so that he who had seen him, had seen the Father (xiii. 9. 30). It is also evident from these words, "It is written, They shall all be taught of God," that this teaching must be common to all the Jews; but that is not true of God's internal and effectual teaching, but only of Christ's outward teaching. (4.) From Christ's inference, πᾶς οὖν, every man therefore, it follows, 1. that to be taught of God, is not inwardly to be taught by him, but only by hearing the doctrine of his Son: 2. that not all that are thus taught will come to Christ, but they only who have learnt of him.

[19] Ver. 51. And the bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give, &c.] Up to the death, to obtain that eternal life, which was lost by the sin of Adam. Hence it is evident, that Christ here speaks of faith in him, as suffering and shedding his blood for mankind, he being our propitiation only "through faith in his blood," Rom. iii. 25, and we being "reconciled to God by his death," Rom. v. 9, 10 (see here Examen Millii).

[20] Ver. 53, 54. Except ye eat the flesh, and drink the blood of the Son of man, you have no life in you.] To prove that Christ, in this chapter, speaks not of oral and sacramental eating, but only of doing this spiritually by faith in his blood, I premise,

First, That nothing was more common among the eastern nations than to use the metaphor of eating and drinking, when they speak not of corporeal meat or drink, which was to go into the mouth, but only of spiritual, to be fed on by the soul, as hath been fully proved already, note on ver. 27. 31, 32. Thus Clemens of Alexandria, discoursing upon that passage of St. Paul to the Corinthians, "I have fed you with milk, and not with strong meat," saith, that "milk is the rudiments of faith," or "the doctrine of the catechism, the first nourishment of the soul; strong meat a contemplation, which makes us to discern the divine power and essence; σάρκες αὗται καὶ αἷμα τοῦ Λόγου, these contemplations are the flesh and blood of the Word: βρῶσις γὰρ καὶ πόσις τοῦ θείου Λόγου ἡ γνῶσίς ἐστι τῆς θείας οὐσίας, the meat and drink of the divine Word is the knowledge of the divine essence;" and Irenæus saith that Christ "taught the weak τρώγειν καὶ πίνειν τὸν Λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, to eat and drink the divine Logos," lib. iv. cap. 74.

Secondly, That it is the same thing in this chapter, to "eat of the bread which came down from heaven," and to believe in Christ, breaking the bread of life to us by his doctrine, and offering himself a sacrifice and oblation for us to obtain that life; for when he had exhorted them to labour for the meat that did not perish, he tells them, ver. 29, that this was to believe on him whom God had sent. When he had told them, ver. 35, that he was the bread from heaven, he immediately adds, "He that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth in me shall never thirst." Having said that he was the "bread which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world," ver. 33, he confirms this expression, ver. 40, by these words, "This is the will of my Father, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, should have eternal life." And again, ver. 47, 48, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life: I am that bread of life."

Thirdly, Observe that, from these metaphors, our Lord proceeds to that contained in these words objected by the Roman doctors, ver. 51, "The bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world;" that is, it is my body, which I will give up unto death, that by it the world may have life. The Jews, taking these words in a gross sense, as if our Lord had promised to give his real flesh to be swallowed down their throats, and eaten by them, as they had eaten bread the day before, and as their forefathers had eaten manna in the wilderness, exclaiming against him, as promising a thing absurd, inhuman, and impossible, saying, "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" to this our Saviour answers, ver. 53, in words still more expressive of his violent and bloody death for the salvation of mankind, viz. "Except you eat my flesh, and drink my blood," &c. Now these words are by some conceived to import thus much: Unless you, with the mouth of your bodies, do eat my real and corporeal flesh, and drink my proper blood, you cannot have eternal life. Against this sense I argue,

First, from ver. 51, thus, "The flesh," which Christ here promised to "give for the life of the world," is the same with the "bread that cometh down from heaven;" if any man "eat of this bread, he shall live for ever," saith Christ, and

---

* Θεοδίδακτοι γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἱερὰ ὄντως γράμματα παρὰ τῷ Υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ παιδευόμενος. Strom. i. p. 318, ii. 396, 397.

54 But) Whoso eateth (thus) my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath (by that faith, an interest in) eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day (to enjoy it).

"the bread which I will give is my flesh, that I will give for the life of the world." And again, having said, "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life" (ver. 54), and "he that eateth me shall live by me" (ver. 57), he adds immediately, "This is the bread which came down from heaven;" and "he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever." Now our Lord hath expressly taught us, that eating of this bread of life imported only our believing in him (ver. 35), as hath already been made evident from our second observation; therefore, the eating of his flesh doth certainly import the same spiritual action. Moreover, we are only to eat of Christ's flesh, in that import of the phrase in which we are to eat of Christ as bread: for, as Christ saith, he "will give flesh to eat;" so doth he say, he "will give bread to eat;" as he saith, "He that eateth my flesh shall live for ever;" so he saith, "He that eateth of this bread shall live for ever;" but none could say, that Christ was, or could properly be, bread, or eaten by the mouth as such; wherefore he, being only figuratively and spiritually bread, could only figuratively and spiritually be to be eaten as such. If therefore in the same importance only we are to eat his flesh, that also is to be eaten in a spiritual sense.

Secondly, From these words, ver. 52, "How can this man give us flesh to eat?" it is evident the Jews conceived that our Lord promised to give them his proper flesh to eat, and swallow down their throats, as they had done the bread with which he fed them; and it on all hands is agreed, that they mistook the sense of Christ's words, and fancied such a meaning of them as he did not intend; but had our Lord intended the corporeal eating of his flesh, and drinking of his blood, it is certain that it must be swallowed down their throats as properly as the bread which they had eaten; and therefore no man, who maintaineth this corporeal eating of Christ's flesh to be intended here, can, suitably to his opinion, say, that they imposed a false sense upon our Saviour's words, since, from this sense it doth inevitably follow, that Christ intended that his human flesh should properly be eaten; and their words signify no more. Add to this one consideration, which shows what apprehensions the fathers of the first three centuries had of this eating of the flesh of Christ, viz. when it was objected to them by the heathens, that they did eat man's flesh, they constantly, in their apologies, reject the accusation as the vilest calumny, and as a most abominable thing, sufficient to discover the author of such an accusation must be some wicked demon. See this fully proved, note on Matt. xxvi. 26.

Thirdly, The fifty-third verse affords two farther arguments in refutation of the corporeal sense of these expressions: (1.) That it follows plainly from it, that the thief upon the cross, and all the pious and believing Jews who heard these words, and died before our Saviour's passion, must, of necessity, be damned: for our Lord saith, with an asseveration, to them, "Except you eat the flesh," &c. Now this was said at the passover then instant, ver. 4, and so at least above a year before our Saviour's passion, and so before the institution of that sacrament, in which alone his flesh could be corporeally eaten; and therefore, had it been intended of corporeal and sacramental eating, it was impossible that any person of those hearers could be saved, who died in the ensuing year. (2.) These words, interpreted in the corporeal sense, do plainly and inevitably infer, that they who do deprive the laity, all their whole lives, of drinking of this blood, expose them to inevitable damnation; Christ having said, "Except you drink the blood of the Son of man, you have no life in you." For though eating and drinking, being taken figuratively, do signify the same thing, viz. believing in a crucified Saviour, yet, being taken properly, they cannot be reputed the same thing. For albeit they who receive the body only, may be well said to eat the flesh of Christ, because they take something by way of meat into their mouths; yet cannot they be said to drink his blood, if they take nothing into their mouths by way of drink. Since therefore eating and drinking are two distinct actions, so that he cannot be properly said to drink who only eats; since the privation of life is here connected with not drinking of Christ's blood, as much as with not eating of his flesh, according to the corporeal interpretation of these words; he must certainly be deprived of the life here promised, who doth not receive the cup, because he is deprived of drinking of the blood of Christ.

Fourthly, From ver. 54. 56, the argument runs thus; Whosoever eateth the flesh and drinketh the blood of Christ in the sense here spoken of, abideth in Christ, and Christ in him; and therefore is a true and living member of Christ's body, and he shall have eternal life, and be partaker of a happy resurrection; and so no person can either be wicked here, or deprived of everlasting life hereafter, who in this sense here mentioned eats of the flesh and drinketh of the blood of Christ. Now this is very true of eating spiritually and by faith, as it imports believing in Christ. For "this," saith Christ, "is the will of him that sent me, that every one who believeth on the Son may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day;" but then of sacramental eating of Christ's flesh, it is as false; for this was eaten by a Judas, and continually is eaten by millions, who are both wicked here, and will be damned hereafter: this therefore cannot be the import of our Saviour's words. And here observe, (1.) that our Lord speaks in the general, "Whosoever eats." (2.) That he speaks thus, not by way of promise, which might be conditional, but by way of plain assertion, and declaration of a thing most certain. And, (3.) that the text shows the eating mentioned here can never be performed unprofitably, no, not without the greatest benefit; for it is opposed to eating manna in the wilderness on this account, that whereas that only gave a temporal life, this would assuredly confer eternal; whereas that was not able to preserve from temporal, this would preserve from death eternal.

Fifthly, Moreover, ver. 61 and 62, our Lord speaks thus, "Doth this offend you? What if you should see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" i. e. Are you offended that I thus speak of giving you my flesh to eat? Do you look on this expression now as so absurd and unintelligible? What then will you think of it, when this body shall be removed hence to heaven? i. e. How will you then be scandalized, and think it still more difficult, and more impossible to apprehend how you shall eat my flesh and drink my blood, provided you go on to understand my words in the gross carnal sense? For Athanasius* saith well, that Christ here mentioneth his ascent into heaven, ἵνα τῆς σωματικῆς ἐννοίας αὐτοὺς ἀφελκύσῃ, "that he might divert them from the corporeal sense;" and therefore argued thus: Seeing it will be then impossible, that you should corporeally eat my flesh, when it is so far removed from you, by this you may discern I speak of a spiritual eating of it. Whence by the way we learn, that Christ thought his ascension into heaven a sufficient demonstration to the Jews, that his flesh could not be eaten upon earth; and why it should not be so to the Christians, I am yet to learn.

Sixthly, The sixty-third verse affords us a plain and certain exposition of our Saviour's meaning in the precedent words; for thus it runs: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life:" for the import of these words is to this effect: To that eating and drinking, of which, in this discourse, I have still spoken, I have annexed the promise of life, saying expressly, "He that eateth me shall live by me;" he shall by me be quickened, i. c. be raised up to life eternal: and that he abideth in me by that Spirit, which quickeneth our mortal bodies (Rom. viii. 11), so that my words are spirit and life, as being the means of obtaining the Spirit, and by him this life; to which effects my flesh, if you could eat it, would profit you nothing. Had our Lord said, It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; therefore the flesh, which I will give, shall be joined to my divinity, and, by the virtue of it, give you life, he had said somewhat like the sense which others put upon this text; but saying only, "The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit;" we cannot doubt but he speaks of eating and of drinking his flesh and blood spiritually.

* In illud evan. Quicunque dixerit, p. 979.

55 For [21] my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed (i. e. faith in me, giving up my body to the death, and shedding my blood for the remission of your sins, is the true meat and drink, which nourisheth to eternal life.

56 For) He that (thus) eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him (by that Spirit which will quicken your mortal bodies, and raise them from the dead, Rom. viii. 11).

57 As the living Father hath sent me, and I (though I die shall) [22] live (again) by the Father: so he that (thus) eateth me, even he shall live by me.

58 This is that bread which came down from heaven (to be eaten of you): not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead (see ver. 49, for): he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever (and have that life which manna never could, nor was designed to afford).

59 These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

60 Many therefore of his disciples, when they had

Seventhly, Our Saviour having said to the twelve, "Will ye also go away?" Peter answers, "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life; and we believe that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God." Where (1.) observe, that Peter here doth, as it were, repeat the words of Christ: "My words are life," saith Christ; "Thou hast the words of life eternal," saith Peter; whereas, if he had understood our Saviour to have spoken here of oral manducation, his answer would, in all probability, have been to this effect: Whatsoever appearance there may be of inhumanity, absurdness, and impossibility, of eating thy natural flesh, and drinking of thy blood; yet we believe it, because thou hast said it, who art truth itself, and who art able to make good thy words. We therefore, hearing nothing of this tendency from him, may conclude, that he knew nothing of this import of them. And (2.) observe, that he thought it sufficient to say, "We believe thou art the Christ;" which, if our Lord spake here of oral manducation, was nothing to the purpose; but if he only spake of spiritually eating of him, was the very thing which was designed by our Lord in this discourse, and which he spake of in those words which so much offended others. We therefore conclude, with Clemens of Alexandria,* that "when our Lord said, Eat my flesh, and drink my blood, he allegorically meant the drinking of faith and of the promises; and that our Lord is, by way of allegory, to those that believe in him, meat, and flesh, and nourishment, and bread, and blood:" with Tertullian,† that "our Lord all along urged his intent by allegory, calling his word flesh, as being to be hungered after, that we might have life; auditû devorandus, ruminandus intellectû, et fide digerendus; to be devoured by the ear, ruminated upon by the mind, and by faith digested:" with Origen,‡ that "we are said to drink his blood, when we receive his words, in which life consists; that his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed, because he feedeth all mankind with the flesh and blood of his word, as with pure meat and drink:" with Eusebius,§ that "his words and doctrines are flesh and blood:" with Athanasius,‖ that "the words which Christ spake were not carnal, but spiritual; for how could his body have sufficed for meat, that it should be made the food of the whole world?" with Austin,¶ Atquid paras dentes et ventrem? crede, et manducâsti; credere enim in eum, hoc est manducare panem vivum: "Why providest thou teeth and a belly? believe, and thou hast eaten; for to believe in him, this is to eat the living bread:" add, lastly, with Jerome, "in the truest sense, the body and blood of Christ is the word and doctrine of the scripture; caro Christi et sanguis ejus in auribus nostris infunditur, the flesh and blood of Christ is poured into our ears." We say, in the language of Origen,* Si filii estis ecclesiæ, —agnoscite, quia figuræ sunt;—se enim secundùm literam sequaris, &c. "If ye are the sons of the church, own these things to be figures; for if you follow the letter, this very saying, Except you eat the flesh, is a killing letter:" in the words of Eusebius,† pronounced in the name of Christ, "Do not think that I speak of that flesh with which I am compassed, as if you must eat of that; neither imagine, that I command you to drink of my sensible and bodily blood; but understand well, that the words that I have spoken to you, they are spirit and life." For, as Austin‡ saith, touching the exposition of scripture phrases, "If the saying be preceptive, either forbidding a wicked action, or commanding that which is good, it is no figurative speech; but if it seems to command any wickedness, or to forbid what is profitable and good, it is figurative. This saying, Except ye eat, &c. seems to command a wicked thing; it is therefore a figure, enjoining to communicate in the passion of our Lord, and sweetly and profitably remember, that his flesh was wounded and crucified for us."

[21] Ver. 55. For my flesh ἀληθῶς ἐστι βρῶσις, is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.] From what hath been said (note on ver. 53), it appears this cannot be meant of eating and drinking corporeally the flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus in the holy sacrament; it remains, therefore, that they must here be styled, "truly meat and drink," in the spiritual sense; because the eating of this flesh by faith in his salutary passion doth nourish the soul to life eternal; and the drinking of this blood by faith in the blood of Christ, shed for the remission of our sins, doth so refresh the person thirsting after righteousness, that, being justified by faith in his blood, and having the Spirit promised to all believers conveyed to him as a fountain of living waters, he shall thirst no more (John iv. 14, vii. 38, 39). Thus, in the scripture language, a thing is said to be that ἀληθῶς, truly, which it is only spiritual, or by way of allegory, or in reference to some effects which it performeth, answerable to some natural effect performed by that which it is said truly and indeed to be: so our heavenly treasure is called τὸ ἀληθινὸν, "the true riches," as making us rich towards God, and being a treasure of spiritual wealth, never to be taken from us (Luke xvi. 11). Thus Christ is styled τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινὸν, "the true light," John i. 9, because his doctrine was that to the understanding which light is to the eye, directing us in the way of life; he also is styled ἄμπελος ἀληθινὴ, "the true vine," John xv. 1, as being one who did more certainly refresh the thirsty soul, and fill it with spiritual joy, than will the fruit of the vine refresh the thirsty body, and rejoice the heart: thus heaven is called ἡ σκηνὴ ἡ ἀληθινὴ, "the true tabernacle," Heb. viii. 2, and Christ here saith of himself, ver. 32, "I am ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ἀληθινὸς, the true bread which came down from heaven;" i. e. more nourishing and strengthening to the soul of the believer, than bread can be to the body (see Examen Millii).

[22] Ver. 57. And I live by the Father.] How, saith Stegmannus, can he be God, who lives by the benefit of another? I answer, even as he can have life in himself (v. 26), by the life of the Father communicated to him with his essence.

Ver. 58 and 59.] See Examen Millii.

---

* Φάγεσθέ μου τὰς σάρκας εἰπὼν, καὶ πίεσθέ μου τὸ αἷμα, ἐναργὴς τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς εὐαγγελίας τὸ πότιμον ἀλληγορῶν, &c. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 6, p. 100. Τὸ δὲ αἷμα, οἶνος ἀλληγορεῖται, &c. Ibid. p. 104, 105.

† De Resur. Carn. cap. 36, 37.

‡ Bibere autem dicimur sanguinem Christi——cum sermones ejus recipimus. Hom. 16, in Num. fol. 123. Caro ejus verus est cibus, et sanguis ejus verus est potus, carnibus enim et sanguine verbi sui, tanquam mundo cibo ac potû, potat et reficit omne hominum genus. Hom. 7, in Levit. fol. 73.

§ De Eccl. Theolog. lib. iii. cap. 12.

‖ Ἵνα μάθωσιν ὅτι καὶ ἃ λέγει οὐκ ἔστι σαρκικὰ ἀλλὰ πνευματικά· πόσοις γὰρ ἤρκει τὸ σῶμα πρὸς βρῶσιν; ἵνα καὶ τοῦ κόσμου παντὸς τοῦτο τροφὴ γένηται. Tom. i. p. 979.

¶ Tract. xxv. in Johan. tom. ix. p. 218, et Tract. xxvi. p. 223.

 Licet in mysterio possit intelligi, tamen verius corpus Christi, et sanguis ejus, sermo scripturarum est. In Ps. cxlvii. fol. 94.

* Hom. vii. in Levit. ibid.

† Ubi supra.

‡ De Doctrinâ Christianâ, lib. iii. cap. 16.

heard this, said, This is an hard saying; who can hear (i. e. receive) it?

61 When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this (discourse of eating my flesh) offend you (now)?

62 What and if (ἐὰν οὖν, if, or when therefore) ye shall see the Son of man [23] ascend up where he was before? (How much more will you be offended, seeing my body will be then less capable of being eaten by you, in that gross sense in which you understand my words.

63 But know that) It is [24] the spirit (imparted to believers) that quickeneth (their mortal bodies, Rom. viii. 11); the flesh (even of my body, could you eat it) profiteth nothing (to that end: now) the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life (i. e. they are the means of obtaining this Spirit, and life by him).

64 But there are some of you (my disciples) that believe not (and so cannot obtain this Spirit and this life. This he said) For Jesus knew from the beginning (of his ministry, John ii. 24, 25) who they were that believed not (sincerely), and who should betray him.

65 And he said, Therefore said I unto you, that no man can [25] come unto me (i. e. believe in me), except it were given unto him of my Father (i. e. unless he were thoroughly convinced by the miracles wrought by me, that I was sent from God, and had by God wrought in him a prevailing affection to eternal life: both which were wanting in these disciples).

66 ¶ From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

67 Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?

68 Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? (since) thou (only) hast the words of eternal life (and for that, above all things, we are and ought to be concerned).

69 And we believe and are sure that thou art that (the) Christ, the Son of the living God (sent by him to reveal this life, and to impart it to those who do sincerely believe in thee).

70 Jesus answered them, [26] Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? (i. e. an adversary to me and my doctrine.

71 This) He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve.

---

[23] Ver. 62. What if you see the Son of man ascending where he was before?] It is certain, saith Stegmannus, this is spoken of the Son of man, and so not of a person who is God. But I deny the consequence: it being indeed spoken of him, who was the Son of man; but not as he was so only, but as being also the Son of God, "his only-begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father," John i. 18.

Obj. But then, why is it said, "Where he was before," as of a thing past, not where he always was?

Ans. 1. As God the Father is often said in scripture to descend upon the earth (see note on ver. 33), and afterward to go up and ascend again to his place (Gen. xviii. 33, Hos. v. 15), that is, "to the place where he was before;" so what reason can be given, why the same may not be said of the divine Word?

Ans. 2. I add, that, according to our hypothesis, he may be properly said to ascend where he was before, who, in his divine glory used to appear from heaven to the patriarchs; and, when he became man, divested himself of that glory, and took upon him the form of a servant, because he after reassumed and appeared in that "glory, which he had with the Father before the world was," John xvii. 5.

[24] Ver. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth: Ver. 64. Thou hast the words of eternal life.] See note on ver. 53.

[25] Ver. 65. Therefore said I to you, No man can come to me, except it be given him of my Father.] See the note on ver. 37.

[26] Ver. 70. Οὐκ ἐξελεξάμην, &c. Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?] Hence it appears, saith Theophylact, that ἡ ἐκλογὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ βιάζεται τὴν προαίρεσιν ἡμῶν, "God's election lays no force upon the will of man," but leaves him ἐθελοδρέπτον ζῶον, one that may turn to good or evil, as he will.

CHAPTER VII.

1 After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he [1] would not walk in Jewry, because (the rage of the chief priests and principal men of) the Jews (was such, that they) sought to kill him.

2 Now the Jews' feast of tabernacles (kept in remembrance of their living in tents forty years in the wilderness) was at hand.

3 His brethren therefore said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judæa, that [2] thy disciples (there) also may see the works that thou doest.

4 For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou (canst) do these things (in truth at any time and in any place), shew thyself to the (great men of the) world (the Sanhedrin, and the pharisees and rulers there, that they may be convinced of the truth. And this they said, being desirous that his miracles might be tried by them, hoping they would find out the cheat of them).

5 For neither did [3] his brethren believe in him (that he did these things in truth, and for a good end, but for vain-glory, ver. 4).

6 Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come (to go up thither, ver. 8): but your time is alway ready (to go thither without molestation from any body there.

7 For) The world cannot hate you (who live in conformity to the manners of it); but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 1. He would not walk in Judea, because the Jews sought to kill him.] His time being not yet come, he parted thence, instructing us by his example not to irritate men, or run into danger without necessity, upon presumption of divine protection, but that we are to use all lawful means which God hath put into our hands, to avoid them. Only note, that by departing from Judea into Galilee, he declined not the end of his coming into the world; because in Galilee his doctrine and miracles found more faith than in Judea, so that he chose to be most there, where his doctrine was like to do most good. Note also, that to walk, when it relates to places or persons, signifies to tarry there or with them for a time; as "His disciples walked no more with him," John. vi. 66 (see xi. 54), when it relates to things or actions, it signifies to be often doing them, or conversant about them, as to "walk after their covetousness," to "walk in malice," &c.

[2] Ver. 3. That thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest.] Either that thy disciples in Judea may see the works thou doest in Galilee, or that thy disciples in Galilee, going up to the feast, and seeing thee doing the like works before the Sanhedrin, who can best judge of them, may be the more confirmed in the faith: for the Galileans received him, "having seen the works that he did at Jerusalem at the feast" (iv. 45).

[3] Ver. 5. For neither did his brethren believe in him.] i. e. They believed not that he was the Messiah; because they saw not that pomp and outward splendour, which they

8 [4] Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast; for my (fit) time (of going up) is not yet full come.

9 (And) When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.

10 ¶ But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, (in obedience to the divine command: but this he did) not openly (and with company), but as it were in secret (as privately as he could, to avoid the design of them that sought to kill him, ver. 19).

11 Then the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

12 And there was much murmuring (i. e. private discourse) among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people (applying himself still to them, and not to the wise and great ones).

13 Howbeit no man (i. e. none of his favourers) spake openly of him (as of the Christ) for fear of the Jews (who had decreed, that if any man should confess that he was the Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue, ix. 22).

14 ¶ Now about the [5] midst of the feast (when, the number of the sacrifices lessening, the people were more at leisure to hear,) Jesus went up into the temple, and taught.

15 And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters (how comes he to be so skillful in the knowledge of the scriptures), having never learned (in the academies, or from the scribes)?

16 Jesus answered them, and said, (Ye need not admire at this, if ye consider that) [6] my doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me (i. e. I did not frame it of myself, but received it immediately from God.

17 And) If any man will (honestly resolve to) do

---

expected from the Messiah; or imagining that he sought to be ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, a public person, they conceived that he pretended to do more than indeed he could; as appears from those words, ver. 4, "If thou doest these things," show that thou doest them where the best judges of thy actions are. Yet that afterward they believed, we learn from Acts i. 14, where they are numbered among those who cleaved to the apostles.

[4] Ver. 8. Go ye up to the feast.] You may do this securely at any time; for the pharisees bear no hatred to you, whereas my doctrine, being opposite to their manners and affections, may expose me to their rage; I therefore shall not yet go up. He would go up in obedience to the divine command, but he would go as privately as he could, to avoid danger, by human prudence, when there was no necessity of doing it by a miraculous power. Ἐγὼ οὔπω ἀναβαίων, "I go not up yet to this feast." Here Grotius notes, that this particle οὔπω, "yet," was not originally in the text; because Porphyry accuses Christ of inconstancy and mutability, saith Jerome,* as saying, "I go not up to this feast," when afterward he went; and therefore concludes this particle was after added by the Christians, to avoid the force of this objection: but this is to accuse the Christians of adding to and altering the scriptures, to save the credit of a heathen and professed enemy to Christianity, as if he could not read negligently, or meet with a deficient or corrupt Latin copy. It is certain that Chrysostom read, νῦν or οὔπω· so did also the Syriac and Arabic versions, the Alexandrian, and most other manuscripts, and both the words preceding, and the words following, require this reading; Christ saying, ver. 6, "My time (of going up) οὔπω πάρεστι, is not yet come;" and here, "I go not up (yet) unto the feast, for my time οὔπω πεπλήρωται, is not yet come;" where he respects not the time of his death, as some imagine, for then he should not have gone up to Jerusalem till the time came that he was to suffer there; whereas we find him at this feast of tabernacles, ver. 10, and at the feast of dedication of the altar, x. 12: he, therefore must there speak of his going up to this feast (see here Examen Millii).

[5] Ver. 14. Τῆς ἑορτῆς μεσούσης, About the midst of the feast Jesus went up.] Dr. Pocock informs us, that the days betwixt those which were ordinary and festival were styled dies medii, intermediate days; because some works might be done in them, which were not lawful on their feast-days.

[6] Ver. 16. My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.] "If Christ," saith Stegmannus, "had any other nature besides the human, according to which he was the prime author of his doctrine, could he have truly said, My doctrine is not mine? Could one, who was the true God, deny that he sought his own glory? Since the true God cannot do otherwise, sure he that thus denies these things, which are so proper to God, cannot be God most high."

Ans. To this some answer, That this indeed cannot properly be said of him, super quem alius non est, which is the distinction put by Justin Martyr and Irenæus betwixt God the Father and the Son, whom they believed to be truly God, viz. that this cannot be said of him, who is the original and fountain of the Deity, and derived his essence from none; but it may be said of him, who is "God of God," as deriving his divine essence from the Father, especially when being "in the form of God he did not covet to appear as God, but took upon him the form of a servant" (see the note on Phil. ii. 6, and upon 1 Cor. viii. 5): he acting even when Lord of all things, "to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 11). For thus he speaks of himself, as having an original, according to which the Jews knew who he was, and whence he was (ver. 28 of this chapter), i. e. saith Stegmannus, of what parents he was according to the flesh; and yet, viii. 14, he saith, "Ye know not whence I am," and ver. 19, "Ye neither know me nor my Father;" that is, saith the same Stegmannus, Ye know not my divine excellency; and so both, saith he, are true, but in a diverse manner, they knowing him as to his earthly parents, but not as to his divine excellency and descent from heaven. Why therefore may we not use the like distinction here, viz. that his doctrine was not his (only), and yet was his; that he came not to do his own will, and yet he did it; i. e. he did not do it, as he was man; but yet he did do it, as he was God as well as man? since from this instance it appears, that truly may be ascribed to him in a higher sense, which he removes from himself when he speaks of himself as acting here on earth. Thus he tells his apostles, he was to be no more in the world, but to leave the world, and go to the Father, and even to go away from them, xvi. 7. 28, xvii. 11, and yet he promiseth to be always with them, Matt. xxviii. 28, and to abide with them for ever, John xiv. 16. 23 (see the note on ver. 28). But,

Secondly, I answer, that Christ, by saying these and the like words, respects himself as a prophet, sent by his Father into the world. Now the very office of a prophet requires that he should speak nothing of himself, nor deliver his own mind and doctrine, nor seek his own glory; but should speak all things in his name, and do all things for the glory of him that sent him; and to this may be referred most of those passages of this gospel, which the Socinians urge against the Deity of Christ, they being spoken by him, not to declare by what power and wisdom he acted, as he was the only-begotten Son of God, but to demonstrate he was no false prophet; that he delivered not a doctrine invented by himself, to get a name and reputation to himself, but only taught that doctrine he had received from his Father, and which tended to advance his glory: for,

First, To speak "of himself," in the scripture phrase, is to speak from his own heart, and private motion and invention, what he had not received from God, as the false prophets did: so Moses saith, Numb. xvi. 28, Hereby shall ye know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these things, and that I do them not מלבי "of my own heart," or "at my own will," say all the Targums. And Balaam speaks thus, Numb. xxiv. 13, "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot transgress the word of the Lord, to do good or evil, מלבי, ἀφ ἑμαυτοῦ, of myself;" or as it is xxii. 18, ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ μου, "of my own mind;" "of my own

---

* Porphyrius inconstantiæ et mutationis accusat, lib. ii. contr. Pelag. f. 103, G.

[7] his will (made known to him), he shall know of the doctrine (which I teach), whether it be of God, or whether I speak (only) of myself.

18 (And by this test you may discern it, for) He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory (and therefore speaketh not those things which he knows will disgust, and procure hatred to him from men): but he that seeketh (only) his glory that sent him, the same is (a) true (prophet), and no [8] unrighteousness (i. e. falsehood) is in him.

19 (But it is otherwise with you, as being full of hypocrisy and guile, for) Did not Moses give you the law (for which you seem so zealous as to be angry with me for a supposed violation of it), and yet (after all this pretended zeal) [9] none of you keepeth the law? Why (else) go ye about to kill me (against the sixth commandment)?

20 (Some of) The people answered and said, Thou hast a devil (i. e. thou art possessed with a lying spirit): who goeth about to kill thee?

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all [10] marvel (that I, who profess myself a prophet, should violate the rest of the sabbath by doing such a work on that day.

22 Now) Moses therefore [11] gave unto you (the precept of) circumcision; (not because it (orginally) is of Moses, but of the fathers) (from the days of Abraham); and ye (in obedience to the command to circumcise on the eighth day) on the sabbath day circumcise a man (child, when the eighth day is also the sabbath-day).

23 If (then) a man on the sabbath day receive circumcision, that the (ritual) law of Moses (requiring it to be still done on the eighth day) should not be broken; are ye (justly) angry at me, because (that the law of charity and mercy, which is superior to and more ancient than that of circumcision, might not be broken by me) I have made a man every whit whole on the sabbath day?

24 [12] Judge not according to the appearance (of violating the sabbath by that action; because it was a work done then), but (consider the goodness of the action, that ye may) judge righteous judgment.

25 Then said some of them of Jerusalem (who knew the designs of the pharisees against him), Is not this he, whom they seek to kill?

26 But, lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ? (and for this reason have they laid aside that design?)

27 Howbeit (there lies this plain objection against his being the Messiah, that) we know this man whence he is: but (our tradition saith, that) when [13] Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

28 Then (in answer to this cavil) cried Jesus in the will," saith the Targum; "but what the Lord saith, that will I speak." Hence God complains of the false prophets, that they speak ἀπὸ καρδίας αὐτῶν, "from their own hearts," and not from the mouth of the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 16, and τὰ θελήματα τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, "the deceits of their own hearts," ver. 26. Thus, to speak from himself, here, ver. 17, 18, is opposed to speaking from God; and, viii. 28, it stands opposed to speaking what he was taught by God, in these words, "I speak not of myself, but as the Father hath taught me, so I speak;" and, xii. 49, "I speak not of myself, but as the Father hath given me commandment:" see also xiv. 10. When therefore Christ saith, "My doctrine is not mine," he speaks not this in respect of his own knowledge, he having in him "all the treasures of wisdom," Col. ii. 3, nor in respect of authority, for he styles it his "word," his "commandment;" nor in respect of his will, which was always one with that of his Father's; but he only denies that he spake as a false prophet, saying things of himself without commission from his Father, or running when he had not sent him, as they did, but, as the Baptist saith of him, spake "the words of God." Now what reason can be given, why Christ, though having in him "all the fullness of the Godhead," might not say, when upon earth, he spake and acted as a prophet sent from God; that he was no false prophet; that he uttered no doctrine of his own invention, nor any thing which he had no commission to speak to them; and that in the delivery of it he sought not his own glory, as the false prophets did?

---

[7] Ver. 17. If any man will do his will, &c.] That is, if he hath an honest heart, prepared to obey the truth when he is convinced of it, he shall know of the doctrine, i. e. shall have means sufficient to convince him, that it is of God.

[8] Ver. 18. He is true, καὶ ἀδικία ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν, and there is no unrighteousness, i. e. no falsehood, in him.] So ἀδικία signifies; so οἰκονόμος τῆς ἀδικίας is "the false steward," Luke xvi. 8, ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἀδικίας, "deceit by falsehood," is opposed to the "love of the truth," 2 Thess. ii. 10 (see the note on 1 Cor. xiii. 6): so that this seems to be the import of these words, He is a true prophet, and no false impostor.

[9] Ver. 19. None of you keep the law.] i. e. None of you, who go about to kill me as a violator of the sabbath, that requiring you not to condemn the innocent (Exod. xxiii. 7).

[10] Ver. 21. Καὶ πάντες θαυμάζετε, And ye all wonder.] i. e. Ye do it with anger and offence; ver. 23, παραιτεῖσθε, θορυβεῖσθε, Theophylact. So θαυμάζειν signifies, Eccles. v. 8, "When thou seest the oppression of the poor, μὴ θαυμάσῃς, be not troubled or offended at the matter:" and Ecclus. xi. 21, μὴ θαύμαζε ἐν ἔργοις ἁμαρτωλοῦ, "Be not offended at the works of sinners." Note also, that the words, διὰ τοῦτο, "for this cause," are added to this verse thus, "That you may, or so that you will, marvel at this," by Chrysostom and Theophylact (see Examen Millii in locum).

[11] Ver. 22, 23. Moses gave you circumcision.] i. e. He continued to you that rite which began from Abraham, to whom it was commanded that it should be performed, τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ὀγδόῃ, "on the eighth day" (Gen. xvii. 14), though it fell upon the sabbath, and you accordingly perform it on that day, and teach that "circumcision drives out the sabbath,"* or makes it lawful to perform work on that day, even all things which are necessary to be done for the circumcision of the child; and if this be lawful, by the command of Moses, to be done on that day for the benefit of a child, why may it not be lawful, according to Moses, to do a like work for the benefit of one of riper years?

[12] Ver. 24. Judge not κατ' ὄψιν, according to appearance.] i. e. Absolving them who do these works of circumcision, &c. on the sabbath-day, in observance of a ritual precept, and condemning me, who, by healing with a word on that day, do what is less laborious in observance of the higher precepts of charity and mercy; and then considering, that God "will have mercy, and not sacrifice," you will judge righteous judgment. For to exempt Moses from blame for commanding that work to be done on that day, which is more laborious, and less beneficial, out of respect to him; and to condemn me, a greater prophet, for doing with a word what is more beneficial on that day, out of disrespect to me, is manifestly to judge with respect to persons: so Theophylact.

[13] Ver. 27. But when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.] This is doubtless spoken from the vain traditions of their rabbins; who owned, indeed, that their Messiah was to be born at Bethlehem, but imagined that he was presently to be conveyed thence, and concealed till Elias came to anoint him. That this was an ancient conceit among them, appears not only from the Targum of Jonathan, who, on Micah iv. 8, saith thus, "Thou, O Christ, who liest hid for the sins of the children of Sion, to thee shall the kingdom come;" but also from the words of Trypho,† "If Christ be born, and is any where ἀγνωστός ἐστι, he is unknown, nor hath he any power, till Elias comes to manifest him to the world:" and hence Justin Martyr saith, "I know your masters say, that Christ is not yet come; and if he be come, οὐ γινώσκεται ὃς ἐστιν it is not known who he is" (p. 336, C).

---

* Maim. Hilcoth Nicklah, c. 1, Pirk. Eliezer. cap. 29, pag. 65.

† Apud Just. Dial. ix. 226.

temple as he taught, saying, Ye both [14] know me, and ye know whence I am (i. e. my person, parentage, and country; but yet this should not prejudice you against my being a prophet sent from God): and I am not come of myself, but he that sent me (and hath given sufficient testimony that he did send me) is true, whom ye know (i. e. you own) not (denying to receive his testimony concerning me).

29 But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me (and thus I have an original ye know not of).

30 Then they sought to take him (for assuming to be a teacher sent from God): but no man laid hands on him (God so ordering it), because his hour was not yet come.

31 And many of the people (who had seen his miracles) believed on him, and said (in justification of their faith), When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles (to convince us that he is the Christ) than these which this man hath done (to prove himself so to be)?

32 ¶ The Pharisees heard that the people murmured (i. e. said privately) such things concerning him; and (therefore) the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take him.

33 Then said Jesus unto them (that were sent, Ye need not trouble yourselves to take me, for) yet (but) a little while am I with you, and then I go (again) unto him that sent me.

34 (Then) [15] Ye shall seek me (in your distress, Luke xvii. 22, see viii. 21), and shall not find me: and where I (then) am, thither ye cannot come.

35 Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will he go, that we shall not (be able to) find him? will he go unto [16] the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?

36 What manner of saying is this (what other meaning can he have in) that he said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come?

37 [17] In the last day, that great day of the feast (on which they went with great solemnity and joy to draw water from the fountain of Siloam, to bring it to the temple, singing these words of Isaiah, With joy shall they draw water from the wells of salvation, and expecting an afflatus of the Holy Ghost), Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst (for spiritual waters), let him (not go to Siloam, but) come unto me, and drink.

38 He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, (Isa. xxxii. 1, 2, xliv. 3, Ezek. xxxvi. 27, so shall it be with him, for) out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water (springing up to eternal life, John iv. 14).

---

[14] Ver. 28. Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am.] Here Stegmannus the Socinian notes, that what Christ grants here, he denies, viii. 14. 19, saying, "Ye neither know me, nor whence I am," because in different respects, mentioned note on ver. 16, both are true; when then he argues from those words, "I came not from myself," Christ is not God; because God cannot but come from himself: why did he not from these words infer, in like manner, that Christ had no divine excellence unknown to the Jews? But he considered not that to "come of himself," did only signify to come as a false prophet without commission from God, and delivering in his name a doctrine he had not received from him; in which sense, though Christ could not come of himself, yet might he say these things of himself as a prophet here on earth, though he had also in him the fullness of the Godhead.

[15] Ver. 34. Ye shall seek me (in your distress), and shall not find me.] So have I interpreted this passage in the paraphrase, as most commentators do; yet the precedent words, and the words following, seem to require this sense, I go to my Father, and though you should seek me, ye cannot then find me; for you are not fitted to go to heaven where my Father is.

[16] Ver. 35. Will he go εἰς τὴν διασπορὰν Ἑλλήνων, to the dispersed among the gentiles? &c.] It is a matter of dispute what is here meant by "the dispersion of the gentiles," some understanding by this phrase the dispersion of the Jews among the Greeks in Asia and Europe, as the διασπορὰ Πόντου, "the dispersion of Pontus and Galatia," 1 Pet. i. 1, is the dispersion of the Jews in those places; because the word dispersion is not thought to agree well with the gentiles, being in their native soil; but yet there seems a necessity of understanding by this phrase the gentiles dispersed, from the time of building the tower of Babel into divers nations (Gen. x.): for (1.) it is not said, will he go to the dispersion, and teach the Jews? but, will he go, and teach τοὺς Ἕλληνας, "the gentiles?" which fixes the sense to them. Moreover this seems here to be said by way of imputation and reproach to Christ; whereas it could be no imputation on him to preach to the Jews to whom he was sent, nor could this seem strange to them; but they thought it unlawful for a Jew to converse with the uncircumcised (Acts x. 28), nor could they patiently hear of one sent to preach to the gentiles (Acts xxii. 22): nor is the phrase in Peter parallel, it being not simply διασπορὰ, "the dispersion," but παρεπίδημοι τῆς διασπορᾶς, "the strangers of the dispersions of Pontus," &c. (see Examen Millii in locum).

[17] Ver. 37—39. Ἐν τῇ δὲ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ μεγάλῃ τῆς ἑορτῆς. In the last, i. e. the great day of the feast, Jesus cried, If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink.—This said he of the Spirit.] For explication of these verses observe,

First, That Christ here speaks of the internal gifts of the Spirit, viz. those of prophecy, tongues, of wisdom, and the knowledge of all mysteries; for he speaks of those gifts of the Holy Spirit, which were "not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified;" he therefore speaks of the gifts to be received after his ascension; now they were these internal gifts (see note on Heb. ii. 4, 1 John v. 6).

Secondly, Observe, that these gifts of the Spirit are promised under the metaphor of waters flowing out of the body of believers, agreeable to the nature of internal gifts. So Christ saith to the Samaritan woman, "The water which I will give, will be a fountain of water springing up to life eternal," iv. 14; so Isa. xxxii. 1, 2, "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment; and a man shall be as rivers of water in a dry place:" and xliv. 3, "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my Spirit upon thy offspring;" that is, saith the Targum, "As waters are given to the thirsty earth, so will I give my Spirit upon thy sons:" and Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27, "I will pour clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; I will put my Spirit בקרבכם in the midst of you,"—"in your bowels," saith the Targum; whence it is manifest, that they must be mistaken who say the words of Christ are not to be found in the Old Testament, and so interpret his words thus, He that believeth in me (as the scriptures require him to believe), out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; whereas that phrase, καθὼς εἶπεν ἡ γραφὴ, "as the scripture hath said," is never used to express the manner after which a thing is to be done, but always to confirm the truth and authority of the thing mentioned (see ver. 42, Rom. iv. 3, ix. 17, x. 11, xi. 2, Gal. iv. 30, James ii. 8).

Thirdly, Observe that Christ spake thus on the last day of the feast of the tabernacles; now on that day, say the Jews, they used to compass the altar seven times with branches in their hands, saying some prayers, in which they often repeat the words hosannah and hatzilcka, "Save now, and prosper us;" whence that day was styled Hosanna Rabba, or "the great day of the feast," as here; and as they add, by the institution of their prophets Haggai and Zechariah, they then fetched water with great joy and pomp from the fountain of Siloam, and brought it to their priests, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of their sacrifice, singing these words of Isaiah, xii. 3, "With joy shall ye draw water from the fountain of salvation;" that is, saith the Targum, "With joy shall ye receive a new doctrine from the elect of the Just;" and whilst they were thus singing,

39 (But this (τοῦτο δὲ, and this) spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should (after his ascension) receive: for the (effusion of the) [18] Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus (who was to send him from the Father) was not yet glorified.)

40 ¶ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is [19] the Prophet (of whom Moses foretold, Deut. xviii. 18).

41 Others said, This is the Christ (the king Messias, of whom Esaias said, xlii. 1, I will put my Spirit upon him). But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?

42 Hath not the scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?

43 So there was a division among the people because of him.

44 And some of them (that were sent for that purpose) would have taken him; but (others of them, who were much affected with his doctrine, not consenting) no man laid hands on him.

45 ¶ Then came the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers answered, [20] Never man spake like this man (for he told us what we came about as soon as we came to him, and discoursed so heavenly, and with such authority, that we durst not lay violent hands upon him).

47 Then answered them the Pharisees, Are ye also deceived (by him)?

48 [21] Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees (who understand the law, and are to judge for you in matters of religion) believed on him?

49 But this people who knoweth not the law are cursed.

50 Nicodemus saith unto them, (he that came to Jesus by night, being one of them,) (i. e. of the great council, iii. 1,)

51 Doth our law (permit us to) judge (and condemn) any man, before it hear him (making his defence), and know what he doeth (worthy of condemnation)?

52 They answered and said unto him, Art thou also (an abettor) of (those of) Galilee (as by thy actions thou seemest to be)? Search, and look: for (by so doing thou will find that) [22] out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

53 And (when they had said this they dissolved the assembly, and) every man went unto his own house.

---

they expected the Holy Spirit should fall upon them, as they said it did on the prophet Jonas, whilst he was employed in this very action: they farther say, that there was a place in the court of the women, whither they carried these waters, called Beth-Hassoovah, "the place of drawing:" because thence they drew the Holy Spirit: and lastly, Zachary foretells that "all the nations should come to Jerusalem at the feast of tabernacles," xiv. 16, and "in that day," saith he, "living waters shall go forth from Jerusalem," ver. 8. And hence we learn why that day was called "the great day of the feast;" and how appositely our Lord spake to them of receiving the Holy Ghost, under the metaphor of "living," i. e. fountain-water (see Tremellius here, and Buxtorf. Lex. p. 2298).

[18] Ver. 39. Οὔπω γὰρ ἦν Πνεῦμα.] Many copies read ἅγιον and some διδόμενον; but I suspect that neither διδόμενον nor ἅγιον was in the original; (1.) because Origen reads οὔπω γὰρ ἦν Πνεῦμα, and no more, continually (see apud Huet. tom. i. p. 299, B. tom. ii. p. 359, D. 398, C. 422, H): nor is τὸ ἅγιον interpreted by the Syriac or Vulgar. And (2.) the words foregoing are only these, "He spake περὶ τοῦ Πνεύματος of the Spirit," and so those answer these, "The Spirit is not yet."

[19] Ver. 40. Of a truth this is the Prophet.] In whose time the great effusion of the Spirit, mentioned by Isaias and Joel, is to be expected.

[20] Ver. 46. Never man spake like this man.] Here two things are observable; (1.) the power of Christ's words to change the frame and temper of men's spirits; for these men came with hearts alienated from Christ, and with intention to carry him to the chief priests, but return with a great admiration of his excellency and worth. (2.) Here is observable the honesty of these men; for they do not return with a pretence that they feared the multitude, and therefore thought it dangerous to apprehend him; but they ingenuously confess, they could not prevail with themselves to apprehend a person whose discourses were so holy and divine.

[21] Ver. 48. Have any of the rulers or of the pharisees believed on him?] This is plainly the popish argument, by which they attempt to prove, that private men, laics, and inferior priests, are not to be governed by their own sentiments of Christ's doctrine, but must submit to their general councils, and the major part of their church guides. And that it is as strong in the mouth of the pharisees against Christ being the true Messiah, as it is in the mouth of papists against protestants, see the sermon, at the end of this gospel, by me upon this text.

[22] Ver. 52. Search, and look: for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.] It is wonderful, that not the multitude only, who had heard the shepherds declaring from an angel, that Christ was "born at Bethlehem" (Luke ii. 15, 16), and had wondered at the words which had been told them by the shepherds (ver. 18), should make this objection (ver. 41); but that the chief priests and pharisees, who knew that the wise men went to Bethlehem to worship him who was born "King of the Jews," should insist upon it. This is an instance of the power of prejudice to shut the eyes against the clearest truth.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Jesus went unto the mount of Olives.

2 And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he sat down, and taught them.

3 And (as he was teaching) the scribes and Pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst (of the company),

4 They say unto him, Master, this woman (being espoused to a husband) was taken in adultery, in the very act.

5 [1] Now Moses in the law commanded us (Deut. xxii. 23), that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

6 This they said, tempting him (to say something in derogation from that law of Moses), that they might have to accuse him (of contempt of, or opposition to, the law of Moses). But Jesus (knowing that he was no judge to pass sentence on her, and looking upon them as unworthy of an answer, as coming not to learn of, but to ensnare him) stooped down, and with his

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 5. Now Moses in the law commanded that such should be stoned.] If she who was taken in the adultery was a married woman, the law required she should be put to death (Lev. xx. 10, Deut. xxii. 22), that is, say all the Jews, that she should be strangled; but if she were only a damsel espoused, the law saith, she shall be stoned (Deut.

finger wrote on the ground, (making) as though he heard them not.

7 So when (ὡς δὲ, but as) they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, [2] He that is without sin (in this kind) among you (her accusers), let him first cast a stone at her.

8 And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground (that they might slip away without thinking he took notice of them).

9 And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience (and not knowing but that Jesus might discover their guilt if they should execute this sentence on her), went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left [3] alone, and the woman standing in the midst (of the people).

10 When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none (of the pharisees) but the woman (only), he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I (who have no commission to pass sentence on thee, take upon me to) condemn thee (to die): go (and in the fear of divine judgment, repent), and sin no more.

12 ¶ Then spake Jesus again (this interruption of his teaching being ended) unto them, saying, [4] I am (sent to be) the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in (the ways of) darkness, but (obeying my doctrine) shall have the light of life.

13 The Pharisees therefore (then present) said unto him, Thou bearest record of thyself; thy record (therefore) is not true (for had God sent thee, he would have given testimony to thee).

14 Jesus answered and said unto them, [5] Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true (and certain in itself, though it appear not so to you): for I know whence I came (viz. from the Father), and whither I go (viz. to him again); but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go (and for want of this knowledge cannot believe my record).

---

xxii. 23), whence interpreters conclude, this adulteress was only espoused (Seld. de Ux. Heb. lib. iii. cap. 11).

[2] Ver. 7. He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone at her.] Christ speaks here, not to the magistrate, who must do his office, though he himself should not be innocent, but to the accusers of this woman before him, to whom it belonged not to pass sentence on her. Moreover, the Jews say, the woman was not to be accused of her husband, nor to be tried by the waters of jealousy, if the husband was guilty of the same crime: Christ therefore might speak thus to him in the first place, Let him who is to accuse her, and to begin the execution, if he be free from the like sin, "first cast the stone at her." Nor is it to be wondered, that all her accusers having heard this, should depart from her, being "convinced by their own consciences" of like guilt, seeing that was an "adulterous generation" (Matt. xii. 39); and the Jews own, that "the adulterous did multiply under the second temple;" and St. Paul speaks thus even to the doctors of the Jews, "Thou that sayest, a man shall not commit adultery; dost thou commit adultery?" Rom. ii. 22 (see the note there): and, lastly, Justin Martyr saith that Trypho, and other Jews, complied with the sentiments of their rabbins, who permitted them τέσσαρας καὶ πέντε ἔχειν γυναῖκας ἕκαστον, "to have every one four or five wives; and said, they sinned not, if, after the example of the patriarchs, seeing a beautiful woman, they desired her," and so taught them to commit adultery (Dial. p. 363, 364).

[3] Ver. 9. The woman was left alone.] i. e. Without any of her accusers; for she stood still in the midst of the people, saith the text, and the apostles were then with their Lord.

I come now to vindicate the truth and sincerity of this history from the censures of the critics who suspect it. And,

First, It appears from the testimony of Jerome,* that this history was found in multis et Græcis et Latinis condicibus, "in many Greek and Latin copies" of the gospel of John, and therefore was wanting but in few of them. The Apostolical Constitutions† acknowledged it, saying that Christ "said to the woman brought before him by the elders, Go thy way οὐδὲ ἐγώ σε κατακρίνω, neither do I condemn thee." The Greek code, cited by Cotelerius, saith, "These words are not to be found in some manuscripts, nor in Apollinaris; ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ὅλα κεῖνται, but they are entire in the ancient manuscripts;" and that all the apostles "made mention of them in the constitutions they set forth for the edification of the church." Athanasius speaks plainly of it, saying ἐνταῦθα τὰ περὶ τῆς κατηγορηθείσης ἐπὶ μοιχείᾳ, "Hither must we refer what is spoken of the woman accused of adultery." St. Ambrose‡ saith, "The question and absolution of the woman, which in the gospel of St. John was brought to Christ, was always famous in the church;" and Austin speaks often of it, and saith, "They are enemies to the faith who take these words out of the books, perhaps fearing lest it give impunity to the women;" and Prosper owns it. Moreover, all the versions in the Polyglot own this history; it was found in the sixteen MSS. of Stephanus, in the seventeen MSS. of Beza, save one. Nor is it to be doubted, saith Selden, that it was received from "primitive antiquity in the copies of the east," as appears from the Harmonies of Tatian and Ammonius of Alexandria, and the canons thence made. Now this Tatian flourished A. D. 160, that is, sixty years after the death of St. John, and made his harmonies of the gospels out of the copies then in use; Ammonius flourished about the year 230, and did the same: and Eusebius of Cæsarea, who flourished about the year 320, made his ten canons out of those harmonies: whence it may easily be discerned, what is contained in all the gospels, what in three, what in two, and what in one only: now the number eighty-six, in the canon belonging to St. John, contains this history; whence we may certainly conclude, that it was in his codex.

That it was wanting in some few Greek copies, is not to be wondered, if we consider that the sentence of many of the ancients was so severe, that they would not admit adulterers or adulteresses into the church after the longest penance, and thought τὸν ἐπὶ μοιχείᾳ ληφθέντα ὡς ἀποκτεῖναι θέλῃ, κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται, "that it was no hurt to kill them:" for men of these severe opinions might be unwilling to admit this history, as Austin saith, quasi permissionem peccandi tribuerit, "as thinking it gave a permission to this sin by saying, Neither do I condemn thee." The history which Papias* mentions of a woman ἐπὶ πολλαῖς ἁμαρτίαις διαβληθείσης ἐπὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, "accused of many sins before our Lord," or rather by him, seems not to be this, but rather that of the woman of Samaria, this being accused but of one, she of many such sins, and so no inference can be thence made for or against the truth of this history (see F. Simon Crit. Hist. lib. i. cap. 13, and Dr. Mills in locum).

[4] Ver. 12. I am the light of the world.] The Jews said this of the first Adam (see Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 1321): this Christ applies to himself, the second Adam.

[5] Ver. 14. Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: because I know whence I came and whither I go.] i. e. This makes it to me certain, that my testimony of my mission from him is true, though it carry no such force

---

* Lib. ii. adv. Pelag. f. 103, H.

† Lib. ii. cap. 24, p. 173, 174.

‡ Semper decantatam questionem et celebrem absolutionem fuisse mulieris ejus, quæ, in libro evangelii Johannis, adulterii rea oblata est Christo. Ep. lib. ix. ep. 76. Vide lib. vii. cap. 58. Et ne nonnulli modicæ, vel potiùs inimici, veræ fidei, credo mutuentes, peccandi impunitatem dari mulieribus suis, illud quod de adulteræ indulgentiâ Dominus fecit, auferrent de codicibus suis. Lib. ii. de Adult. Conjug. cap. 7. Vid. Tract. 33 in evang. de Cons. Evang. cap. 10, ep. 54, p. 242. De promissis et prædict. Dei. par. ii. cap. 22, p. 90.

* Apud Euseb. lib. iii. cap. 39, p. 113.

15 [6] Ye judge (of me) after the flesh (i. e. according to the meanness of my extraction and appearance, which is all that you know of me); I judge no man (at present; my business being now that of a prophet, not of a judge).

16 And yet if I (at any time do) judge (of you), my judgment is true: for I am not alone (in that judgment), but I and the Father that sent me (so judge; i. e. I do it by that Spirit of the Father in me, which enables me to discern the inward temper of your spirits.

17 And whereas you object that I bear record of myself, note that) It is also written in your law (Deut. xvii. 6), that the testimony of two men is true (i. e. is valid in causes of the greatest consequence; and this evidence of the truth of my mission ye have; for)

18 [7] I (whom the Father hath sent) am one that bear witness of myself (that he hath sent me), and the Father that sent me (he also) beareth witness of me (by the miracles by which he enables me to confirm my mission).

19 Then said they unto him, Where is (he whom thou stylest) thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye neither know me, nor my Father: if ye had known me (or had a due sense of my spiritual and heavenly doctrine, and the miracles by which it is confirmed), ye should (would) have known my Father also (i. e. would have discerned the divine power and wisdom shining in them, and would have had the most perfect knowledge of his will).

20 These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as he taught in the temple: and (though they incensed the pharisees, yet) no man laid hands on him (the providence of God restraining them); for (because) his hour was not yet come.

21 Then said Jesus again [8] unto them, I (shortly) go my way, and ye shall seek me (in your distress, desiring the Messiah would come to deliver you, Luke xvii. 22), and (ye) shall die in your sins: (for) whither I go, ye cannot come (being not fitted for the celestial mansions; or, you cannot come to fetch me thence).

22 Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come. (Sure, if he be alive, and in Judea, we can reach him.)

23 And he said unto them, Ye are from beneath (and so can think and speak only of earthly things); I am from above (and so speak of the things above, whither I am going): ye are of this world (and so your thoughts, affections, words, and actions, wholly respect this world); I am not of this world (and so my life and doctrine suit not with your temper, nor have you any right apprehensions of my saying).

24 I said therefore unto you (so indisposed to believe and receive my doctrine), that ye shall die in your sins: for [9] if ye believe not that I am he (whom God hath sent into the world as your Messiah, or that Prophet which was to come), ye shall die in your sins.

25 Then said they unto him, Who (then) art thou? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you [10] from the beginning (viz. one sent of God to reveal his will to you).

26 [11] I have many things to say and to judge of you (which ye will not believe): but he that sent me (to speak them) is true; and I speak to the world (only) those things which I have heard of him (and which therefore must be true.

27 But) They understood not that he [12] spake to them of (his being sent from) the Father.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man (upon the cross), [13] then shall ye know (some to conviction, and some to condemnation) that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.

29 And (even now) [14] he that sent me is with me: (and) the Father hath not left me alone (or, deserted me); for I do always those things that please him.

30 As he spake these words, many (who had seen the miracles by which he confirmed his sayings, vii. 31) believed on him.

31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, [15] If ye continue in (obedience to) my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; with you, who have no knowledge of this matter, till it shall appear by my mission of the Holy Ghost that I am indeed gone to the Father (xvi. 10).

---

[6] Ver. 15. Ὑμεῖς τὴν σάρκα κρίνετε, &c. You judge according to the flesh; I judge no man.] Κρίνω is here put for κατακρίνω, as John iii. 17, xii. 47, Rom. ii. 1, iii. 4, xiv. 3, 4. 10. 13, 1 Cor. xi. 29. 34; so that the sense runs thus, You pass sentence on and condemn me, according to your carnal tempers; I, whilst I am on earth, pass not the sentence of condemnation on men, for I came not to condemn the world.

[7] Ver. 18. I am one that bear witness of myself.] i. e. I, in whose life you can find no fault; for "which of you convinceth me of sin?" (ver. 46) I, whose doctrine tends to promote piety and holiness, and to advance the honour of God; for "I do always the things that please him" (ver. 29); I, who cannot but know the truth, "for I know whence I came" (ver. 14); I testify that I came from God, and am sent by him.

[8] Ver. 21. Then said Jesus to them again.] i. e. To the same persons, though not in the same place, he being gone out of the treasury (ver. 20).

[9] Ver. 24. If ye believe not, ye shall die in your sins.] As wanting that faith in me, which can alone procure the pardon of them.

[10] Ver. 25. As I said τὴν ἀρχὴν, from the beginning (or before).] So Gen. xiii. 4, Abraham came to the place of the altar which he had made τὴν ἀρχὴν, "before;" xiv. 20, the lean kine were κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν "as before;" and xliii. 18. 20, "We came to buy corn, τὴν ἀρχὴν, before:" so that I would render the whole thus; Sum id quod locutus sum vobis priùs, "I am what I told you before I was;" it being very common, in answer to the question, to omit Sum id, or somewhat of like import; so σὺ εἶπας, Matt. xxvi. 25. 64, σὺ λέγεις, xxii. 11, i. e. Sum id quod dicis, or, Dicis quod res est, "It is as you say," or, "I am as you say."

[11] Ver. 26. I have many things to say and to judge of you.] i. e. You say and judge many things of me, which from my words and deeds will appear to be false; but I have many things to say of you, what you are as to your manners, and what you will be through the just judgment of God; which, though you will not believe, will be found true; for "he that sent me," to say them, "is true."

[12] Ver. 27. They understood not ὅτι τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῖς ἔλεγεν, that he spake to them of the Father.] So vi. 71, ἔλεγε τὸν Ἰούδαν, "He spake of Judas:" so here, ver. 54, ὃν ὑμεῖς λέγετε ὅτι Θεὸς ὑμῶν ἐστιν, "Of whom ye say that he is your God;" and, ix. 19, ὃν ὑμεῖς λέγετε ὅτι τυφλὸς ἐγεννήθη, "Who ye say was born blind." So Plato,* ἰατρὸς ὃν ἄρτι ἔλεγες, "The physician of whom you spake;" and again, σὺ δὲ οἴει με τοὺς τὰ βαλάντια ἀποτέμνοντας λέγειν, "You think I speak of those that cut purses."

[13] Ver. 28. Then shall ye know I am he.] i. e. Then shall ye have such testimonies, by the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon my disciples, as shall be sufficient to convince you, and shall prevail upon many to believe that I am the Christ.

[14] Ver. 29. And he that sent me is with me.] Yea, saith Stegmannus, "that one God, who is the Father, is in me." And why then doth he deny Christ to be God? It follows, "For I do always those things which please him." See here the true way to have God always graciously present with us.

[15] Ver. 31. If you continue in my word, then are you my

---

* L. de Rep. p. 581. 586.

32 And ye shall (farther) know the truth, and the truth shall make you free [16] (from the yoke of bondage to sin, ver. 34, and corruption).

33 ¶ They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and [17] were never in bondage to any man: how (then) sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever [18] committeth sin is the servant of sin (and shall receive the wages of it, which is death; and from this servitude, faith in me and obedience to my word will set you free).

35 And (as) the servant abideth not in the house for ever (so shall it be with the servants of sin, who are to be cast out into utter darkness): but the Son (i. e. he that is the Son of God) abideth ever.

36 If the Son therefore shall make you free, (by giving you power to become the sons of God, through faith in him, so coheirs with Christ, Rom. viii. 17,) ye shall be free indeed (so as never to lose your freedom).

37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed (according to the flesh); but (now) ye seek to kill me, because [19] my word hath no place in you (finds no reception with you; which shows you are not the children of Abraham by faith, but of another father).

38 I speak that which I have [20] seen with (i. e. been taught by) my Father: and ye do that which you have seen with (i. e. been taught by) your father.

39 They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If [21] ye were Abraham's children (in the disposition of your spirit), ye would do the works of Abraham.

40 But now ye seek to kill me, (because I am) a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham (who was so celebrated for his faith in God's revelation, and humanity to his servants).

41 Ye do the deeds of (him who is indeed) your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of [22] fornication (i. e. we are no worshippers of idols): we have one Father, even (the true) God.

42 Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: [23] for I proceeded forth and came from God (into the world); neither came I of myself, but he sent me disciples indeed.] i. e. Such disciples to whom I shall still more make known my doctrine, and on whom I shall confer the life eternal promised to them (Matt. xxiv. 13, Heb. x. 35, 36, 2 John 8, Rev. ii. 10).

---

[16] Ver. 32. And ye shall know the truth.] Christ thought no general council, no infallible judge, necessary to the knowledge of the truth: but promiseth this to him, who was steadfast in the faith, and honestly disposed to do what he knew to be his duty.

[17] Ver. 33. We never were in bondage, οὐδενὶ δεδουλεύκαμεν, we never were servants to any man.] What! were they not brought out of the land of bondage? Does not Nehemiah confess, Behold, σήμερον ἐσμεν δοῦλοι, "We are servants this day?" and must they not have been then in bondage to the Egyptians and Babylonians? or, if they spake of their own age, were they not tributaries to the Romans? and did they not still clamour against this tribute, as a sign of servitude? (see note on 1 Tim. vi. 2, and James iv. 3.) Though therefore they were under the Romans, not as servants, but as tributaries, yet, since they thought, saith Josephus,* the payment of this tribute did, δουλείαν ἐπιφέρειν, "bring them into servitude," they seem not well consistent with themselves, in saying, they never were servants to any.

[18] Ver. 34. Πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, &c. Every one that committeth sin is the servant of sin.] That ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν is to live and go on in any course of sin, though our reason may condemn and conscience boggle at it, see note on 1 John iii. 9; he that doth this, saith Christ, "is a servant of sin," and in bondage to it; for when we thus obey sin in the lustings of it, then doth it κυριεύειν, "lord it over us," and we become δοῦλοι εἰς ὑπακοήν, "servants to obey it" (Rom. vi. 14. 16), and "of what a man is overcome, of that he is brought in bondage;" and this the very heathens saw,† that the man that was forced to cry out through the law of his members warring against the law of his mind, that "he did not the good that he would, but the evil that he would not," had lost his freedom, and was under servitude, "because he could not do as he would, but sinned, though he was not willing so to do" (see Examen Millii here).

Ver. 35. The Son abideth ever.] i. e. I, who am the Son of God, abide for ever, and so am able for ever to confer this freedom from sin of which I speak; for this sense the following words ("if the Son therefore make you free," &c.) fairly plead: it being reasonable to conceive that the Son, in this verse, should bear the same sense with the Son in the following words, which give the reason of what is here said.

[19] Ver. 37. Ὁ λόγος ἐμὸς οὐ χωρεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, My word hath no place in you.] i. e. Your corrupt affections will not permit you to embrace it: so Matt. xix. 11. All men οὐ χωροῦσι, "cannot receive this saying" (see note on xxi. 25).

[20] Ver. 38. I speak what I have seen: Ver. 40. what I have heard of my Father.] i. e. What I have learnt of my Father abiding in me; for we learn by hearing and seeing.

[21] Ver. 39. If ye were Abraham's seed, ye would do the works of Abraham.] Christ owns they were Abraham's seed according to the flesh (ver. 37), and therefore only denies them to be so as to their members, or that resemblance with the works of Abraham, which would make God own them as his children, viz. his steady faith (Rom. iv. 16), and ready obedience (Heb. xi. 8. 17), by which alone they could obtain the blessing of Abraham (Gal. iii. 9. 14).

[22] Ver. 41. We are not born ἐκ πορνείας, of fornication; we have one Father, even God.] The prophets representing the idolaters among the Jews as fornicators, and their worshipping other gods as their "going a whoring" from their own God (Lev. xvii. 7, Ezek. xxiii. 30, Hos. iv. 12, ix. 1), when they had brought themselves off from that sin, they represented the idolatry of others under that name: so that their very treatises of idolatry bore the name of זנות* "treatises of whores, or whoredom;" and the book of Wisdom saith, "The invention of images was ἀρχὴ τῆς πορνείας, the beginning of whoredom," or idolatry, xiv. 12. Hence Philo† saith, "They who introduce many gods differ nothing, τῶν ἐκ τῆς πόρνης ἀποκυθέντων, from those that are born of whoredom," and so are to be driven from the congregation, the law saying, ὁ ἐκ πόρνης, "A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord," but they who have the knowledge of God, υἱοὶ τοῦ εὖ προσαγορεύονται ὄντως, "are fitly styled the sons of God." And again, "The law," saith he,‡ "expels both the atheist and polytheist from the congregation; the first as barren, the second as born of whoredom," ἄθεος μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἄγονος· πολύθεος δὲ ὁ ἐκ πόρνης. And hence the Jews here, being free from idolatry, say they "were not born of whoredom, but were the children of God," as worshipping one God only, and thinking that on this account God would not impute to them their former sins (see note on James ii. 19). But against this, Christ here declares, they only are to be owned as the children of God who do the works of God.

[23] Ver. 42. I proceeded forth, ἐξῆλθον, and came from God.] Into the world, being sent by him, and not coming of myself; others are said to be ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, "of God," even

---

* Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 1.

† Si servitus sit obedientia fracti animi, et arbitrio carentis suo, quis neget omnes improbos esse servos? Cicero, Parad. 5. Quid est enim libertas nisi potestas vivendi ut velis? dicite ergò, O homines, βούλεσθε ζῆν ἁμαρτάνοντες; οὐ βουλόμεθα· οὐδεὶς τοίνυν ἁμαρτάνων ἐλεύθερός ἐστι. Arrian. lib. ii. cap. 1.

* Buxt. Abbrev. p. 191.

† De Confus. Ling. p. 266, 267.

‡ L. de Migrat. Abra. p. 312, C. Seld. de Victim. Offer. p. 664, B.

43 Why do ye not understand (this from) my speech? even because [24] ye cannot (endure to) hear my word (as being that which is contrary to your lusts).

44 Ye are of your [25] father the devil (as being like him in temper and mind), and (therefore) the lusts of (this) your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning (of the creation), and abode not in the truth, because there is no (affection to) truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own (i. e. that which is agreeable to him): for he is a [26] liar, and the father (the author and first exemplar) of it (and semblably, the like murderous disposition in you makes you seek to kill me; and the like hatred to truth renders you so averse from receiving my word).

45 And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46 Which of you [27] convinceth me of sin (in saying I speak that doctrine which I have received from him who is true? ver. 14.) And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47 [28] He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear (i. e. receive) them not, because ye are not of God.

48 Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well (and with good reason) that thou art a Samaritan (an enemy to our religion), and hast a devil (i. e. a lying spirit in thee, when thou sayest, the children of Abraham are not the children of God, but of the devil)?

49 Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father (by ascribing all I say and do, not to myself, but to him), and ye do dishonour me (in speaking thus reproachfully of me).

50 And I seek not mine own glory (in what I say or do): there is one that seeketh (my honour) and judgeth (of these reproaches which you cast upon me).

51 Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall [29] never see death (eternal).

52 Then said the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou hast a devil (i. e. a lying spirit in thee. For) Abraham is dead, and the prophets (are dead); and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death.

53 [30] Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets (who) are (also) dead? whom makest thou thyself?

54 Jesus answered, If I honour myself (by pretending to be greater than indeed I am, or a prophet sent from God when I am not so), my honour is nothing (worth: but) it is my Father that honoureth me (by giving testimony to the truth of what I say; even he) of whom ye say, that he is your God:

55 Yet (though you call him so) ye have not (truly) known him; but I know him: and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you: but I know him, and keep his saying.

56 Your father [31] Abraham rejoiced (vehemently

---

all that hear his word (ver. 47), and the prophets are styled "men of God" in the Old Testament, and his "ministers" in the New, 1 Tim. vi. 11, 2 Tim. iii. 17. But though Moses, the prophets, and apostles, were sent of God into the world, it is said of none of them, that they did ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξελθεῖν, "come forth from God:" this therefore must import something peculiar to Christ: it therefore either must respect the Socinian gloss of Christ's ascent into heaven, to be instructed in his prophetic office, and his descent again from thence; which gloss I have confuted, note on iii. 13, or the Jews' opinion that the soul of the Messiah was created at the beginning of the world, and so came down from heaven to animate his body, which the Socinians, who deny that Christ had any existence before he was born of the virgin, cannot approve of; or it must import his divine ἐξελεύσις, or original from the Father, by the communication of his essence, or the union of the divine Λόγος to the human nature, which we assert (see the note on xiii. 3).

[24] Ver. 43. Because οὐ ἐδύνασθε ἀκούειν, ye cannot hear my word.] That is, men of your tempers cannot yield obedience to it: see the fifth import of the phrase μὴ δύνασθαι, note on Mark ii. 16. This, doubtless, was the great sin of the Jews, and so they wanted not either natural power, or assistance necessary on God's part, to do this; but only a moral power, or a mind well disposed to obey his words.

[25] Ver. 44. You are of your father the devil.] i. e. By resembling him in your actions; for as he is a son of Abraham who does the works of Abraham (ver. 39), so is he a child of the devil who does his works (1 John iii. 8. 10), not only out of ignorance and human frailty, but from choice and affection to, or good liking of them. "He was a murderer from the beginning," i. e. as soon as man was created; "for through the envy of the devil death entered into the world" (Wisd. ii. 24), and so "came upon all men" (Rom. v. 12): you, by seeking my death, in this resemble him: he "abode not in the truth," but seduced Eve by a lie; you in like manner therefore believe me not, "because I tell you the truth" (ver. 45), which shows you have hearts alien from the truth, but well affected to falsehood, as it is with him. Oh, how tremendous a thing it is to have the devil for our father! How careful therefore should we be to avoid those things which will subject us to this vile relation! viz. murder, lying, hatred of the truth here, envy, and enmity to others (Matt. xiii. 29), bitter zeal and strife in the heart (James iii. 14, 15), pride (1 Tim. iii. 16), every customary sin (1 John iii. 8).

[26] For he is a liar, καὶ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ, and the father of it.] Some of the fathers construing these words, "and the father of him," hence gathered, that the devil had a father, and was the son of some superior evil spirit; this being the sentiment, not only of the Casani and Archontici, who held that the god of the Jews was the father of the devil, as St. Austin* saith, but also of many of the orthodox, as St. Jerome† testifies; and Origen‡ leaves it as a thing doubtful: whereas αὐτοῦ here plainly refers to τοῦ ψεύδους, latent in the words ψεύστης ἐστὶ, of which see examples in Casaub. Exercit. 15, ad Annal. cap. 12, p. 394.

[27] Ver. 46. Which of you convinceth me of sin?] In a false prophet some marks to discern him may easily be found; viz. his thirst after honour and applause, covetousness, or falsehood: what of this nature do you see in me that you do not believe me?

[28] Ver. 47. He that is of God.] i. e. Who resembles him in holiness and goodness, and is disposed to do his will, is ready to receive the doctrine that comes from him; and it is an evidence that you do not thus resemble him, nor bear a filial affection to him, that you receive not his words.

[29] Ver. 51. Shall not see death εἰς αἰῶνα, for ever.] But shall after death obtain that life by which "death shall be swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. xv. 44, 2 Cor. v. 4); so Christ expounds himself, vi. 58.

[30] Ver. 53. Art thou greater than our father Abraham, who is dead?] As by this promise thou pretendest to be: for who can promise others shall never die, but he who is himself to live for ever! (see here Examen Millii.)

[31] Ver. 56. Your father Abraham rejoiced (or vehemently wished) to see my day.] i. e. To know the time when, by my coming into the world, the promise made to him, that "in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed," was to be fulfilled. Thus the days of Noah and Lot are the times in which they lived, Luke xvii. 26, and the days of the Baptist is the time when he appeared, Matt. xi. 12. Christ therefore here affirms of Abraham, what he had said of others, Luke x. 24, "That many prophets and kings desired to see the things which ye see," viz. Christ come into the world.

---

* Hær. 38, §. 4. Ibid. 40, §. 5.

† Hoc multi non intelligentes, patrem diaboli volunt esse draconem, qui regnat in mari, quem Hebræi appellant le viathan. In Isa. xiv. f. 36, E.

‡ In John, Tr. 23, ed. Huet. p. 308. Huet. Not. in Matt. p. 34, 35.

wished) to see my day (the coming of the Messiah): and [32] he saw it (afar off, by the eye of faith), and was glad.

57 Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet [33] fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?

58 Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [34] Before Abraham was, I am. (As being the Word which was in the beginning, i. 1.)

59 Then took they up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself (in the crowd), and (so) went out of the temple, going through the midst of them (unseen), and so passed by (untouched by his enemies).

---

[32] And he saw it.] viz. By the eye of faith, as a thing then afar off, to be accomplished in future ages: for "of this salvation the prophets inquired diligently, searching of what time the Spirit which was in them spake, when it testified of the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow them; to whom it was revealed, that not to themselves, but to us, they did minister these things," &c. (1 Pet. i. 10—12).

[33] Ver. 57. Thou art not yet fifty years old.] There is no cause to wonder why the Jews, who were not solicitous about the age of Christ, should speak thus of one whose gravity, wisdom, and countenance, might perhaps cause them to think him older than truly he was. It was more to be admired that Irenæus should plead apostolical tradition for the Jewish error, especially when we consider, that many of the fathers, viz. Clemens of Alexandria, Strom. lib. i. p. 340, A, Tertullian, adv. Judæos, cap. 8, Julius Africanus, apud Hieron. Comm. in Daniel ix., Lactantius, lib. iv. cap. 10, Orosius, lib. vii. cap. 10, and divers others held, that our Lord preached but one year, and suffered in the fifteenth of Tiberius, and the thirtieth year of his age. Moreover, all Christians agree that our Lord suffered under Pontius Pilate; now he was deposed by Tiberius in the last year of his reign, saith Josephus, which demonstrates that our Lord's suffering must be past in the thirty-seventh year of his age (see the note on Luke iii. 23).

[34] Ver. 58. Before Abraham was, I am.] This the Socinians interpret thus, Before Abraham is made the father of many nations, I am the Messiah: for, say they, πρὶν γένεσθαι doth not signify, "before he was," but, "before he was made," as it doth xiii. 19, xiv. 29. And (2.) those words ἐγώ εἰμι is Matt. xxiv. 5, "I am the Christ," or the Messiah, as Mark xiv. 62, Luke xxi. 8, ἐγὼ εἰμι is Matt. xxiv. 5, "I am the Christ:" so the phrase signifies, say they, here, ver. 24. 28, xiii. 19. But against this strained exposition let it be considered,

First, That the whole series of the discourse shows, that the opposition is here put, not betwixt Abraham's being the father of all nations, and Christ's being the Messiah: but between τὸ γενέσθαι, the birth of Abraham, and τὸ εἶναι, the being of Christ. Moreover, the word "Abraham," so frequent in the holy scripture, doth also signify his person, and is never elsewhere used in this mystical sense, in which it imports not his person, but his privilege, or rather the completion of a promise made to him; it being therefore evident that the discourse from ver. 55, is of Abraham's person, it is incongruous here to introduce a mystical sense of the word, which the Jews never thought of, and which, had Christ intended, he, in all likelihood, would have said πρὶν Ἀβρὰμ γενέσθαι Ἀβραὰμ, i. e. before the reason of his new name be accomplished. In confirmation of this argument, let it be noted, that the word γενέσθαι signifies as well to be, as to be made. It signifies to be, Matt. v. 45, John i. 6, ἐγένετο, "There was a man named John;" and ver. 30, ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονε, "He was before me," xx. 27, Acts vii. 38, xiii. 5. And when it is used of persons in the sense of fieri, to be made, it signifies to be born, produced, or generated; and so here, "Before Abraham was made," must be the same as, "Before he was born." The places cited by the Socinians are doubly impertinent, viz. John iii. 19, xiv. 29, (1.) because πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι, before they are; and (2.) because they speak not of persons, but only of things which were to happen afterward.

Secondly, Christ in these words answers the objection of the Jews, that he, being not yet fifty years old, could not have seen Abraham. Now, according to our interpretation, he answers it fully, by saying, he was the eternal Logos (i. 1), or the person that said to Moses, "I am" (Exod. iii. 14), whereas, according to the Socinian comment, his answer is nothing to the purpose, and was no more true of him than it was of all that heard him, that they were before Abraham, they being all before he was made the father of all nations; who therefore can believe our Saviour would, upon this occasion, put them off with such a piece of sophistry? for, as Novatian argues, either Christ lied, and put a cheat upon them, "if being from Abraham, he was not before him; or he was before him, being the God of Abraham" (De Trin. cap. 23). To this Stegmannus answers, That this is no absurdity, it being usual with Christ to answer nothing directly to the objection of the Jews, to which effect he cites, John vii. 20, 21, xii. 23. 25, xiv. 23, Luke xiii. 23, 24, but very fallaciously; for John xii. 23. 25, there is neither question nor objection; Luke xiii. 23, 24, there is a curious question, but no objection; John xiv. 23, Christ speaks not to the Jews, but to his own disciples; and John vii. 20, Christ answers to the question sufficiently, by saying, ver. 23, ἐμοὶ χολᾶτε; "Are you full of choler or rage against me?" and the people more directly, ver. 25, which made it the less necessary for him so to do. Let Stegmannus show, if he can, when Christ answers in this impertinent and illusive manner to the Jews carping at his words, as being false and impossible to be true, with such an asseveration, "Verily, verily, I say to you."

Thirdly, Had this only been Christ's meaning, why do the Jews take up stones to punish him as a blasphemer, there being not the least semblance of blasphemy in the words, taken in this sense? They may do it, saith Stegmannus, because he professed himself the Messiah: for as blasphemers, so also false prophets, were to be slain. But as they never did attempt to slay or to accuse him upon this account, though he still owned himself a prophet sent from God to them; so they themselves testify, they stoned or attempted to stone him for this "blasphemy, that being a man he made himself God" (x. 33).

Fourthly, I ask, whether our Saviour was willing to be understood by the Jews or not? If not, why did he use this solemn preface, "Verily, verily, I say to you?" If he would be understood, why did he speak unto them in that language, in which they neither did nor could they understand him? For how could they imagine the word "Abraham" was to be understood in such a sense in which they never knew it used? In a word, this interpretation is contrary to all antiquity, as their expositions in these cases use to be; for even the Ante-Nicene fathers proved that Christ was God, perfect from the beginning, and no new God, from these words: so Iren. lib. iv. cap. 27, Orig. contra Celsum, lib. viii. p. 386, Tertul. adv. Prax. cap. 22, p. 513, Novatian, cap. 23.

As for the phrase ἐγώ εἰμι, "I am," let it be noted, that in the other evangelists it is only used to signify what the "false Christs" would say, and so can have no other import than "I am the Christ;" but in this gospel it seems to signify, "I am the Son of God:" for he that saith, "I am," ver. 24. 28, is he who had "God for his Father," ver. 23, and was ἐκ τοῦ ἄνω, "from above," ver. 19, and xiii. 19, he that calls them to believe, "I am," is he who came "from the Father," ver. 1, and was their Lord, ver. 13, and was going to the Father, ver. 3. Now the rulers of the Jews still accused Christ of blasphemy, and condemned him upon this account, Matt. xxvi. 65, Luke xxii. 70, 71. Thus therefore Christ might say, "I am," and yet be God of God.

Secondly, Others answer with Grotius, That Christ here only signifies that he was before Abraham, in the decree of God. But (1.) Christ answers to the objection of the Jews, which had no respect to the priority of these two persons in the decree of God, but as to actual existence. (2.) In this sense even Judas, and all the murderers of our Lord, might be before Abraham had a being: and, lastly, the arguments produced against the former answer, conclude as strongly against this (see Placæus, argument. 11, à sect vicesim. prim. ad finem).

CHAPTER IX.

1 And as Jesus passed by (them, viii. 59,) he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master (diseases and imperfections in the body being the fruit of sin), [1] who did sin? this man (in the womb, or in some other body), or his parents, (at the time of his conception, so as to be the occasion) that he was born blind?

3 Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents (so as to cause this blindness in the child): but (the divine wisdom hath permitted this to be so) that the (miraculous) [2] works of God should be made manifest in (the cure of) him.

4 (And having received power from him to do these mighty works) [3] I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day (i. e. while my time lasts: for) the night (my passion) cometh (shortly), when no man can work.

5 [4] As long as I am in the world, I am (to be) the light of the world (by giving light to the blind, and the light of the gospel to them that sit in darkness.

6 And) When he had thus spoken he [5] spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,

7 And said unto him, [6] Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, (which is, by interpretation, Sent) (and so may put you in mind of him who is sent to give light to the blind, see note v. 3). He went his way therefore (thither), and washed, and came (back) seeing.

8 ¶ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that (before) sat [7] and begged?

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 2. Τίς ἥμαρτεν, &c. Who hath sinned, he or his parents? &c.] Here,

First, It is certain that Christ's disciples do not inquire whether this person was born blind for his original sin; since in that all others, who were born seeing, equalled him in guilt: and yet they here suppose he might, and the pharisees say positively, ver. 34, ἐν ἁμαρτίαις σὺ ἐγεννήθης ὅλος, "Thou wast wholly born in sin;" when as yet they themselves were equally guilty of original guilt. Both therefore must understand this of some personal and special sin.

Secondly, It is not hard to conceive what they might intend by the sin of the parents, viz. the begetting him in their uncleanness against the law, Lev. xx. 18, and* this was thought to have so ill an influence upon the child, as to render it obnoxious to leprosy, or mutilation, and so might be the cause of this person's blindness. Whence Philo† saith that it was forbidden, that they might not produce ἀτελεῖς γονάς, "imperfect children." Note, Thirdly, That the opinion of the Platonists and Pythagoreans, concerning the transmigration of souls from one body to another, and being put, according to their merit, into better or worse bodies, had obtained among the Jews, being perhaps derived from those of Alexandria to their brethren in Judea. To this effect is that saying of the author of the Wisdom of Solomon, that "being good he came into a body undefiled," or free from any notable infirmity (ver. 20). Josephus‡ saith, that this opinion firmly obtained among the essenes, "that souls were immortal, and that they descended from the pure air, συμπλέκεσθαι ὥσπερ εἱρκταῖς τοῖς σώμασι, "to be chained to bodies." And Philo§ saith, "the air was full of them, and that those which were nearest to the earth, κατίασιν ἐκδεδησομένας σώμασι ζωητοῖς, descending to be tied to mortal bodies,‖ παλινδρομοῦσι αὖθις, return back to bodies, being desirous to live in them." And so the apostles may be supposed to inquire here whether our Lord allowed of any of those sentiments, that the soul of this man might be put into this imperfect body for the punishment of what it had done before, whether in or out of the body.

[2] Ver. 3. But that the works of God might be manifested in him.] i. e. Though God did not actively concur to render this man blind; yet in his wisdom he thought fit to leave this imperfection in the plastic matter unrectified, that he might show his miraculous power in giving sight to such a one, his wisdom using this as a confirmation of Christ's doctrine, and his goodness in illuminating the soul and body of this man at once, and ministering this motive to others to believe.

[3] Ver. 4. I must work the works of him that sent me.] Here, saith Stegmannus, Christ speaking of these works, not as his works, nor simply of the works of God, but of "him that sent him," shows that he did them by the command of another; whereas the true God can be subject to the command of none; and hence he concludes Christ is not truly God. To this I answer, that Christ doth plainly call these works the works of God, ver. 3, and so declares that they were done by a divine power, which is inseparable from a divine essence. Secondly, Christ here speaks in the person of a prophet sent from God, which Christ was only by virtue of his human nature, and therefore could not here speak of himself as God (see the note on vii. 16).

[4] Ver. 5. Whilst I am in the world, I am the light of the world.] It is usual with Christ, when he hath done his cures upon the body, to convert his speech to those spiritual things which were adumbrated by them, and for which cause they were done: so having given sight to this blind man, he styles himself "the light of the world," which he was by that evangelical doctrine, which did illuminate the minds of men; and though at his departure from the world, he was no longer so by his bodily presence and oral instructions, he still continued so to be by the irradiations of his Holy Spirit, and by the doctrine of his apostles, spread throughout the world (see i. 9, viii. 2, xii. 35, 36).

[5] Ver. 6. He spat upon the ground, and made clay.] The fathers here say, that Christ, to illustrate his miraculous power, used that to anoint the blind man's eyes, which was the greatest impediment to seeing, and most pernicious to the eyes, though the Jews thought spittle good for the eyes, as we now do. Christ bids him thus anointed, "Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash;" by this making trial of his faith, which, had it not produced in him obedience to this command, he had not been healed. And Christ does this on the sabbath-day (ver. 14), when by the canons of the Jews, saith Dr. Lightfoot, "it was not lawful to anoint the eyes with spittle," to arm his disciples against that pernicious doctrine of the pharisees, that it was not lawful to do good, or perform works of mercy, on that day; and this he might the rather do, because he foresaw what danger this superstition might bring upon the believing Jews, when the days of vengeance came upon that nation; whence he exhorts them to pray that their flight might not be on the sabbath-day, Matt. xxiv. 20.

[6] Ver. 7. Wash in the pool of Siloam, &c.] The spring of Siloam discharged itself into a double pool; the lower, which was called the pool of fleeces, Neh. iii. 15, and the upper, which is called שִׁלֹחַ, the pool of Siloah, which properly signifies ἀπεσταλμένος, sent, the waters being by the providence of God sent from the bowels of the earth into it, and so might by the very name mind them of the Messiah, sent as the more special gift of God for the purification of the unclean, and to enlighten the blind (Isa. xxxv. 5, see the note on v. 3).

[7] Ver. 8. Who sat and begged.] Here the form of begging

* Φάσι γάρ τινες ἐκ τῆς τοιαύτης συναφείας καὶ λύβην καὶ λέπραν ἀπογεννᾶσθαι τοῦ περιττώματος ἐκείνου τὰ διαπλαττόμενα πημαίνοντος σώματα. Theodoret in Levit. qu. 21.

† Lib. de Spec. Leg. p. 603.

‡ De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 12, p. 781, F, G.

§ De Gigant. p. 222, C. ‖ De Somn. p. 455, D.

9 Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him: but he (himself) said, I am he.

10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

11 He answered and said, A [8] man that is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and (accordingly) I went and washed, and I received (my) sight.

12 Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

13 ¶ They brought to the [9] Pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14 And it was the sabbath day when Jesus made the clay (mixed with spittle), and (by it) opened his eyes.

15 Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

16 Therefore said some of the Pharisees, [10] This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner (not only by violating the rest of the sabbath, but also by pretending to be of God when he is not) do such miracles? And there was a division among them (about him).

17 They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, He is a prophet.

18 But the (pharisees among the) Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

19 And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? (if so,) how then doth he now see?

20 His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21 But by [11] what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age; ask him: he shall (will) speak for (Gr. concerning) himself.

22 These words spake his parents, because they feared the (rulers of the) Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was (the) Christ, he should be [12] put out of the synagogue.

23 Therefore said his parents, He is of age; ask him. (This cure being such that to affirm that Jesus had done it, was in effect to own him as that Prophet, of whom Esaias had foretold that he should open the eyes of the blind. See the note on Matt. xi. 5.)

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, Give God the praise (of this cure: for) we know that this man is a sinner (i. e. a false prophet, ver. 16).

25 He answered and said, [13] Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not (Gr. that he is a sinner, I know not): one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.

26 Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

27 He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear (i. e. believe me): wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye also be his disciples?

28 Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple; but we are Moses' disciples.

29 We know that God spake unto Moses: (but) as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

30 The man answered and said unto them, Why herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes (which is a demonstration that he acteth by a power derived from God).

31 Now we know [14] that God heareth not sinners (usurping his authority, or pretending falsely to come from him): but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.

32 Since the world began was it not heard that [15] any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

---

among the Jews is observable, viz. זכו, "Deserve," or "Do thyself good by me;" intimating that by works of charity, we do good as well to ourselves as others.

[8] Ver. 11. A man that was called Jesus.] Had he not had some notice who he was, he would not have so readily obeyed his commands; now this knowledge of him he might have either from his leader, or from Christ's disciples.

[9] Ver. 13. They bring him to the pharisees.] i. e. To the council, chiefly consisting of that sect; whence, in this evangelist, the whole council passeth under the name of pharisees, i. 24, iv. 1, viii. 3, xi. 46. This they might do, either from ill-will to Christ, or out of curiosity to know whether they would own the person, who had done this signal miracle, to be the very man, of whom Esaias had prophesied, that he should "open the eyes of the blind." And sure the providence of God so ordered this, that they might hear from the mouth of the blind man a testimony, which would either convince them, or render their unbelief without excuse.

[10] Ver. 16. This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath.] i. e. He is not sent of God as a prophet; and yet they themselves own, that a prophet might do and command things contrary to the rest required by the sabbath; and prove this from the example of Joshua, who commandeth, that the ark should be carried round Jericho, the armed men going before and after it seven days; one of which must be a sabbath (Josh. vi.). How then could that, which prophets were by their own principles allowed to do, prove that Christ was no prophet; especially, if we consider, that by these actions he did not indeed violate the rest of the sabbath, but only their corrupt traditions concerning it?

[11] Ver. 21. But how he now sees, we know not.] Here his parents seem to be faulty, (1.) in denying that which they had learned from their son, for fear of the Jews (ver. 22), (2.) by their ingratitude to Christ, whose kindness to their son ought to have been thankfully owned and acknowledged by them.

[12] Ver. 22. Ἀποσυνάγωγος γένηται, Should be excluded from the synagogue.] i. e. Should lie under the sentence of excommunication; either that called niddai, which only separated him four cubits from the society of others, saith Buxtorf,* but left him free, saith Lightfoot,† at that distance, either to expound traditions, or to hear them expounded in the synagogue; but perhaps not free to join with them in prayers, or giving of thanks; such a one not being admitted to join with them in their thanksgivings at their table: or else, it was that of cherem, which excluded the excommunicated person from all entrance into the synagogue; this being, saith Leo de Modena,‡ forbidden to the excommunicated; and to this rather do those words incline, ver. 34, 35, ἐξέβαλον αὐτὸν, "They cast him forth," i. e. out of the place of the synagogue, and so ἀποσυναγώγους γένεσθαι, "They shall cast you out of the synagogues," seems to import, xvi. 2. And hence the primitive excommunications of the Christians excluded the criminal from the assembly, and from all communion in sacred offices for a time, and only gradually admitted him to them.

[13] Ver. 25. Εἰ ἁμαρτωλὸς ἐστιν, οὐκ οἶδα.] These words have I thus rendered, "That he is a sinner, I know not;" and this the words following require, in which the blind man proves, by an unanswerable argument (ver. 31), that Christ was not a sinner: so εἰ doth often signify; so "Do I not know εἰ σήμερον, that to-day I am king over Israel?" 2 Sam. xix. 22; 1 Kings i. 51, "Let Solomon swear, εἰ οὐ θανατώσει, that he will not kill his servant" (see the notes on Acts xxvi. 8, 1 Tim. v. 10).

[14] Ver. 31. God heareth not sinners.] i. e. False prophets, who speak from themselves, and yet pretend to come from God; see ver. 16 and 24, for by so doing he would confirm their lies, and set his seal to their false doctrine.

[15] Ver. 32. That any man opened the eyes of one that

---

* In voce niddai, p. 1306.

† In 1 Cor. v. 5.

‡ De Consuet. Judæorum, lib. ii. cap. 3.

33 If this man [16] were not of God, he could do nothing (of this nature).

34 They answered and said unto him, Thou wast altogether born in sins (being conceived by thy parents in their uncleanness), and dost thou teach us? And they cast him out (of the court).

35 Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God (the Messiah sent by him into the world to be the Saviour of it)?

36 He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that (knowing him) I might believe on him?

37 And Jesus said unto him, [17] Thou hast both seen him (or, thou both seest him), and it is he that talketh with thee (i. e. and hearest him talking with thee).

38 And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

39 ¶ And Jesus said, For (manifesting the just) judgment (of God on men) I am come into this world, (viz.) that they [18] which see not (i. e. that are rude and simple, and sit in darkness, but are ready to own their own blindness, and come to the light) might see; and that they which (think they) see (already, and therefore shut their eyes against any farther light shining to them) might be made blind (might have this light taken from them, and so be left in darkness).

40 And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, Are we blind also (in thy opinion)?

41 Jesus said unto them, [19] If ye were blind (i. e unable to discern who I am; if ye had neither the law nor prophets to direct you, nor the light shining in your eyes which is the case of the gentiles), ye should have no sin (of infidelity): but now ye say, We see (and arrogate to yourselves the knowledge of the law and prophets, and are confident you are guides to the blind, Rom. ii. 19, and yet will not receive the light, which shineth in your eyes); therefore your sin remaineth (inexcusable).

---

was born blind.] They who lose their sight by a disease, may be cured; but no man, no, not Moses, nor any of the prophets, ever did, or could, without the assistance of a divine power, give sight to one born blind: whence even the Jews reckon this among the signs of the Messiah, that he should "open the eyes of the blind," Midrash, in Ps. cxlvi. 8.

[16] Ver. 33. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.] See here a blind man, and unlearned, judging more rightly of divine things than the whole learned council of the pharisees: whence we learn, that we are not always to be led by the authority of councils, popes, or bishops; and that it is not absurd for laymen sometimes to vary from their opinions; these overseers being sometimes guilty of great oversights.

[17] Ver. 37. Καὶ ἑώρακας αὐτὸν, καὶ.] Grammarians know, that when two καὶs do thus come together, the first is to be rendered, both; so xi. 48, καὶ ἀροῦσιν ἡμῶν καὶ τὸν τόπον καὶ τὸ ἔθνος, "And take away both our place and nation:" so xii. 28, καὶ ἐδόξασα, καὶ πάλιν ἐοξάσω, "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again:" and that the aorist is usually put for the present tense, see the note on xx. 17. And so these words are well rendered thus, "Thou hast seen him, and he talketh with thee:" so i. 36, ἕστηκεν, "One stands in the midst of you;" v. 45, "Moses in whom ἠλπίκατε, ye trust;" xi. 27, ἐγὼ πεπίστευκα, "I believe thou art the Christ" (see Luke viii. 20, Acts i. 11, xii. 14, Rom. v. 2, 1 Tim. iv. 10, et Gloss. de Verbo, lib. iii. tr. 3, can. 46).

[18] Ver. 39. Εἰς κρίμα, ἵνα βλέποντες τυφλοὶ γένωνται, For judgment, that they who see may be made blind.] Here the critics and some of the fathers note, that the conjunction ἵνα is not causal, but only consequential; as, when Christ saith, "I came not to send peace upon the earth, but a sword," i. e. this will be the event and consequence of my coming: so ἵνα is used here, ver. 2, Rom. i. 20, 1 Cor. xi. 19 (see note on xii. 40). And when Christ here saith, "I came, that they who see not, might see;" he seems especially to respect the gentiles sitting in darkness, &c.—ἵνα τὰ ἔθνη οἱ μὴ βλέποντες βλέψωσι, καὶ οἱ βλέποντες Ἰσραὴλ τυφλοὶ γενῶνται, "that the gentiles," saith Origen,* "who are now blind may see, and Israel who now sees may be made blind," through their infidelity: so also Cyril and St. Chrysostom, in referring us to the words of St. Paul, who saith, that "blindness, in part, had happened to the Jews, till the fullness of the gentiles should come in," Rom. xi. 25 (and this according to the prediction of the psalmist, ver. 9, 10), and who saith of the converted gentiles, "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord," Eph. v. 8 (see note on Rom. xiii. 12).

[19] Ver. 41. If ye were blind, ye should not have sin.] i. e. If out of the mere blindness and darkness of your minds, ye did not own me as the Messiah (which is the case of the gentiles, to whom no prophets were sent foretelling, no law promising him; no gospel preached revealing him to the world), you would have no sin of infidelity; for, "If I had not come, and spoken to you," xv. 22, yea, "if I had not done among you the works which no other person did," ver. 24, ye had not had (this) sin, ver. 24: but now, you boasting of your knowledge in the law and the prophets, which have given such plain characters of me, and yet neither believing Moses nor the prophets speaking of me (John v. 39, 40. 45, 46), and claiming to yourselves the judgment of discerning betwixt true and false prophets, and yet giving no credit to me, proving my mission from God by a crowd of miracles done before your eyes,—your unbelief remaineth inexcusable and unpardoned (John xv. 22): "for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John viii. 21. 24).

---

* Orig. in Matt. p. 395. 411.

CHAPTER X.

1 Verily, verily, I say unto you, [1] He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold (i. e. he who pretends to be a guide and ruler of God's church and people, and owns not the Messiah, nor hath commission from him so to do), but climbeth up some other way (to get into it), the same is a thief and a robber.

2 But he that entereth in by the door is the (a true) shepherd of the sheep.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 1. He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, &c.] For the right understanding of this parable let it be noted.

First, That Christ directs this parable against the scribes and pharisees, to whom he spake, ix. 40, as appears, (1.) from the pronoun ὑμῖν, which begins this chapter thus, "I say to you:" and (2.) from these words, ver. 6, "This parable spake Jesus to them." They therefore must be the persons concerned in the contents of it. Note therefore,

Secondly, That these pharisees took upon them to be guides and teachers of the people, whence by our Saviour they are represented as "blind guides;" they also held, that others were to receive authority to teach from their commission or ordination to that office; though we find not that they received any such authority from God, who rather had appointed the "priests' lips to preserve knowledge, and the people to seek the law at their mouths" (Mal. ii. 4. 7); and of the tribe of Levi, "to teach his judgments to Jacob, and his law to Israel" (Deut. xxxiii. 10), "even all the commandments which God had delivered by the hand of

3 [2] To him (God) the porter (or, great keeper of this sheepfold) openeth (giving him his testimony and commission to feed his sheep); and the sheep hear (and obey) his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name (hath an exact knowledge and care of them), and leadeth them out (to their pastures).

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep (to pasture), he goeth before them (after the manner of the eastern shepherds), and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.

5 And a [3] stranger (who hath no commission from God, nor teacheth his word) will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know (and approve) not the voice of strangers.

6 This parable spake Jesus unto them (and in reproof of them, as blind guides, and not true shepherds, because they rejected him): but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them (i. e. they understood not the true import of his words).

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [4] I am the door (as of the shepherds, ver. 1, so also) of the sheep.

8 [5] All that ever came before me (pretending to be the Prophet, or the Messiah promised to the Jews, or to instruct his people when God never sent them so to do) are (to be accounted as) thieves and robbers: but the sheep (who only knew and are obedient to the voice of God) did not hear them.

9 I am the door (of the sheep): by (faith in) me if any man enter in (to the sheepfold), he shall be saved (from the thief and wolf), and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they (who are my sheep) might have [6] life, and that they might have it more abundantly (Gr. and that they might have abundance of pasture, ver. 3).

11 [7] I am the good shepherd: (and act as) the good shepherd (who) giveth (or, layeth down) his life for the sheep.

12 But he that is an [8] hireling, and not the shepherd, (but one) whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth (to secure himself): and (so) the wolf catcheth (some of) them, and scattereth (the rest of) the sheep.

13 The hireling (who regards his own safety and advantage, and not that of the sheep,) fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14 I am the good shepherd, and [9] know (i. e. love) my sheep, and am known (i. e. beloved) of (those that are) mine.

15 As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Moses" (Lev. x. 11): and hence Christ represents them as "a plantation which his Father had not planted" (Matt. xv. 13), bids his disciples beware of their doctrine (Matt. xvi. 12), they "teaching for doctrines (of God) the commandments of men," and "making void the commandments of God by their traditions" (Matt. xv. 6. 9); their voice therefore was such as the true sheep neither would nor ought to hear. Note, Thirdly, That these scribes and pharisees believed not in Christ (John vii. 48), they "neither would enter into the kingdom of God themselves, nor suffer others to enter into it" (Luke xi. 52), and therefore are said to have "taken away the key of knowledge." Christ therefore here pronouncing himself the door both of the shepherds (ver. 1), and of the sheep (ver. 6), by which they were to enter into the sheepfold, informs them, that now that he the great Shepherd of the sheep was come, they who refused to own him, and to teach the sheep in his name, according to his doctrine, and by his authority, as his apostles and the seventy did, had no true commission to instruct them; and that they who set up in opposition to him to be the guides and teachers of the people, were not only blind but false guides, and even thieves and robbers: the first, as taking away what belongs not to them; the second, as destroying the sheep.

[2] Ver. 3. To him (thus entering by the door) the porter (God, the great keeper of the sheepfold) openeth.] As to one allowed by him to feed his sheep, and him the sheep hear and obey, teaching the doctrine of the gospel and the kingdom of God to them, in the name and by the authority of the great Shepherd of the sheep: and when this Shepherd, by himself or others acting in his name, and by his mission, leadeth forth his own sheep, he goes before them, after the manner of the eastern shepherds, to preserve them from danger, and to conduct them into wholesome pastures (ver. 4). So did Christ and his shepherds, being τύποι, "examples" for the flock to follow (1 Pet. v. 3).

[3] Ver. 5. A stranger they do not follow.] And such are all they who do not teach them the doctrine of the gospel in Christ's name, and by his authority.

[4] Ver. 7. I am the door of the sheep.] Ver. 1, 2, he had represented himself as the door of the true shepherds; here he declares himself the door of the sheep also: showing that since his advent there is no entrance into the church or kingdom of God, but by faith in him and embracing his doctrine.

[5] Ver. 8. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers.] i. e. All that came under pretence of being their king, or their Messiah; as Theudas, not he who, saith Josephus,* was destroyed by Cuspius Fadus; for he appeared before Judas Gaulonites (Acts v. 36, 37), who, according to Josephus, was suppressed toward the latter end of the reign of Augustus (Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 1, 2). The same Josephus saith, that of those multitudes that began seditions under Sabinus and Varus, every one was made βασιλεὺς, "king" (lib. xvii. cap. 12, p. 608, G): and speaking of the very same time, he saith, πυκνοὺς βασιλείαν ὁ καιρὸς ἀνέπειθε, "The time (when they expected Messiah their King) made many to usurp the kingdom" (De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 6, p. 779, G), which they must do under pretence of being their Messiah also, or the king that cometh in the name of the Lord to redeem Israel (Luke xix. 38, xxiv. 21, see Examen Millii).

[6] Ver. 10. Ἵνα ζωὴν ἔχωσι, καὶ περισσὸν ἔχωσιν, That they might have life, and have it more abundantly.] Having, saith Grotius, cum eâ vitâ omne genus felicitatis, "with life all kind of felicity;" but βίος and ζωὴ signify, not only life, but sustenance by which it is preserved; as when the widow's mite is styled, ὅλος ὁ βίος, "her whole life" (Mark xii. 44): so he that takes the nether millstone to pledge, "taketh a man's life" (Deut. xxiv. 6), i. e. saith the Chaldee, that which makes his meat ready to preserve life; "the necessaries of life," Targum Hieros. In Homer it is ἡ πρὸς τὴν ζωὴν παρασκεύη, "provision for life" (see Budæus).

[7] Ver. 11. I am the good shepherd.] Referred to by the prophets, Isa. xl. 11, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, xxxvii. 24. I am so κατ' ἐξοχὴν, so as to "lay down my life for the sheep," and "take it up again," ver. 15. 17, which words can agree to no other shepherd. I grant to Grotius, that the apostles and their successors were true shepherds, and not mercenaries; but none of them could be the good Shepherd here, or the one Shepherd, ver. 16, viz. "the chief Shepherd of the sheep" (1 Pet. v. 4): though by their ministry he brought both Jews and gentiles into his fold after his resurrection; and they doing this in his name, and by his authority and assistance, he himself is said to do it (ver. 16).

[8] Ver. 12. The hireling——fleeth.] The hireling here is not he who receives maintenance from his particular flock; for this he may do by virtue of Christ's ordinance (1 Cor. ix. 13, 14): of this, saith Christ, he is "worthy" (Luke x. 7): and much less he who labours among them, with respect to that recompense or crown of glory he is to receive "when the chief Shepherd shall appear;" but he who is an intruder, "whose the sheep are not," who intends not their good so much as his own profit, and who, in time of danger, flies for his own safety, not caring though the wolf tear and devour them. Hence also we may learn, that a true pastor must not desert his flock in time of peril, when by his absence they may be brought into great peril, and by his presence may be happily preserved from it.

[9] Ver. 14. I know mine, and am known of them.] i. e.

---

* Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 2, p. 689.

Father: and (out of love and obedience to him) I lay down my life for the sheep.

16 And [10] other sheep I have, which are not of this fold (i. e. the gentiles): them also I must bring (into the fold), and they shall hear my voice; and (so of Jew and gentile) there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

17 [11] Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life (for the sheep; and this I do, not that I might continue under the power of death, but) that I might take it again (by a glorious resurrection).

18 No man (by force) taketh it (away) from me (before the time), but (then) [12] I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again (and rise from the dead). This commandment (i. e. commission, of laying down my life for the sheep) have I received of my Father.

19 ¶ There was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings (which seemed to ascribe to him such power and relation to God as his Father, and spake of his death and the conversion of the gentiles, which things the Jews could not well bear).

20 And many of them said (with the pharisees), He hath a devil, and is mad (i. e. he is possessed with a melancholy spirit and a frenzy); why hear ye him (or attend to any thing he says)?

I have an intimate affection for them, and they sincerely love me; for this phrase signifies,

First, To approve: thus "the Lord knoweth the righteous," Ps. i. 6, and whom he approveth not, he is said not to know, Matt. vii. 23.

Secondly, To love, and to be kindly affected to; as when God saith to his own people, "You have I known of all the families of the earth," Amos iii. 2; "If any man love God, he is known of him," 1 Cor. viii. 3, see Deut. ii. 7.

Thirdly, To preserve and protect; as Ps. xxxi. 8, "Thou hast known my soul in adversity;" Nah. i. 7, God is good to them that wait for him, γινώσκων, "knowing them that fear him."

Ver. 15.] Because it is said here, that Christ laid down his life for his sheep, elsewhere that he doth it for "his friends," John xv. 13, 14, and for "his church," Eph. ii. 26, and all are not his sheep, his friends, or his church: hence some conclude, that Christ did not die for all.

Ans. Though it be certain, from the places cited in the note here, that Christ died intentionally for all, i. e. designing the benefits of his salutary passion for them, upon their performance of the conditions of the new covenant established in his blood, according to these plain words of the apostle, 2 Cor. v. 15, "He died for all, that they who live might not live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them;" and so none perish, because he died not for them, but because they do not live to him who died for them: yet it is also true, that he eventually is only the "Saviour of his body," and died only for his sheep and friends; because they only do perform the conditions of the new covenant, and therefore to them only can this righteous Judge assign, at last, the blessings promised in that covenant.

Secondly, In none of these places is it said, that Christ died only for his sheep, for his church, or for his friends; and therefore none of them say any thing which contradicts the more general extent of Christ's redemption. This argument may therefore be retorted thus; He that died for his friends and for his enemies died for all; but Christ died for his friends and for his enemies, "for when we were enemies, Christ died for us" (Rom. v. 8). Again, he that died for the church of God, and for the unrighteous, that he might bring them to the church of God, died for all; but Christ died for both, for "he suffered for us, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God" (1 Pet. iii. 18). Lastly, He that died for his sheep that heard his voice, and for the lost sheep, that did not hearken to his voice, died for all; but Christ died for his sheep that heard his voice, as the text saith here, and for his lost sheep, for he "came to seek and to save that which was lost, even the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. xviii. 11, 12, x. 6), therefore he died for all.

[10] Ver. 16. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold.] He calls the gentiles sheep by way of anticipation; because as many of them as were docile, and fit to receive instruction, would in time be so; and because the partition-wall betwixt Jew and gentile was to be broken, and the gentiles to be admitted to the same privileges with the believing Jews, he says, "There shall be one sheepfold."

[11] Ver. 17. Therefore the Father loveth me.] Because, out of obedience to him, and love to the sheep, I lay down my life for them; which I have good reason to do, seeing I am sure so soon to take it up again. This seems to be the sense of the words. Note also, that if we respect the counsel of God and the design of Christ, nothing is more certain than that Christ gave himself "a ransom for all," 1 Tim. ii. 6, and "tasted death for every man," Heb. ii. 9, and was "a propitiation for the sins of the whole world," 1 John ii. 2, and that the Father "so loved the world as that he sent his Son into it, that the world might be saved by him," iii. 16, 17. But because the world can no otherwise obtain this salvation than by believing in him, and obeying the voice of this Shepherd; therefore he is said to do this more eminently for his sheep.

[12] Ver. 18. Ἐγὼ τίθημι αὐτὴν, I lay it down.] Grotius having hinted, note on ver. 11, that τίθεσθαι ψυχὴν, "to lay down the life," signifies only to expose it to danger, or put our lives in our hands, as the phrase is, Judg. xii. 3, 1 Sam. xxviii. 21, and having said also, that πάλιν λαβεῖν αὐτὴν, "to take it again," is to rescue it from danger; I shall show this to be a very forced exposition. For,

First, This phrase τίθεσθαι τὴν ψυχὴν, "to lay down the life," being absolutely put, is only used in the New Testament, and there only by this apostle; and it always signifies to die, or to give the life to death—as when St. Peter saith, τὴν ψυχήν μου ὑπὲρ σοῦ, "I will lay down my life for thee," xiii. 37, 38, when Christ saith, xv. 13, "Greater love than this hath no man, than ἵνα τις τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ θῇ, that one should lay down his life for his friend:" and the beloved disciple (1 John iii. 16), argues thus, "If he τὴν ψυχὴν ἔθηκε, laid down his life for us, we ought τὴν ψυχὴν τιθέναι, to lay down our lives for the brethren:" and surely, when Christ saith here, τὴν ψυχήν μου τίθημι, "I lay down my life for my sheep," he meant, not only that he would expose himself to danger, but that he would suffer death for them; when therefore he saith in the same place, "I have power to take it up again," he doubtless meant, he had power to raise it from death. Stegmannus the Socinian saith here, that Christ here ascribes this power to himself improperly, because God had promised to use his power in raising him from the dead: but (1.) is it proper to introduce Christ positively saying, "I have," what he had not, only because another had that power? since he says not, I have a promise, but, I have ἐξουσίαν, "the power" to restore this life I lay down. (2.) If we consider how plainly he had challenged this power to himself, the power of raising up and quickening whom he would, and that because he had "life in himself" (ver. 21. 26), and engaged his word of truth, both to raise up his own body (ii. 19), and the bodies of all the saints (vi. 39, 40. 44. 54), yea, the bodies of all that were in their graves (v. 28, 29), as being "the resurrection and the life," (xi. 25), we cannot doubt his power to raise his own body. And (3.) when he saith in the preceding words, "No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself; ἐξουσίαν ἔχω, I have power to lay it down:" he plainly ascribes to himself a right or power to give up himself to the death: why therefore should not the same words immediately following, viz. "I have power to take it up again," bear the same sense? The little sophisms of Stegmannus here are of no force to the contrary: for, why might not Christ's body die, though it was united to immortal nature, as well as when it was united to an immortal soul? Nor do we say, that he was dead according to his human nature, but only according to his body; or that the union of his body with the divine nature was dissolved by death, but only the union of his body with his soul.

Note also, that the words following, "This commandment have I received from the Father," respect not the raising of his body, but only the laying down of his life, or his dying for his sheep, as Grotius here notes.

21 Others said, These are not (like) the words of him that hath a devil (nor are his works such: for) can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

22 ¶ And it was at Jerusalem (and at) the [13] feast of the dedication (of the altar, profaned by Antiochus, 1 Macc. iv. 59, 2 Macc. x. 8, that Christ spake this), and it was winter (that feast beginning to be celebrated the twenty-fifth of Chisleu, which answers to part of our December).

23 And Jesus (then) walked in the temple [14] in Solomon's porch.

24 Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou make us to doubt (Gr. hold us in suspense)? If thou be (indeed) the Christ, tell us plainly (that so it is).

25 Jesus answered them, I (have already) told you, and ye believed not: [15] the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me (that so I am).

26 But (notwithstanding) ye believe not, (not through want of evidence of the truth, but) [16] because ye are not of my sheep (i. e. of them who are disposed to attend to and obey my doctrine), as I said unto you.

27 (For) My sheep hear my voice, and I know them (by this that they obey), and they follow me:

28 And (therefore) I give unto them eternal life; and they [17] shall never perish, neither shall any man (be able to) pluck them out of my hand.

29 My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all (their adversaries); and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

30 (Now) [18] I and my Father are one (the Father dwelling in me, and I in him, ver. 38).

31 Then the Jews took up stones again to stone him (as a blasphemer, who made himself equal with God, as they had done before, John viii. 59).

32 Jesus answered them, Many good works have I shewed (i. e. before) you from my Father; for which of those works do ye (go about to) stone me?

33 The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and

---

[13] Ver. 22. Ἐγένετο δὲ τὰ ἐγκαίνια, It was the feast of the dedication, and it was winter.] The feast of dedication, here mentioned, respects not the dedication of the temple made by Solomon, or repaired by Zerubbabel; for we read of no annual feast of dedication appointed at either of them; but it respects the dedication of the altar and temple, celebrated by Judas Maccabæus; of which we read thus, 1 Macc. iv. 56, "So they kept τὸν ἐγκαινισμὸν, the dedication of the altar eight days;" and, ver. 59, "Moreover, Judas and his brethren, and the whole congregation of Israel, ordained, that the days, ἐγκαινισμοῦ, of the dedication of the altar should be kept in their season from year to year, for the space of eight days, from the twenty-fifth day of the month Chisleu," which falls in with our December (see also 2 Macc. x. 5. 8, and Josephus Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 11). This is apparent, because it is said, "it was winter;" whereas the dedication of Solomon's temple was in the seventh month, or in autumn (1 Kings viii. 2), of Zerubbabel's in the month Adar (Ezra vi. 15), at the entrance of the spring, this in December. Moreover, from our Saviour's presence at this feast, Grotius well notes, that festival-days, in memorial of public blessings, may piously be instituted by persons in authority, without a divine command.

[14] Ver. 23. And Jesus walked in the porch of Solomon.] In the porch new built in the same place where Solomon erected his: in summer they walked in the open air, in winter under covert.

[15] Ver. 25. The works that I do in my Father's name bear witness of me.] i. e. There is no cause why you should thus be in suspense concerning me, or not hear me plainly saying, "I am the Messiah," seeing this appears sufficiently from my works. He ascribes not the works to himself, saith Stegmannus, but to his Father; and yet the text saith, ἃ ἐγὼ ποιῶ, "The works which I do," viz. by the power of the Father dwelling in me (ver. 38). So, out of modesty he speaks, saith Grotius: so, as a prophet, say others.

[16] Ver. 26. You believe not, οὐ γὰρ, because you are not of my sheep.] It is evident that Christ here gives the reason why they believed not, as elsewhere he doth: so John viii. 43, "Ye own not my word, ὅτι, because ye cannot hear it" (see the note there); and ver. 45, "Ye believe not, ὅτι, because I speak the truth;" i. e. that truth which is offensive to you; and, ver. 47, διὰ τοῦτο, "For this cause you do not hear (i. e. obey) my word; because ye are not of God." And this observation excludes the evasion of those who say, because here is not rational, or renders not the reason of their unbelief, but only intimates that it was consequential to their being not his sheep; for the word here rendered "because," is not ὅτι, but οὐ γὰρ, "For ye are not my sheep:" now γὰρ is a rational particle, pointing out the cause. (2.) The reason which Christ here assigns of this defect of faith, is doubtless such as renders it a great crime in them: for sure that must be such for which they were to "die in their sins" (John viii. 24). It is therefore certain, this unbelief cannot be resolved into any natural defect of knowledge on their part, or any decree or act of reprobation on God's part, but into the want of a docile and well disposed mind; for were it the same to be one of Christ's sheep, and to be predestinated to faith and salvation, the import of Christ's words must be this, Ye therefore believe not, because ye are not of the number of the elect, but of those whom God hath from eternity rejected. Now, by this account of their infidelity, Christ would not have accused, but excused, the infidelity of the Jews; for what fault could it be in them that they did not that, which by reason of this act of God before they had a being, they were incapable of doing? Then might they have replied to Christ, We therefore believe not, because God by his act of reprobation hath shut the door of faith against us, and so our infidelity is not to be imputed to us, but to God.

[17] Ver. 28. And they shall never perish.] i. e. Through any defect on my part, or by the force of any plucking them out of my hands: so the particle καὶ, which is here illative, shows, viz. they therefore shall not perish, for none shall pull them out of my hand: and this is still more evident from the reason following, "My Father is greater than all" their adversaries, and none can pull them out of his hands: now his power and mine is one and the same. This appears, thirdly, from the frequent exhortations directed to Christ's sheep, not to fall away from the grace received, Heb. xii. 15, not to lose what had been wrought in them, 2 John 8, to those that stand, to take heed they fall not, so as that God will not spare them, Rom. xi. 20, 21, because not continuing in his goodness, ver. 22. Whereas if the sheep of Christ can no more cease to be so, than a man whilst living can cease to be a man, these exhortations, to take care they fall not off from being so, must be as vain, as a caution to a man not to outlive his manhood. Well, therefore, said Origen* and Isidore Pelusiota, no man can snatch them away by force or tyranny; for then they must perish without and against their own wills; but this may be done by deceit and allurements, παρὰ τὴν τῶν αὐτεξουσίων ἀνθρώπων ῥαθυμίαν, "through the negligence of men, who have the freedom of their wills;" for such men who, by the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the devil, thus cease to obey Christ's laws, are not snatched out of Christ's hands, but choose to go from him. Or, Secondly, Christ may speak here of sheep continuing so to the death, promising to them, that neither death, nor "he that hath the power of death," shall make them perish for ever, for he would "raise them up at the last day."

[18] Ver. 30. Ἐγὼ καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ἓν ἐσμεν, I and the Father are one.] That Christ here speaks not of a unity of will and concord only, appears,

(1.) From the reason assigned of the security of the sheep—the want of power in any one to snatch them out of the hands of Christ; because the Father being greater in power than all, his power could secure them from all, and so could also Christ, he being one in power with the

---

* Orig. in Ter. hom. 18, ed. Huet. p. 166. Isidor. Epist. lib. iii. ep. 122.

(that is) because that thou, being (only) a man, makest thyself (a) God.

34 Jesus answered them, [19] Is it not written in your law (Ps. lxxxii. 6), I said, Ye are gods?

35 If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, (Gr. was, i. e. who were God's prophets, as Moses and Samuel, and his judges, as Joshua and others, and had the assistance of his Spirit given them for the performance of those offices), and the scripture cannot be broken (Gr. dissolved, but what it saith must be true);

36 Say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, (by the Holy Ghost essentially dwelling in, or without measure imparted to, him, John iii. 34) and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I (after this unction and commission to make known his will to you) said, I am the Son of God?

37 If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not (when I say, I and my Father are one, ver. 30).

38 But if I do, though ye believe not me (on account of my own words), believe (the testimony of) the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Fa-

---

Father: for the foundation of this argument is, not that the Father's will, but that his power was above all.

(2.) From the inference of the Jews, that by these words "he made himself God" and so was guilty of blasphemy. Now this invidious charge Christ doth not evade, by saying, he only conspired with the will of God, as all true prophets did, but by appealing to the works, which, saith he, I do by the power of the Father residing in me, which plainly carries this to a unity of power, not of will only: and then the inference of St. Chrysostom is undeniable, τί δὲ ἡ δύναμις αὐτὴ, εὔδηλον ὅτι καὶ οὐσία, "And if the power be the same, the essence must be so."

[19] Ver. 31—36. Is it not written in your law, I have said, Ye are gods? If he called them gods to whom the word of God came—say you of him whom the Father hath sanctified —Thou blasphemest: because I said, I am the Son of God?] From these words, and from Exod. xxi. 6, xxii. 9. 28, where judges and supreme magistrates are called elohim, Stegmannus gathers, that the name of God in scripture doth not always signify the supreme God, but sometimes only them who have a high power by God committed to them; amongst whom he places Christ as having a divine authority committed to him by the favour of God; as if I should argue thus, Parents are styled gods by Philo,* or by the heathens, therefore the name of God in Philo, and among the heathens, is common to the supreme God and to our parents. But, notwithstanding this, no parent ever was by Philo, or by the heathens, distributively, or in the singular number, called God; nor is that name thus given in scripture to any judge, or supreme governor, as it is often in the New Testament attributed to our Saviour Christ. And (2.) when magistrates and judges are in scripture called gods, the Holy Ghost still addeth something, which excludes them from a true divinity, as that they should "die like men," Ps. lxxxii. 6, or that they are "rulers of the people," Exod. xxii. 28. Whereas when Christ is called God, it is either with the addition of some epithet belonging to the supreme God, as when he is styled ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς, "God over all," Rom. ix. 5, "the great God," Tit. ii. 13, ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἀληθινὸς, "the true God," 1 John v. 20, or with addition of some operation proper to God, as when it is said, "The Word was God," and "All things were made by him," i. 1, 2. Stegmannus adds, that if these persons were not truly gods, the scripture falsely called them gods; to which I answer, that they were truly so in title, as being God's vicegerents upon earth, but not in nature, as being only the "ministers of God," Rom. xiii. 6. He adds, they must be properly and truly gods, as being invested with divine power. But here he trifles, for a divine power may either signify the power essential to God, by which he is enabled to do all things; and to ascribe this power to mere men is blasphemy: or it may only signify a power of government, and judging of the offences done by men, derived from God, and in this sense only is the divine power ascribed to magistrates, and such also is the power of parents over their children, and of masters over their servants; and yet can it be reasonably said, that the formal reason of the Deity truly and properly agrees to them? He goes on, and argues against the Deity of Christ from this text, thus, (1.) That the argument of Christ hence for a proper Deity, that because magistrates are metaphorically and by virtue of their office called gods, he must be truly so, must be infirm, seeing no argument will hold from the metaphorical to the proper reason of the thing.

(2.) The reason which Christ here assigns of this, viz. "because the Father had sanctified him," concerneth not his eternal generation, nor can it hence be gathered that Christ is the supreme God, but rather the contrary; for "greater is he who sanctifies," and sends, than he who is sanctified and sent. And (3.) hence, saith he, we may learn there was no higher reason of Christ's filiation than this sanctification and mission into the world; for then Christ would have produced that reason, when thus assaulted by his adversaries, and not, concealing it, have rested in that reason of his sanctification, which proves not his true divinity.

Now to these arguments two answers may be given,

First, If by this sanctification we understand the unction of Christ by the Holy Ghost, then note, (1.) That the Jewish doctors understand not the psalmist's words, "I have said, Ye are gods," to be meant of civil magistrates, but of their doctors sitting in the chair of Moses, or rather of their prophets sent to reveal God's will to them, to whom alone that phrase here used properly agrees, they only being the men, πρὸς οὓς ὁ λόγος Θεοῦ ἐγένετο, "to whom the word of the Lord came" (see note on Luke iii. 2). Note,

Secondly, That if we understand it of their judges and supreme civil magistrates; yet of them it is certain, that they in difficult cases judged by consulting God's oracle, the urim and thummim, and in making war had still resort to this oracle; whence all the Jews were upon pain of death obliged to hearken to the sentence of those judges and of those priests, by whom they did inquire from this oracle the mind of God (Deut. xvii. 9. 12), and as doing presumptuously, when they refused so to do (ver. 12), which they are only said to do when they opposed the mind of God made known to them, or wilfully rebelled against it, by doing any thing in contempt of the divine Majesty and his authority (Numb. xv. 30). Note, secondly, that it is a received opinion among the Jews, that even their civil governors had a particular assistance and afflatus of the Holy Spirit, to fit them for that employment. So when God chose seventy elders to manage the government of the people under Moses, "he put his Spirit on them, and they prophesied" (Numb. xi. 17. 25). And when Joshua was appointed to rule them after Moses, he is said to be a man "in whom the Spirit was" (Numb. xxvii. 18), and to be "full of the Spirit of wisdom; because Moses had laid his hands upon him" (Deut. xxxiv. 9). When Saul was anointed king over Israel, "the Spirit came upon him, and he prophesied" (1 Sam. x. 6. 10). And when David by his sin had caused the Holy Spirit to depart from him, he prays not only for the Spirit of holiness, but that πνεῦμα ἡγεμονικόν, "the spirit of government," which God had given him, might be restored (Ps. li. 12); and of Solomon, the Targum on 2 Chron. vii. 6, saith, "God made the Spirit rest upon him;" and when God had rejected Saul, "the Spirit of the Lord departed from him" (1 Sam. xvi. 14). So that, according to this exposition, the argument of Christ is to this effect: If they are called gods, and the sons of the Most High, in the scriptures of unquestionable truth, who had the spirit of prophecy, wisdom, and government, more sparingly, and only at some certain times imparted to them, and that rather to assist than abide in them; say you of him to whom the Father hath given the Spirit without measure (John iii. 34), and in whom he so abideth essentially, that by virtue of him, I am in the Father and the Father in me, ἑνότητι καὶ δυνάμει τοῦ Πνεύματος, by the unity and power of the Spirit, by which I am enabled to perform the works which are properly divine, and reveal to you all ther is in me, and I in him (and so am one with him).

---

* Θεοὶ ἐμφανεῖς. Philo in Decal. 587. Vide note in 1 Tim. v. 8.

39 Therefore (upon this repeated declaration that he was one with the Father) they sought again to take (or, lay hold on) him: but he (miraculously) escaped out of their hand,

40 And went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized; and there he abode.

41 And many resorted unto him, and said, John did no miracle (to confirm his sayings, as Jesus doth): but all things that John spake of this man were true. (And so, if we believe John's testimony, we must own this person as the Son of God, and a much greater prophet than he was, John i. 15, iii. 35.)

42 And many believed on him there (by reason of the testimony which John had given to him).

---

the hidden treasures of wisdom, Thou blasphemest, because I said, I am the Son of God? So that the argument of Christ here proceeds from the less to the greater; from the Spirit assisting them by his gifts, to the Spirit essentially dwelling in him; in which respect, "greater is he who sanctifies" and sends, than he who is sanctified and sent, by virtue of his original, though not by virtue of the divine nature, and the fullness of the Godhead communicated to Christ: for even Filbinger,* a very acute Socinian, owns, that since the Spirit of God is the power of God (Luke i. 35), he must be God; quia in Deo nihil est quod non sit Deus, "there being nothing in God which is not God."

Ans. 2. The second answer is, That he here saith the Father had sanctified him, not by reason of the unction of the Holy Ghost coming down upon him at his baptism, but because of the union of the divine Logos to the human nature: for explication of which answer, note (1.) that according to the tradition of the ancients received from the beginning of Christianity, it was this Λόγος who appeared to the patriarchs, and conversed with the judges and magistrates of the Jews, and so was literally ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the essential word of God," who came to them. Note (2.) that Christ speaks of a sanctification precedent to his mission into the world, and so not of the unction of the Holy Ghost, received when he had been in it thirty years, but at the union of the divine Logos with the human nature; and then the argument of Christ will be to this effect, If they were styled gods, and the sons of the Most High, to whom the Word only came, and with whom he conversed, can I, who am this very Λόγος, be said to blaspheme, in saying, that I am the Son of God? And according to this sense it is evident that Christ does here argue from the sublimest notion of his filiation, according to these words of the reverend Dr. Bull;† "It appears from a due inspection of the text, that Christ did not intend to say or prove he was the Son of God, as being his ambassador extraordinarily instructed, and so sent into the world, but on a far more excellent account, viz. that before he came into the world, he was with God the Father, and so was his true and essential Son, as being God of God, partaking of the same nature as a son doth with his father. For it is apparent, that from the twenty-fifth to the thirtieth verse inclusively, Christ so discoursed to the Jews, that they still thought he asserted that he was God, and therefore, say they, 'we stone thee, because thou, being a man, makest thyself God' (ver. 33); viz. by calling God so emphatically, and with such property, 'his Father,' as that he was so to him alone, and so that he and his Father were one (ver. 30). Now Christ," saith he, "does not answer by denying either that he was God, or that he ever challenged to himself that dignity, which yet seems necessary, had he been only man, to have been said, to take off this objection of his blasphemy, but rather seems to argue that he was so the Son of God, that he had the divine nature in him."

First, After this manner—If judges and magistrates are called gods for an imperfect resemblance and participation of the divine authority, how much more may I be called God, who am the natural Son of God, and am moreover, in the most excellent manner, authorized by him? For though Christ speaks not thus in express words, he not obscurely signifies it by saying, his Father had sanctified him, and sent him into the world; for (1.) he saith not, me whom God, but whom the Father hath sanctified, declaring he had God for his Father, by virtue of that sanctification. (2.) He adds, that he was first sanctified, and then sent into the world, signifying thereby that he was the Son of God in heaven, before he was sent into the world; and so he speaks more plainly to his disciples, saying, John xvi. 28, "I came forth from the Father, and came into the world; again I leave the world, and go to the Father."

The second argument by which our Lord defends himself, and proves his divine original, is taken from the divine operations he performed; for, saith he, ver. 37, 38, "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not (when I thus say he is my Father); but if I do (them), though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know and believe that I am in the Father, and the Father in me:" as if he should have said, You might have some reason to say I blaspheme, in saying I am so the Son of God, and he is so my Father, as that "I and the Father are one," and so as no other person can style God Father, or say, he is his Son; if I did not those divine works which no other person ever did, and which demonstrate the Father is so in me, as in no other person; but seeing I do those works of omnipotency, which show I am invested with the same power with the Father, you have no reason to imagine I blaspheme in saying, "I am the Son of God," and therefore call him Father, because the "Father is in me," and "I and the Father are one."

* In Matt. iii. 16, 17.

† De Judicio Eccl. Cath. 5, §. 6.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Now a certain man was sick, named [1] Lazarus, of Bethany, (which was) the town of Mary and her sister Martha.

2 (And) (It was [2] that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair (as we shall show presently), whose brother Lazarus was sick.)

3 Therefore his sisters sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick.

4 When Jesus heard that, he said (to his disciples),

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 1. Lazarus, of Bethany, the town of Mary and Martha.] i. e. In which they dwelt; as Bethsaida is styled the city of Andrew and Peter, i. 44. Grotius here conjectures that this remarkable history of Lazarus was therefore omitted by St. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, because Lazarus was then living when they wrote their gospels; the last of them writing, saith Theophylact, within fifteen years after our Lord's ascension; whereas tradition saith,* that Lazarus lived thirty years after that he was raised from the dead: he therefore thinks they would not publish this history of him in his lifetime, lest they should provoke the Jews to cut him off; whereas, according to the earliest computation, St. John wrote his gospel thirty-two years after our Lord's ascension, and so after the death of Lazarus. (2.) The last of these three evangelists writing but fifteen years after our Lord's ascension, might think it needless to mention a miracle concerning a person living so near Jerusalem, where there was so great a fame thereof, and so many living witnesses to attest it. St. John writing this gospel, say the ancients, above sixty years after our Lord's ascension, when, by the

* Ἐν παραδόσει εὕρομεν ὅτι——ὁ Λάζαρος μετὰ τὸ ἀναστῆσαι αὐτὸν τριάκοντα ἔτη ἔζησε. Epiph. Hær. 65, §. 34.

This sickness is not unto (a lasting) [3] death, but for the (manifestation of the) glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5 Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus (which made him the more willing to gratify his sisters).

6 When he had heard therefore that he was sick, (that God's glory might be more conspicuous in his recovery) he [4] abode two days still in the same place where he was.

7 Then after that saith he to his disciples, Let us go into Judæa again?

8 His disciples say unto him, Master, the Jews of late (Gr. but now) sought to stone thee; and goest thou thither again?

9 Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth (the sun, which is) the light of this world.

10 But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him. (Now my day and hour still last, ix. 4, so that by my wonted prudence I shall still escape their malice, till the night of my passion cometh.)

11 These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus [5] sleepeth (i. e. is dead); but I go, that I may awake him out of (the) sleep (of death).

12 Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.

13 Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of taking rest in sleep.

14 Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

15 And [6] I am glad for your sakes that I was not there (before), to the intent (that, through the miracle of his resurrection,) ye may believe (more firmly); nevertheless (though he be dead) let us go unto him.

16 Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellowdisciples, Let us also go, that we may die with him (for that we may expect by going thither again, ver. 8).

17 Then when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

18 Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, (being only) about fifteen furlongs off (from it):

19 And many of the Jews came (thence) to [7] Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

20 Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

21 Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22 But (and) [8] I know, that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee (though it be the raising him from the dead).

23 Jesus saith unto her, Thy [9] brother shall rise again.

24 Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

25 Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and death of the person, and most of the witnesses who were present at his resurrection, the memory and fame of it might be much impaired, had great reason to perpetuate the memory of it by this large rehearsal of it.

---

[2] Ver. 2. It was that Mary which anointed our Lord with ointment.] This is by most interpreters thought to be spoken of Mary Magdelene: but (1.) I find no mention in scripture of her anointing the head or feet of Jesus, as this Mary did (xii. 3). Yea, when St. Luke had spoken of a woman, who anointed not our Lord's head, as this Mary did, but his feet only (vii. 46), he proceeds (ch. viii.) to the mention of Mary Magdalene, giving a character of her, not from what she had done to Christ, but from what he had done to her, saying, "It was that Mary out of whom he had cast seven devils" (ver. 2), which also is the character of her in St. Mark, xvi. 9. Nor seems it for our Saviour's honour to have been so conversant with one who had been a noted harlot, though she had now repented of that lewdness; or such an ardent lover of her as he was of this Mary (ver. 5).

It also is to be noted, that the apostle mentions this as a thing done, before he speaks of the raising of Lazarus; not that it was done before his resurrection from the dead, as appears, xii. 3, but because it was done before he writ his gospel, telling us when it was done in this chapter following.

[3] Ver. 4. This sickness is not πρὸς θάνατον, to death.] i. e. Lazarus is permitted to be sick by the special providence of God; not that he designs to take him out of the world by death, as he does other men, but that the Son of God might be glorified, by showing his almighty power in raising him from the dead; by this declaring, that he hath "given to the Son to have life in himself, and to quicken whom he will" (John v. 22. 26), and therefore that he could fulfil his promise made to them that believed in him, that he would "raise them up at the last day" (vi. 39, 40. 44. 54), and so Christ expounds himself, ver. 25, 26.

[4] Ver. 6. He abode still two days in the same place.] Not coming to Bethany till Lazarus had been dead four days (ver. 17), not only that the miracle of his resurrection might be the greater, but also that all pretence of his being only in a deliquium might be taken away.

[5] Ver. 11. Our friend Lazarus κεκοίμηται, sleepeth.] It is not only the death of good men which is compared to or styled a sleep, as, v. g. the death of Moses, Deut. xxxi. 16, of David, 2 Sam. vii. 12, Ps. iii. 13, but the phrase is used also of bad men, who are said, ὑπνῶσαι ὕπνον αὐτῶν, to have "slept their sleep," Ps. lxxvi. 5; to "sleep in the dust," Dan. xii. 2; and generally of the kings of Israel and Judah, that they slept with their fathers. So the word רדם, he slept, is used, saith Buxtorf, by the Talmudists and rabbins; though, saith he, "it is used by them with a particular respect to the bodies of pious men, whose death is but a sleep;" and perhaps the ancient Jews might use this metaphor as St. Paul doth, 1 Thess. iv. 13, in opposition to the heathens, who, having no expectation of the resurrection of the body, styled death "a perpetual sleep;" declaring, they expected to be raised out of it as certainly as they rose from sleep; and in allusion to his metaphor, Christ here saith, "I go, ἐξυπνίζειν αὐτόν, to awake him out of sleep," i. e. to raise him from the dead.

[6] Ver. 15. I am glad that I was not there.] Who, had I been present, could not have seen my friend languishing, or resisted the importunity of his sisters to prevent his death; but now by raising him, after he hath been four days dead, shall so confirm your faith that I am the Messiah, as that you need not doubt of it when I suffer death, as knowing my power to raise others, and therefore my own body from the dead, as I have told you I both can and will do (ii. 19, x. 18).

[7] Ver. 19. Πρὸς τὰς περὶ Μάρθαν καὶ Μαρίαν, To Martha and Mary.] Not to those that were about them, as some render the words; for they could not come to them "to comfort them concerning their brother:" and this use of the word περὶ, with an article prefixed, is very common among the Greeks, in whom οἱ περὶ Πλάτωνα is "Plato," οἱ περὶ Πρίαμον, "Priamus," οἱ περὶ Φίλιππον καὶ Ἀλέξανδρον, "Philip and Alexander" (see Stephanus's Lexicon and Budæus).

[8] Ver. 22. And now I know, whatsoever thou askest of God he will give it thee.] Here Woltzogenius saith, her faith was weak, in that she believed not that Christ had in himself the power of doing this miracle; and yet it is evident that the raising one from the dead is a demonstration of a divine power, and therefore can reside in him only who hath the divine essence residing in him (see the note on v. 21). Grotius here also saith, her faith was weak, because she only believed that Christ was prevalent with God, but not that the fullness of divine power resided in him.

[9] Ver. 23. Thy brother shall arise.] For (ver. 25), I am the author of life, and of the resurrection, and therefore the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live (and therefore I, who shall hereafter raise all persons to life, can raise him now):

26 And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die (Gr. shall not die for ever). Believest thou this?

27 She saith unto him, Yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world (of whom we have received by tradition that he shall raise the dead).

28 And when she had so said (being sent by Christ to do so), she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

29 As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him.

30 Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31 The Jews then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

32 Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

33 When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he [10] groaned in the (his) spirit, and was troubled, 34 And said (to them), [11] Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord, come and see.

35 (And from the abundance of his affection to him) Jesus wept.

36 Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!

37 And some of them said, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

38 Jesus therefore again groaning in himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon (the mouth of) it.

39 Jesus (then) said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead [12] four days (and so, in all likelihood, his body is now corrupted).

40 Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God (manifested in raising him from the dead)?

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, [13] Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me (requesting as thy prophet that this man's spirit might return unto him).

42 And I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it (this), that (owning thee as the author of this miracle) they may believe that thou hast sent me.

43 And when he thus had spoken, [14] he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44 And (then) he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, [15] Loose him, and let him go.

45 Then many of the Jews which came to Mary (to comfort her), and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

46 But some of them (who believed not) went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

47 ¶ Then gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What do we? (Why do we suffer this person to go on without interruption?) for [16] this man doeth many miracles.

48 If (then) we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and (then) the Romans shall come and take away our place and nation.

49 And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high priest [17] that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all (of policy),

50 Nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for (the safety of) the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

51 And this spake he not (intending any such thing) of himself: [18] but being high priest that year (in always can raise whom I will, when I will, from the dead; thou therefore mayest expect from my promise, that thy brother shall shortly be restored to life, and not only at the general resurrection.

---

[10] Ver. 33. Ἐνεβριμήσατο τῷ πνεύματι, He groaned (or was moved) in his spirit.] Whence we learn, that human affections and commotions are not to be condemned as sinful, if they do not incline us to do any thing repugnant to piety or reason, but only to express our affection to our friend, or our compassion to mankind (see the note on Luke xxii. 43).

[11] Ver. 34. Where have ye laid him?] This he must know, who knew all things, even the secret thoughts and affections of men (xxi. 17); and yet he thus asks, that he might be conducted by them to his sepulchre, that there might be no semblance of fraud or confederacy.

[12] Ver. 39. Τεταρταῖος γάρ ἐστι, He hath been dead four days.] In which time the visage of the dead began to change in those countries, and all hopes of any return to life ceased. So Dr. Lightfooot from Maimonides and the Talmudists, "They go to the sepulchres, and visit the dead for three days, for so long the spirit wanders about the sepulchre; but then they certify of the dead; for after three days his countenance is changed."

[13] Ver. 41, 42. Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.] Woltzogenius saith, it follows not from these words that Christ requested any thing of the Father; God being, by an Hebraism, said to hear them to whom he vouchsafeth any benefit, though they did not ask it (Ps. x. 17, Isa. lxv. 24); there being no need that Christ should request that power which, from his unction, he always had residing in him, but only that he should thank the Father for it. But the words following, "I know that thou dost hear me always," seem plainly to imply a request; not indeed that he might receive power to raise Lazarus from the dead, for that he testifies he had already (v. 22. 26), but that this miracle might be efficacious to confirm the faith of his apostles, and to convince the multitude that he was a prophet sent from God, and did all things to promote his glory.

[14] Ver. 43. He cried with a loud voice.] That it might appear to all, that even the dead were subject to his voice.

[15] Ver. 44. Loose him, and let him go.] He followed not Christ, that he might not seem to carry him about in triumph with him.

[16] Ver. 47, 48. This man doeth many signs,—all men will believe on him.] For this very cause, that he did so many miracles, all salutary and tending to the good of men, and with such evidence of a divine power, as was sufficient to draw all men to the faith, they should have owned him as the true Messiah; but the fear of the Romans induced them rather to cut him off, and by that very action they pulled that dreadful vengeance, executed by the Romans, down upon them. This is the just and usual effect of carnal policy exalting itself against the wisdom and the counsel of God.

[17] Ver. 49. High-priest that same year.] The high-priesthood, by God's institution, was to continue for the term of life; but when the power was come into the hands of the Romans, they changed them at their pleasure, and so they came to be accounted such by years; yet, because this was done by a power which they could not resist, and the high-priesthood still continued in the line of Aaron, Christ himself owns his power.

[18] Ver. 51. Being high-priest that year, he prophesied, &c.] i. e. In that year in which Christ was to suffer for the sins of which Christ was to suffer), he (spake as one that) prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation;

52 And (indeed he died) not for that nation only, but that also he should [19] gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad (all the world over).

53 Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death.

54 Jesus therefore (after this resolution) [20] walked no more openly among the Jews (till his time was come); but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

55 ¶ And the Jews' passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the passover, to [21] purify themselves (either from some defilement, which was to be expiated by sacrifice, or by reason of some vow of Nazaritism, which was upon them, Acts xxi. 23).

56 Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the temple, What think ye, (is it) that he will not come to the feast?

57 Now both the chief priests and the Pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he were, he should shew it (to them), that they might take him.

---

the world: and he is said to prophesy, not that he designed to foretell that Christ was to suffer upon that account, but because God so overruled his tongue, as that he should speak of the expedience of procuring our Saviour's death, in such words as might be accommodated to the design of God in giving up our Saviour to the death.

[19] Ver. 52. Ἵνα τέκνα—συναγάγῃ εἰς ἕν, That he might gather together in one the children of God.] i. e. Believers: for "to as many as believed in him, he gave power to become the sons of God" (i. 12). But note, that the gentiles are here called the sons of God, not that they were so at present, but that they were by faith to be made such, as our Lord calls them sheep, who were to hear his voice, x. 16.

[20] Ver. 54. Jesus walked not openly.] Instructing us by his example, that it is lawful to avoid danger, by giving place to the fury of the enemy; and that it is wisdom to withdraw ourselves from it, rather than expose ourselves to unnecessary perils, by abiding within the reach of them who are resolved upon our ruin.

[21] Ver. 55. Ἵνα ἁγνίσωσιν ἑαυτούς, To purify themselves.] They who committed sins which were to be expiated by sacrifices, were not obliged to travel instantly to Jerusalem to offer them, but might defer the oblation to the next feast, at which they were obliged to be present; and they who entered on the vow of Nazarites did usually contrive it so as that it might conclude at one of those feasts; and therefore they are said to come to Jerusalem before the feast, "to purify themselves."

CHAPTER XII.

1 Then Jesus [1] six days before the passover came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead.

2 There they made him a [2] supper; and Martha served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him.

3 Then [3] took Mary (sister to Lazarus) a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair; and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

4 Then saith one of his disciples, (viz.) Judas [4] Iscariot, Simon's son, which should (who was about to) betray him,

5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6 (And) This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and had the bag (or common purse of Christ and his apostles), and bare what was put therein (and so out of so great a sum could have purloined much to his own use).

7 Then said Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this (she hath performed this as a fit ceremony for my burial, which is nigh at hand).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. Πρὸ ἓξ ἡμέρων τοῦ πάσχα, Six days before the passover.] So 2 Cor. xii. 2, πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκατεσσάρων, "Fourteen years since;" Amos i. 1, πρὸ δύο ἐτῶν τοῦ σεισμοῦ, "Two years before the earthquake:" so in Plutarch, πρὸ τριῶν ἐτῶν, "Three years before:" in Numa, p. 61, in Popl. p. 101, in Rom. p. 23.

[2] Ver. 2. They made him a supper there.] This supper was different from that mentioned Matt. xxvi. 6, Mark xiv. 13. (1.) Because this was in the house of Lazarus, ver. 2, that in the house of Simon the leper, Matt. xxvi. 6. (2.) Here Mary anoints the feet of Christ, ver. 3, there a woman, not named, pours ointment on his head, Matt. xxvi. 7. (3.) This supper was six days before the passover, ver. 1, that only two, Matt. xxvi. 2, Mark xiv. 1, and if the suppers were not the same, the Mary that anointed Christ's feet here, and the woman that anointed his head there, were not the same.

[3] Ver. 3. Mary took a pound of ointment.] Mary, the sister of Lazarus (see the note on xi. 2); who is never called Mary Magdalene, nor is it ever said that Christ cast seven devils out of her. That they were divers women, we learn from the Apostolical Constitutions, which say, συνῆν γὰρ ἡμῖν Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαλήνη, καὶ Μάρθα, καὶ Μαρία, αἱ ἀδελφαὶ Λαζάρου,* "There were with us, Mary Magdalene, and Martha and Mary, the sisters of Lazarus:" and from Origen in these words,* "The gospel saith, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment, &c.; not the sinner, but Mary a holy woman; Luke indeed speaks of the sinner, but Matthew, Mark, and John, speak of that Mary who was not a sinner:" elsewhere he saith, "There were three Maries, one of whom Matthew and Mark, another of whom Luke, and a third of whom St. John here speaks." And Basil of Seleucia in his homily on Lazarus saith, οὐκ αὐτὴ ἦν ἡ πόρνη ἡ ἐν τῷ Ματθαίῳ οὐδὲ ἡ ἐν τῷ Λουκᾷ, "This was not the Mary mentioned by St. Matthew or St. Luke, for they were harlots or sinners, αὐτὴ δὲ σεμνὴ καὶ σπουδαῖα, but she was a holy and honest woman:" so also say Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact, here. See Cotelerius, note on Constit. Apost. p. 204, and Casaub. Exercit. 14, à p. 242 ad p. 300, where he answers the arguments of Baronius to the contrary.

[4] Ver. 4. Judas.] He was permitted to be among the apostles, perhaps to teach us, (1.) that there should never be wanting bad men even in the highest places of the church: (2.) that we are to judge of the members of the church, not from the evil lurking in their hearts, which we cannot discern, but from their outward profession, this qualifying Judas for the passover, if not for the participation of the sacrament; and, (3.) that inward holiness is not necessary to render the offices belonging to the ministerial function valid and effectual: for Judas preaches Christ, and is sent out to do it with the power of healing diseases, and casting out of devils,

---

* Lib. iii. cap. 6.

* Hom. 1. in Cant. f. 63, E. hom. ii. f. 65, B. hom. 35 in Matt. f. 23, D.

8 (Nor need ye be thus solicitous) For [5] the poor (since them) always ye have with you (and whenever you will you may do them good, Mark xiv. 7); but me ye have not always (and therefore she did well in taking the present opportunity of showing her affection to me).

9 Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he (to wit, Lazarus) was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead.

10 ¶ But [6] the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death;

11 Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

12 ¶ [7] On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, 13 Took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna: Blessed is (he) the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.

14 And Jesus, when (sending his disciples for him) he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written (of the Messiah, Zech. ix. 9), 15 Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

16 These things [8] understood not his disciples (to be spoken of him) at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him.

17 The people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record (by their hosannas, that he was the Christ).

18 For this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19 The Pharisees therefore said among themselves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing (by all the opposition you have made against him? for) behold, the world is gone after him.

20 ¶ And there were certain (devout) [9] Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast:

21 The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee (perhaps as to a person known to them, living in Syrophœnicia), and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

22 Philip cometh and [10] telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus.

23 ¶ And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be [11] glorified (by the faith of the gentiles; but this will chiefly be after his resurrection: for,)

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone (without increase): but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. (Even so, after my death, shall I have much fruit among the gentiles, by my apostles sent to preach to, and to baptize, all nations.

25 And in this my disciples must be ready to follow my example: for) He that loveth his life (so as to reject me to preserve it) shall lose it; and he that (seemingly) hateth his life in this world (by cleaving to me, with the loss of it) shall keep it unto life eternal.

26 If (therefore) any man (will) serve me, let him (take up his cross and) follow me; and (then) where I am, there shall also my servant be: (for) if any man serve me, him will my Father honour (with a crown of glory, Rev. iii. 21).

27 Now is my [12] soul troubled (at the apprehension of what I am to suffer); and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour (this nature would prompt me to): but (this I cannot say, since) for this cause came I unto this hour (that I might die for the sins of the world.

28 I therefore choose to say,) Father, glorify thy name (by this testimony of thy love to mankind). Then

---

Matt. x. 1—10 (see the note there), though he had himself a devil (John vi. 70); nor is he excepted when Christ saith, "He that receiveth you, receiveth me."

[5] Ver. 8. You have the poor always with you, &c.] Hence it appears that the obligation of giving alms, and being charitable to the poor, hinders not our free expenses in doing honour to good men, as this woman doth here, and Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus afterward in buying spices for the interment of our Lord (xix. 39).

[6] Ver. 10. The chief priests consulted to kill Lazarus also.] To destroy an innocent man without any crime laid against him, only to preserve their own honour and reputation. See here the infallible sentence of the rulers of the church.

[7] Ver. 12. Τῇ ἐπαύριον, On the next day.] i. e. On the tenth day of Nisan, when the paschal lamb was taken up and reserved till the passover, Christ, the true paschal lamb, cometh up to Jerusalem: from this to the sixteenth verse, see the note on Matt. xxi. 8—10.

[8] Ver. 16. These things understood not his disciples at the first.] To be done in completion of any prophecy concerning him; but when Jesus was advanced to the throne of his glory, and had shed upon them the Spirit of truth and illumination promised, they not only understood that these things were done according to the words of Zachary (ix. 9), but also that his kingdom was not to be of this world, but spiritual, or a dominion over the hearts and consciences of men, subdued to the obedience of the truth. Hence also we may learn the manner of the operation of the Holy Spirit, viz. by bringing those things to remembrance, which are requisite that we may know the truth, and be excited to perform our duty, and by enlightening thus our understandings.

[9] Ver. 20. Certain Greeks that came up to worship at the feast.] Dr. Hammond thinks these Greeks were proselytes of the gate, at least, who worshipped the God of the Jews as the creator of heaven and earth, such as were Cornelius and the treasurer of queen Candace; for these persons used to worship God in the court of the gentiles, and also to offer sacrifice to him: that such did come in Solomon's time, and would come afterward, we learn from his petition, that their prayers might be heard which they made in his temple, 1 Kings viii. 41, 42, that they offered burnt-offerings from Josephus: for when Eleazar the zealot persuaded the priests, μηδενὸς ἀλλοφύλου δῶρον ἢ θυσίαν προσδέχεσθαι,* "not to receive the gift or offering of any gentile, this," saith he, "was done contrary to the ancient custom of the Jews; for the priests produced witnesses most tenacious of their rites, deposing ὅτι πάντες οἱ πρόγονοι τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλλογενῶν θυσίας ἀπεδέχοντο,† that all their ancestors received the sacrifices of other nations, and thought it absurd that the Jews only should exclude such from worshipping and sacrificing to their God." These Greeks, says Grotius, seem to have been Syrophœnicians, perhaps dwelling about Tyre and Sidon, and so might easily be acquainted with the Galileans, with whom they had commerce, and with Philip of Bethsaida, to whom they came, ver. 21.

[10] Ver. 22. Philip telleth Andrew.] Because Christ, when he sent them forth to preach, forbade them to go into the coasts of the gentiles (Matt. x. 5), and it was then a controversy among the Jews, whether the gentiles should be admitted to their sacra; and so they might doubt whether such uncircumcised persons were to be admitted to converse with Jesus, and consult him first before they brought them to him.

[11] Ver 23. The hour is come that the Son of man shall be glorified.] i. e. That he, who is contemned by the Jews, his own people, to whom he was first sent, should be glorified by the gentiles.

[12] Ver. 27. Now is my soul troubled, &c.] That they might not say that he had no dread of death, or sense of pain to render sufferings distasteful to him, and so it was not to be expected that they who were deeply affected with these things should follow his example, he here shows he had the came there a voice from heaven, saying, [13] I have both glorified it (by the miracles done by thee in my name), and will glorify it again (by greater miracles).

---

* De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 30, p. 809, F. † P. 810, D.

29 The people therefore, that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered (the voice being attended with thunder): others said, (That) an angel spake to him.

30 Jesus answered and said (to them), This voice came not because of me (to satisfy me of the divine favour, or comfort me against the agonies of death), but for your sakes (that you might believe in me).

31 Now is [14] the judgment of this world (i. e. the time when they shall be convinced of sin, because they believe not in me, John xvi. 9, and of a future judgment: for) now shall the prince of this world be cast out (of his dominions).

32 And I, if (Gr. when) I be (am) [15] lifted up from the earth (upon the cross), will draw all men (i. e. men of all nations) unto (believe in) me.

33 This he said, signifying what death he should die.

34 The people answered him, [16] We have heard out of the law that Christ (and his kingdom) abideth for ever: and how sayest thou, (then, That) the Son of man must be lifted up (so as to die upon the cross)? who is this Son of man (that must die, seeing it thus appeareth by the law he cannot be the Christ)?

35 Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while (he who) is the light (of the world, is) with you. Walk (by the directions of it) while ye have the light, lest [17] darkness come upon you (and you be led by your blind guides into the ditch): for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth.

36 (And, that you may thus walk) While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be (treated, not as children of darkness, cast out from, but as) the children of light (admitted to, his presence, who dwells in the light, and have the comforts and the blessings which belong to them). These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide himself from them.

37 ¶ But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him:

38 (So) [18]That (by this infidelity) the saying (Gr. the word) of Esaias the prophet might be (was) fulfilled same natural concern for these things others had, only he overruled it by a desire to promote his Father's glory.

---

[13] Ver. 28. I have both glorified it.] By the resurrection of Lazarus (xi. 4), and by all the other miracles which I have given in testimony to thy mission (ii. 11): "and I will glorify it again" by thy resurrection and exaltation to the right hand of glory (Acts iii. 13), by the mission of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles, the witnesses of thy resurrection (John xvi. 14), and by giving thee a name above every name (Eph. i. 20, 21, Phil. ii. 9, 10).

[14] Ver. 31. Now is the judgment of this world.] i. e. Now shall they of the world be condemned, who believe not in me (ver. 47): so the word κρίνεσθαι imports, iii. 18, 19, xvi. 9, "Now is the prince of this world cast out;" so is Satan called, because he had rendered the whole world, except the Jewish nation, subject to his idolatrous worship (see the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 4, Eph. ii. 2, vi. 12): and he was eminently cast out by the Christians, when, through the name of Christ, they for three centuries expelled him from the temples and altars where he was worshipped, and from the bodies which he had possessed (see the preface to the Epistles, §. 18).

[15] Ver. 32. Ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, If I be lifted up, I will draw all men after me.] Ἐὰν here signifies when: so Deut. vii. 1, ἐὰν δὲ εἰσαγάγῃ, "When the Lord hath brought you into the land;" Judg. vi. 3, ἐὰν ἔσπειραν, "When the Israelites sowed;" ἐὰν πληρωθῶσι, "When the number of thy days shall be fulfilled," 2 Sam. vii. 12, Jer. iii. 16 (see the note on Heb. iii. 7). "I will draw all men after me;" by the power of my resurrection, the mission of my Spirit, the excellency of my doctrine, and the miracles which shall attend the preaching of it, I will do what is sufficient to prevail with all men to believe in me, will actually engage many throughout all the parts of the world so to do, and render them who do not inexcusable. The event shows that Christ and the Father draw many who come not to him (see vi. 44).

[16] Ver. 34. We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever.] That which they had learned from the prophets, they say they heard out of the "law," that word comprehending the whole scriptures (see xv. 25); this they gathered partly from the prophets representing Christ's kingdom as an everlasting kingdom, Dan. vii. 14, from Ezekiel, saying, xxxvii. 25, "My servant David shall be their King for ever, and of his governmemt there shall be no end," Isa. ix. 7, and from his promise, that he would not fail David, but cause his seed to endure for ever, Ps. lxxxix. 35, 36. But then these words hinder not the truth of those things, which the same prophets had foretold of a body prepared, in which he was to suffer, having his hands and his feet pierced, Ps. xxii. 18, xl. 6, of his giving up his life a sacrifice for sin, Isa. liii. 2. 12, or the Messiah's being cut off, Dan. ix. 26, and these prophets having spoken not only of his sufferings, but also of his resurrection (Ps. xli. 10, Acts iii. 24), and of his future glory (1 Pet. i. 11), they might easily, by comparing these things together, have removed this scruple, especially when he so oft had told them, and they so well remembered (Matt. xxvii. 63), he had said, that "after three days he would rise again."

[17] Ver. 35. Lest darkness come upon you, &c.] As it did in a wonderful manner after the light of the gospel was taken from them, they sinning then, not only against all laws civil and sacred, but even against the laws of nature in the vilest manner, as Josephus fully testifies (see the note on Rom. ii. 1): and from our Lord's exhortation to them here, "to walk in the light, that they may be the children of the light," it is manifest Christ thought not God had then so blinded their eyes that they could not see, or so deserted them that they could not walk in the light; for if so, he could not seriously have exhorted them to "walk in the light," much less to do it so that they might become "the children of light;" for all exhortations to do that which it is impossible for them to do, by reason of a judicial act of God upon them, must not only be vain and delusory, but also contrary to the will of God. If you here say, Christ's exhortations must be as much in vain, supposing they had by their vicious habits contracted such a blindness, "that seeing they would not see," as scripture seems to testify they had: I answer, that this follows not; that blindness being not natural, but only moral, arising from their prejudices and ill affections to the light, and so might be deposed with them. And hence we find the scripture frequently exhorting them who in this moral sense had their eyes blinded, and their ears made deaf, to hearken, to believe, and be obedient to the truth. So Jer. vi. 10, "To whom shall I speak and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, that they cannot hearken:" and yet it is said, ver. 8, "Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee;" and ver. 16, "Stand ye in the way, and see, and ask ye for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest to your souls:" yea, Christ himself saith, John viii. 43, "Ye cannot hear my words;" and yet he adds, that "he came into the world," and spake unto them, "that they might be saved," Luke ix. 56, John xiii. 17, 18, v. 34, and reprehends them, because they "would not come to him, that they might have life," John v. 40, and that they would not be gathered by him, Luke xiii. 34, yea, the evangelist here, ver. 37, imputes it to them as their great sin, that though Christ had "done so many miracles among them, they believed not in him:" yea, God himself still looks upon them as persons who might believe, "for this was his commandment that they should believe in him," this was the work which he expected from them, ver. 24.

[18] Ver. 38. That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled.] Because these and the following words seem to contain a very strange and uncomfortable doctrine, viz that the infidelity, even of God's own people, is to be resolved not into the perverseness of their wills, or the evil dispositions of their hearts, but into the divine predictions, or into a ju-

(in them, or, this departure was to punish their blindness and hardness of heart, that the word of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled in them), which he spake, (saying),

38 Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

39 (For)Therefore they could not believe, because that (which) Esaias said again (was verified in them, viz.),

40 [19] He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart (or, their eyes are blinded, and their hearts are hardened, see Matt. xiii. 14, Acts xxviii. 27); that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them.

41 These things said Esaias (in the spirit), when he saw [20] his glory (viz. the glory of Christ), and spake of him.

42 ¶ Nevertheless (this infidelity was not general, for

---

dicial blindness and obduration wrought by God upon them, which renders it impossible for them to believe; therefore, for explication of them, let it be noted,

First, That our blessed Lord in the immediate precedent verses, viz. 35, 36, doth passionately exhort these very persons to believe and walk according to the light; which is a certain evidence our Lord well knew his Father had not, by any of his actions or predictions, made it impossible for them to believe on him, or walk according to his doctrine; for if God had so blinded their eyes that they could not see the light, or so hardened their hearts that they could not embrace it, Christ would not seriously have exhorted them to believe, or walk according to it, and that so effectually, that they might become the children of light; for every exhortation to do a thing we know to be impossible must be vain: and he who, by it, seems to be desirous we should do that, which he knows we cannot, must delude us; and if he knows that God hath by some antecedent action rendered the thing impossible to be done, it must be also an exhortation repugnant to the will of God: now it is blasphemy to say the exhortations of the Son of God were vain, delusory, or contrary to his Father's will. Moreover our Saviour knew the Jews were capable of mercy and salvation by him, for he expressly says, God sent him into the world, "that the world by him might be saved," John iii. 17; he makes this declaration, "These things say I unto you that ye might be saved," John v. 34, and this inquiry, "How oft would I have gathered you, and you would not?" Luke xiii. 34, and says, "Ye will not come to me, that ye may have life," John v. 40, God himself would not have his words so understood, as if he were unwilling that the Jews should believe, or had by any of his actions rendered it impossible for them so to do, for "this was his commandment, that they should believe on him whom he had sent," John vi. 29, and why sent he his Son "to seek, and to save that which was lost," even "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," had he not truly been desirous that they should believe? The evangelist also, and that good Spirit by which he did indite these words, did not thus understand them; for he objects this to the Jews as their great crime, ver. 37, that "though Christ had done so many miracles among them, yet they believed not on him;" whereas it can be no man's sin not to do what he cannot do purely by reason of the act of God. These words must therefore have some other sense than at first view they seem to bear.

Secondly, Observe, that God's foreknowledge, sayings, and predictions, have no such influence on the will of man, as to lay on him a necessity to do what he foreknows or hath foretold he will do: for were it otherwise, (1.) all human actions must be necessary; for to that God who is omniscient, all things, both past, and present, and to come, are known: if then this knowledge of men's actions, which the scripture so plainly doth ascribe to God, did make them necessary, all human actions must be necessary, and the freedom of them must be overthrown. (2.) Then vice and virtue must be only empty names, we being capable of doing nothing which is blameworthy, or deserveth praise; for who can blame a person for doing only what he could not help; or judge him worthy of applause, who doth that only which he cannot avoid? And (3.) then must all future recompenses be discarded, it being visibly unjust to punish any man for that which it was never in his power to avoid; and as unreasonable to reward him for that action which cannot be praiseworthy. We know that an almighty God is able so powerfully to work upon the hearts of men, as to convert them to himself; and it is natural to conceive, that a good God is ready to do all which he sees proper for that end: since then in some regard it must be true that "God would have all men to be saved," what answer can be given to that inquiry, "Why are not all men actually saved?" but this—that the divine wisdom does not see it fit to lay restraints upon their actions, and to necessitate their wills to a compliance with his calls and invitations to turn to him. This answer I believe is true; but then it is an evidence that God hath never by his prescience, or his predictions, laid such restraints upon men's actions.

When then it is said here, "Therefore they could not believe, because Esaias said;" these words must bear this sense, Therefore they could not believe, because that was fulfilled upon them which Esaias said, or, it had happened to them as he had foretold: so xv. 24, 25 (see the note there), "They have hated me and my Father, ἀλλ' ἵνα πληρωθῇ ὁ λόγος, but that the word might be fulfilled:" i. e. but this hath happened to, or been done by them, that what was written in their law might be fulfilled, viz. "They hated me without a cause;" and this is the exposition of the Holy Ghost, who, Matt. xii. 13, 14, saith from the mouth of Christ, "Therefore speak I to them in parables, because they seeing, see not; and in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, Their eyes have they closed," &c.

[19] Ver. 40. He hath blinded their eyes.] Observe, that whereas our translation saith, "He hath blinded their eyes," the word "he" is not in the original, which saith only thus, τετύφλωκεν αὐτῶν τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, and may be rendered, "Malice, or wickedness, hath blinded their eyes," as we read, Wisd. ii. 21, or, (2.) the personal is here put for the impersonal, the active for the passive; i. e. "He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts," for "Their eyes are blinded, and their hearts hardened." To give you a plain instance of like nature, Isa. xliv. 18, in our translation we read thus, "He hath shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand:" and yet both the Greek and Chaldee paraphrast read them thus, ἀπημανρώθησαν, "Their eyes are shut and darkened," lest they should see: and that this is the true import of the prophet's words, not that God but Satan and their own evil dispositions had done this, is evident from this consideration; that this is spoken to the shame of them who made and worshipped senseless images (ver. 9. 11), and to convince them of their want of consideration (ver. 19). And that this must be the sense here we learn not only from the Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Arabic, which render these words of Isaiah thus, "The heart of this people is waxed gross, and their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes;" but also from our blessed Saviour, who Matt. xiii. 15, and from St. Paul, who, Acts xxviii. 26, 27, exactly follow this translation of the words.

[20] Ver. 41. These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, &c.] i. e. When he saw the glory of the Lord Christ, not, as some Socinians contend, of God the Father: for,

First, These words, "His glory," and "He spake of him," contain two pronouns, which are not in the words of the prophet, but only of the evangelist, and so must be referred to him, of whom the evangelist here speaks; viz. to him "who had done so many miracles among them," and to him "in whom they believed not" (ver. 37), and "in whom they could not believe" (ver. 39).

Secondly, If those words, "These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory," are not to be understood of Christ, what use have they, or to what purpose do they here serve, there being no need to tell us, that Esaias then saw the glory of God the Father, or spake of him?

Thirdly, Socinus well observes and proves, that the apostle's words do equally relate to both the passages produced from Esaias; because he saith not, "This," but "These things said Esaias." Now it is evident, from the apostle Paul, Rom. x. 16, citing these words, and applying them to the gospel-times, that the first testimony relates to them, and from the contents of the whole fifty-third chapter, that they not only among the people but) among [21] the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not (openly) confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue:

43 For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God (i. e. they valued their reputation with men more than that honour which cometh of God only, John v. 44).

44 ¶ Jesus (therefore) cried and said, He that believeth on me, believeth not [22] on me (only), but on him that sent me (also).

45 And he that seeth me (doing the works of God) [23] seeth (also) him that sent me.

46 I am [24] come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness (or be ignorant of the way to happiness).

47 And if any man hear my words, and believe (them) not, [25] I judge him not (i. e. I do not now condemn him): for I came not to judge (i. e. condemn) the world, but to save the world (John iii. 17).

48 He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day.

49 For I have not spoken of myself (without commission from above); but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

50 And I know that (obedience to) his commandment is (the way to) life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak (and he will surely condemn those who are disobedient to his word).

---

relates to Christ's sufferings, and his future glory, as Schlictingius here grants, and consequently the words, "These things spake Esaias," must induce us to believe, that he spake also in the other passage cited from him of the glory of the same person. Schlictingius therefore answers, that the prophet, by seeing the glory of God, is said also to see the glory of Christ, which was to fill the whole earth; for then was the whole earth replenished with his glory, when God by him did his admirable works, when he raised him from the dead, and placed him at his own right hand, subjecting all things to his feet; when Esaias in the Spirit saw his glory, John rightly says, "He saw the glory of Christ," the glory of God and of Christ being so inseparably connected, as the means to the end, that the glory of Christ directly tends to the glory of God the Father. But against this evasion, it is observable,

That the prophet, ch. liii., if he speaks at all of the glory of any person, as indeed he doth, ver 10—12, speaks of such a one, who "poured out his soul unto death," and was "numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many;" which words cannot refer at all to God the Father.

Secondly, In the sixth chapter he speaks of one, whom he then saw "sitting upon a throne high and lifted up, and whose train filled the temple" (ver. 1), and to whom the seraphims cried, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory" (ver. 3). He therefore speaketh not of any future glory, but of the glory he then saw, and of which the seraphims then sang. And who can reasonably think the prophet should cry out, ver. 5, "Woe is me, because I have seen the King, the Lord of hosts!" only because he had seen a vision of a mere man, who had as yet no being? However,

Thirdly, Seeing the prophet is so express in it, that it was Jehovah-Zebaoth, the Lord of hosts, the king Jehovah, whose glory he then saw, and of whose glory the angels then sang; and yet the evangelist declares he spake these things when he saw the glory of Christ—it follows, that Christ must be one with this Jehovah.

[21] Ver. 42. Of the chief priests many believed on him.] i. e. They were inwardly convinced he was the Christ, though they durst not openly confess this faith, lest they should be rendered infamous by being turned out of the synagogue, and so their faith was insufficient in one great requisite, "confession of it being made with the mouth unto salvation" (Rom. x. 9, Matt. x. 32).

[22] Ver. 44. Believeth not on me] Only, but in him also who hath set his seal to the testimony of me (John iii. 33): so the word only is to be understood, when Christ saith, "He that receiveth me, receiveth not me" (Mark ix. 37): and when St. Peter saith to Ananias, "Thou hast not lied to man, but to God" (Acts v. 4): St. Paul, "He that despiseth us, despiseth not man, but God" (1 Thess. iv. 8). and this addition is here necessary, to avoid a contradiction in these words, "He that believeth in me, believeth not in me." (2.) Because Christ so expressly doth require his disciples to believe in him, saying, xix. 1, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me:" it is added, "He believes also in him that sent me," to express the dignity and excellency of this faith, and the dreadful effects of incredulity, since he that believes not makes God a liar (1 John v. 10).

[23] Ver. 45. He that seeth me, seeth him that sent me.] See the note on xiv. 9.

[24] Ver. 46. I am come a light into the world.] That he who believeth in me, and embraceth my doctrine, may not abide in darkness, i. e. in ignorance of the way of life, nor be cast out into outer darkness, as the Jews will be for their incredulity (Matt. viii. 12).

[25] Ver. 47, 48. I judge him not.] i. e. I pass not on him the decretory sentence here on earth, where I am to perform the office of a prophet, not a judge (viii. 15); yet let him know he shall hereafter be judged, and have the sentence passed upon him, according to that doctrine which I preach, and be punished by God for contempt of it, because the "words I speak, I speak not of myself; but as he gave me a commandment, so I speak." Christ neither doth nor could deny that he would judge all men at the last day, because he had declared the Father had committed "all judgment to the Son" (John v. 27), and "had given him power to raise them up and judge them at the last day" (ver. 26, 27), but only doth deny that he was to assume this office whilst he was on earth.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own (apostles) which were in the world, [1] he loved them unto the end (or close of his life).

2 And [2] supper (time) being ended (Gr. come), the devil having now put (it) into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him;

3 Jesus knowing (his great dignity, in) that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that

---

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. He loved them to the end.] i. e. To the close of his life, and showed this affection to them by washing their feet. This passage therefore can afford no argument, that the regenerate can never fall away, because Christ speaks not of the choosing any to salvation, but only of those, whom he had chosen out of the world to be his apostles (xv. 19), nor of his love of them to the end of their lives, but of his own.

[2] Ver. 2. And supper being ended.] That this was not the paschal supper, but a supper they were at before the

he was [3] come (Gr. come forth) from God, and went to God;

4 He (to show an admirable example of humility) riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself (after the manner of a servant).

5 After that he poured water into a bason, and began to [4] wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter saith unto him, Lord, dost thou (think I can suffer thee to) wash my feet?

7 Jesus answered and said unto him, (For) what (end) I do (this) thou [5] knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter (when I have performed this ceremony, ver. 12. 15).

8 Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not (if thy heart and thy affections be not purified by me), thou hast no part with me (thou wilt not be fitted for my service, or receive any benefit by me).

9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, (if this washing be so necessary to that end, wash) not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

---

feast of the passover, ver. 1, see fully proved in the appendix to the fourteenth chapter of St. Mark, answer to objection the second. To the arguments there offered for this purpose add, that at this supper Christ only privately discovers the traitor to St. John (ver. 25, 26), whereas at the paschal supper he makes him known openly to them all (Matt. xxvi. 25, Luke xxii. 21): here he discovers him to St. John, by giving him a sop which he had dipped in the dish (ver. 26), there he discovers him to the rest by this, that his hand was with him in the dish (Matt. xxvi. 23, Mark xiv. 20). Against what is here said it may be objected, that Christ here saith (ver. 38), "The cock shall not crow before thou hast denied me thrice:" now this seems to have been said at Christ's last passover. To this I answer, that when Christ said this to Peter elsewhere, he always adds the circumstance of time, either ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ νυκτὶ, "The cock shall not crow this night" (Matt. xxvi. 34, Mark xiv. 30), or σήμερον, "this day" (Luke xxii. 34); whereas here no circumstance of time is added, which makes it probable the words here were not spoken at the same time.

Secondly, The words here were spoken upon occasion of St. Peter's answer to these words of Christ, "Whither I go thou canst not follow me now" (ver. 36); but the like words in St. Matthew and St. Mark were spoken upon the occasion of our Lord's prediction, that they should all be scandalized at him that night (Matt. xxvi. 31, Mark xiv. 27), and in St. Luke, upon occasion of Christ's saying to Peter in particular, "Satan hath desired to winnow thee" (Luke xxii. 31, 32), which makes it farther probable, that these words here were spoken at a different time.

[3] Ver. 3. Jesus knowing, ὅτι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθε, καὶ πρὸς Θεὸν ὑπάγει, that he came out from God, and went to God.] So xvi. 28, "I came out from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father." Now seeing it is certain that he left the world, and went to the Father, by ascending from the earth to the highest heavens; must not the opposition require that he came out from the Father into the world, by coming from heaven to earth? For these two are opposite by commutation of terms: the term from which in the one, being the term to which in the other; which opposition is wholly lost, by saying, with the Socinians, that Christ is said to come forth from God, or from the Father, only because he came as his legate or ambassador, and was made known to the world by his credentials, the miracles done by him in his Father's name. Moreover, according to this exposition, the opposite term, his going to God, and to the Father, must import his ceasing to be his legate, or to make himself known by the miracles done by a power derived from his Father; whereas he, after his ascension, made himself still thus more known to the world. Add to this, that the prophets of old, and Moses especially, were God's messengers, and made themselves known to the world by miracles done by God, as their credentials, and so were after them the apostles in like manner the legates and ambassadors of God and Christ; but yet it never was nor could be said of them, or any of them, "I went forth from God," and from the Father, "and came into the world;" which shows this phrase is proper to our Lord; and so the reason of it must be peculiar to him alone.

Obj. 1. The apostles believed that Christ came forth from God (John xvi. 30, xvii. 8), but yet they believed not that he had a divine essence.

Ans. What reason have the Socinians to say this so confidently of the apostles, who not only saw him do such mighty miracles, as argued a divine power in him, and whom he charges so often to believe, that he was in the Father, and the Father in him, but also did themselves cast out devils, and heal diseases in his name throughout Judea, when he was absent from them: this being a proof to them, that he, though absent from them in the body, was always present with them by his power? What reason have they to conclude this from the places cited, since in the first, they argue thus from his omniscience, an attribute inseparable from the divine nature, saying, "Now we perceive that thou knowest all things; and, ἐν τούτῳ, by this we believe thou camest forth from God:" in the second, they hear him saying, "Father, glorify me with the glory I had with thee before the world was," ver. 5; and, ver. 7, are said to know that "all things which the Father had given him," even the power to do and know all things, "were of God;" and thence are said to know that he truly or indeed "came from God."

Obj. 2. But how can God be said to "come from God" into the world, when he is always in the heavens; or, to leave the world, and go to the Father?

Ans. 1. To this our Saviour partly himself answers, by saying, that he was "in heaven," even then when he says, he "came down from heaven" (see the note on iii. 13).

2. I have observed, note on iii. 13, that as to his divine nature, he is said to descend from heaven, not by a local descent, or by quitting heaven, but only by the manifestation of himself upon earth; and in this sense God himself is often said to descend from heaven, when by any divine work done on earth he demonstrates his presence there: and he is also said to ascend again into heaven afterward. Why therefore may not God the Word be said to descend from heaven, and even dwell with men, as God is said to dwell in the tabernacle and in the temple, when the Logos dwelt in the human nature upon earth, and manifested his glory in it; and also to leave the world, and go to the Father, not only as properly doing this by the exaltation of the human nature, but as doing all his divine works now from heaven, where he sits in the majesty and glory of the Father?

[4] Ver. 5. And he began to wash his disciples' feet.] Great is this instance of humility, if we consider (1.) the dignity of the person expressed in the foregoing words; (2.) the action itself, with the circumstances of it: for (1.) Christ lays aside his garment, and he girds himself, as Philo saith servants used to do when they ministered to their masters. (2.) He actually washed his disciples' feet, which also servants did to their masters when they came from a journey, to cleanse them from the dirt, and to refresh them (1 Tim. v. 10); according to those words of Abigail to David, "Let me be a servant to wash the feet of my lord" (1 Sam. xxv. 41), and which superiors did not do to inferiors (see Dr. Lightfoot on the place).

[5] Ver. 7. What I do, thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.] After the ceremony is finished, I shall tell thee, it was intended as an example of that humility, which I would have you show, in ministering to the meanest Christians; though you in station and office be superior to them. It farther may be gathered from those words, ver. 8, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me," or, wilt receive no benefit by me; and from the purity, mentioned ver. 10, that Christ intended also by this rite that purity of mind and of affection, which he required of all those who belonged to him, and which he would increase in them by his word and Spirit (Eph. v. 26), and which in scripture was usually represented by washing and pouring of water, as in those words, Isa. i. 17, "Wash ye, καθαροὶ γίνεσθε, be ye clean;"

10 Jesus saith to him, He that is washed (i. e. truly sanctified and cleansed once) [6] needeth not save to wash his feet (his heart and his affections), but (if he still keep them pure and rightly inclined) is clean every whit (in all his thoughts and actions proceeding from them): and ye are (in a good measure) clean, but not all (Judas being full of filthiness. This exception he made)

11 For (because) he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

12 So after he had washed their feet, and taken his garments (which he had laid aside in order to that work), and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?

13 Ye call me [7] Master and Lord: and ye say well (i. e. what is right); for so I am.

14 If I then, (who am) your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; [8] ye also ought to wash one another's feet (i. e. to be as ready to do the meanest office to other Christians).

15 For I (by doing this) have given you an example, that ye should do (to others) as I have done to you.

16 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither (is) he that is sent greater than he that sent him (and therefore you, my servants, whom I send to preach the gospel to all nations, ought not to think it beneath you to do to others what I, your Lord, from whom ye receive your commission, do to you).

17 If ye know these things, (that knowledge, without a suitable practice, will only aggravate your doom, but) happy are ye if do them.

18 ¶ (And when I spake of your being happy) I speak not of you all: (for) I [9] know whom I have chosen (i. e. what is the inward disposition of them): but (one of them is so disposed towards me) that the scripture may be fulfilled, (which saith, Ps. xli. 9), He that eateth bread with me (as my familiar friend) hath lifted up his heel against me.

19 Now I tell you (of this) before it come (to pass), that, when it is come to pass, [10] ye may believe that I am he (who searcheth all hearts, and also am the Son of David, to whom these things belong.

20 And, believing this, you will see cause sufficient to go on cheerfully in my service; for) Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send (shall be esteemed as one that) receiveth me; and he that receiveth me (as one that) receiveth him that sent me.

21 When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in (his) spirit, (partly at the apprehension of his sufferings, and partly at the vileness and pernicious consequences of the fact,) and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.

22 Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake (this).

23 Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved (viz. St. John).

24 Simon Peter therefore [11] beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake.

25 He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto him (with a low voice), Lord, who is it?

26 Jesus answered (him), He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it (in the dish). And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

27 And after the sop, [12] Satan entered (more fully) into him. Then said Jesus unto him, [13] That thou doest, (thou mayest) do quickly (as soon as thou wilt, for I am ready to suffer).

---

and in that promise, Ezek. xxxvi. 35, "I will pour clean water upon you, καὶ καθαρισθήσεσθε, and ye shall be cleansed from your iniquities."

[6] Ver. 10. Needeth not, save to wash his feet.] Because they only gather dirt and gravel in a journey. So in the metaphor, in our travel through the world, all the defilement we contract arises from our misplaced or our immoderate affections, love, desire, fear, aversion, hatred. The Jewish priests were to wash their hands as well as feet when they offered sacrifice to God (Exod. xxx. 19), because their hands were chiefly employed in that work, and so their hands unwashed were said to be unconsecrated, common, or unclean (Maimonides, tr. de Ædif. Templi, cap. 1, §. 6, et tr. 3, cap. 5, §. 1). The apostles are required only to wash their feet, their business being to travel through the world, preaching the gospel. Note also, that Christ washed the feet of Judas; for he was present at this rite, and is not said to be excepted: only Christ here saith, this washing did not make him clean.

[7] Ver. 13. Ye call me Master and Lord.] Your Master by teaching, and your Lord by commanding: so Grotius. But ὁ Κύριος, the word "Lord" here seems to import "the Lord from heaven" (ver. 1), or him who is "Lord of all;" in which sense, to us Christians, "there is but one Lord" (Acts ii. 36, 1 Cor. viii. 6).

[8] Ver. 14. Ye ought to wash one another's feet.] Not in the literal sense, by doing this once a year; but in the spiritual, by being always ready to do any service, by which we may promote the welfare, and advance the purity, of any member of the church: for "the servant is not above his lord."

[9] Ver. 18. I know whom I have chosen.] Christ speaks not here of an election to faith, and by it to salvation; that being constantly in scripture ascribed to God the Father, not to Christ acting as his prophet; but of being chosen to the office of an apostle; nor does he intend here to say, that he had chosen some of his apostles, and not others: for he owns that he had chosen Judas, by saying, "Have I not chosen twelve, and one of them is a devil?" (vi. 70.) The import of these words seems therefore to be this—I know the temper and disposition of them whom I have chosen, and what I may expect from one of them; for which cause I said, "You are not all clean;" but God in his wisdom hath permitted this, that as Ahithophel betrayed David, though he was his familiar friend, so Judas, my familiar at my table, might betray the Son of God; and so the words recorded, Ps. xli. 9, might be fulfilled in him also, of whom king David was the type.

Hath lifted up τὴν πτέρναν αὐτοῦ, his heel against me.] Theophylact here notes, that this is a metaphor taken ἀπὸ τῶν παλαιόντων, "from wrestlers;" others from racers, who following others, endeavour to trip up their heels, and throw them down: so Esau said of Jacob, who had his name from the word akab, here used, "Is he not rightly called Jacob, ἐπτέρνικε γάρ με, for he hath tripped up my heels, (or overthrown me) twice?" Gen. xxvii. 36, and Jer. ix. 4, "Every brother will supplant, πτέρνῃ πτερνιεῖ he with his heel will trip up his brother's heels."

[10] Ver. 19. That when it comes to pass, ye may believe, ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι, that I am.] Not only that I am the Christ, as viii. 24, but also, that I am he, who searcheth the hearts, and knows things future and contingent, which is the property of God alone (1 Kings viii. 30, Isa. xli. 22, 23); and so believing in me, may believe also in him that sent me, ver. 20 (see Examen Millii).

[11] Ver. 24. Simon Peter beckons to him that he should ask.] That all mentioned from this to the twenty-seventh verse was done secretly—Simon only nodding to John, he speaking to Christ only in his ear, and Christ so answering that he only understood his words—is plain from this, that "no man at the table knew for what intent Christ said to Judas, What thou doest, do quickly," save St. John, ver. 27.

[12] Ver. 27. Satan entered into him.] Non secundùm substantiam sed secundùm operationem, saith St. Jerome; i. e. not as to the substance, but as to the operation, as he is said to do, when the will is fully inclined to obey his motions, and we do not resist them: but of this, see the note Luke xxii. 3.

[13] What thou doest do quickly.] This is not a command to Judas to go on with his wicked enterprise, but only a decla

28 Now no man at the table (save St. John) knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the (paschal) feast; or, that he should [14] give something to the poor.

30 He then having received the sop went immediately out (to accomplish his design): and it was night (when he did so).

31 ¶ Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, [15] Now is the Son of man (to suffer, and then to be) glorified (Luke xxiv. 26, Heb. ii. 9), and God is (to be) glorified in him (thus suffering for the salvation of mankind).

32 [16] If God be glorified in (and by) him, God shall also glorify him in himself (by committing all things to his hands, and seating him at the right hand of majesty and power, John xvii. 5), and shall straightway (thus) glorify him.

33 Little children, yet a little [17] while I am with you. (And then) ye shall seek me: and as I said (before) unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you (ye cannot come now till your work on earth be finished, ver. 36, and I have prepared mansions in heaven for you, John xiv. 2).

34 A new commandment I give unto you (to be continually observed by all my disciples), That ye love one another (after my example, who lay down my life for you; requiring) [18] as I have loved you, that ye also (so) love one another.

35 By [19] this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye (thus) have love one to another.

36 ¶ Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, [20] thou canst not follow me (as being not yet prepared to suffer for my sake); but thou shalt follow me afterwards (and suffer on the cross as I do).

37 Peter said unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake.

38 Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, [21] The cock shall not crow (i. e. it shall not be the time of cock-crowing), till thou hast denied me thrice.

---

ration made by Christ of his readiness to suffer death, as in the paraphrase. So Ezek. xx. 39, "Go ye, serve ye every one his idols."

[14] Ver. 29. That he should give something to the poor.] This charity seems to be the proper business at a feast, Esther ix. 22.

[15] Ver. 31. Now is the Son of man glorified, &c.] The context seemeth to require the sense given in the paraphrase: and then the passive aorist is put for the future, as οὐ μὴ ἔλθῃ, "Will he not come?" xi. 56, ἐβλήθη, "He shall be cast out," xv. 6 (see Glass. de Verbo, can. 47). Or else the sense may be given thus, Hitherto hath the Son of man been glorified by his doctrine and his miracles, by which he hath fully proved his mission; and God hath been glorified by them both; he having still done and spoken them in his Father's name (see Examen Millii).

[16] Ver. 32. If God be glorified in him, God will glorify him, ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himself.] By signs done in the heaven and the earth, which shall force men to say even at his death, "Truly this was the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 45. 51. 54), by his glorious resurrection and ascension, and session at his own right hand, by giving him "all power in heaven and earth, and a name above every name" (Phil. ii. 9). And this he will presently begin to do: so that you seeing such admirable circumstances of my passion, and such a glorious issue of it, may go on cheerfully in preaching my gospel, expecting my power to assist you in the work, and a full reward of all your sufferings for my sake.

[17] Ver. 33. Yet a little while am I with you.] i. e. By my bodily presence; for he had promised to "abide for ever with them" by his Spirit (xiv. 16), and his divine presence (Matt. xxviii. 20).

[18] Ver. 34. As I have loved you.] Even to the shedding of my blood for you, and even for mine enemies; not with respect to any merit on their part, or any advantage on mine, but out of pure affection for their souls: this is the love you are to imitate in your affection one to another.

[19] Ver. 35. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples.] The disciples of the Baptist were known by the austerity of their lives; the disciples of the pharisees by their habit and separation from other men; Christ will have his disciples known by their profound affection to each other, which in the primitive ages was so great, that it made the heathens* with admiration to cry out, Vide ut invicem se diligunt, "See how they love one another;" and even to hate and envy them for their brotherly affection. Hence Julian proposes them to the heathens as a fit pattern for their imitation.

[20] Ver. 36. Thou canst not follow me now.] i. e. In my sufferings, till by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon thee thou art strengthened.

[21] Ver. 38. Before the cock crow.] viz. In the morning, styled emphatically, "the cock-crowing" (see the note on Matt. xxvi. 34).

---

* Tertul. Apol. cap. 39. Sic mutuo, quod doletis, amore diligimus. Sic nos, quod invidetis, fratres vocamus. Minutius, p. 35, 36.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Let not your heart be troubled: [1] ye believe in God, believe also in me (who am one with the Father, and to whom all power is committed: see John x. 30. 38).

2 In my Father's house are many [2] mansions (sufficient to receive you, and all that believe in me, to eternal life): if it were not so, I would have told you (that no such mansions were to be expected. But now) I go [3] to prepare a place for you.

3 And if I go and prepare (when I shall have gone

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. Πιστεύετε εἰς τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ εἰς ἐμὲ πιστεύετε, Ye believe in God, believe also in me.] There being no example I can find, where the same word in the same sentence is used both in the indicative and the imperative mood; I had rather render these words in the same mood, thus, "Believe in God, believe also in me:" i. e. That I may prescribe a remedy to that trouble, which hath seized your hearts from the consideration of my passion, and my departure from you, and of the troubles you must expect in the execution of your office, I advise you to believe in God, the author of that doctrine you are to preach, and therefore the defender of those who propagate it; and in me, in whose name you are to preach it, as having all power in heaven and in earth, and being always present with you, and therefore being able to assist and preserve you from all dangers, and to reward your faithful labours with that crown of glory I have promised.

[2] Ver. 2. In my Father's house are many mansions.] In which, after your labours, you shall find eternal rest. So the Jews say, that in Paradise are seven mansions, which are each twelve thousand miles long, ten thousand broad, and as many high: so Moses Haddarson in Gen. ii. 9.

[3] I go to prepare a place for you.] For Christ, by his entrance with his sacrifice into heaven, procured for us an entrance into that place, which before was inaccessible, or a and prepared) a place for you, [4] I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

4 And whither I go ye know (for I have told you I go to my Father), and the way ye know (for I am the way, ver. 6, and the teacher of it; by observing whose words you will come to me).

5 Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how (then) can we know the way (to thee)?

6 Jesus saith unto him, [5] I am the way, the truth, and the life (by teaching that way of saving truth which leadeth to life eternal): no man cometh unto the Father, but by (faith in) me (and by observance of my word).

7 [6] If ye had (fully) known me, ye should have known my Father also (who is in me, and is made visible by his works done by me): and from henceforth (from the time I have been with you) ye (have) know (n) him (by his word), and have seen him (by his works).

8 Philip saith unto him, Lord, shew us the Father (as he was seen by Moses and the Israelites, at the giving of the law, in glorious symbols of his presence), and it sufficeth us.

9 Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen (in me the works of) the Father (by which only he is visible); and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father (as if thou hadst not seen him, or could see him otherwise)?

10 Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me (by his Spirit enabling me to speak the words and do the works of God)? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself (see note on viii. 14): but the Father that dwelleth in me (by the Spirit, John iii. 34), he doeth the works (by which my prophetic office is confirmed).

11 Believe me that I am (thus) in the Father, and the Father in me: or else (if thou believest not for my own sake) believe in me for the very works' sake (which are done by the power and spirit of the Father).

12 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; [7] and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father (to send the Holy Ghost to enable them to do them).

13 And [8] whatsoever ye shall ask in my name (for the promotion of the gospel), that will I (thus enable you to) do, that the Father may be glorified in (by) the Son (sending the Holy Ghost upon you from the Father).

14 If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

15 ¶ If ye love me, (express the sincerity of that love, so as to) keep my commandments.

16 And (then) I will pray the Father, and he shall

---

new living way of entering through the veil rent for us at his death, he preparing these mansions for us by his own entrance first into heaven with his sacrifice: see the notes on Heb. ix. 8. 23, 24, x. 20.

[4] Ver. 3. I come again, and will receive you to myself.] i. e. Into those mansions, that then you may be for ever with me, and be made partakers of that happiness I there enjoy. Whence it seems probable that all the saints, the blessed apostles not excepted, are only to be crowned at the same time, to wit, at our Lord's second advent (see the note on Heb. xi. 40): and observe, that ἐὰν δὲ here is to be rendered "When I come again" (see the note on Heb. iii. 7).

[5] Ver. 6. I am the way, the truth, and the life.] The author of the way that leadeth to life; the teacher of that truth which directs to it; the giver of that life which is to be obtained by walking in it. And this life consists in the vision or enjoyment of the Father, to whom none cometh but by faith in me, ver. 6.

[6] Ver. 7. If ye had known me, ye would have known the Father also.] Note, that Christ here speaks not of the knowledge of his Father's essence, (1.) because that is not to be seen, as here the Father is said to be, ver. 9. (2.) Because the reason here assigned of this knowledge is, that Christ spake not from himself, but from the Father; and so the Father was to be known by what he taught. (3.) He adds, that the works he did were done by the power of the Father abiding in him; and so the power and other attributes of the Father might be seen by them; his goodness and mercy by the kindness and mercy shown in all his wisdom, righteousness, and holiness, in the purity of his doctrine. In me, saith he, speaking my Father's words, ye do already know him, i. e. his sacred will: in me, doing my Father's works, ye see him, viz. his attributes; and of my ability to do them, ye cannot well doubt, for I am in the Father, and the Father in me, by virtue of his Spirit residing in me; so that I both perfectly know his will, and can do the most mighty works by this power of the Most High (Luke i. 35).

[7] Ver. 12. And shall do greater works than these, because I go to the Father.] That which interpreters here say of diseases healed by the shadow of Peter, and by napkins sent from St. Paul, and of more miracles performed throughout the world, and devils ejected through three whole centuries every where, is not unfitly mentioned here, as answering to these words; but yet I think this chiefly is to be referred to the admirable success of the gospel, preached by the apostles after the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them; and the inward gifts of tongues, and the interpretation of them; of prophecy, and discerning of spirits, and the imparting of these gifts to others by baptism, and the imposition of the apostles' hands: for as this was a greater work in our Lord Jesus thus to assist so many with his mighty power, when absent at so great a distance as is earth from heaven, than to do miracles in their presence; so, to communicate these inward gifts to men, and to enable them to transfer them to others upon faith in Christ, is truly wonderful; for, as Arnobius saith, *Transcribere in alium jus tuum, et quod facere solus possis, fragilissimæ rei donare et participare faciendum, super omnia sitæ est potestatis, continentisque sub se omnium rerum causas, et rationum facultatumque naturas. But more especially, when he himself succeeded so little in three years' preaching here on earth, and had so few sincere disciples, that he should enable his apostles at one sermon to convert some thousands, and cause his gospel to fly like lightning through the world, and beat down all strongholds of opposition, this is truly admirable. That to these fruits of the mission of the Holy Ghost these words do principally relate, appeareth from the reason of them here assigned, "Because I go to the Father;" viz. to send that Holy Spirit down upon you, by whom these greater works are to be done.

[8] Ver. 13. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, I will do.] Here Christ shows how these great works should be done by them, viz. not by their own power, or any divine virtue residing in them, as our Lord did his; but in the name and by the power of Christ (Acts iii. 12. 16), by faith in him, and prayer to God in his name (Acts iv. 24. 30). Note also here that Christ saith, Whatever ye shall thus ask I will do; which, as it supposes in him omniscience, enabling him to know the request of all Christians upon earth, and omnipotence, enabling him to assist them every where in the performance of the greatest works, so must it consequently imply unity of essence betwixt the Father and the Son, and so the Father is glorified in the Son. Hence, what is here, "I will do," is, xvi. 23, "The Father will give you." Note also, that whereas the Jews used to beg a blessing for the fathers' sake, or for the sake of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, though being only men they never prayed to them, the Christians not only prayed to the Father in the name of the Son, but invoked the Son also, as being one God with the Father; this being a periphrasis of Christians, that they were those who called upon the name of Christ, Acts xix. 14. 21 (see give you [9] another Comforter (even the Holy Ghost), that he may abide with you (and those that shall succeed you) for ever;

---

* Arnob. lib. i. p. 31.

17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him (they having no experience of his presence with them, or of his sanctifying operations on them, by which alone he can be seen or known; for being a holy Spirit, he cannot abide with unholy souls): but ye (who are sanctified by him) know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

18 I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you (by this Spirit).

19 Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye (shall) see me (i. e. shall find experimentally my presence with you: for) [10] because I live, ye (in the midst of all the perils and persecutions of the world) shall live also (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11).

20 [11] At that day (that I send this Comforter) ye shall know that I am in my Father (by receiving this Spirit from him), and ye in me, and I in you (by this Spirit communicated from me your head, to unite you my members to me).

21 He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, [12] and will manifest myself to him (by the presence and illuminations of the Spirit of truth).

22 Judas saith unto him, not (he that was named) Iscariot, Lord (seeing thou art to be a glorious king over us and all the nations of the world), [13] how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?

23 Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and (then) my Father will love him, [14] and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him (by the Spirit of the Father and the Son dwelling in him).

24 He that loveth me not (as the world doth not) keepeth not my sayings (and so can neither know me nor my Father): and (so cannot be loved by us; for) the word which ye hear is not (originally) mine, but the Father's which sent me (and it is only obedience to it that procures his and my love).

25 These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

26 But the [15] Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name (i. e. as my Spirit, to act in my name and for my honour), he shall teach you all things (which are requisite to be known by you, and taught to others), and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

27 [16] Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you (by giving you that Spirit whose fruits are joy and peace): not as the world giveth (peace, when they part from their friends, by wishing to them that peace which they do not heartily desire, or are not able to impart), give I (it) unto you (but effectually; and therefore) let not your heart be troubled (at my departure), neither note on Rom. x. 13). And this seems here to be mentioned to confirm their faith in him, that he who so loved them had power to do all things for them.

---

[9] Ver. 16. Another Comforter.] See note on xvi. 7.

[10] Ver. 19. Because I live ye shall live also.] By virtue of this promise, though the apostles were always delivered up to death for the sake of Jesus, yet was the life of Christ manifested in their mortal flesh, by preserving them, and delivering them from so many deaths (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11); and they are said to live by and with him (2 Cor. xiii. 4), by virtue of that miraculous power he conferred upon them for the promotion of the gospel (2 Cor. iv. 7, x. 4, xii. 10).

[11] Ver. 20. In that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you.] It is certain that Christ was in his apostles, by his Spirit abiding with them (ver. 16), and that they were in him by the same Spirit uniting them to their head Christ (Eph. ii. 22, iii. 16, 17, iv. 16); and therefore Christ must be here said to be in the Father by the Spirit of the Father residing in him, but with this difference—that the Spirit of the Father resided in Christ without measure (iii. 34), and so that all that was the Father's was also Christ's (xvi. 15), his wisdom and his power; whereas he was in the apostles only by the gifts conferred upon them, according to the measure of the gift of Christ. (2.) He was in Christ, as Justin Martyr notes, not for indigence, but partly because the nature of his prophetic office did so require, and partly to be derived from him as the fountain upon all his members; but he was given to them because they wanted his assistance to fit them to be able ministers of the New Testament (2 Cor. iii. 5, 6). Theophylact observes, that we must not say, that this is so in the same manner; for Christ is in the Father, ὡς ὁμοούσιος, "as being of one substance with him," but in the apostles only, ὡς βοηθὸς καὶ συνεργός, "as a helper and co-worker" with them: but perhaps the apostles understood Christ thus; I, as a prophet, work miracles by the Spirit of my Father dwelling in me (Matt. xii. 28), and you shall work yours (mentioned ver. 12) by my Spirit abiding in you (ver. 16).

[12] Ver. 21. And will manifest myself to him.] As in the paraphrase, so also by those miraculous works which shall demonstrate my presence with him. This presence he promiseth to his disciples, Matt. xxviii. 20, Mark xvi. 17, 18, and made good by his powerful Spirit with his church, 1 Cor. v. 4, 2 Cor. xiii. 3—5.

[13] Ver. 22. How is it that thou wilt manifest thyself to us, and not to the world?] This question seems to be put to Christ according to that known opinion of the Jews, that the kingdom of Christ was to be an earthly dominion over the whole world, appearing with great outward splendour, or with observation (Luke xvii. 20), so that the Jews under their Messiah should lord it over the whole earth, and so he should manifest himself to the whole world. So Josephus* speaks of an ambiguous oracle among them, declaring that about that time, ἀπὸ τῆς χώρας τὶς ἐκείνων ἄρξει τῆς οἰκουμένης, "one of their country should reign over the whole earth," and that many of their own wise men did so interpret it. So Origen† tells us they expected, μέγαν καὶ δυνάστην, καὶ πάσης τῆς γῆς, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐθνῶν κύριον εἶναι, that their Messiah should be "a great potentate, and the lord of the whole earth, and of all nations." And Trypho,‡ in his dialogue with Justin Martyr, saith the same.

[14] Ver. 23. And we will come to him, and take up our abode with him.] By that Spirit whose temple is the body of the saints (1 Cor. iii. 16, vi. 13), and by whose indwelling they are made a habitation of God (Eph. ii. 22): here therefore is no express mention made of the Holy Spirit, because by him it is that the Father and the Son dwell in us; and so it is in the beginning of the epistles, praying for grace and peace from the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, because this grace and peace was to be conferred on men by the Spirit.

[15] Ver. 26. But the Comforter, whom the Father will send in my name.] Whom I will send you from the Father (John xv. 26, xvi. 7): he proceeding from the Father and the Son, him the Father shed forth according to his promise, Acts ii. 17, 18, the Son, ver. 33. Hence is he styled "the Spirit of the Father," Matt. x. 20, and "the Spirit of the Son," Gal. iv. 6, "the Spirit of Christ," 1 Pet. i. 11, Rom. viii. 9, Phil. i. 19.

[16] Ver. 27. Peace I leave with you, not as the world.] In empty wishes of what they neither do nor can give; nor that external peace which is both temporary and uncertain; but inward peace of conscience arising from the pardon of your sins (Rom. v. 1), from the sense of the favour of God, and of my presence with you by the Spirit, that peace which no man can take from you (xvi. 22), that peace which passeth understanding, which will keep you hearts in the faith (Phil. iv. 7), and free you from all solicitude and fear of the world.

---

* De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 31, p. 961, G.

† Contr. Cels. lib. iv. p. 78. ‡ P. 249, B.

let it be afraid (what may befall you when I am gone).

28 Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you (but for a little while). If ye loved me (and my advancement as affectionately and wisely as ye ought to do), ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for [17] my Father is greater than I.

29 And [18] now I have told you before it come to pass, (that I am going to the Father to send the Comforter to you,) that, when it is come to pass, ye might (have greater reason to) believe (in me.)

30 Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for [19] the prince of this world (Satan) cometh (by his agents, the rulers of the Jews, to take away my life), and hath nothing in me (no power over me to inflict death upon me on the account of sin, as he hath over others, Heb. ii. 14).

31 But (I give up myself to the death in compliance with my Father's will, John x. 18) that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise (therefore), let us go hence.

[17] Ver 28. For my Father is greater than I.] "This," saith Woltzogenius, "is a demonstration that Christ is not the true God, than whom none is or can be greater." But the primitive fathers did not allow that there was any strength in this argument; for they granted that there was one God the Father who was "over all," and yet that "Christ with the Father was the God of the living, as having in all things the excellency or sovereignty of the Father," saith Irenæus.* They therefore owned that the Father was greater than the Son, as to his original, the Son being begotten by him, and yet declared that he was God, and equal to God, as to his essence, as Tertullian† and Novatian‡ teach. So then we may grant, as to the divine nature, that as to his dependence on the Father it is less, i. e. as it is received dependently from the Father, "for greater is he that gives than he that receives;" and yet, as to essence, they are both one God, and so equal, ὡς αἴτιος καὶ ἀρχὴ οὐ κατὰ φύσιν, Athan. Naz. Basil.

Add to this, that the argument produced to prove that Christ speaks not of his human nature, viz. because none could doubt but God is greater than man, proves as effectually, that Christ could not be only man, because then none could doubt but that God is greater than he; nor is any such comparison, as to greatness, to be found in scripture betwixt God and mere man.

[18] Ver. 29. And now I have told you before it come to pass.] viz. Of my ascent into heaven, and of the mission of the Holy Ghost, that when you have received this Spirit, you more firmly may believe, I am the Son of God, invested with all power in heaven and earth.

[19] Ver. 30. The prince of this world cometh.] By his ministers, Judas and the rulers of the Jews, and findeth nothing in me; he himself having no power to inflict death on me, in whom is no sin, and they finding nothing in me worthy of death (Acts xiii. 28). Though therefore I am to suffer death, I do not suffer for any fault that can deserve it, or on account of any power he or his ministers have over me to inflict it, but I give up myself to the death in compliance with my Father's will, that the world may know, and knowing imitate, my obedience to him in the severest precepts.

* Solus verax Magister et Dominus, ut discamus per ipsum super omnia esse Patrem, etenim Pater (inquit) major me est. Iren. lib. ii. cap. 48, 49, lib. iv. cap. 11, 12.

† Pater est alius a Filio dum Filio major, dum alius qui generat, alius qui generatur. Tertul. adv. Prax. cap. 9. Alius tamen personæ, non substantiæ, nomine;—ubique teneo unam substantiam in tribus cohærentibus. Cap. 12. Pater Deus, et Filius Deus, et Spiritus Sanctus Deus. Cap. 13.

‡ Ambo unus atque idem, cap. 18. Patre minor est, dum in illo esse se scit habens originem, Deus utique procedens ex Deo secundam personam efficiens, sed non eripiens illud Patre quod unus est Deus. Novat. cap. 21.

CHAPTER XV.

1 [1] I AM the true vine (which gives juice and nourishment to every branch belonging to me), and my Father is (as) the husbandman (who prunes and cleanses the branches of this vine, to render them more fruitful; and therefore)

2 [2] Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away (i. e. every professor of faith in me that is unfruitful): [3] and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it (from all those suckers that hinder the growth of the fruit, or make it less), that it may bring forth more fruit.

3 Now (thus it is with you, for) ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

4 [4] Abide in me, and I (will abide) in you. As the

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1. I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.] That vine which gives vital juice to render all my branches fruitful, and whose fruits refresh and fill their hearts with joy, as doth the fruit of the vine the body (Judg. ix. 13, Psal. civ. 15). Of the epithet "true," see vi. 55. "My Father is the husbandman," who takes care of these branches, cutting off the suckers and the withered branches, pruning the vine, and purging the fruitful branches, that they may bring forth more fruit. Grotius thinks the occasion of this parable was taken from the Lord's supper he had then celebrated, or was instantly to celebrate; for as ch. vi. discoursing of this passion, he calls himself "the true bread," so here he calls himself "the true vine," nourishing to life eternal, with relation to that element, which was "the fruit of the vine" (Luke xxii. 18): and thus it seemed necessary to speak of the fruit of his death; because his disciples were offended at it, and their faith wavered on that account. Others think, that having spoken of Judas, as a branch not purged but withered, and fit only for the fire (xiii. 10, 11), he admonishes them to be careful that they become not such branches; and as he had said there, ver. 10, so he repeats that saying here, ver. 3, "Ye are clean," &c.

[2] Ver. 2. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit.] These unfruitful branches are said to be in Christ, or in his church, as being by profession Christians, and by baptism admitted into the church, and owning her faith; but they are still dead branches, because unfruitful in good works; for "faith without works is dead" (James ii. 26).

[3] And every branch that bringeth forth fruit he purgeth.] In its season, or the fit time of pruning. The apostles then laboured under many infirmities and prejudices of their minds; they were weak in the faith, and understood but little of Christ's salutary passion, and the oblation of himself as a piacular victim for their sins (Luke xviii. 34), as judging this not well consistent with that earthly kingdom which was fixed in their hearts; they knew nothing of the calling of the gentiles, or of God's intended kindness to them, and therefore would not preach to them without a special admonition from heaven so to do (Acts xi. 19); they were contending for primacy, and that out of prospect of carnal advantages (2 Cor. v. 16): from these and such like infirmities the good husbandman purged them, when he shed the Holy Ghost upon them, and sent them to preach the gospel to all nations. When therefore he saith, You are now καθαροὶ, "clean" (ver. 3), we must not understand this absolutely, but comparatively, in respect of those who did not believe or obey his word; and in good part, they being to be farther purged by the operation of the Holy Spirit.

[4] Ver. 4. Remain in me (by faith, love, ver. 9, and obe-branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more (Gr. so neither) can ye, except ye abide in me (by faith).

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches (which receive nourishment from the vine, and become fruitful by it): He that abideth in me (by faith), and I in him (by the Spirit), the same bringeth forth much fruit: for [5] without me (abiding thus in you) ye can do nothing.

6 If a man abide not in me, he is [6] cast forth as a branch, and (that) is withered; and men gather them (or, and is gathered), and cast them into the fire, and they are burned (Gr. καὶ καίεται, and is burned).

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you (so that ye yield obedience to them), [7] ye shall ask what ye will (in my name, and for the glory of God), and it shall be done unto you.

8 Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; (καὶ, and) [8] so shall ye (appear to) be my disciples.

9 As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.

10 If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even [9] as I (his prophet) have kept my Father's commandments (doing all he sent me to do), and (so) abide in his love.

11 These things have I spoken unto you (of my abode in you by the Spirit, and your abiding in my words), that (through the comforts of the Spirit) [10] my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

12 This is my commandment, That ye love one another, [11] as I have loved you (to the end, John xiii. 1, and with a most fervent love).

13 Greater love hath no man [12] than this, that a man [13] lay down his life for his friends. (And this love will I show to you acting as my friends, and expect you should imitate it.

14 Now) Ye are my [14] friends, (and shall receive the dience, ver. 10), κἀγὼ ἐν ὑμῖν, and I will remain in you.] By my Spirit. Here is an ellipsis of the word μενῶ, as Matt. xx. 13, "To sit on my right hand—is not mine to give; but (it shall be given) to them for whom it is prepared of my Father;" 2 Thess. ii. 7, "He that letteth (will let) till he be taken away" (see 1 Cor. iv. 15, Gal. ii. 7).

---

[5] Ver. 5. He that abideth in me, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruit: for, χωρὶς ἐμοῦ, without me ye can do nothing.] That is, χωρὶς ἐμοῦ ὄντες, "being separated from me;" ver. 4, "not abiding in me," ver. 6, "being cast out from me." As this respects all Christians, the sense runs thus, "If ye abide in me by that faith which purifies the heart" (Acts xv. 9), "and worketh by love," (Gal. v. 6), and I in you by that Spirit (1 John iii. 24, iv. 13), without whom none can be a member of Christ (Rom. viii. 9), you shall abound in the fruits of the Spirit, but without my Spirit abounding in you, and uniting you to me your head, you can do nothing acceptable to me, or worthy of my gospel: as it respects the apostles it may farther note, that without the gifts and powerful assistance of the Holy Spirit, they could do nothing to convert the world to the faith, as being not sufficient of themselves for that work, but having their sufficiency from that God who giveth them the Holy Spirit (2 Cor. iii. 5, 6). Hence they are bid to stay at Jerusalem till this Spirit fell upon them (Acts i. 8).

[6] Ver. 6. He is cast out, ὡς τὸ κλῆμα, καὶ ἐξηράνθη.] Ὡς τὸ κλῆμα, supply μὴ φερόμενον καρπόν, "As a branch bringing forth no fruit;" or καὶ here signifies because, or that, and so the sense runs thus, As a branch is cast out that is withered, or because it is withered; for branches are first withered, and then cast out: so Josh. i. 5, καὶ ὥσπερ, "For as I have been with Moses, so will I be with thee:" xxii. 25, καὶ ἀπαλλωρτιώσουσι, "For they will turn away the children:" 1 Sam. ii. 15, "Give us roast, καὶ οὐ μὴ λάβω, for I will not receive sodden flesh of thee:" Micah vii. 8, "Rejoice not at my fall, καὶ ἀναστήσομαι for I shall rise again:" see Luke i. 24, John vi. 54. It also signifies that, or which: so Isa. v. 4, "What shall I do to my vine, καὶ οὐκ ἐποίησα, which I have not done?" so Matt. ix. 11, καὶ ἰδόντες, "Which the pharisees seeing:" Acts i. 19, καὶ γνωστὸν, "Which thing was known" (see Noldius de Partic. Heb. p. 297, 298).

[7] Ver. 7. Ask what ye will, and it shall be given you.] Whatever ye ask according to the will of God (1 John v. 14), for the promotion of his glory (xiv. 13), and the furtherance of your ministry (Matt. xxi. 21, 22), asking in faith (Mark xi. 24), and in my name (John xvi. 23), ye shall receive (see the note on Matt. xxi. 21).

[8] Ver. 8. And ye shall be my disciples.] By your likeness to me your Master, who am intent on this, that I may glorify my Father upon earth (xvii. 4), and give up myself to the death, that I may be more fruitful in drawing all men to the knowledge of him (xii. 24), it will appear that you, thus bringing forth much fruit to the glory of God, are my genuine disciples: ἐν τούτῳ is here to be repeated from the beginning of the verse.

[9] Ver. 10. As I keep my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.] Here it is inquired, how Christ, being truly God, could say he keeps his Father's commandments? I answer, as on earth he sustained the person of a prophet sent from him, it being necessary to that office that he should be sent by him, and do his commandments, according to those words of God, Deut. xviii. 18, "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words into his mouth; and he shall speak to them all that I shall command him" (see ver. 19, 20). Hence Christ so often saith, "I speak not of myself, but as my Father gave me commandment, so I speak" (xii. 49, 50); declaring by these words he was no impostor, but that very Prophet of whom Moses spake (see the note on vii. 16 and viii. 28). Hence Chrysostom, Euthymius, and Theophylact note, that Christ spake this according to his human nature. But still Woltzogenius inquires, why, according to his human nature, he is said to obey the commandment of the Father, rather than of his own divine nature? I answer, because the Father is the fountain of the Deity, and because it belonged to Christ executing his prophetic office, to refer all to the glory of his Father, whom the Jews only owned.

[10] Ver. 11. That my joy might be in you.] i. e. I speak of your remaining in me by the Spirit, that your joy, arising from his consolations, may be full; and this joy I call mine, because this Spirit dwelleth in me, and is derived from me. Pious and true is the note of Woltzogenius here, "that the observation of God's commandments gives here the fullest and most perfect joy." For what richer treasure is there in this world, than that of a good conscience? and what greater joy than that which flows from the good Spirit "testifying to our spirits that we are the sons of God, and shall be made heirs of eternal life?" (Rom. viii. 17, Gal. iv. 6.)

[11] Ver. 12. As I have loved you.] Not only as in the paraphrase, but so as to lay down my life for you (ver. 13).

[12] Ver. 13. Μείζονα ταύτης ἀγάπην οὐδεὶς ἔχει, ἵνα. Greater love than this hath no man, than that one should lay down his life for his friend.] Here it is observable, that ἵνα after μείζονα signifies ἢ ἵνα, quàm ut; so in the Third Epistle of St. John, ver. 4, μειζοτέραν τούτων οὐκ ἔχω χαρὰν, ἵνα, "I have no greater joy, than that I may hear my children walking in the truth."

[13] To lay down his life for his friends.] It is certain Christ did this for his enemies (Rom. v. 6—8). Christ notwithstanding speaks of his friends, as speaking only to his apostles, whom he here owneth as his friends. Note also, that Christ here saith he doth ψυχὴν τιθέναι, "lay down his life" for his friends, rather to express the greatness of his love than the merit of his passion; and when he doth so, he uses constantly this phrase, viz. John x. 15. 17, 1 John iii. 16; but when the merit of his passion is expressed, the phrase used is, ἀποθανεῖν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, or περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, "to die for us," or "for our sins," Rom. v. 6. 8, 2 Cor. v. 15, Heb. ii. 9, 1 Pet. iii. 18, as the circumstances of those places show.

[14] Ver. 14. You are my friends if you do whatsoever I command you.] For both Cicero and Sallust* make this tokens of my love as such), if ye do whatsoever I command you.

---

* Idem velle et idem nolle ea demùm vera est amicitia. Sallust. Est enim lex illa justæ veræque amicitiæ, ut idem amici semper velint. Cic. Orat. pro Cn. Plan.

15 (And therefore) Henceforth I call you not [15] servants (nor treat you as such); for the servant (usually) knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called (and treated) you (as) friends; [16] for all things that I have heard (i. e. received) of my Father (to impart to you) I have made known unto you.

16 Ye have not chosen me, but [17] I have chosen you (first), and ordained (i. e. appointed) you, that ye should go (abroad into the world) and bring forth (much) fruit (by converting many to the faith), and that your fruit should remain (in a succession of Christians to the world's end): that (being thus employed in my service) whatsoever (in pursuance of that work) ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.

17 These thinks I (especially) command you, that ye (moved by my example, and by these tokens of my love, may be induced to) love one another.

18 If the [18] world hate you, (let this give you no discouragement in the performance of your office, since it will be only with you as it hath been with me doing the same work, for) ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

19 If ye were of the world (conforming yourselves to it in your life and doctrine), the world would love his own (men like to them): but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world (to lead a life and preach a doctrine opposite to the vices of it), therefore the world hateth you.

20 (But) Remember the word that I said unto you, (viz.) The servant is not greater than his lord (and so cannot expect to be treated better). If (then) they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you (who are doing the same work); if they have (had) [19] kept my saying, they will (would) keep yours also (who speak the same things).

21 But all these things (this hatred, ver. 19, and persecution, ver. 20) will they do unto you for my [20] name's sake, because they (after all the miracles I have wrought in his name) know not him that sent me.

22 If I had not come and spoken unto them (the words of my Father), they had not had sin (in not knowing him that sent me): but now (they have heard and rejected his word) they have no cloke (or excuse) for their sin, (it being the fruit not of their want of knowledge of my Father's will, but of their hatred to him and his word; for)

23 He that hateth me (speaking the words of God, which I have learned from my Father, John xii. 49, 50) hateth my Father also.

24 If I had not done among them [21] the works which none other man did (Gr. hath done), they had not had (the) sin (of infidelity): but now (this sin must be charged upon their hatred, for) have they both seen (the works which the Father in me hath done) and (yet have been so far from being convinced and reformed by them, that they have) hated both me (who do them) and my Father (by whose power and commission I do them).

25 But this cometh to pass, (or, this they are per- conformity of will to him we love the test of sincere friendship.

---

[15] Ver. 15. Not servants: for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth.] i. e. I deal not with you as servants, to whom I make known my counsels, οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐσπόταν φύσιν ἢ πρᾶξιν δούλους ἐεῖ εἰδέναι, "for servants are not," saith Xenophon, "to know the customs or actions of their lord," but only bosom friends (Epist. ad Æschinem).

[16] For all things which I have heard from my Father I have made known unto you.] Not absolutely, for they were not yet able to hear of the cessation of the law, of circumcision, and the sabbath, the casting off of the Jews, and the calling of the gentiles to be his church, without offence (xvi. 12); but all things fit to be told them then, concerning his salutary passion, his glorious resurrection and ascension, the mission of the Holy Ghost, the future judgment, and the promise of eternal life.

[17] Ver. 16. I have chosen you.] From the rest of the Jews to bear witness of me (ver. 27), and to be my apostles. That Christ speaks here of this election, appears (1.) from the preceding words, "Ye have not chosen me," as disciples among the Jews chose to themselves a master, for ye came not to me till I called you. (2.) From the persons called: for, saith Christ, "Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" (vi. 70.) And (3.) from the end of their vocation here, viz. that they might go into the world and bring forth fruit, or that they should go forth and preach that gospel to the world, which should abide for ever (2 John 2), and erect that church against which the gates of hell should not prevail. It follows, "That you should go and bring forth fruit," &c., ἵνα ὅ, τι ἂν αἰτήσητε, "that whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he may give it you." I have observed, note on ver. 25, that there is often somewhat deficient after ἵνα: so 1 Cor. i. 31, ἵνα (sub. γένηται), "That (it may be) as it is written;" and so it seems to be here, the full sense being either that, being thus employed, or being thus fruitful, ye may ask what ye will.

[18] Ver. 18. If the world hate you—hated me first.] Here Christ begins to fortify his apostles against the hatred of the world, and to encourage them to continue firm and constant in the performance of their office against all its opposition: (1.) from his own example, who patiently had endured it before their eyes, and was now to suffer death by reason of it; so that they, who preached the same doctrine which rendered him so hateful to the world, might reasonably expect the like treatment from it; nor had they reason to expect it should be otherwise, or grudge it was not better with the disciple than with his master: for he being not of the world, and they being chosen by him out of the world, the ground of the world's hatred against them must be the same.

[19] Ver. 20. Εἰ τὸν λόγον μου ἐτήρησαν, If they had kept my word.] Some conceive that τηρεῖν here imports to observe with an insidious intent to carp at it, and accuse the author of it, as it is said of the church to Satan, he τηρήσει, "shall break, or observe, thy head" to wound it, καὶ σὺ τηρήσεις, "and thou shalt bruise, or observe, his heel" to ensnare it; Gen. ii. 15; but the right reading there seems to be τειρήσεις, conteres, nor are there any instances in the New Testament where the simple verb τηρέω bears that sense: for Matt. xxvii. 36. 54, the word signifies only to observe, not to watch an opportunity against, that being παρατηρεῖν (Mark iii. 2, Luke vi. 7, xiv. 1, xx. 20), and the phrase τηρεῖν λόγους μου, which is proper to St. John, is always taken in a good sense for an obedient observance of the words of Christ, viz. John viii. 51, 52. 55, xiv. 23, 24, xvii. 6, 1 John ii. 5, Rev. iii. 8. 10, xxii. 7. 9.

[20] Ver. 21. But these things will they do for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.] It is farther ground of comfort to you that you should be thus hated, not from your own fault, but for my sake, and so shall be entitled by that hatred to a great reward in heaven (Matt. v. 12), and that out of ignorance of, or hatred to, him that sent me, and being hated for our sakes, you need not question our protection and assistance.

[21] Ver. 24. Works which no man ever did: Ver. 22. If I had not spoken to them,—no sin.] i. e. Nor yet can they be said to hate me out of ignorance of my commission; for I have spoken to them a doctrine plainly divine, and worthy of God, against which they have no exceptions which arise not from their own lusts and prejudices, and have confirmed it not only with the testimonies of Moses and the prophets (v. 46), but also with such works as neither Moses nor the prophets ever did; had not this been done by me, they could not reasonably have been charged with the great sin of infidelity: but now, shutting their eyes against the light thus shining on them, and hardening their hearts against that strong conviction of my mission which my mighty works afford, it is evident that they reject me, not out of ignorance mitted to do), [22] that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law (Ps. xxxv. 19), [23] They hated me without a cause.

26 But when the Comforter is come, [24] whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall (by his miraculous gifts) testify of me (who send him):

27 And [25] ye also shall bear witness (of me), because ye have been with me from the beginning (and saw my works).

and weakness, but out of wilful hatred to me and him that sent me, and so their infidelity is inexcusable.

[22] Ver. 25. 'Αλλ' ἵνα, But that.] i. e. This hath happened, or is permitted. Examples of such an ellipsis we find frequently in this gospel: so ix. 3, ἀλλ' ἵνα, "But this hath happened" that the works of God might be made manifest; xiii. 18, ἀλλ' ἵνα, "But this hath happened to Judas," that the scripture might be fulfilled; xiv. 31, ἀλλ' ἵνα γνῷ, "But this I do that the world may know" (see note on xii. 40, and above at ver. 16).

[23] For they have hated me without a cause.] This, which David, who was a type of Christ, spake of himself, may reasonably be thought, in the mystical sense, to relate to "the Son of David," especially if we consider that the sixty-ninth Psalm, where these words are (ver. 5), is truly referred to Christ (see the Synopsis in the argument of that psalm).

[24] Ver. 26. Whom I will send to you from the Father.] It is certain, saith Betuleius, from the words, "I will send," that this cannot be understood of the eternal spiration of the essence, but of the temporary mission of the Holy Ghost, which Christ would ask of the Father (xiv. 16), and send from him in his name (ver. 26), after his departure (xvi. 7), after his glorification (vii. 39), and who was to be sent according to the promise of the Father (Luke xxiv. 49).

[25] Ver. 27. And you shall testify of me, &c.] You have been still my companions from the beginning of my prophetic office, and so are fit witnesses of my works: for good men use, and ought, to be believed, when they testify of what their eyes have seen, and their ears have heard, as the apostles did (Acts iv. 20, 1 John i. 1, 2).

CHAPTER XVI.

1 [1] These things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended (i. e. deterred from my service, by the sufferings you will be exposed to from the world. For)

2 [2] They shall put you out of the synagogues (as persons excommunicated): [3] yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service (by so doing).

3 And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the (will of the) Father, nor me (who am sent by him to reveal it to the world).

4 But these things have I told you (beforehand), that [4] when the time shall come (when you are thus to suffer them), ye may remember that I told you of them (and so may be confirmed in the truth, by seeing my perfect knowledge of things future, and may remember you suffer only what I have forewarned you of). And these things I said not unto you at the beginning

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. These things have I spoken to you, that ye be not offended.] i. e. These things, concerning the hatred of the world, and the reasons of it; and of those considerations which may induce you to bear it patiently, lest they coming unexpectedly upon you unarmed against them, you should fall from the faith, or desist from your office in the propagation of it: that this is the true notion of being scandalized, see the note on Matt. xviii. 6.

[2] Ver. 2. They shall put you out of the synagogues.] In their synagogues they had not only assemblies for reading the scriptures every sabbath-day (Acts xiii. 27, xv. 21), for public prayers and exhortations to the people then and upon other days (Acts xiii. 15), but offences committed against the law were there corrected, and sometimes punished with scourging (Matt. x. 17, xxiii. 34). And they who would not be reformed by stripes, nor by the lesser excommunication, which removed them, saith Buxtorf,* four feet from others, were pronounced ἀποσυνάγωγοι (John ix. 22. 24, xii. 42), and by a public recitation of their names were cast out of the communication of the church; which, Luke vi. 22, is "separating them, and casting out their names as evil;" this, Christ here saith, would be their portion.

[3] 'Αλλ' ἔρχεται ὥρα ἵνα, Yea, the hour cometh, when whosoever killeth you shall think he doeth λατρείαν προσφέρειν τῷ Θεῷ, God service.] The particle ἀλλὰ here signifies yea, and denotes the increase of a thing; as Luke xii. 7, ἀλλὰ καὶ, "Yea, even your hairs are all numbered;" see 1 Cor. iii. 2, xii. 22, ἵνα is here put for ὅτε, when, as ver. 32, "The time cometh ἵνα σκορπισθῆτε, when you shall be scattered;" see the note on the third epistle of John, ver. 4. The phrase λατρείαν προσφέρειν, "to offer sacrifice," is taken from Exod. xxxii. 29, "Consecrate your hands to the Lord, every one upon his brother;" that is, saith the paraphrase of Onkelos, Obtulistis oblationem, "Ye have offered an oblation." Hence the zealots among the Jews, who kill those they esteemed transgressors with their own hands, not expecting the judgment of the Sanhedrin, were by them deemed religious men, filled with zeal in the cause of God, they having their name, saith Josephus,* ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ ζηλουμένων, "from those that were zealous for what was good:" and therefore, after infinite slaughters of their brethren, they pronounced themselves ἀναμαρτητοί,† "men without offences:" and suitably to this prediction, Justin Martyr‡ informs us, that the Jews did καταράσθαι ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν τοὺς πιστεύοντας ἐπὶ τὸν Χριστόν, "disgrace and execrate the Christians in their synagogues," and were αὐτοχείρες αὐτῶν, "killing them with their own hands wherever they could." This they will do, saith Christ, because they know not the Father; i. e. how alien those cruelties are from his benign nature: so Grotius (see the note on xv. 21).

[4] Ver. 4. That when the time cometh you may remember, &c.] And so be assured of my divine prescience and veracity; and therefore may not doubt of that assistance and consolation I have promised you under these troubles. But here it may be asked, why Christ here saith, "These things I said not to you at the beginning, because I was with you," when in the first mission of the apostles to preach in the cities of Judea, he useth almost the same words? Matt. x. 17, 18, and the like words, Matt. xxiv. 9, Luke vi. 22. Woltzogenius answers, that Christ in these places had in the general informed them of the great persecutions they were to suffer, but had not so clearly told them they were to suffer them on the account of religion; but this seems a mistake, for he had told them that they were to suffer these things in the Jewish synagogues "for his name's sake," and "for righteousness' sake," Matt. v. 12, 13, x. 18, xxiv. 9. I answer therefore, that what was spoken, Matt. xxiv. 9, was said about this time; and so Christ might well say, he "said it not to them from the beginning;" and that what Christ saith, Matt. x. and Luke vi., does plainly respect the times which were to come upon them after our Lord's departure from them; for the words of Christ in St. Matthew, from ver. 16 to 36, respect those times when they were to give testimony to him

* In voce niddui.

* De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 30, p. 986.

† Ibid. cap. 34, p. 990, B.

‡ Dial. cum Tryph. p. 234, C. 323, C. 363, C. Apol. ii. p. 72.

(of my preaching), because I was (then) with you (to protect you from, and comfort you in, all dangers).

5 But now I go my way to him that sent me; and [5] none of you (now) asketh me (as you did before), Whither goest thou?

6 But because I have said these things unto you (concerning my departure), sorrow hath filled your heart.

7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; (viz. That) [6] it is expedient for you that I go away (from you): for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; (he coming to supply my absence, and as the consequent of my ascension into heaven, John vii. 39;) but if (when) I depart, I will send him unto you.

8 And when he is come, [7] he will reprove the world (and will convince men) of (their) sin (in rejecting me), and of (my) righteousness, and of (a future) judgment:

9 Of sin, because they believe not on me (of whose mission and resurrection he will convince them by his wondrous gifts conferred on them that believe in me);

10 [8] Of (my) righteousness, because I go to my Father (to whom I could not ascend were I not a righteous person), and ye see me no more (on earth);

11 [9] Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged (i. e. the devil is condemned, and cast out of his dominions by my servants; and consequently the time will come when all the subjects of his dominions shall be judged also).

12 I have yet [10] many things to say unto you (concerning the abrogation of the sabbath, and your ritual law; of justification by faith without the works of the law; &c.), but ye cannot bear (i. e. receive) them now (without offence).

13 Howbeit when he, (who is) [11] the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you (executing your office) into all truth: for he will not speak of himself (deceitful and uncertain things invented by himself, as do the evil spirits in the heathen oracles); but whatsoever he (who searcheth the deep counsels of God) shall hear (i. e. shall know to be the will of the Father), that shall he speak: and he [12] will shew you things to come.

14 He [13] shall (also) glorify me (by what he teacheth): for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you (i. e. he shall be sent to impart to you the things which relate to my kingdom, my laws, and service; and what he teacheth you, is to be delivered in my name).

15 All things that the Father hath are mine: (the

---

before the gentiles (ver. 18), and were to be filled by the Holy Spirit (ver. 20), and so do the words of St. Luke also, as appears from the particle ὅταν, "When these things shall happen;" what therefore Christ there foretells as future, he speaks of here as instant, and now ready to befall them.

[5] Ver. 5. And none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?] This Peter asked, xiii. 36, but received no direct answer; they did not therefore so ask as to know (xiv. 5), much less to consider duly whither he was going, viz. to his and their Father's house (John xx. 17), or why he went, viz. "to prepare a mansion for you" (xiv. 2), or none of them asked now his departure was at hand, and so gave greater reason for this inquiry, whither he was going?

[6] Ver. 7. It is expedient for you that I go away.] Since by the advent of the Holy Spirit you will find greater comfort than from my presence; now this Spirit was not to come till Christ was glorified, and had ascended into heaven (John vii. 39). The word παρακλήτης, here mentioned, signifies an advocate and a comforter; he did the part of an advocate in respect of Christ and his gospel, by convincing the world of sin in not believing on him, and of the righteousness of Christ (ver. 9—11), and by confirming the apostles' testimony of him by signs and miracles, and various gifts imparted to them (Heb. ii. 4, 1 John v. 6—8), and by pleading their cause before kings and rulers (Matt. x. 18, 19), and against all their adversaries (Luke xxi. 15, Acts vi. 10). In respect of the apostles and the faithful, he also did the part of a comforter, as being sent for their consolation and support in all their troubles, filling their hearts with joy and gladness, and giving them an inward testimony of God's love to them, and an assurance of their future happiness (Rom. viii. 15, 16).

[7] Ver. 8, 9. He will convince the world of sin, because they believe not in me.] The Holy Spirit had departed from the Jews about four hundred years since; and his return, according to Christ's promise, must be sufficient to evince, that Jesus who had thus shed the Spirit upon his disciples, was the true Messiah, and so to convince them of sin, who believe not in him, as we see it did, Acts. ii. 37. 41.

[8] Ver. 10. Of righteousness, because I go to the Father.] For that was sufficient evidence, that the Father owned him as a righteous person, and his true prophet, though by the Jews he was condemned as an impostor. Now this the Holy Spirit proved, because his mission from heaven, and the miraculous powers done by him in the name of Jesus, evinced, that he who sent this Spirit from heaven was translated thither. Hence Peter, from this effusion of the Holy Spirit, argues that "this Jesus was by God made Lord and Christ" (Acts ii. 36), and that the Jews had crucified that Holy and Just One whom the Father had glorified (Acts iii. 13, 14).

[9] Ver. 11. Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.] i. e. Because Satan, the prince of the world, is now to be condemned, and cast out of his dominions: whence it may appear, that all who belong to his kingdom, and choose rather to serve him than Christ, their lawful prince and judge, shall be condemned with him (see the preface to the Epistles, §. 10).

[10] Ver. 12. I have yet many things to say to you, but ye cannot bear them yet.] viz. Concerning the abolishment of the sabbath and the ceremonial law, justification by faith without the works of the law, the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the gentiles, which, through the prejudices you now lie under, ye cannot yet bear (see Orig. contra Celsum, lib. ii. p. 57, 58).

[11] Ver. 13. The Spirit of truth shall lead you into all truth.] Necessary to your apostolical office, and to direct the Christian church to the end of the world in all saving truth: for, as Irenæus notes,* "The doctrine which they taught, they after delivered in the scriptures, to be the pillar and foundation of our faith." And as St. Austin adds,† "Christ having committed to them the writing of those things, which he would have us read, they chose out those things to write which they judged sufficient to be written for the salvation of the faithful." It is therefore certain, that the apostles, in compiling the canon of scripture, were so assisted by the Holy Spirit, as to write all truths necessary for the salvation of the believers, and, consequently, that all things necessary to be believed or done by Christians, are fully and perspicuously contained in the holy scriptures.

[12] And he shall teach you things to come.] From this, and from the parallel place, xiv. 26, "He shall bring all things to your remembrance which I have said to you," two things are evident: (1.) that this promise of the Holy Spirit can belong only to the apostles, seeing to their remembrance only could Christ bring those things which he had said to them; (2.) that this promise can agree to no councils assembled after their decease, seeing they never challenged to themselves the gift of prophecy, nor had future contingencies revealed to them.

[13] Ver. 14, 15. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and show it to you. All things which the Father hath are mine.] These words contain two arguments for the divinity of Christ. For,

First, The things the Holy Spirit was to receive from Christ, who is emphatically styled "the truth," are "all truth" by the apostles to be delivered to the church, and all

---

* Apostoli evangelium quod tunc præconiaverunt, postea per Dei voluntatem in scripturis nobis tradiderunt, fundamentum et columnam nostræ fidei futurum. Lib. iii. cap. 1, Quicquid Christus de suis factis et dictis nos legere voluit, hoc scribendum illis tanquam suis manibus imperavit.

† Electaque esse quæ scriberentur ea quæ saluti credentium sufficere videbantur. De Consens. Evangel. lib. i. cap. 35, et Tr. 49 in Joh. p. 355.

power to govern, and to give rules and laws to all men, and to judge and recompense them according to those laws, which under the Mosaical dispensation was done by me, and in my name, Phil. ii. 9—11;) therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

16 (It is but) A little while, and ye shall not see me (because I shall be taken from you by death): and again, (after my resurrection, it is but) a little while, and (that) ye shall see me, (and this I say,) because (then) I go to the Father.

17 Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is (the import of) this that he saith unto us, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father?

18 They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell (the meaning of) what he saith.

19 Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him (the meaning of his words), and (therefore) said unto them, Do ye enquire among yourselves of that (which) I said, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me?

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, That (for a season) ye shall weep and lament, but the (men of the) world (the rulers of the Jews) shall rejoice (at my sufferings): and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy (at my resurrection, ascension, and mission of the Holy Ghost, Luke xxiv. 51, 52, Acts ii. 46).

21 (For as) A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but (so) as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish (she lay in), for joy that a man (child) is born into the world (so shall be your case).

22 And ye now therefore (καὶ ὑμεῖς οὖν, for you therefore) have (now) sorrow (because of my death): but I will see your again (after my resurrection), and your heart shall rejoice, and (though I personally be taken from you) your joy (through the Holy Spirit, shall be such as) no man taketh (or can take) from you.

23 And in [14] that day (that you receive this Comforter) ye shall (have need to) ask me nothing (for resolution of your doubts, as now you do). Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever (assistance) ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.

24 [15] Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name (as Mediator betwixt God and man): ask (what is requisite for the discharge of your office), and ye shall receive (it), that your joy (in having all your petitions granted) may be full.

25 These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs (obscurely of the Father): but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly (the will) of the Father.

26 At that day ye shall ask in my name: [16] and I say not unto you (I need not say), that I will pray (or intercede with) the Father for you:

27 For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God.

28 (And as) [17] I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: (so) again, I (shall shortly) leave the world, and go to the Father.

29 His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb.

---

future contingencies respecting the church to the end of the world: for, saith Schlictingius* here, "To this we are to refer the Revelation of St. John, in which are contained prophecies of the state of the church from that time to the end of the world." Now the knowledge of these things must imply a divine prescience. "We speak," saith the apostle, "the wisdom of God, which God hath revealed to us by his Spirit" (1 Cor. ii. 7. 10): Christ therefore, from whom the Spirit received these things, must be God. Lastly, God saith to the idols of the gentiles, "Show the things that are to come, that we may know that ye are gods" (Isa. xli. 23); he therefore who showeth these things to the Spirit must be God.

Secondly, By saying, "All things which the Father hath are mine;" he challenges to himself the incommunicable attributes, and consequently that essence which is inseparable from them.

Ans. To this Woltzogenius answers, That the phrase, "all things," must be restrained to the subject of Christ's discourse, viz. to all things which the Spirit of truth was to reveal to them, and which respected their office and the good of the church; all which things the Father had communicated to him.

But (1.) Christ saith not here, I am conscious to the secrets of my Father; but "All things which the Father hath are mine." (2.) Christ here gives the reason, why he had said, "He shall receive of mine," viz. "because all that the Father hath is mine." Take away any thing from the generality of this expression, and you render our Lord's inference infirm, since that which you take away, the Holy Spirit might not receive from him. (3.) All those things, which he confesses are here to be understood, are sufficient to prove the divinity of Christ, as the citation from him shows.

[14] Ver. 23. And in that day ye shall ask me nothing.] i. e. When I have sent the Holy Spirit, to "lead you into all truth," you shall have no need to inquire satisfaction in any thing, as now ye do, or to ask the sense of any thing suggested to you by the Spirit, as you sometimes ask the meaning of my words. This sense of the word ἐρωτᾶν is gathered from ver. 19, "They were desirous ἐρωτᾶν to inquire of him" the sense of those words, "Yet a little while," and ver. 30, "There is no need that any one ἐρωτᾷ should inquire of thee"—in that day, i. e. say St. Austin and Maldonate, in the day of the judgment; but then the apostles could have nothing farther to ask for the church's benefit. And, secondly, it appears from the preceding verse, that day was the time when they should see him again after his resurrection, and so on. Nor can Origen's* conceit stand, that Christ here excludes himself, requiring them to pray only to God the Father; this being contrary to the practice of St. Paul and the whole Christian church (see note on Rom. x. 13).

[15] Ver. 24. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name.] i. e. By me as a mediator betwixt God and man, and with respect to my merits; do this after my death and intercession for you at the right hand of God, and you shall receive such answers as will fill you with joy.

Ver. 25. These things I have spoken to you ἐν παροιμίαις in parables.] Παροιμία ἐστὶ λόγος ὠφέλιμος μέτ' ἐπικρύψεως μετρίας ἐκδεδόμενος, "A proverb," saith St. Basil, "is a profitable speech uttered with some obscurity," and so it is here, as is apparent from the answer of the apostles, ver. 29, "Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb;" and from the following words in the same verse, "Hereafter I shall no more speak to you in proverbs, but shall show you plainly (the will) of my Father."

[16] Ver. 26, 27. And I say not that I will ask the Father, for he himself loveth you.] i. e. I need not say this for your comfort, that I will intercede with my Father for you, seeing his love to you, who have thus loved me, is so great, as to incline him to grant your petitions on his own accord.

[17] Ver. 28. I came out from the Father.] See note on xiii. 3.

---

* Is revelabit vobis quid vel cum mundo, vel cum Judaico populo, vel cum ecclesiâ in posterum agetur; hùc etiam pertinet tota Apocalypsis Johannis, in quâ continentur prophetiæ de mirabili statû ecclesiæ Christi, ab illo tempore usque ad finem mundi.

* Οὐδενὶ τῶν γεννητῶν προσευκτέον ἐστὶν, οὐδὲ αὐτῷ τῷ Χριστῷ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ τῶν ὅλων καὶ πατρὶ. Περὶ Εὐχῆς, p. 48.

30 Now are we sure that thou knowest all things (in that thou knowest our secret whisperings among ourselves), and (so) needest not that any man should ask thee (that thou mayest know what they desire, thou knowing this unasked): by this [18] we (more firmly) believe thou camest forth from God.

31 Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

32 Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own (home), and shall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me.

33 These things I have spoken unto you, that in me (being with you by my Spirit) ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but [19] be of good cheer; I have overcome the world (and, as I am able, so by my sufferings am I the more inclined to assist and strengthen you against the temptations of it).

[18] Ver. 30. By this we believe that thou camest forth from God.] Why did they not believe him to be God? saith Woltzogenius. Ans. They say this sufficiently, by owning he knew all things, even the thoughts of men's hearts; and thence, as they well might, concluding, "he came forth from God:" for omniscience and the knowledge of the heart being the attributes of God (1 Kings viii. 39, Jer. xvii. 10), they cannot be communicated to any without the communication of the divine nature.

[19] Ver. 33. Be of good comfort, I have overcome the world.] Being prepared to suffer that death, by which I am to be freed from all the injuries of the world, and to be crowned with glory, and you shall also do it by faith in me, which is your victory over the world (1 John v. 4, 5), and by my strength, which shall enable you to do all things (Phil. iv. 13), of which you cannot doubt after so many tokens of my love (Rom. viii. 35—37).

CHAPTER XVII.

1 These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come (that my work on earth by my sufferings now instant should be finished, ver. 4); [1] glorify (now) thy Son (by his advancement to the right hand of majesty and power), that thy Son also may glorify thee (by propagating the knowledge of thee and of thy gospel through the world; see Examen Millii):

2 [2] As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him (so instate him in that kingdom in which he shall exercise that power in bringing many to the faith, and so fitting them for life eternal).

3 And this is (the true way to) life eternal, that they might [3] know thee (to be) the only true God (in opposition to those false gods they now ignorantly wor-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver. 1. Glorify thy Son.] Not only by his advancement to a state of glory, but by such wonders attending his sufferings, and such a glorious resurrection, as may entirely remove the scandal of the cross. In answer to which request, some were forced, even by what they saw at his death, to say, "Surely this man was the Son of God;" and others, who had clamoured for his death, to "smite their breasts;" and God soon after declared, that he had made him "Lord and Christ, a Prince and Saviour" (Acts ii. 36).

[2] Ver. 2. Καθὼς ἔδωκας, As thou hast given him power over all flesh.] In destination and promise only, say most interpreters. But since the Baptist said ἐέδωκεν, "He hath given all things into his hands" (iii. 35), seeing the evangelist saith the same, xiii. 3, seeing Christ himself saith, "The Father ἔδωκε hath given all judgment to the Son" (v. 22), and promiseth to raise the dead, because ἔδωκε, "he had given him" power to judge all men, and Christ himself saith not, Matt. xxviii. 18, "All power is now given me," but ἐδόθη "hath been given me in heaven and in earth;" I see no reason for this restriction or limitation of the word; only it may be granted, that as he only exercised his power upon earth, whilst he was in it, so was he to exercise it from heaven more fully after his resurrection.

[3] Ver. 3. To know thee, τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν, the only true God, and him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ.] i. e. That the gentiles, quitting their dumb idols and false gods, may own thee alone to be the living (1 Thess. i. 9), and "true God," who madest heaven and earth (Acts xiv. 15), and that the Jews may own me to be thy Son sent to them from heaven, and that Messiah, which, according to thy promise made to Abraham and David, thou hast sent to them; for by knowing thee fully, they will know me also whom all men are to worship "as they worship the Father," and whom he that doth not worship, doth not truly honour the Father (v. 23): for "I and the Father are one" (x. 30); "whom no man knoweth who he is, but the Father, and he to whom the Father will reveal him" (Luke x. 22); whom "he that denies hath not the Father" (1 John ii. 23); doth not know him, "and he that seeth, sees the Father also" (xiv. 9, xv. 21, xvi. 3).

Obj. Here the Socinians say, that these words plainly prove that the Father alone is the true God, and that by the words μόνον τὸν ἀληθινὸν, "the only true God," Christ must be excluded from being true God, since otherwise the Father would not be only so. But to this we answer,

Ans. 1. That these words cannot be reasonably supposed to exclude him from a true divinity, who is in scripture styled ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς "the true God:" now that Christ is so styled, see the note on 1 John v. 20. True therefore is the gloss of Grotius, that "he is styled the only true God, in exclusion of those, quos falsa gentium persuasio introduxerat, whom the false persuasion of the gentiles had introduced;" not so as to exclude the other persons, but κατ' ἀντιδιαστολὴν τῆς πολυθεΐας, "in opposition to polytheism;" as Epiphanius,* or εἰς ἀναίρεσιν τῶν μὴ πεφυκότων εἶναι ἀληθινῶν, "for the removal of those which by nature are not true gods," as Athanasius saith.† Hence the Pseudo-Ignatius‡ observes that "the evangelist saying, the Father is the only true God, did not omit what belonged to our Lord, but premised this, saying, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was God." And in this sense the word "only" is frequently applied to God in the Old Testament: so Deut. xxxii. 12, Κύριος μόνος "the Lord only was their guide, and there was no Θεὸς ἀλλότριος, false God with them," and yet the angel in whom his name was (Exod. xxiii. 21), went with them; "the angel of his presence saved them" (Isa. lxviii. 9), and was the captain of their host (Josh. v. 14): so also Isa. xliii. 11, "I am the Lord, and there is no Saviour besides me;" and ver. 12, "I am the Lord your God, and there is no ἀλλότριος, strange God with me" (see Judg. x. 16, 1 Sam. xii. 3, Ps. lxxxi. 9): see also the word solus, so used by Irenæus often; as when he saith of the Maker of the world, that he is solus Deus,§ and solus Dominus, and solus Conditor, and solus Pater, and solus continens omnia, and yet puts into the symbol of faith owned by all Christians that Christ‖ is ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν καὶ Θεὸς (see the note on 1 Cor. viii. 3).

Woltzogenius saith, this place proves Christ is not God in the most perfect sense, in which he is to be understood to be God, qui est auctor et origo omnis Deitatis, et qui Deitatem à seipso habet, non ab alio, "who is the author and original of the whole Deity, and who hath his divinity from himself, and not from another:" and if this be all they ship), and (may know and believe in) Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent (to reveal this life to them).

* Hær. 25, p. 6. † Cont. Ar. lib. iv. p. 257
‡ Ep. ad Antioch. §. 4. § Lib. ii. cap. 1.
‖ Lib. i. cap. 2.

4 I have glorified thee on the earth (by declaring thy will to the Jews): I have finished the work (the prophetical office) which thou gavest me to do (on earth).

5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self (by exalting even my human nature to the right hand of glory, and crowning me) with [4] the glory which (as to my divine nature) I had with thee before the world was.

6 I have manifested thy name (and doctrine) unto [5] the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were (by faith in thee before), and thou gavest them me (by causing them to believe in me); and they have kept thy word.

7 [6] Now they have (fully) known that all things contend for, we, who believe that Christ is "God of God," may grant this, and yet maintain that he is God, not by title only, as angels and magistrates are styled elohim, but by communication of the divine nature, as being the true God, and having the name of God distributively given, and the divine attributes ascribed to him only; i. e. in opposition to them who are only called gods, but are not by nature so.

---

2. We answer, that the exclusive particle only is not in construction to be joined with the true God thus, "To know thee only to be the true God:" for the words run not thus, σὲ μόνον τὸν ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν· but thus, σὲ τὸν μόνον ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν, "Who only art true," or "The God who alone art true," and whereas against this Crellius objects that the word ἀληθινός, being an adjective, cannot be here the predicate; this is confuted by many instances in this gospel; for φῶς τὸ ἀληθινὸν is the light which is truly so, i. 9, and so is "the true bread," vi. 32, and "the true vine," xv. 1, it being manifest that in all these places, true is the attribute or the thing predicated, of light, bread, the vine.

And whereas they urge farther, that the word solus, only, added to it, excludes all other things from any communion with that of which it is predicated, and so imports, that the Father alone is a true God; this assertion may be confuted from many instances both of the Old and New Testament. As when Jacob says of Benjamin "He is left alone" (Gen. xlii. 38), viz. in respect of Joseph, not of his ten brethren; and of Christ, that "he was left alone," viz. in respect of the multitude, when yet his disciples were with him (Luke ix. 18. 36, John viii. 10), and when he saith, "Ye shall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, for the Father is with me" (xvi. 32). But to proceed to instances more apposite, we read of "the blessed and only Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lords, ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανασίαν, who only hath immortality" (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16). Now if this be said of God the Father, as the Socinians must assert, or allow Christ to be truly God, yet must they allow that Christ, who is styled "King of kings, and Lord of lords," by reason of his powerful victories over the enemies of his church (Rev. xvii. 14, xix. 15, 16), is also δυνάστης, "a potentate;" that he who "hath life in himself," and "of whose kingdom there shall be no end" (John v. 26, Luke i. 33), "hath" also "immortality;" and he who is exalted to God's right hand, "dwells" also "in light inaccessible:" they therefore must allow that neither the word "only" before "potentate," nor before "immortality," excludes Christ from a communion in those attributes. Solomon saith of God, i. e. according to the Socinians, of the Father (1 Kings viii. 39), σὺ μονώτατος, "Thou only knowest the hearts of all men;" and yet Christ saith, that "all the church shall know," that he is "the searcher of the hearts and reins," viz. of all men, that being necessary, that, as it follows, he might "give to all men according to their works" (Rev. ii. 23): and St. Jude speaks of some wicked men, who denied τὸν μόνον Δεσπότην, Θεὸν, καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν, "our only Master, God, and Lord" (ver. 4). If they say this is meant of Christ, as probably it is, all these words being put by apposition with one only article prefixed, and the same persons being by St. Peter said "to deny the Lord that bought them" (2 Pet. ii. 1), surely they will not say, these words exclude the Father from being our Master, God, and Lord; or if they do interpret them of God the Father, they cannot deny, against express scripture, that Christ is our Lord and Master (see John xiii. 13, 14, 1 Cor. viii. 6, Eph. iv. 5). All these instances therefore, showing the falsehood of that assertion, do also show the weakness of the Socinians' arguments from these words against the Deity of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost.

[4] Ver. 5. And now, Father, glorify me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.] Having shown, in the note on Phil. ii. 6, that Christ had a glory with God the Father, before he took upon him our nature; that when he did so, he laid aside his glory, "and took upon him the form of a servant," and that after his ascension he resumed this glory, and appeared in it, and says that he will come hereafter, sometimes, "in the glory of the Father," as Matt. xvi. 27, sometimes, "in his own glory," Matt. xxv. 31, and sometimes, in the glory of both, Luke ix. 26; this glory he now desires to be given him, not only as the Word, as it was before, but as the Word made flesh also: and therefore Theophylact gives the sense thus, τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην μου φύσιν ἄγαγε εἰς τὴν δόξαν ἣν εἶχον παρὰ σοὶ ἐγὼ Λόγος, "Bring my human nature into a participation of the glory which I the Λόγος had with thee before the beginning of the world." But this plain and obvious exposition of the words demonstrating his divinity, as I have shown in the note recited, the Socinians will not admit of, and therefore say that he requests that the glory which he had before in the appointment, or designation of the Father only to it hereafter, he might now actually enjoy; and Grotius joins with them in this exposition. But,

First, It seems unreasonable to say absolutely he had any thing before he had a being to have, supposing a subject in which that is contained which he is said to have. The first place cited by Grotius as parallel, viz. that Christ was foreknown "before the foundation of the world" (1 Pet. i. 2), is plainly impertinent, there being no hint in the words of Christ here of any such foreknowledge, but a plain assertion that he "had" this glory "before the foundation of the world." So are the words cited from Eph. i. 4, "He hath elected us in Christ before the foundation of the world, to be holy:" for the apostle saith not, as Christ doth of his glory, that we had any holiness before the foundation of the world, but only that we were chosen to it. His third instance, from Rev. xiii. 8, where we read thus, "Whose names were not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," seems only pertinent because it is ill translated; for that the true translation should be thus, "Whose names were not written from the foundation of the world, (i. e. were not written) in the book of life of the Lamb slain," is evident from xvii. 8, where we read thus, "Whose names are not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world." And, lastly, the citation from 2 Tim. i. 9, "He hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, according to his own purpose, and the grace given to us in Christ Jesus, before all ages," seems only to be pertinent on the same account; translate the words thus, "According to his own purpose before all ages, and the grace given us in Jesus Christ," and there is in them no appearance of any likeness to Christ's words: and this translation is sufficiently confirmed from the parallel places, Tit. i. 2, 3, Eph. i. 3, 4.

Secondly, Christ here saith, "Glorify me with the glory which I had παρὰ σοὶ, with thee;" now that phrase signifies as much as "with thee," or "in thy presence," in the perpetual use of scripture. So Numb. xxii. 9, "Who are the men that are παρὰ σοὶ, with thee?" 1 Sam. xxii. 3, "Let my father and my mother be παρὰ σοὶ, with thee." Now he that hath no being cannot, without the greatest catachresis, be said to be with another. And, lastly, Christ speaks of a glory, which the Father had given him, because he loved him before the foundation of the world: now sure it is improper to say any thing is beloved when it is nothing, or when it has no being.

[5] Ver. 6. I have manifested thy name to those whom thou hast given me out of the world.] i. e. To my disciples whom thou hast given to me, by causing them to believe in me; I have by my doctrine taught them, and by my miracles, done before their eyes, given them the clearest prospect of thy power, wisdom, holiness and goodness.

[6] Ver. 7. Now they have known,] By my divine doctrine and miracles, which they have heard and seen, that I derived both from thee.

whatsoever thou hast given (i. e. authorized) me (to do or say) are of thee (i. e. were indeed thy words and works).

8 For I have given (i. e. declared) unto them the words which thou gavest (in commission to) me (to speak); and they have received them (as thine), and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

9 I pray for them: [7] I pray not (in this address) for the world, but for them which thou hast (already) given me (out of it); for they are mine (having thee for their Father).

10 And all mine are thine (thy children), and thine are mine (having me for their teacher and guide); and I am glorified in them (by the miracles done by them in my name, and by the converts they make to the Christian faith).

11 And now I am no more in the world, [8] but these (my apostles) are (to continue) in the world, and I (am to) come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine [9] own name (or power) those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are (by the participation of the Spirit. See Examen Millii).

12 While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: (and by thy power imparted to me,) those that thou gavest me I have kept, and [10] none of them is lost (hath perished, or fallen off from me), but the son of perdition (and this it was thy pleasure to permit); that the scripture might be fulfilled (see Examen Millii).

13 And now come I to thee; and these things I speak (in their audience while I am) in the world, [11] that they might have my joy (the joy which I have promised them, xv. 11,) fulfilled in themselves (by the presence of the Spirit, whose fruits are joy and peace).

14 I have given (i. e. taught) them thy word; and the [12] world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world (see xv. 18, 19).

15 I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them [13] from the evil (of the world.

16 And thus I pray, because) They are not of the world (and so will certainly be hated by it), even as (I have been, because) I am not of the world.

17 Sanctify [14] them through (Gr. in, or for the propagation of) thy truth (by sending the Holy Ghost upon them): thy word (they are to preach to the world) is (the) truth.

18 As thou hast sent me into the world (to deliver

---

[7] Ver. 9. I pray not for the world.] These things which follow respecting only my apostles, which are to preach my gospel to all nations, I request not for that world which hath no knowledge of me. They who hence argue that Christ died not for the world, nor sought the salvation of it, but of some few persons in it, because he here prays not for it, must be mistaken; for,

First, They plainly contradict both Christ and his apostles, for Christ saith, he "came not to condemn the world, but that it might be saved," John xii. 47; that "God sent his Son into the world, that the world, through him, might be saved," iii. 17. Hence this evangelist assures us he was "the propitiation for the sins of the whole world," 1 John ii. 2, and others of them, that he came "to seek and to save that which was lost," as doubtless all the world was (Matt. xviii. 11).

Secondly, They vainly argue, that Christ never prayed for the world, because he saith here, I do not do it now, which is arguing against plain matter of fact: for how oft doth he say to the Jews, "Ye are of the world" (John viii. 23), and of his apostles chosen out of them, that they were called "out of the world?" as here, ver. 6. 14. 16, and yet he saith to them, Luke xix. 42, εἰ ἔγνως, "How do I wish that thou hadst known, in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace!" And, hanging on the cross, he said, "Father, forgive them," Luke xxiii. 34, making intercession for those transgressors, Isa. liii. 12. He therefore saith that, in this address, he prayed not for them, because he was asking those things which could not agree to them, but to his apostles only, or to those whom God had given him out of the world; viz. that they might be consecrated to their apostolical functions, or by that Spirit which "the world could not receive," John xiv. 17, that their joy, from his presence with them, might be full; nor is there any thing in this whole prayer which is not proper to believers only. And,

Thirdly, This very prayer for them is made for the sake of the world, and with respect to their saving faith; i. e. "for them who should believe through his word," ver. 20; that "the world might believe and know that the Father hath sent him," ver. 23. So that he prayed for his apostles for this very end, that the world by their means might believe, and believing might have life through his name: it is therefore plain he made this prayer, in which he saith, "I pray not for the world," out of affection to the world, and with this design, that the preaching of the apostles to them might be more effectual for their conversion and salvation.

[8] Ver. 11. Καὶ οὗτοι, But they are in the world.] Καὶ here signifies but, as Gen. xxxi. 7, Exod. i. 17, vii. 12, Numb. iv. 20, v. 18, Deut. i. 43, iii. 7, iv. 9, viii. 18, Josh. i. 8, 1 Sam. i. 13, Ps. iv. 3, Matt. i. 25, xi. 17, xii. 39, xvii. 12, John v. 40.

[9] Keep them in thy name.] i. e. By thy power; so "name" is used, 1 Sam. xvii. 45, 2 Chron. xvi. 11, Ps. xliv. 5, lxxxix. 24, Matt. vii. 22, Acts iv. 7.

Οὓς ἔδωκάς μοι· see Examen Millii in locum.

[10] Ver. 12. And none of them is lost.] i. e. Either by temporal death (xviii. 9), or by falling off from me, but ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, "the son of perdition," i. e. Judas, worthy of perdition. So "a son of death," is one worthy of it, 2 Sam. xii. 5, and ἔθνος ἀπωλείας is a nation fit to be destroyed, Ecclus. xvi. 9 (see Matt. xxiii. 15, and the note on Eph. ii. 3).

[11] Ver. 13. That they may have my joy fulfilled in them.] i. e. That the joy they had hitherto from my love to them (v. 11), my presence with them and care of them, may, in my absence, be increased by the presence of that Spirit with them, who will supply my bodily absence (xvi. 7), and whose fruits are "joy and peace" (Gal. v. 22); yea, by whom I, though absent in body, am still present with them (xiv. 11).

[12] Ver. 14. The world hath hated them, &c.] This desire of thy protection and assistance is needful to them, who will be certainly exposed to great hatred from the world; and fit to be granted by thee, seeing they will be thus hated for preaching thy word to the world.

[13] Ver. 15. But that thou shouldst keep them ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ, from the evil.] From the evil men of the world, and from Satan, the prince of the world, who, by their means, endeavours, by fiery persecutions, to suppress the truth, and destroy or discourage the preachers of it; whence their persecutions are ascribed not to them but to Satan, Luke xxii. 31, 1 Thess. ii. 18, iii. 5, Rev. ii. 10. From the eleventh to the sixteenth verse we learn how necessary divine aid is to our preservation and success, even in pious enterprises, and so how necessary it is to seek it by fervent prayer; and also from our Saviour's affection to them, care of them, and prayer for them, how certain they who sincerely devote themselves to his service may be of his aid in it, and his protection while they are so employed.

[14] Ver. 17. Ἁγίασον, &c. Sanctify them by thy truth.] i. e. Consecrate and set them apart, for the propagation of thy truth. Now this sanctification to the priesthood, under the old testament, was made, first, with a sacrifice offered for them. So Moses receives a command, ἁγιάζειν, "to sanctify the priests," ὥστε ἱερατεύειν μοι αὐτούς, that they might serve or offer to God, by the oblation of a bullock or a ram, Exod. xxix. 1, and thus Christ sanctified his apostles by offering up himself for them, ver. 19; secondly, by anointing them with holy oil (ver. 7); and in this sense, Christ desires here the Father to sanctify them to their office, by the descent of the Holy Spirit, styled, "the oil of gladness," and "the promise of the Father," on them, and by whose assistance they became "able ministers of the new testament" (2 Cor. iii. 6) which before they were not; and are therefore bid not to be-thy mind to it), even so have I also sent them into the world (on the same errand: see note on xx. 21).

19 And [15] for their sakes I sanctify (i. e. offer up) myself (a piacular victim), that they also (being justified through faith in me) might be sanctified through (Gr. in or for) the truth (see ver. 17).

20 Neither pray I for [16] these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

21 [17] That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us (by the participation of that Spirit which is in me): that the world (by the powerful operations of this Spirit in them) may (be induced to) believe that thou hast sent me.

22 And [18] the glory which thou gavest me (i. e. the power of doing miracles by the Spirit of God) I have given them; that they may be one, as we are one (ver. 21):

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one (spirit working in them as it did in me); and that (so) the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

24 Father, [19] I will that they also, whom thou hast given me (when they have finished their course on earth), be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for (because) thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

25 O righteous Father, (the men of) the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.

26 And I have declared unto them thy name, and (farther) will declare it (by the illuminations of the Holy Spirit): that (so) [20] the love wherewith thou hast loved me (which moved thee to give the Holy Spirit without measure to me, John iii. 34, 35) may be in them, and I in them (by the same Spirit).

---

gin their preaching to the world, till this Spirit from on high was come upon them (Luke xxiv. 49, Acts i. 8).

[15] Ver. 19. Καὶ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν, And for them I sanctify myself.] i. e. I offer up myself to be slain, as a piacular victim, as Chrysostom saith here; in which sense, the word ἁγιάζειν is often used, as I have shown, note on Heb. ii. 11. Nor do these words admit of the sense which some give them, thus, For their sakes I shall, by my resurrection, show myself to be the Holy One; for, as that is not to sanctify himself, so neither was it so needful for their sakes, who believed this already, saith our Lord, ver. 7, 8.

[16] Ver. 20. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them that shall believe, &c.] As Christ (ver. 17) had prayed for his apostles, that they might be filled with the Spirit, so here he asks the same thing for those that should believe through their word, that they also might be replenished with the gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to the prediction of the Baptist, Matt. iii. 11, and his own promise, vii. 38, 39, and as it after came to pass. That these words, viz. "That they may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee;" are to be interpreted not of a union of concord, but by the participation of the Spirit, of the Father, and the Son, is proved; see note on xiv. 20. Add that Christ declares, he did his miracles by the Holy Spirit (Matt. xii. 28), that the Spirit was given to him without measure (iii. 34), that thereby he was "anointed to preach the gospel" (Luke iv. 18, 19). Christ also says, that the Father, abiding in him, did these miracles (xiv. 10), and that the Jews, by the doctrine thus preached, by virtue of this unction, and the miracles thus done by the Spirit of God, might and ought to know that the Father was in him, and he in the Father (x. 38), and he promises, that they who believed in him should do greater works than he had done, because, going to the Father, he would send the Holy Spirit to them, to abide ever with them (xiv. 12. 16—18); and then adds, that "in that day you shall know that I am in the Father, and you in me, and I in you" (ver. 20). All which things prove that the Father was in Christ, and he in him; not only by the union of the divine nature with the human, but by union of the same Spirit also residing in him; and consequently the union of believers with them both must be by the same Spirit: whence it is said, that "he that is joined to the Lord, is ἓν πνεῦμα, one spirit" with him, 1 Cor. vi. 17, that their bodies are made "the temples of the Holy Ghost," ver. 19, and they are a "habitation of God through the Spirit," Eph. ii. 2. This farther will appear from the end of this union, which is, saith Christ, "that the world may believe and know that thou hast sent me:" for this the apostles testified, and made known to the world, not by their concord, but by virtue of that Spirit with which they were endowed from on high, and which God gave to them that believe (Acts v. 32); and this interpretation we may learn from the words of Irenæus,* to the same effect. This also will be still more evident from the words following.

[17] Ver. 21. Ἵνα πάντες ἓν ὦσι, That all may be one.] Origen here saith, the apostles and the prophets shall then know the Father, ὅταν γίνωνται ἓν, ὡς υἱὸς καὶ πατὴρ ἓν εἶσιν, "when they are become one, as the Son and Father are one," which he thus explains in his commentary on these words, Rom. v. 5, "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Spirit that he hath given us; ut per istud Spiritûs Sancti donum compleatur ille sermo quem Dominus dixit, Sicut tu Pater in me, et ego in te, et isti in nobis unum sint, divinæ scilicet naturæ participes effecti in abundantiâ charitatis per Spiritum Sanctum ministratæ; that by this gift might be fulfilled that saying of the Lord, That they may be one in us, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, being made partakers of the divine nature, in the abundance of love ministered to them by the Holy Spirit;" and in this sense the fathers often say that at the resurrection we shall be θεοποιούμενοι, as being then completely made partakers of the divine nature, by the Spirit of God then more fully dwelling in us, and so "God will be all in all" in his glorified saints.

[18] Ver. 22. And I have given them the glory which thou gavest me, &c.] By this glory we are to understand Christ's power of working miracles; which power was given to the apostles, and those who believed through their preaching, by virtue of the Holy Spirit, which came down upon them: for, by the power of this Spirit, Christ wrought his miracles, and so manifested τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, "his glory," ch. ii. And the administration of the gospel is upon this account said to be ἐν δόξῃ, "in or with glory," 2 Cor. iii. 7. 11, and the apostles are said to have seen "the glory of the Lord," and to have been "transformed into the likeness of it, from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord," ver. 18 (see the note there). This glory Christ is here said to have given his apostles, not only that they might be one with the Father and the Son, but also that the world might know the Father had loved them, as he had loved Christ, whom he had so loved as to give the Spirit without measure to him.

[19] Ver. 24. I will that those whom thou hast given me, may be with me, &c.] i. e. I will that they may be received up after the resurrection into heaven, as I was; for it seems probable, that none of the saints, no, not the apostles, are to be received into the supreme heaven, to enjoy the beatific vision, before that time (see note on xiv. 3).

[20] Ver. 26. That the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them.] i. e. That thou mayest love them, as being thy sons by adoption, so as to make them partakers of an eternal inheritance (Rom. viii. 17), and so as to fill them with thy Spirit (Gal. iv. 6), and, raising them from the dead, mayest crown them with eternal glory.

---

* Effundit (Christus) Spiritum Patris in adunationem et communionem Dei et hominum, ad homines quidem deponens Deum per Spiritum, ad Deum rursùs imponens hominem per suam incarnationem. Lib. v. cap. 1.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 When Jesus had spoken these words, he [1] went forth (of the city) with his disciples (and went) over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, and his disciples.

2 And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples.

3 Judas then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither (it being night) with lanterns and torches and weapons (to apprehend him).

4 Jesus therefore, [2] knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

5 They answered him (We seek) Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them (when he said this).

6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

7 Then (when they were risen up) asked he them, again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: if therefore ye seek me (only), let these (my disciples) go their way:

9 (And this he said) [3] That the saying might be fulfilled, which he spake, Of them (apostles) which thou gavest me have I lost none (i. e. I have suffered none to perish).

10 Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. (And) the servant's name was Malchus.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, [4] Put up thy sword into the sheath: (for) the cup which my Father hath given me (to drink), shall I not drink it?

12 Then [5] the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him,

13 And led him away to [6] Annas first; for he was father in law to Caiaphas, which (Caiaphas) was the high priest that same year (that Jesus was crucified).

14 Now Caiaphas was he (Gr. and it was that Caiaphas), which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die (Gr. perish) for the (preservation of the) people.

15 ¶ And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and [7] so did

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐξῆλθε, He went out with his disciples.] Not only out of the chamber where he supped with them, for that he did when he said, "Arise, let us go hence" (xiv. 31), but out of the city; the gates, in such a time of peace, and of such a congress to the passover as the city could not well contain, being not shut. The evangelist adds, that he went "over the brook Cedron to a place where was a garden;" that, as the sin of the first Adam, which brought destruction upon his posterity, was committed in a garden, so that salutary passion of the second Adam, which was to rescue us from that destruction, might begin in the like place: so the fathers. Into this garden he went with the eleven disciples, though going farther into it, to his agony, he took with him only Peter, James, and John (Matt. xxvi. 37).

[2] Ver. 4. Jesus therefore knowing all things that were to come upon him.] This the apostle notes, to show that Christ fell not into the hands of the Jews, for want either of power, as he shows, ver. 6, by striking them all to the ground with a word that came to apprehend him, the providence of God not suffering him to die without these marks of a divine majesty and power; or for want of wisdom to foresee their machinations against him; but as freely giving up himself to the death for the welfare of mankind. Vain therefore is the saying of Celsus,* that "a wise man, had he foreseen the danger, would have avoided it if he could do it;" for, if kings and captains have given up themselves freely to death, and the utmost perils, for the temporary safety of their country, much more might our blessed Lord do this for the salvation of the whole world.

[3] Ver. 9. Ἵνα πληρωθῇ ὁ λόγος, &c. That the saying might be fulfilled, which he spake, Of those which thou hast given me have I lost none.] That this saying could not relate to the eternal state of Judas, or our Lord's apostles, appears, (1.) from the precedent words, "Let then those go away;" for, saith the evangelist, these very words were spoken, that the saying of Christ, xvii. 12, might be fulfilled; and yet Christ's desire that they might quietly be dismissed was designed only to secure their temporal preservation. (2.) From the words themselves, recorded xvii. 12, "Of those that thou hast given me I have lost none but the son of perdition, that the scripture might be fulfilled," viz. Ps. cix. 8. Now this scripture St. Peter interprets of the temporal death of Judas, Acts i. 16. 20. It is no objection against this interpretation, that the apostles were not always preserved from a violent death, most of them being taken away by martyrdom: for this our Lord could not intend, since he himself had told them, before he spake these words, that some of them should be put to death, and some should drink of his cup (Matt. xx. 23, xxiv. 9); but only that he being present with them had thus lost none of them; and hence he prays that in his absence his Father would thus keep them: and accordingly the apostle testifies, that when they were engaged in their apostolical function, they were wonderfully preserved by the divine providence, insomuch that even this was a testimony of the life and power of Jesus (2 Cor. i. 10, iv. 10, 11, xiii. 4), and especially they were so preserved, that none of them fell from their apostolic office, as Judas did (Acts i. 25).

[4] Ver. 11. Put up thy sword into the sheath.] Vain here is the inference of Bernard, in his epistle to pope Eugenius, from these words, That both the spiritual and the material sword belonged to the church, telling him, the material sword is his, though it be not to be wielded by his hand, but by the hand of the soldier, yet so as he is to do it ad nutum sacerdotis, at the will of the priest. For, with what sense can it be gathered from Christ's reprehension of St. Peter for using this sword, even before he was made a priest, according to the doctrine of the Romanists; or from Christ's command to put it up into the sheath, that it belonged to the priest; or because Peter had a sword, which belonged not at all to his office as an apostle, that the pope must have a title to that more than to his net or fishing-boat? The two swords, of which Christ spake, were both material, and of them Christ said, "It is enough;" not to combat with their adversaries, but to show the peril of that present time (see the note on Luke xxii. 38).

[5] Ver. 12. Ἡ οὖν σπεῖρα καὶ ὁ χιλίαρχος, The band and the captain.] At the time of the passover, it was customary for the Roman president to send a whole band of a thousand men for a guard to the temple; the captain of which band is here called χιλίαρχος.

[6] Ver. 13. And they led him away to Annas first.] That by him, who was more aged and better experienced in the law, Caiaphas might be directed what to do in that case, or because he was the prince of the Sanhedrin; from him he was sent bound to Caiaphas the high-priest, as appears from ver. 24 (see the note there). Of his being sent to Annas the other evangelists say nothing, because nothing was done to Christ there, but all was performed at the palace of the high-priest; there was Christ examined (ver. 19), and there Peter denied him (Matt. xxvi. 57. 69).

[7] Ver. 15. Καὶ ὁ ἄλλος μαθητής, And the other disciple.] He seems not to be John: for he being a Galilean as well another disciple: that disciple was known unto the high priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high priest.

* Apud Orig. lib. ii. p. 71.

16 But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17 Then said the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

18 And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals; for it [8] was cold: and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

19 ¶ The high priest then (Annas having sent Jesus to him) asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

20 Jesus answered him, I spake (my doctrine) openly to the world; I ever taught (it) in [9] the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

21 Why (then) askest thou me (of my doctrine)? ask (rather) them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

22 And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus (on the cheek) with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the high priest so (rudely)?

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if (I have said) well, [10] why smitest thou me?

24 (This he said to him,) Now (that) Annas [11] had sent him bound unto Caiaphas the high priest.

25 And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself (with the servants). They said therefore unto him (see note on Matt. xxvi. 69), Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

26 One of the servants of the high priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter then denied (it) again: and immediately the cock crew.

28 ¶ Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment: and it was early; and (but) they [12] themselves went not into the judgment hall (among the heathens), lest they should be defiled (by them); but (stayed without) that they might eat the passover (i. e. the other paschal offerings, clean and undefiled).

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man?

30 They answered and said unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, [13] It is not lawful for us to put any man to death: (and this they said, not that they might not have done this after such license given, but) as Peter, they might have equally suspected him on that account.

---

[8] Ver. 18. Ὅτι ψύχος ἦν, For it was cold.] The Jews, saith Dr. Lightfoot, testify, that there might be snow or frost at the passover; and Radulphus, that great dews fell then, which made the air cold till the sun had exhaled them.

[9] Ver. 20. I taught always in the synagogue, καὶ ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ and in the temple.] This confutes them who say, Christ came not to Jerusalem, lest the Romans should suspect him of affecting a kingdom: for here he testifies that "he taught daily in the temple;" after his first miracle done in Cana of Galilee, we find him going up to Jerusalem to keep the passover, where he abode at least eight days; and many seeing the miracles that he did believed on him, v. 1; and vi. 4, he ascends again to the feast; so that we have reason to believe he never declined that feast. He also went up to the feast of tabernacles (vii. 10), and preached to the people in the temple (ver. 13), and wrought such wonders that the Jews cried out, "When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these" (ver. 31). This feast being ended, he goes to the mount of Olives, and returns the next day to preach in the temple (viii. 1, 2). At the feast of dedication, we find him again walking in Solomon's porch (x. 23), and there declaring himself to be the Son of God. Ch. xi. he is at Bethany, but two miles distant from Jerusalem, where he raises Lazarus from the dead; and from Bethany he goes to Jerusalem, the people going before him, and crying, "Hosanna to the Son of David."

[10] Ver. 23. Why smitest thou me?] Hence we learn that we are not literally to understand the precept of turning the other cheek to him that smites us; for Christ himself did not this, but defends the innocency of his words; which also shows that to stand up in the defence of our own innocency cannot be contrary to the Christian duties of patience and forgiveness. It is the observation of Suidas and Phavorinus, that δέρω signifies τὸ ἐκδέρω, to excoriate, δείρω δὲ τὸ τύπτω, but δίρω to smite; but it is certain that δέρω bears the sense of smiting in the New Testament, thus ἀέρα δέρων is "smiting of the air," 1 Cor. ix. 26, εἰς πρόσωπον δέρειν, "to smite on the face," 2 Cor. xi. 20 (see Mark xii. 3, Acts xvi. 37), and also in profane authors; so δέρεσθαι καὶ δέρειν δι' ἡμέρας, is "daily to beat," or "to be beaten," scholiast Aristoph. in Vespis, p. 463, F. (See Examen Millii).

[11] Ver. 24. Ἀπέστειλεν οὖν, Annas had sent him bound to Caiaphas.] Ἀπέστειλεν, here the perfect is put for the pluperfect tense; so ἔδησεν αὐτόν, "He had bound him," Matt. xiv. 3, and ver. 4, ἔλεγε, "He had said;" so ἐκράτησε, ἔδησε, ἔλεγε, "He had apprehended and bound—had said," Mark vi. 17, 18, and ver. 26, ἀπέκοψε, "he had cut off."

[12] Ver. 28. They went not out into the judgment-hall.] Among the gentiles, whom they esteemed as unclean (Acts. x. 28), lest by touching them they should be unclean, as the law pronounces him that touches an unclean person (Numb. xix. 22), and so should be unfit to eat the chagigah, or paschal sacrifices, which began to be eaten on the fifteenth day, and being holy things, might not be eaten in their defilement. That these are also called the passover, and that the paschal lamb was eaten the evening before, and that there was no translation of it to another day, either by reason of the sabbath, or the uncleanness of the congregation, see the appendix to Mark xiv. and Dr. Lightfoot.

[13] Ver. 31. Ἡμῖν οὐκ ἔξεστιν ἀποκτεῖναι οὐδένα, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death.] The Jews say that the power of inflicting capital punishments upon offenders was taken from them by the Romans forty years before the destruction of their city and temple: so we read in the Jerusalem Talmud, L. Sanhedrin, cap. 7, in that of Babylon, Sanhedr. fol. 41, in Aboda Zara, fol. 2, in Maimonides, Tr Sanhedr. cap. 14, sect. 13. And if it had remained with them at this time, it is supposed they would have been more speedy in cutting off our Saviour. But yet it seemeth evident that the Jews still retained the power of judging and condemning those to death, who were Jews by nature and original, and by their laws deserved to die: for after they were reduced to a Roman province, this privilege, saith Josephus,* was still granted to them, τοῖς πατρίοις ἔθεσι καὶ ἱεροῖς χρῆσθαι, "to use the sacred institutions and customs derived to them from their fathers." And it was granted to Hyrcanus their high-priest, that if any controversy arose, περὶ τῆς Ἰουδαίων ἀγωγῆς, "touching the discipline of the Jews κρίσιν γένεσθαι παρ' αὐτοῦ, the judgment of it should be referred to him."† Accordingly we find the high-priest and his council stoning Stephen, not jure zelotarum, "by the rage of zealots," as some conceive, but according to the law, that the blasphemer should be stoned (Lev. xxiv. 16, Deut. xvii. 6, 7), for he is brought before the high-priest and his council (Acts vi. 15, vii. 1), who were the proper judges in this case: witnesses are produced, who testify before them that he had spoken blasphemous words "against the temple and the law, against Moses and against God" (Acts vi. 11. 13); these witnesses do also stone him first, according as the law re-

---

* Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 17, p. 487. † P. 486.

32 That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he spake, signifying what death he should die (viz. by being lifted up upon the cross).

33 Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews?

34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing (makest thou this inquiry) of thyself, (from a desire to know the truth?) or (because) did others tell it thee of me? (laying it to my charge as a crime, that I profess myself Messiah their King.)

35 Pilate answered, Am I a Jew (that I should ask this for my own satisfaction? The men of) thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done (to incense them thus against thee, and cause them to lay this crime to thy charge)?

36 Jesus answered, (True it is that I am a king; but) [14] my kingdom is not of this world (nor to be propagated by force of arms: for) if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now (this being not done, it appears that) is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that (which is true, for) I am a king. To this end was [15] I born, (that I might reign over the house of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 33,) and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is (a lover and believer) of the truth heareth my voice.

38 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, I find in him no fault at all.

39 But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the passover: will ye therefore that I (should) release unto you the King of the Jews?

40 Then cried they all again, saying, (Release to us) not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

---

quired. Thus also Saul, armed with the power of the high-priests and elders, persecuted the Jewish Christians, ἀχρὶ θανάτου, "unto death," and led them bound to Jerusalem to be punished (Acts xxii. 4, 5), thus also would they have judged Paul after their own law (Acts xxiv. 6), and "would have killed him" (Acts xxiii. 37), had not Lysias the chief captain rescued him from their hands; this, say they, he did by violence, i. e. by an invasion of their rights; this, saith he, I did, "knowing that he was a Roman," and so would not have done it, had he been a Jew only. They therefore seem to say they could not do this in the case of Christ, because they had accused him before Pilate, not of crimes committed against their law, but of sedition, and aspiring to a kingdom in prejudice to Cæsar and the Roman government, of which things it belonged to Pilate, not to them, to judge. But perhaps this matter may be compounded by reflecting on Ananus the high-priest, who killed James the brother of our Lord, and stoned many other Christians, ὡς παρανομήσαντας, "as being transgressors of the law;" this, saith Josephus, οἱ περὶ τοὺς νόμους ἀκριβεῖς, "they who best understood their laws disliked, saying that Ananus should not have called a council concerning life and death, without license from Albinus the Roman president;" whence I infer, that the power of inflicting capital punishments, even upon the Jews converted to the Christian faith, was then so taken from them, that they could not ὀρθῶς, "regularly" do it without leave first obtained from the Roman president; but with his leave they might inflict upon them any capital punishment denounced against malefactors by their law. And if it be here said that Pilate gave them leave to inflict this death on our Lord, by saying, "Take ye him, and crucify him" (xix. 6); to this the answer is, (1.) that Pilate had given them no such license when he spake these words; (2.) that crucifixion was none of the kinds of death assigned by their law; and, (3.) that Pilate by these words seems not to authorize them to do this, but rather to say to them, Do it at your peril, for I judge him innocent (see the note there).

[14] Ver. 36. My kingdom is not of this world.] And so hath nothing to do with, or opposite to, the Roman government; it is not of human or mundane original, but from heaven, and so it meddles not with the affairs of this world; it hath none of the pomp or splendour of the world; none to fight for it with any carnal weapons (Luke ix. 56); it exercises no dominion over men's bodies, but their souls only. So the phrase ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου οὐκ εἶναι, "not to be of this world," signifies, John viii. 23, xv. 19, xvii. 14, especially when it is opposed to being ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς, "from the Father," 1 John ii. 16, and ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, "from God," 1 John iv. 4—6. So when Domitian inquired of the kingdom of Christ, of what nature it was, and when and where it was to be set up; the nephews of that Judas who was the brother of our Lord, answered, It was* "not an earthly but a heavenly kingdom, to be set up at the end of the world."

[15] Ver. 37. For this cause was I born, and for this cause came I into the world.] Hence the Socinians infer that Christ was born before he came into the world: and that this latter phrase denotes only his entrance on his public ministry (iii. 17. 19, ix. 39, xi. 27). But this follows not from these words, which only may import the same thing; viz. that Christ was born, and came into the world to this end, that he might bear witness to the truth (see the notes upon the places cited).

---

* "Ὅτι οὐ κοσμικὴ μὲν οὐδ' ἐπίγειος, οὐράνιος δὲ καὶ ἀγγελικὴ τυγχάνει ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος γενησομένη· Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 20.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Then Pilate therefore (to satisfy the clamours of the Jews) took Jesus, and [1] scourged him.

2 And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe,

3 And said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him (let it therefore suffice that I have scourged him).

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man! (how despicable he is, and how ridiculous it is to think of his affecting a kingdom, or attempting any thing against Cæsar's government.)

6 When the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, (If ye will have it so) [2] take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him (and therefore cannot do it myself).

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 1. Καὶ ἐμαστίγωσε, And scourged him.] After the manner of the Romans, who chastised them first with whips who were to be crucified, though Pilate did this not with an intent to crucify him in whom he found no fault, but hoping that their rage might be satisfied with it (see note on Luke xxiii. 16).

[2] Ver. 6. Take ye him, and crucify him.] Pontius Pilate does not give them leave to do this, but rather saith, If you

7 The Jews answered him, We have a law, and [3] by our law he ought to die (as being guilty of blasphemy,) because he made himself the Son of God (John x. 33).

8 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid (to crucify him);

9 And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer.

10 Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

11 Jesus answered, Thou (mayest have this power over malefactors and ordinary men, but thou) couldest have [4] no power at all against me (the Son of God, and wholly innocent), except (through the wise counsel of God appointing me to die for the salvation of mankind) it were given (i. e. permitted) thee from above (to put me to death): therefore he that delivered me (the Son of God) unto thee (that I might be crucified as a malefactor) hath the greater sin (though thy sin in condemning him in whom thou findest no fault at all cannot be little).

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, [5] If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: (for) whosoever maketh himself a king (he by so doing) speaketh against Cæsar (as saying in effect he is not the rightful king over us).

13 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth (of the judgment-hall), and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14 And it was the preparation of the passover, (i. e. Friday in the paschal week, ver. 31. 42, see the appendix to Marx xiv.) and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, [6] We have no (person we own as our) king but Cæsar.

16 Then [7] delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they (i. e. the soldiers) took Jesus, and led him away.

17 And he bearing his cross (part of the way, see note on Luke xxiii. 26) went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

18 Where they crucified him, and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

19 ¶ And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, (This is) JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin, 21 Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am the King of the Jews.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written I have written (i. e. the inscription shall not be changed).

23 ¶ Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his (other) garments, and made four parts (out of them), to every soldier a part; and (they took) also his coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout.

24 They said therefore among themselves, [8] Let us not rend it (it being all of one piece), but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: (and this was done) that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith (Ps. xx. 19), They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

25 ¶ Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, [9] Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

---

will have it so, do it yourselves at your peril, for I cannot condemn a man without a fault (so Grotius).

[3] Ver. 7. By our law he ought to die, ὅτι ἑαυτὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐποίησεν, because he made himself the Son of God.] The Jews could not here mean the law against false prophets, Deut. xviii. 20, partly because the reason here assigned doth not prove Christ a false prophet, partly because Christ neither tempted them to worship himself, and much less to worship false gods; nor did he give them any false sign; which are the only reasons assigned in that chapter for putting the false prophet to death; how much more probable is it that they meant the law against blasphemy, Lev. xxiv. 16, because they do not only seek to kill him as a blasphemer, for these very words, John v. 18, but to stone him, which was the very kind of death assigned by that law to the blasphemer: see John x. 33. 36. Hence in the other evangelists they charge him with blasphemy, and judge him worthy of death for this confession, that "he was the Son of God," Matt. xxvi. 64—66, Mark xiv. 61. 64, Luke xxii. 71, 72, as judging that by this assertion, he being a man made himself equal with God. Schlictingius owns this, but then adds, that the Jews misunderstood and calumniated him in this inference, Christ meaning no more by this assertion, than that he was the true Messiah. But against this mitigation of the import of the words there lies a plain objection, that though Christ was so much concerned for the honour of his Father, whose honour must be impaired by the advancement of the best of men to an equality with it; and though this blasphemy, if truly laid to his charge, was a sufficient evidence that he was not the Christ: yet neither in the fifth nor tenth of John, doth he ever plainly say he was not God, or that he never did intend to signify, by this expression, that he was equal with God, as is shown in the notes on those two places; which yet, had he been only man, seems more necessary to have been done, for the honour of God, and for the removal of so just a prejudice against him, than to remove any other calumny they falsely charged upon him.

[4] Ver. 11. Οὐκ εἶχες ἐξουσίαν οὐδεμίαν κατ' ἐμοῦ, Thou couldest have no power against me, &c.] This seems to be a Jewish phrase, importing a power to take away the life of another; as when Saul saith to Doeg, 1 Sam. xxii. 18, "Fall upon the priests"—"Exercise authority among them," saith the Chaldee; and the same expression is there used when David bids his servant "fall on the Amalekite," 2 Sam. i. 15, and when king Solomon "sent Benaiah to fall upon Adonijah," 1 Kings ii. 25, and upon Joab, ver. 29, 30, and upon Shimei (see the paraphrase here).

[5] Ver. 12. If thou lettest this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend.] This chiefly moved Pilate, because, as Tacitus and Suetonius observe, Tiberius was apt to suspect the worst; and the least crimes with him made a man guilty of death, if they related to the government: he durst not therefore venture that this charge should be laid against him by the Jews.

[6] Ver. 15. We have no king but Cæsar.] By this how plainly do they condemn themselves as guilty of rebellion in all their attempts by war and tumults to free themselves from the government of Cæsar, and own that the terrible destruction, which at last came upon them, was from themselves!

[7] Ver. 16. Then Pilate delivered him to them.] Not to the Jews, but to the soldiers, that he might be crucified, as he was, by them; though he, who was delivered to the soldiers to be crucified only at their request, and to satisfy their restless clamours, that he might be crucified, may be well said to be delivered up to them who brought him to Pilate for this end, and prevailed with him thus to give him up.

[8] Ver. 24. Let us not rend it, but let us cast lots for it.] They divided his other garments into four parts, and then cast lots what part each of them should choose (Matt. xxvii. 35, Mark xv. 24, Luke xxiii. 34), but they cast lots for his coat who should have the whole.

[9] Ver. 25. Μαρία ἡ τοῦ Κλωπᾶ, Mary the wife of Cleophas.]

26 When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, [10] Woman, behold (him who is to take care of thee, as if he were) thy son!

27 Then saith he to the disciple, Behold (her whom thou must henceforth treat as) thy mother! And from that hour that disciple (St. John) took her unto his own home.

28 ¶ After this, Jesus knowing that all things (else relating to his life on earth) were now accomplished, that the scripture might (in this also) be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now there was set (for the soldiers) a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a spunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It (i. e. my work on earth) is finished: and (then) he bowed his head, and gave [11] up the ghost.

31 The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation (i. e. Friday), that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day,) (as being not a sabbath only, but the second day of unleavened bread, from whence they reckoned their sabbath till pentecost, and the day of presenting or waving the sheaf-offering, Lev. xxiii. 11. 15, and so a triple festival,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other (thief) which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they [12] brake not his legs:

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out [13] blood and water.

35 And he that (standing by the cross, ver. 26) saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, (and testifies it) that ye might believe.

36 For these things were done (according to foregoing prophecies concerning him), that the scripture should be fulfilled, (which saith, Ps. xxxiv. 20,) A bone of him shall not be broken.

37 And again (that) [14] another scripture (might be fulfilled, which) saith (Zech. xii. 10), They shall look on him whom they pierced.

38 ¶ And after this Joseph of Arimathæa, being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of (offending) the Jews, besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jesus.

39 And there came also Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an [15] hundred pound weight.

40 Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in (or near) the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There laid they Jesus therefore because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

Or, Alpheus; חלפי being flexible into Alphai or Cleophi. Here it is to be rendered "Alpheus," for this Mary was the mother of James the less (Mark xv. 40), whose father was Alpheus (Matt. x. 3).

[10] Ver. 26. Woman, behold thy son!] Hence it is gathered, that Joseph her husband was then dead; whence Christ takes care she should not be destitute, and therefore charges his beloved disciple to treat her as his mother; and he accordingly takes her home to his own house.

[11] Ver. 30. Παρέδωκε τὸ πνεῦμα, He gave up his spirit.] Into his Father's hands (Luke xxiii. 46). The Jews, saith Grotius, who believed a judgment to come, used this phrase to signify that the soul, leaving the body at the time of death, "returned to God that gave it" (Eccles. xii. 7), to receive its sentence from him.

[12] Ver. 33. They brake not his bones: Ver. 36. And this was done that the scripture might be fulfilled (which saith) ὀστοῦν οὐ συντριβήσεται αὐτοῦ, A bone of him (or, it) shall not be broken.] This is usually referred to the command touching the paschal lamb, "Thou shalt not break a bone of it," Exod. xii. 46, Numb. ix. 12, where the Greek saith, ὀστοῦν οὐ συντρίψετε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. But David being also a type of Christ, we may as probably refer this to the words, Ps. xxxiv. 20, "He keepeth all their bones, ἓν ἐξ αὐτῶν οὐ συντριβήσεται, one of them shall not be broken:" that promise, which respects all righteous persons, being more especially to be fulfilled in this "Just One."

[13] Ver. 34. Καὶ εὐθὺς ἐξῆλθεν αἷμα καὶ ὕδωρ, And forthwith came thereout blood and water.] The covenant of the old law was confirmed by blood mixed with water to keep it from congealing (Heb. ix. 19): so also was the covenant of the new testament (1 John v. 6). Dr. Lightfoot farther saith, that, according to the tradition of the Jewish rabbins, when Moses smote the rock, there came forth first blood, and then water; now "that rock was Christ" (1 Cor. x. 4).

[14] Ver. 37. And again another scripture saith, They shall look upon him whom they had pierced.] The application of these words to Christ agrees with the opinion of the ancient Jews, who interpret Zech. xii. 10, of Messiah the son of David, as Moses Haddarson in Gen. xxviii., though R. Solomon Jarchi, R. David, and Abarbanel, refer it to the death of Messiah the son of Joseph. Hence also note, that what the Romans did by the instigation of the Jews, is fitly ascribed to the Jews themselves.

[15] Ver. 39. About a hundred pound weight.] Which was an indication, not only of the wealth, but also of the great affection of Nicodemus to the blessed Jesus: hence, also, they not only anoint him, as they commonly used to do others, but bury him with so great a mixture of spices as was done at the funerals of great men. So Jacob was embalmed after the Egyptian manner, Gen. l. 2; Asa "with spices and sweet odours," 2 Chron. xvi. 14.

CHAPTER XX.

1 The first day of the week cometh [1] Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre (other women being with her), and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

2 Then (seeing this) she (instantly) [2] runneth, and cometh (not to all the disciples, but) to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple, whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX.

[1] Ver. 1. Mary Magdalene.] More women and more Maries came to the sepulchre (Luke xxiii. 55, xxiv. 1), but the other evangelists beginning still with her, St. John, by naming her who only spake, and only looked down into the sepulchre, left the rest to be understood.

[2] Ver. 2. She runneth before, and cometh to Simon Peter.] All the interpreters that I have met with say, that Mary ran not presently to Peter and John, but only after she had seen

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to (-wards) the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together: and (but) the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5 And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

7 And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and [3] he saw, and believed, (either the report of the women, or our Lord's resurrection, which they believed not before).

9 For as yet [4] they knew not (the import of) the scripture, (which said) that he must rise again from the dead.

10 Then the (two) disciples went away again unto their own home.

11 ¶ But Mary (returning with them) stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and (but she) knew not that it was Jesus.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, [5] Touch me not (spend not now thy time in touching my body); for I am not yet ascended (I shall not presently ascend) to my Father: but go (first) to my brethren, and say unto them, I (am shortly to) ascend unto my Father, and your Father; [6] and to my God, and your God (to do for you the things of which I spake, xiv. 16).

18 Mary Magdalene (then) came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her.

---

the Lord (ver. 18): and this they prove from Luke xxiv. 10, 11. But this cannot consist with the words of St. John, who saith, she came to Peter and John only; whereas St. Luke and the other evangelists say, she came to all the rest of the apostles (Matt. xxviii. 8, Mark xvi. 10). When she came to St. Peter and St. John she came alone, and complained to them that Christ's body was taken away, not thinking that he was risen; so here: when she came to the rest of the apostles, she came with the message from the angel, and from Christ himself, that he was risen, Matt. xxviii. 7, 8. 10, and was seen of her, Mark xvi. 10, 11, Luke xxiv. 23; so here, ver. 18: which plainly shows that all the other evangelists speak only of this second coming, mentioned ver. 18.

Obj. St. Luke saith, "They came to the apostles;" and then adds, xxiv. 12, that Peter ἔδραμεν ran to the sepulchre.

Ans. That word may be thus rendered, "Peter had run, and stooping down had seen;" as if he should have said, The woman told the words of the angels to the disciples; and Peter also, to his admiration, had seen the body gone, and the linen clothes wrapped up by themselves: which, by the way, is an evidence that Christ's body was not stolen away by his disciples, since they would have carried it away embalmed as it was, and not have stayed to wrap up the napkins.

[3] Ver. 8. And he saw, and believed.] Peter only saw and admired at what was done (Luke xxiv. 12), but St. John saw and believed, not the words of Mary, for we find not that either of them suspected her of falsehood, but the resurrection of Jesus, or the words of Christ, "After three days I will rise again:" this, John saith, was the reason of his faith, not the predictions of the Old Testament: for, as for the apostles,

[4] Ver. 9. As yet they knew not the scripture (which saith) that he ought to rise from the dead.] So infirm was the faith, not only of the Jews in general in that age, but of the apostles also, that they believed not the two fundamental articles of the Christian faith, the death and resurrection of the Messiah: as for the Jews, a contrary tradition had obtained among them that their Messiah should not die (John xii. 34): and though our Saviour spake oft to his disciples of his death and resurrection, this tradition and thoughts of his temporal kingdom were so fixed in their heads, that his disciples "understood not what he said: and this saying was concealed from them" (Mark ix. 32, Luke ix. 45, xviii. 34). Whence Christ, after his resurrection, upbraids them with their slowness to believe the scriptures, and shows them from them, that Christ "ought to suffer, and rise again the third day," Luke xxiv. 25. 44, 45. And hence it follows, that the Jews then understood not that any of their sacrifices were types of our Saviour's passion, or availed to procure the remission of their sins on that account, and so could have no explicate faith in his blood, or expect justification by it. Whence St. Paul in that whole chapter, Heb. xi., in which he speaks so much of the faith of the patriarchs, hath not the least intimation of the relation that it had to the death of the Messiah.

[5] Ver. 17. Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father.] I was once inclined from these words to think, that as the sacrifice was not only to be slain, but the blood was to be brought into the sanctuary, and there presented before God to obtain the remission of sins; so Christ here intimated, that having offered up his body to the death, he, to complete his priestly office, and procure the full pardon of our sins, was immediately to ascend into the heavenly sanctuary, to present there his blood before God: for why else doth he say, "Hold, or detain, me not; for I have not yet ascended?" Why doth he add these words, "Go, tell my disciples, I ascend?" But finding that no evangelist ever speaks of any such immediate ascent after his resurrection, and that no commentator, ancient or modern, ever thought of such a thing, I think it better to refer these words to what Christ said to his disciples not long before his passion: for he had told them for their comfort, that he was shortly to go to his Father (xiv. 12), and that then he would enable them to do greater works than he himself had done; and that this was just matter of their joy (ver. 28), and was more expedient for them than his presence with them (xvi. 7), because then he would send the Comforter, and whatsoever they should ask the Father in his name should be done to them (ver. 23), because the Father himself loved them (ver. 26, 27). "Go," saith he, "therefore, and tell my disciples, that now they shortly may expect these gracious promises should be made good to them by my ascent to the Father: and as for thee, thou needest not to be solicitous to touch or hold me now, thou wilt have time sufficient to converse with me, and to experiment the truth of my resurrection; for I shall not immediately ascend, but stay some time with you here on earth. Against this it may be objected, that ἀναβέβηκα is an aorist, and so οὔπω ἀναβέβηκα should be rendered, "I have not yet ascended;" not, "I do, or I shall, not yet ascend." But to this I answer, that grammarians observe, that the aorist is often put both for the present tense and the future (see Glassius de Verbo, lib. iii. tr. 3, can. 47): so is this word used in this very gospel; as when Christ saith, "He that believeth in me shall not come into condemnation, but μεταβέβηκεν shall pass from death to life" (John v. 24).

[6] Πρὸς Θεόν μου καὶ Θεὸν ὑμῶν, To my God, and your God.] Seeing Christ styles God his God, hence, say the Socinians, 19 ¶ Then the same (Lord's) day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the [7] doors were shut where the disciples were assembled (and kept themselves close) for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and (opening silently the doors) stood in the midst (of them), and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had so said, he shewed unto them his (pierced) hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

21 Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: [8] as my Father hath sent me (to preach in his name), even so send I you (to preach in my name).

22 And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost (to enable you for this office):

23 [9] Whose soever sins ye (thus commissionated, and thus assisted by the Holy Ghost, declaratively shall) remit, they are (and shall under the gospel-covenant be) remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye (declaratively in your gospel shall) retain, they are (and shall in heaven be) retained.

21 ¶ But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

26 ¶ And after eight days (i. e. the next Lord's-day) again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

27 Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing.

28 And Thomas answered and said unto him, (Dost thou know what I said in thy absence? And hast thou raised thyself from the dead? Thou art) [10] my Lord and my God.

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: (but more) [11] blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

---

it is evident that Christ is not God; but from these words it only follows, that he was not God according to that nature which ascended: thus "God, even thy God, hath anointed thee," saith the psalmist of Christ; and yet he adds of the same person, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever," Ps. xlv. (see note on Heb. i. 8, 9).

[7] Ver. 19. Τῶν θυρῶν κεκλεισμένων, The doors being shut.] Though it be an ancient opinion, that Christ made his body penetrate through the doors, yet it is both groundless and absurd, and contrary to the very design of Christ in coming to them. It is groundless: for why might not he, by his power, secretly open the doors, his disciples not perceiving it, as the angel opened the prison-doors and gates to let out Peter? (Acts xii. 10.) It is absurd: for since Christ rose in that natural body, which was crucified and laid in the grave, philosophy informs us that such a body could not penetrate through another more solid body. And to this agree those words of Cyril of Alexandria, ἀδύναιον σῶμα διὰ σώματος διήκειν μὴ τέμνον καὶ τεμνόμενον, "It is impossible that one body should go through another without cutting it, or being cut." And, thirdly, this fancy destroys not only the end of Chirst's then coming to them, but of all that he had said and done to convince them it was the same body that was crucified, in which he appeared to them: when he came the first time, his disciples were troubled, supposing they had seen a spirit; now, to convince them of the contrary, Christ saith, "See my hands and my feet, that it is even I; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have:" his second appearance, when the doors were shut, was to convince Thomas of the truth of the resurrection of his body; and this he does, by calling him to put his finger into his pierced hands, and his hands into his pierced side; and yet this supposed penetration through the doors destroys both these arguments; it being as certain, that flesh and bones cannot penetrate through a door, as that a spirit hath not flesh and bones; and that his body must have passed through the doors after the manner of a spirit, as that it afterward appeared after the manner of a body; and that the same power which made a natural body penetrate through a door, could make a phantasm or aerial body appear like flesh and bone to the touch, and seem to have the marks and prints of a crucified body: so that unless our Saviour designed to invalidate the strength of what he said and did to convince them of the truth of his resurrection, he could not at the same time do a thing known to them, which did evacuate the force of all his proofs. Nor would the evangelist have twice recorded this circumstance, when speaking of the resurrection, had he imagined the words bore such a sense, as turned his body into a spirit, and ministered occasion to all that read it, to suspect the strength of any of these arguments to confirm this fundamental article.

[8] Ver. 21. As my Father hath sent me, so send I you.] Not only to preach in my name, as I did in his, but as he sending me baptized me with the Holy Ghost, and so anointed me to my office (Luke iv. 18, John x. 36), so will I send you, baptizing you also with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven (Luke xxiv. 49), and so anoint you also for your office (2 Cor. i. 21, 22); and in testimony of this, I say to you now, "receive the Holy Ghost" (ver. 22), and will soon after my ascension send him more plentifully down upon you.

[9] Ver. 23. Whose sins ye do remit, they are remitted,—retain, &c.] Christ sent them to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name, to Jew and gentile, Luke xxiv. 47, and here he adds, that whose soever sins they, thus assisted by the Holy Ghost, declared remitted by virtue of the gospel-covenant, ratified in his blood shed for the remission of sins, should be remitted: and hence they preached remission of sins to all that believed in his name, and justification or exemption from the guilt of them (Acts ii. 38, xiii. 38, 39). And whose sins soever you retain, declaring to them that according to the tenor of the gospel they still lie under the guilt of them, they shall be retained; and hence they declared to all that believed not on him, or lived not according to his laws, and sought not for justification by faith in his blood, that they were yet in their sins (1 Cor. xv. 17), and could not be justified (Rom. ix. 32, x. 4).

[10] Ver. 28. Ὁ Κύριός μου, καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, And Thomas answered and said to him, My Lord and my God.] Here,

First, Let it be noted from Woltzogenius the Socinian, that they are not to be hearkened to, who say, Thomas spake these words not to Christ, but by way of admiration to God the Father; for the apostle could not say that "Thomas answered," and much less that he "answered and said to him," unless he had directed his words to him who said unto him in the precedent verse, "Be not faithless, but believe:" and if he said to him, "Thou art my Lord and my God," he must acknowledge him as fully and as truly to be his God as his Lord. And,

Secondly, Since Thomas had learned from the law, there was one God alone, he could not own Christ as another God, but as the same in essence with him. Note, Thirdly, That though Christ was still concerned for the honour of the Father, he doth not reprehend Thomas for thus owning him as his God, but doth attest that he believed aright concerning him, which shows that he did not mistake in owning the divinity of Christ. And whereas Woltzogenius here notes, that "Christ was never called God before his resurrection," when he was to be worshipped as a divine Lord; as it is evident that his resurrection could not make him God, if he had been a creature only, nor justify the worship of a creature as God, so is the reason of this evident, because he acted as a prophet whilst he was on earth, speaking still in his Father's name, and as one sent from him, it being essential to a prophet to speak in the name of him whose prophet he is (see the preface to this gospel, and the note on Mark xiii. 32).

[11] Ver. 29. Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed.] For faith is not praiseworthy, upon this account, that we believe what we see with our eyes, and therefore can no longer doubt of; but on this account, that we yield to arguments highly probable, and against which we have nothing solid to object, and such evidence as wise men consent to, and act by, in the most important concernments of this present life; because this shows a greater affection to the objects of our faith, and a better inclination to obey the will of God.

30 ¶ And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book:

31 But these are written, that ye might [12] believe that Jesus is the Christ, the (only-begotten) Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.

[12] Ver. 31. But these things were written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ.] Hence the Socinians argue, that they must err who think it was the intendment of this gospel to show that Jesus Christ was the Word of God, begotten of the Father before all worlds, and therefore a divine person; whereas the apostle here plainly speaks only of the miracles wrought by Christ, which we acknowledged to be done to prove him the Messiah promised to the Jews, and that prophet which was to come into the world, as St. John here speaks; but yet this hinders not his being God, or the Word of God, coexistent with the Father before all worlds. Moreover, the apostle adds, these things were done to prove he was "the Son of God:" now this even the Jews interpreted as a form of words by which Christ made himself equal with God (see the notes on x. 33, xix. 7). Some also think that St. John ended here his gospel, and that the following chapter was written by some other hands; but these words give no ground for this imagination, since other apostles, after they had seemed to have concluded their epistles, add some new matter, as may be seen in the conclusions of the epistles to the Romans and to the Hebrews (see the note on xxi. 24).

CHAPTER XXI.

1 [1] After these things Jesus shewed himself again to the (greatest part of the) disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise shewed he himself.

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other (in all seven) of his disciples.

3 Simon Peter saith unto them, I (will) go a fishing. They say unto him, We also (will) go with thee. They (then) went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; [2] and that night they caught nothing.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples (then) knew not that it was Jesus (who stood there).

5 Then Jesus saith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No.

6 And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find (fishes). They cast therefore (the net as he had said), and now (the draught was so great, that) they were not (well) able to draw it (along) for the multitude of fishes (enclosed in the net).

7 Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, It is the Lord (Jesus who hath done this). Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his [3] fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked) (to his shirt), and did cast himself into the sea (to swim first to Jesus).

8 And the other disciples came in a little ship; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,) dragging the net with (the) fishes (in it.

9 And) As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread (by it, all provided miraculously by Christ).

10 Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up (into the boat), and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

12 Jesus saith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? (as) knowing that it was the Lord.

13 [4] Jesus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

14 This is now the third time that Jesus shewed himself to (the body of) his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead.

15 ¶ So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, [5] lovest thou me more than these (occupations thou art now employed in)?

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 1. Μετὰ ταῦτα, After these things.] i. e. After his first apparition, mentioned xx. 20, and his second, mentioned ver. 26, he appeared now τρίτον, "the third time," ver. 14.

[2] Ver. 3. In that night they caught nothing.] Christ being then absent; but when he is present, they, having his command, enclose a very great multitude of fishes, to teach them, that though in preaching of the gospel they were insufficient to do any thing of themselves (2. Cor. iii. 5); yet, having his command to go and teach all nations, and the promise of his presence with them, they should be wonderfully successful in bringing many to the faith. It is also very likely they went then a fishing to supply their own want of necessaries; Christ therefore, by this draught of fishes, not only works a miracle to confirm them in the belief of his divine power, but to inform them also, that while they were employed in doing what he did command them, they should never want what was convenient for them; and as, by miraculously providing bread and fish broiling on the fire (ver. 9), he showed his ability to do so, so by this numerous draught of fishes he supplied them with necessaries till the Holy Ghost should come upon them to fit them for their ministry.

[3] Ver. 7. He girt about him, τὸν ἐπενδύτην, his fisher's coat, ἦν γὰρ γυμνός, for he was naked.] Suidas and Phavorinus say ἐπενδύτης is ἱμάτιον τὸ ἐσώτατον, "the inner garment," but Julius Pollux says it was χιτὼν ὁ ἔξωθεν, "the outward coat;" the context here seems to make it most probable it was his inward garment next his shirt: for "he was naked," signifies he only had his shirt on; for in this sense only Saul lay naked among the prophets (1 Sam. xix. 24), and David was naked when he danced before the ark (2 Sam. vi. 20), i. e. he had put off his royal robe (see the note on Mark xiv. 51, see also Job xxii. 6, xxiv. 7, Isa. xx. 2, 3, 1 Cor. iv. 11).

[4] Ver. 13. Jesus taketh bread, and giveth to them, and fish likewise.] As the father of the family he both makes provision for them, and gives to every man his portion: that he himself did eat is not said; yet since St. Peter saith, they "did eat and drink with him after his resurrection" (Acts x. 41), and St. Luke saith that "he did eat before them" (Luke xxiv. 42, 43), as he did that for confirmation of his resurrection, so is it probable he might eat here for the same end.

[5] Ver. 15. Lovest thou me, πλεῖον τούτων, more than these?] Most interpreters think Christ asketh whether St. Peter loved him more than the other disciples; but as Peter

He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, (Leave then these things and employments, and) feed my lambs (my church, shortly to be set up by the new converts both of Jews and gentiles).

16 He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him (again), Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my sheep (i. e. my church thus gathered).

17 He saith unto him the third time (that his threefold denial of him before the unbelievers might be atoned for by a threefold confession of his affection to him before his disciples), Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, [6] Lord, thou knowest all things; (and therefore) thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

18 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest (without restraint): but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee (to the pillar where thou shalt be scourged), and (then) carry thee (to the cross) whither (according to thy natural desires) thou wouldest not (be).

19 This spake he (Jesus), signifying by what (kind of) death he should glorify God (by this confirmation of the Christian faith). And when he had spoken this, he (rose up and walked, and) saith unto him, Follow me (to intimate to him that he was to follow him in that kind of death he had suffered).

20 Then Peter (who followed him), turning (his head) about, seeth (St. John) the disciple whom Jesus loved following (also; viz.) which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee? (John xiii. 25.)

21 Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and (Gr. but) what shall this man do? (how shall it fare with him?)

22 Jesus saith unto him, [7] If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.

23 Then went this saying abroad among the brethren (who afterward understood that this was spoken of his departure from this life), that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come (in judgment against Jerusalem, to destroy it by the Romans), what is that to thee?

24 [8] This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know (sure I am) that his testimony is true.

25 And there are also many other things which could not answer to this question unless he knew their hearts, so could he not show he did this by feeding Christ's sheep, unless he fed them more than they. It is therefore observable, that after Christ had given them a commission to preach the gospel (John xx. 21, 22), Peter betakes himself to his fishing trade; Christ therefore here inquires whether he loved him more than these nets and fisher-boats, about which he was now employed, and saith, that if indeed he did so, he should leave them, and wholly employ himself in feeding his sheep and lambs. Some of the fathers add, that Christ makes this inquiry thrice, that Peter by a threefold confession might atone for his threefold denial. They who hence argue for the supremacy of Peter above the rest of the apostles, are vain in their imaginations; for if by these words Christ required Peter to feed all his sheep and lambs, it is certain he was wanting in his duty; for he never exercised one act of supremacy over the rest of the apostles, but, being sent by them, obeyed (Acts viii. 14), and, being reproved by St. Paul, he held his peace, and was so far from feeding all Christ's sheep, that he never fed any of the province of St. Paul. Did he feed those apostles on whom the same Holy Ghost fell, who had the same commission, given at the same time, and in the same words, to preach the gospel to all nations, or to every creature? If not, they were not in the number of the sheep, whom Peter is here bid to feed: or did all other pastors receive commission from St. Peter to feed Christ's sheep? Did St. Paul, who doth so solemnly declare he had not his commission "from man, neither by man?" (Gal. i. 1.) Did any of the bishops of Asia? No: St. Paul assures us the Holy Ghost had made them overseers of the flock of Christ (Acts xx. 28). No, saith Pseudo-Ambrosius,* not Peter only, sed nos cum eo, "but we with him have received commission to feed Christ's sheep;" and what is here said to Peter, "Feed my sheep," ad omnes dicitur, is, saith St. Austin,† said to all; and, saith St. Basil,‡ Christ here gave τὴν ἴσην ἐξουσίαν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐφεξῆς ποιμέσι καὶ διδασκάλοις, "the same power to all ensuing pastors and teachers."

---

[6] Ver. 17. Lord, σὺ πάντα οἶδας, thou knowest all things.] Schlictingius here saith, that Christ is here said to know all things, because he knew many things. But this destroys St. Peter's argument; for it follows not that Christ knew the sincerity of St. Peter's heart, and his affection towards him, unless he knew the secrets of all hearts. This therefore is an argument that Christ was truly God, it being God alone to whom the secrets of all hearts lie open (1 Kings viii. 39).

[7] Ver. 22. If I will that he stay ἕως ἔρχομαι, till I come.] viz. To the destruction of Jerusalem, after which this apostle lived a long time, and he alone did so, the other apostles being dead before; of this coming the prophet Joel speaks, saying, "The sun shall be turned into darkness, πρὶν ἐλθεῖν, before the great and terrible day of the Lord cometh," Joel ii. 31 (see ver. 1); so Mal. iii. 1, 2, ἰδοὺ ἔρχεται, "Behold, he cometh—but who shall abide the day of his coming?" and, iv. 1, ἰδοὺ ἔρχεται ἡμέρα Κυρίου, "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, which burneth as a furnace;" and, ver. 6, μὴ ἐλθὼν, "Lest coming he smite the land with a curse." In the New Testament we have frequent mention of this "coming" of our Lord: for when our Lord spake of the destruction of the temple, the apostles ask, "What is the sign τῆς σῆς παρουσίας, "of thy coming," Matt. xxiv. 3, and he tells them that παρουσία, "the coming of the Son of man will be as lightning," ver. 27, and then should they see "the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven," ver. 30, that "as it was in the days of Noe, so should it be at the coming of the Son of man," ver. 37. 39, bidding them watch, "because they know not when their Lord cometh," ver. 42. 44 (see Matt. xvi. 28, Heb. x. 27, James v. 9, and the notes there, and on 2 Thess. ii. 1). And note here, that whereas it is said, that the scripture mentions only two comings of our Lord, one when he came and lived on earth, the other at the day of judgment, when "he shall come ἐκ δευτέρου, a second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. ix. 20), this is indeed no objection against this intermediate advent so frequently and plainly mentioned in the New Testament; this being not a personal advent, by a descent of Christ from heaven, but only a coming of our Lord by the Roman army, and by signs from heaven, and in the clouds of their approaching ruin. Wonderful here are the words of Theophylact; for he not only saith, that some held that John then lived, and was to do so till the coming of antichrist, when he, with Elias, was to preach Christ, and to be slain by antichrist, but adds this as the import of Christ's words, "What if I will that he tarry till I come," that he should remain in Galilee till the destruction of Jerusalem, as, saith he, John did till the coming of Vespasian, and only departed when Jerusalem was to be taken.

[8] Ver. 24. This is the disciple who testifies of these things, and wrote these things, καὶ οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἀληθὴς ἐστιν ἡ μαρτυρία αὐτοῦ, and we know that his testimony is true.] Here some tell us that this chapter was writ by many, and therefore not by St. John, and this they conclude from the word οἴδαμεν, "we know," but without ground: for Dr. Lightfoot here observes, that "we know," in the Chaldee dialect, is often used of one. So Mary Magdalene saith of herself, "They have taken the Lord out of the sepulchre, καὶ οὐκ οἴδαμεν, and we

---

* De Sacerd. cap. 2. † De Agone Christi, cap. 30.
‡ Constit. Mon. cap. 22.

Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I [9] suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written (i. e. they would be so many that they would seem incredible to the world to be done by one man) Amen.

know not where they have laid him:" so St. Paul often, οἴδαμεν γὰρ, "For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am carnal," 1 Thess. ii. 18, ἠθελήσαμεν—ἐγὼ μὲν Παῦλος, "We would have come to you, I Paul:" so this apostle saith of himself, ἡμεῖς μαρτυροῦμεν, "We testify," Eph. iii. 12, and that here it is only one that speaketh, is demonstrated from the following word, οἶμαι, "I suppose." Nay, even these words show that all the preceding words of this chapter were writ by this disciple, and therefore were not written by the Asiatic bishops: and therefore Theophylact here saith περὶ ἑμαυτοῦ λέγω ὅτι ἀληθεύω.

[9] Ver. 25. Οὐδὲ αὐτὸν οἶμαι τὸν κόσμον χωρῆσαι τὰ γραφόμενα βιβλία, I suppose the world itself would not contain the books which should be written.] Here most interpreters say the apostle's words contain a great hyperbole, with a catachresis, but Origen avoids them both, declaring that the apostle saith, the world would not receive the books written, not for the multitude of the books, but for the greatness of the works recorded in them.* So the word is used by this evangelist, introducing Christ saying to the Jews, "My word οὐ χωρεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, "is not received by you:" so Eusebius saith, that the men of former ages οὐκ ἦν πῶ χωρεῖν, "were not able to receive Christ's doctrine" (lib. i. cap. 1, p. 8): so Christ saith, οὐ πάντες χωρεῖν, "All men cannot receive this saying" (Matt. xix. 11): and Philo saith,† "There are very many things in the world, ἃ διὰ μέγεθος ἀνθρώπινος λογισμὸς οὐ χωρεῖ, which for their greatness human reason cannot comprehend." See many other examples of this sense of the word in Stephanus, and in Grotius on Matt. xix. 11.

* Τὸ γὰρ μὴ χωρεῖν τὸν κόσμον τὰ γραφόμενα βιβλία οὐ διὰ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν γραμμάτων, ὥς τίνες ἐνδεκτέον, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ μέγεθος τῶν πραγμάτων. Philoc. cap. 15, p. 46.

† De Mundo, p. 889.

A SERMON

ON JOHN VII. 47—49.

"Are ye also deceived? Have any of the rulers, or of the pharisees, believed on him? But this people, who knoweth not the law, is accursed."

§. 1. The miracles of our blessed Saviour, by which his doctrine was confirmed, were so exceeding many, and exceeding great, that they prevailed on those plain-hearted people who beheld them, to believe that he who wrought them was indeed the Christ: for "many of the people believed on him, saying, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these" (ver. 31). These apprehensions of the vulgar did so alarm the chief priests and pharisees, who saw their interest, authority, and credit with the people, must decline as fast as that of Christ's prevailed, that they forthwith dispatched their officers to take him, and bring him to them (ver. 32). These officers, when they had heard the gracious words which issued from the mouth of Christ, were themselves taken by him: they, who were sent to bring Christ to the priests and pharisees, were themselves brought to Christ; and so these converts neglect to do the office of the high-priest's sergeants: and being asked the reason why they had not brought Christ, they boldly answer, that they had heard such gracious and heavenly words proceeding from him, as never man before him spake; and therefore could not think it fit to apprehend so excellent a person as he was. The pharisees, hearing this answer, do presently conclude, their officers must be deceived in these kind thoughts of Christ, and offer this, as they supposed, convincing argument to prove it; viz. that though the giddy multitude, who had no knowledge of the law, and therefore no capacity to understand the mind of God contained in it, might be inclined to think that Jesus was indeed the Christ: yet, since the rulers of the church, the Sanhedrin, seeing the doctors and expounders of the law, the scribes and pharisees believed not on him, but did unanimously reject him as a vile impostor, they must be certainly deceived, who apprehended otherwise concerning him; because they followed the verdict of the ignorant and giddy multitude, in opposition to the better judgments and the mature deliberations of their church guides and learned clerks.

Now amongst all the arguments by which the emissaries of the church of Rome endeavour to beguile unstable souls, and beget in them a suspicion that they have been seduced from the church, none is more plausible than this, which by the pharisees is here laid down. I therefore shall endeavour,

1. To propound the argument, which is here urged by the pharisees to prove our Jesus could not be the true Messiah, in its full strength and vigour. And,

2. To show that what the papists do produce to prove that protestants must be deceived, is exactly parallel to what the pharisees did, or might, produce against our Saviour; and the same arguments might with equal reason have been urged by the unbelieving Jews against our Lord's disciples, and those who laid the first foundations of, and became early converts to, the Christian faith, as they are urged by the papists against our departure from the church of Rome.

§. 2. Now the argument contained in the text is this, viz. You must be certainly deceived if you believe that Jesus is the Christ; because you do, by entertaining this persuasion, contradict the judgment of your church guides, which God hath set over you. For they have frequently assembled for the determination of this grand debate, "Whether this Jesus was the Messiah promised to the Jews, or not," and they have constantly determined that he was not the Christ; and have unanimously concluded that he deserved to be punished as a vile impostor, and that all who did confess that he was the Christ should be excommunicated. In an assembly consisting of chief priests and pharisees, they positively declare that Christ could be no prophet, because he was a Galilean (John vii. 41, 42): this all, say they, who search the scriptures, may plainly see (ver. 52). Moreover, they determine in my text, that all, who so esteemed him, were themselves deceived, and that they lay exposed to this delusion for want of knowledge in the law (ver. 47—49). In the ninth chapter of St. John, ver. 16, the pharisees again declare, that "this man could not be of God, because he did not keep the sabbath." Moreover, these pharisees, and other rulers of the church, συνετέθειντο, "determined and agreed together, that whosoever did confess that Jesus was the Christ should suffer excommunication" (John ix. 22, xii. 42). They therefore thought themselves infallibly certain (if excommunication be, as R. H.* informs us, an evidence of a claim to be infallible), that Christ was not the true Messiah. Elsewhere the scribes and pharisees do positively conclude that Christ did only "cast out devils through Beelzebub" (Mark iii. 22). After some days they again call a council, συνέδριον συνήγαγον, and there determined that it was fit that Christ should die (John xi. 47. 50. 53): this the high-priest declares, and all the pharisees and the chief priests agree to execute (Luke xxii. 66). A full assembly, consisting of the high-priest, and all the chief priests, presbyters, and scribes, Christ being brought before their council, do with one voice declare, that he was worthy to die as a blasphemer, and also that "by their law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God." After his death, the chief priests and the pharisees, with one consent, pronounce him a deceiver (Matt. xxvii. 63). When the disciples began to witness that he was risen from the dead, the high-priests, rulers, elders, scribes, and all the kindred of the high-priest, assemble at Jerusalem, and strictly do command them "not to speak at all, nor teach, in the name of Jesus" (Acts iv. 6. 18). Soon after, the high-priest, the Sanhedrin, and all the elders of Israel, being met in council, repeat the same command, and chastise the apostles for their disobedience to it (Acts v. 40). If therefore the decrees of many councils, consisting of the guides of the whole Jewish church, may be esteemed sufficient to decide a controversy, it must be certain that Jesus Christ was not the true Messiah, promised to the Jews, but a deceiver and blasphemer. Now as a Romanist,* having produced five provincial and two general councils, falsely so called, for that portentous doctrine of transubstantiation, saith, "If the decrees of so many synods, so often weighing the adversaries' reasons and evidences, were not sufficient for settling such a point, at least as to the obedience of future silence, and noncontradiction, and as to suffering the church to enjoy her peace, what can hereafter be sufficient? Or can we ever hope that any controversy shall be finally determined or ended by any future council, if this (of the Messiah) is not by these forepast? Can there be any ground here to question the integrity or lawful proceedings of so many councils, all concurring in the same judgment (for a corporal presence, saith the Romanist, that Christ was a deceiver, saith the Jew)? Or could there be a new light in this point attainable in those times (by the private person, or Christian convert), which those (guides of the Jewish church, who condemned your Jesus) were not capable, or had no notice of?"

* Disc. ch. 4, §. 64, 65. 69, 70

2. They who so often and so unanimously condemn your Saviour and his doctrine, saith the Jew, were the church guides, by God appointed to "teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord had spoken to them by the hand of Moses, to teach Jacob his judgments, and Israel his law," and by whose lips the knowledge of it was to be preserved (Lev. x. 11, Deut. xxxiii. 10). They were the men who are in scripture styled the "messengers (or the ambassadors) of the Lord of hosts" (Mal. ii. 7); that is, the men appointed by him to declare his message to the people. They were the men ordained to "minister before the Lord in every controversial matter," men who were "set for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies" (Deut. xvii. 8. 12, 2 Chron. xix. 8). "In controversy they shall stand in judgment (saith the Lord), and by their word shall every controversy be tried" (Deut. xxi. 5, xvii. 12, Ezek. xliv. 24). Wherefore, to act in opposition to the judgment of these guides must be to act presumptuously, as God himself declares, to despise the verdict of God's messengers, and, in a controversial matter of the highest moment, to reject the sentence of those men who are by God ordained to define it, and by whose words, according to his ordinance, it must be tried.

3. As for the common people, who in this matter did oppose their private judgments to the decrees of their church guides, not acquiescing in their conciliar determinations, that your Jesus was not the true Messiah, they, saith the Jew, must act against that rule, which both the law of Moses and the prophets have prescribed; for by that law they are commanded, under pain of death, when any controversy should arise among them, "to go to the priests and Levites, and to the judge then living, to inquire the sentence of judgment from his mouth, and to do according to the sentence which they shall show them, and according to all that they inform them, not declining from it to the right hand, nor to the left" (Deut. xvii. 8—11). They by the prophets are instructed to "ask the priests concerning the law," and to "seek the knowledge of it from their mouths" (Hag. ii. 11, Mal. ii. 7). They therefore stood obliged to assent to the determinations of the Sanhedrin, and the conciliar decrees of priests and Levites, scribes and pharisees, confirmed by the high-priest, and so they were obliged to believe that, according to the true intent and meaning of the law, your Jesus could not be the true Messiah. And consequently they must err, who, quitting the decisions of the pharisees, and other rulers of the church, embrace that tenet of the ignorant and giddy multitude.

§. 3. Thus the Jews pleaded from scripture against our blessed Lord. And if you do compare these pleas, and others of like nature, which might be offered from the scriptures by the Jew, with that the Romanists do offer for the infallibility of any of their councils, you will soon find that all their pleas for this infallibility from the New Testament are paralleled, or rather over-balanced, with places of like nature in the Old, which do more strongly plead for the infallibility of the high-priest and rulers of the Jewish church. For,

1. Do the Romanists plead Christ's promise to be "for ever with the church?" (Matt. xxviii. 20.)

Ans. The Jews had equal reason to expect God's presence among them, because he promised "to dwell among the children of Israel, to meet them at the tabernacle of the congregation, and there speak with them" (Exod. xxix. 42—45), to "reign over them in Zion, from henceforth and for ever" (Micah iv. 7). He "chose Zion for his habitation," and said of it, "This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell" (Ps. cxxxii. 13, 14); and of Jerusalem, "that he would put his name for ever in that place, and that his eyes and his heart should be there for ever" (2 Chron. vii. 16).

2. Do they add that Christ had promised, that "where two or three are gathered together in his name, he will be in the midst of them?" (Matt. xviii. 20.)

Ans. God also promised to the Jews, that he would "bless them out of Zion" (Ps. cxxxiv. 3), and that "wheresoever he did record his name, there would he come and bless his people" (Exod. xx. 24.)

3. Do they allege the sayings of our Lord to his disciples; viz. "He that heareth you, heareth me" (Luke x. 16); he who neglects to hear the church shall be accounted as "a heathen and a publican?" (Matt. xviii. 17.)

Ans. God also said, that "he who will not hearken to the priest that stands to minister before the Lord, even that man shall die for his presumption" (Deut. xvii. 12).

4. Do they say that Christ's apostles commanded Christians "to obey those that had the rule over them, and to follow their faith?" (Heb. xiii. 7. 17.)

Ans. Our Jesus did command his hearers to "do all that the scribes and pharisees did say unto them" (Matt. xxiii. 3), and that because of their authority derived from Moses; and God himself commanded all his people to do "according to all that they should be informed of by the priests" (Deut. xvii. 10). And,

5. Do they plead Christ's promise made to his apostles, that "he would send the Spirit of truth to guide them into all truth?" (John xiv. 26, xvi. 13.)

Ans. Whereas this promise doth personally belong to the apostles, and not to their successors—for it is a promise "to bring to their remembrance (by his Spirit) what he (before) had said to them" (John xiv. 26), and to "show them things to come" (John xvi. 13), to which Spirit of prophecy the Roman doctors do not now pretend;—I say, whereas this promise did belong to the apostles only, God stood obliged by covenant to cause his Holy Spirit to remain among the rulers of the Jewish church: for thus he speaks, "According to the words that I covenanted with you, when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remains among you" (Hag. ii. 5). Moreover, God promised to the Sanhedrin that "he would put the spirit of Moses upon them" (Numb. xi. 17), and in compliance with that promise he came down in a cloud, and took the spirit, which was upon Moses, and gave it to the seventy elders, so that "they prophesied, and did not cease." Or,

6. Do they argue for their infallibility, because the church is styled by St. Paul, "the pillar and the ground of truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15), by reason of that truth which is preserved by her governors?

Ans. God also hath declared, touching his priests, that "the law of truth was in their mouth" (Mal. ii. 6); and of

* Rational Account, disc. i. ch. 6, §. 59, p. 58.

Jerusalem, that "she should be called the city of truth" (Zech. viii. 3). And if the church of Judah hath since failed, so also hath the church of Ephesus, of which alone St. Paul affirmeth that it was the "pillar and the ground of truth."

7. Do they conclude that the church guides must be infallible, because "God hath placed in the church, some apostles, some prophets, some pastors, and some teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine" (Eph. iv. 11, 12).

Ans. Were not the Jewish priests placed also for this end, for the work of their ministry, the perfecting of their saints, the edifying of their flocks? Were not their lips to preserve that knowledge, which should restrain the people from their errors? Were not they appointed "to heal that which was sick, and bring again that which was strayed?" (Ezek. xxxiv. 4.) Or,

Lastly, Do they triumph in that promise of our Lord, that the "gates of hell should not prevail against the church?" (Matt. xvi. 18.)

Ans. God also promised, that his "covenant made with the Levites, priests, and ministers," should be as certain and perpetual as that of day and night (Jer. xxxiii. 20, 21). So that I need not add, that by this phrase Christ only promiseth, that pious Christians shall not for ever be detained under the power of the grave; which I have elsewhere shown to be the natural and only import of these words, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church."

Moreover, the plain meaning of the foregoing words, viz. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church," is, as Tertullian* well informs us, this: Thou who hast, first of all my disciples, acknowledged me to be the Christ, thou shalt first preach this doctrine to the world, and by so doing lay the first foundation of a Christian church: which he accordingly performed, first laying the foundation of a church† among the Jews by the conversion of three thousand souls; and after, laying the foundation of a church among the gentiles, by the conversion of Cornelius and his friends; Christ having, to fulfil his promise, "made choice of him, among the rest of the apostles, that the gentiles by his mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe."‡ Now to pretend to be Peter's successor in this matter, is in effect to say, that the foundations of a Christian church are not yet laid.

If therefore Roman Catholics conclude from these ambiguous and obscure places for the infallibility of councils, or the major part of the church guides concurring with the pope in any sentence or decree, although these places do not speak one syllable of any pope, or major part of the church guides, and much less of the Romish prelate, and less of their infallible assistance, what ovations and triumphs would they have made, had it been said expressly of their cardinals and councils, as it is said of Jewish priests, that they were set for judgment and for controversy? had God fixed his glorious presence at Rome, as he did at Jerusalem, and settled there a seat of judgment, and a continual court of highest judicature, as was that Sanhedrin, which in Jerusalem was settled? had he dwelt in St. Peter's, as he dwelt in the temple? had he left with them, as he did with the Jewish priests, a standing oracle, a urim and a thummim, to consult with upon all occasions? so that this plea being much stronger for the infallibility of the superiors of the Jewish church, than for the infallibility of the whole western church, or any of its councils, the Roman doctors must acknowledge, either that they fallaciously urge it against protestants, or must confess that it stands also good against the Christian, and is a confirmation of all those traditions which were condemned by our Saviour, and a sufficient plea for all those errors and corruptions, which, as the prophets do complain, were generally taught and practised by the church guides in the declining ages of the Jewish church: for* if these arguments be good now, they were so then; and if they were good then, for aught that I can see, the high priest, and the major part of the church rulers of the Jews, were always in the right; and Christ, and his apostles, with the holy prophets, must be in the wrong.

§. 4. Moreover, had we no evidence from scripture, may the Jew say, in prosecution of this argument, reason seems very strongly to conclude for this submission of the common people, and some few priests, to the concurring judgments of their church guides, and of the major part of the Jews, who joined with them in condemnation of your Jesus as a blasphemer and false prophet, and of his followers as heretics and schismatics, or men who worshipped God after that way which by the Jews was called heresy (Acts xxiv. 14), and were ringleaders of a sect (ibid. ver. 5). For, still to argue after the manner of the Romish doctors,

1. Is it not reasonable to conceive, that they who were God's ministers appointed for this very thing to judge in controversial matters and to make trial of such as did pretend to prophecy, as was the Jewish Sanhedrin; I say, is it not reasonable to conceive that the assistance of the Holy Spirit should be vouchsafed to these rulers of the church and doctors of the law, rather than to those common people, who bore no such relation to God, had no commission from him to direct others in the meaning of his word, but had so many and such express injunctions to seek it at the mouth of their church guides? Can we imagine that these pharisees and rulers should be the men ordained by God for controversies, and by whose words they must be tried, and yet should be such blind and stupid guides, as by your Jesus they were said to be, that "he who was led by them must fall into the ditch?"

Moreover, were no assistance from above to be expected in this case, it is not reasonable to think that these great doctors of the law, those numerous priests, who made it their whole business to study and search out the meaning of the law of Moses, those members of the Sanhedrin,† who were still chosen out of the most learned persons, and the most eminent for wisdom; I say, may we not reasonably conceive such persons to be fitter and more able judges of the sense and meaning of that law, or of the truth of any miracles pretended to be wrought by Christ or his apostles, than was that rude and giddy multitude, which had no knowledge of the law?‡ "They therefore considering their superiors' study and learning in such things divine, and also their own ignorance; they considering both the special ordination and commission of their superiors from God to teach them in the necessary truth, and his charge laid upon them to obey their ecclesiastical superiors, ought to depend upon and adhere to their directions so much the more in any point of faith, by how much it is esteemed more necessary, as wherein there is a much greater hazard if they should err."

3. All that your gospel doth suggest, or reason may pretend, for the exemption of the first Jewish converts from obedience to these decrees of their superiors in the Jewish church, may, saith the Jew, be fully answered from the plain principles, and almost in the words, of Roman Catholics. For, to proceed in the expressions of R. H., the guide in controversies, with very little variation of them;

§. 5. 1. Will you affirm, that all the priests and rulers, scribes and pharisees, and the whole Sanhedrin, acted against their faith and conscience in these determinations by which your Jesus was condemned as an impostor?

Ans. R. H.§ will tell you, "There is a moral certainty that so many such persons cannot conspire in such a matter, viz. a necessary to salvation, to falsify the truth against their own belief and conscience to their subjects and posterity, with an anathema to all dissenters," or an excommunication of all who preached and believed that Christ was the Messiah promised to the Jews, and was already risen from the dead, when

* Si, quia dixerit Petro Dominus, "Super hanc petram ædificabo ecclesiam meam," idcircò præsumis et ad te derivâsse solvendi et ligandi potestatem, qualis es evertens et commutans manifestam Domini intentionem personalitèr (N. B.) hoc Petro conferentem, sic enim et exitus docet, in ipso ecclesia exstructa est, id est, per ipsum.—Ipse primus in Christi baptismo reseravit aditum cœlestis regni. De Pudicitia, cap. 21, p. 574, B.

† Acts ii. 41. ‡ Acts xv. 7.

* Vid. Stillingfleet's Sermon upon Acts xxiv. 14, p. 39.

† Vid. Ainsw. in Numb. xi. 16, 17.

‡ R. H., Discourse, ch. 13, p. 13.

§ Disc. i. ch. 3, §. 37, 38, p. 26.

their own consciences could tell them that these things were true. * "If any can be so uncharitable as to credit of them so great a wickedness, that the supreme councils of the (Jewish) church should with design decree an error contrary to their faith (or knowledge) in this necessary matter, and then enjoin all their subjects to believe it under anathema," he must believe that "they most certainly do devote themselves to eternal perdition." And therefore, "if not out of charity or reverence to such sacred persons, yet from the irrationality of such a defence, it is much better to pass over this objection."

2. Will you say that these superiors were only to be appealed to in doubtful matters, and that this thing, "Whether the scriptures declared your Jesus to be the true Messiah," was not doubtful?

Ans. R. H. informs you,† that "a right judgment cannot but account all those places doubtful, in the sense whereof either the ancient or present major part of Christianity are of a contrary judgment from himself." That must be therefore doubtful, according to the ground and reason of this rule, which you presume not to be doubtful, since it was that in which the major part of the then present Jewish church was of a contrary judgment from the Christian convert.

3. Will you plead, in favour of the vulgar, that they were bound to hearken to these Jewish guides no longer than they followed the rule of scriptures?

Ans. Be it so; but, saith R. H.,† "Who is appointed judge of these supreme judges, when they transgress against this rule? Their subjects? Who are from them to learn the sense of the rule, where difficult and disputed, and who are bidden to follow their faith? The right exercise of judgment will not judge so." For if the vulgar may pass this judgment on the decrees of many councils, and the concurring judgment of their superiors and church guides, I hope the matter must be evident, even to the vulgar sort, that notwithstanding the contrary judgment of chief priests and rulers, scribes, pharisees, and elders, and almost all the Jewish nation, that sense of scripture must be false, which their ecclesiastical guides alleged to prove that Jesus was not the true Messiah, and that, "according to their law, he was to die;" and that sense of the scripture must be true, which by the apostles and their converts was alleged to prove that Jesus was the Messiah promised to the Jews. Now, "how vainly," saith R. H.,§ "doth any one pretend or promise himself a certainty of any thing wherein (so many) councils, and a much major part of the church, having all the same means of certainty as he, judgeth contrary; where it seems‖ the scripture may be so doubtful, that the sense of the (then) catholic church, or its (greatest) councils, they say, can be to them no certain or infallible interpreter of it, where the judgment or common reason of (these) councils thinks itself so certain of the contrary, as to anathemize dissenters (or cast them out of the church)? On what grounds here these (private) persons, or (new erected) churches, could assure themselves that their own sense of scripture was true, they having left that of the churches, councils, and of a major part of (Jews), who also judged their sense false, I understand not: surely they will not say they have this certainty from the scripture, because the true sense thereof is the thing so mainly questioned, and the certainty or infallibility of the traditive sense of the (Jewish) church they renounced; and then, which only is left, their own judgment, or their own common reason, when that of (their greatest) councils, or major part of (their) church guides, differs from it, one would think should be a more fallible ground to them than the judgment or common reason of the church. For¶ (a man) to presume himself certain in a matter of faith, or in his own sense of scripture (though the literal expression be never so clear), where so many learned and his superiors (comparing other texts, &c.), are of a contrary judgment; this," saith R. H., "is the same as if, in a matter of sense, a dim-sighted person should profess himself certain that an object is white, when a multitude of others, the most clear-sighted that can be found, having all the same means of a right sensation as he hath, pronounce it black, or of another colour." Moreover,* if these scriptures or reasons be so clear, even to the ignorant and unlearned Jews, must they not be as clear to their church guides? And may not then their judgments more securely be relied upon, at least for any thing which is presumed to be clear? "For if the scriptures† be maintained so clear in necessaries, that every one using a right endeavour cannot mistake in them; then shall the church governors much rather, by reason of this clearness obvious to every rustic, not err in them; and so shall the people, the more the rule of faith is proved to be clear, the more securely rely on, and be referred in them to their direction."

4. If you pretend a more sincere endeavour in those few converts, to find out the sense of scripture, or search out the truth in these matters; which, in the case of the Bereans, your scripture seemeth to assert:

Ans. I answer still with the same author,‡ "That since all parties do pretend sincere endeavour in the right understanding of the scriptures, and after it do differ so much in their sense of it, it follows, that such sincere endeavours being indifferently allowed to all parties, the sense of scripture (and the verdict of true reason) ought to be pronounced clear, if on any, on that side as the major part doth apprehend it (which certainly was not the primitive converts, but the unbelieving Jews and their ecclesiastical superiors)." For surely§ we have reason to presume that the chief guides of the church, in their consults concerning a point necessary to salvation delivered in scripture (as that of the Messiah was), use at least as much endeavour as a plain rustic doth to understand the meaning of it." And, "whatsoever other thing is supposed necessary besides sincere endeavour, or is understood to be included in it (as freedom from passion and secular interest, or also a freely professing the truths which their sincere endeavour discovers to them), none can rationally imagine, but that the supreme church governors should be as much or more disengaged herein than private men:" and,‖ "that passion and interest blind private men or ourselves sooner than general councils or a major part of the church."

See therefore here the wisdom of the unbelieving Jews, "who to preserve themselves from erring in this matter, made use of the securest way that reason could imagine," saith R. H.,¶ "or that Christians are prescribed, whilst for the sense of the scriptures that were controverted in this point of the Messiah, they chose not to rely on their own judgments, but on that of the supremest guides of the church, and judges of divine truth, that were afforded them on earth; and so if they erred, yet took the wisest course to have missed erring, that religion or reason could dictate. To which guides also the subjects of this former communion all believed submission of their private judgments to be due, and to be commanded; from whence also it follows, that till they are convinced of error in this point, viz. that no submission was due" to the decrees of all these councils, and the concurring judgment of those spiritual guides by whom your Jesus was condemned, "they are not capable of being convinced in any other matter."

If, lastly, you affirm that the common people had conviction and demonstration from the miracles of Christ of the falsehood of the decrees, and the interpretations of their church guides in this matter, and of the truth of that Christianity which they embraced in opposition to those said decrees:

Ans. This I confess is a great truth; but then the Roman doctors cannot plead it without rejecting most of their professed tenets and their strongest pleas for absolute submission to the major part of their church guides. For,

1. Admit our Saviour and his apostles wrought true miracles, how did the vulgar perceive them so to be but by their senses? and how did they infer from them the truth of Christianity, but by their private reasons? Now "the evidence of sense and reason must be both neglected," saith the

* Disc. i. ch. 3, §. 37, 38, p. 25.
† Disc. ch. 3, §. 44, p. 29. ‡ Ibid. p. 28.
§ Disc. ch. 3, §. 44, p. 143.
‖ Rational Account, disc. iii. ch. 4, §. 42, p. 179.
¶ Ibid. disc. ii. ch. 2, §. 15, p. 95.

* V. Rational Account, disc. ch. 5, §. 42, p. 141.
† Disc. ch. 3, §. 37, p. 24. ‡ Disc. ch. 1, p. 4, 5.
§ Ibid. p. 24. ‖ Ibid. p. 145.
¶ Rational Account, disc. i. ch. 7, §. 77, p. 74.
 Disc. i. ch. 6, §. 62, p. 63.

Romanist, "when a divine revelation declares any thing contrary to them;" this, and this only, being their defence of transubstantiation against the common sense and reason of mankind. Now, of the certainty of a divine revelation, or the true sense of scripture, they make the judgment of the major part of their church guides to be sufficient evidence, and so there was sufficient evidence, according to this rule, that all the miracles which Christ and his apostles seemed to work, were done in opposition to divine revelation, or the true sense of scripture.

2. Certain it is that the rulers of the Jews, and the prevailing part of the whole nation, differed from the converted Christians in their apprehensions of these miracles, and judged them all diabolical impostures, or trials of their faith, &c. "Now this seems necessary to be granted," saith R. H.* "that in what kind of knowledge soever it be (whether of our sense or reason, in whatever art or science), one can never rightly assure himself concerning his own knowledge; that he is certain of any thing for a truth, which all or most others, of the same or better abilities for their cognoscitive faculties, in all the same external means or grounds of the knowledge thereof, do pronounce an error. So that where all or most differ from me, it seems a strange pride not to imagine this defect in myself, rather than them; especially when, as all the grounds of my science are communicated to them, and when, as for my own mistakes, I cannot know exactly the extent of supernatural delusions." According therefore to this rule, it was strange pride in the first converts to Christianity among the Jews, to judge the miracles of Christ or his apostles true, when most of their own nation, as well as heathens, differed from them in that apprehension, and spoke so freely every where against the sect of Christians.

3. The truth of the pretences of our Lord and his apostles depended on two things, viz. the fulfilling of prophecies and the truth of his miracles. †"Now, according to the Roman principles, no man could be certain of the truth of either of these without the authority of the then present church. For the fulfilling of prophecies depended on the sense of many obscure places of scripture, of which, say they, the major part of the church guides must judge: and for miracles, they tell us that there is no way of judging true from false, but by the authority of the church. Now, if these things be so, what ground could the first Jewish converts have to believe Christ was the true Messiah, or a worker of true miracles, when, in believing both these things, they must oppose the authority of the then present church?"

4. All that hath been discoursed in answer to the former pleas, serves also against this: for who shall be judge whether these miracles were true, and were sufficient to confirm the Christian faith? Those persons, whose office it was to judge both of true prophets and true miracles, or those who had no power or commission so to do? Were not the Jewish Sanhedrin and other rulers of that church more able judges of the truth and the validity of any miracles pretended to be wrought by Christ and his apostles, than was that multitude which, as experience teacheth, may be imposed upon with ease? Were not those guides, who were appointed to be judges in all other matters, the proper judges of this controversy? Have we not reason to believe their judgment was as free from interest and passion, and their endeavours to search out the truth of these relations as sincere, as was the judgment or endeavours of the laity? When therefore these church guides did, notwithstanding those pretended miracles of Christ and his apostles, conclude unanimously that Christ was a deceiver, was it not absurd to say that what they so universally determined, might be discerned by any private judgment to be the clearest falsehood? that vulgar persons had demonstration in this matter against the judgment of the whole body of their guides, and that their common reason was able to discern that to be manifestly true, which the same common reason of their superiors judged to be manifestly false?

§. 6. Thus have we seen that scripture and reason do more countenance the Jew pleading against our Lord and the first Christian converts, than they do countenance the papist pleading against protestants. In the last place the Jew may argue from tradition thus, viz.

These spiritual guides, in making this determination, and passing of this judgment concerning Jesus, were guided by that rule, which, by the greatest part of Christians, I mean the Roman catholics, is highly magnified and equalled with the holy scriptures, viz. tradition, acknowledged by the present church for such. *And so your Jesus must also upon this account be deemed an impostor, or the pretences and pleadings of the Romanist against the protestant, from the tradition of the church, must be acknowledged to be in vain. For,

1. It is most certain that the Jews had a tradition generally received amongst them, that their Messiah at his coming should "restore the kingdom to Israel:" that he should subdue the nations under them, and should erect a temporal dominion in the Jewish nation over all their enemies. Even the disciples of our Lord did constantly believe this article, till by the Holy Ghost's descent upon them, they were better informed. Witness their contest, "who should be greatest in that kingdom" (Matt. xviii. 1), and the desire of the sons of Zebedee, "to sit one at his right hand, another at his left hand in it" (Matt. xx. 21). This was our faith, saith Cleophas, "we trusted that this Jesus should have redeemed our Israel" (Luke xxiv. 21): and when they were assembled, after his resurrection, their first inquiry is this: "Lord, wilt thou now restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts i. 6.) It is therefore certain, that this was the received tradition of the whole Jewish church, grounded, as they supposed, upon the scriptures, which did necessitate them to expect a glorious Messiah,† "not such a one," saith Tyrpho, "as your mean and despised Jesus was."

2. It was also a tradition which generally obtained amongst the Jews, that their Elias, who was called the Tishbite, was to appear again in person before the advent of the true Messiah: so was that place of Malachi translated by the LXX. three hundred and eighty years before our Saviour's coming; "Behold, I send unto you Elias τὸν Θεσβίτην before the great and terrible day of the Lord come" (Mal. iv. 5). "All we expect," saith Trypho, "that Christ should be anointed by Elias, who is for to come;‡ and because this Elias is not come, we think your Jesus cannot be the Christ." Accordingly the scribes, or the expounders of the law, did with one voice declare it necessary "that Elias should first come."§

3. It was the general tradition of the Jews, that the law of Moses should be perpetually obliging to them; and that it was to be observed even in the days of the Messiah. On this presumption certainly it was, that Christ's disciples, after his resurrection, were strict observers of the law of Moses for a considerable time; and so were also many thousands of the Jewish converts. St. Peter was so nice in observation of the Jewish customs, that till he was informed better by a vision, he thought such meat was utterly unlawful as was forbidden by the law; so that when in that vision he was bid "to slay and eat," he presently cries out, as a man tempted to an unlawful act, "Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten any thing that is unclean" (Acts x. 12). St. James gives an account to Paul of the great zeal that all the Jewish converts had to the law of Moses in these words, "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of the Jews there are which believe, and they are all zealous of the law" (Acts xxi. 20). He farther tells him how highly they were all offended with him, because they were informed he had taught that they were not obliged to yield obedience to the constitutions and customs of the Jewish law; and, lastly, doth exhort him to do what might be proper to cause these zealots to believe that "he also walked orderly and kept the law" (ver. 21. 24). St. Jerome‖ and Sulpicius¶ informs us, that fourteen immediate succeeding bishops, with their flocks,

* Rational Account, disc. iv. conf. 2, p. 384.

† Stillingfleet, ibid. p. 42.

* Synod. Trid. Sess. 4.

† Αὐταὶ ἡμᾶς αἱ γραφαὶ ἔνδοξον, καὶ μέγαν ἀναμένειν ἀναγκάζουσιν. Dial p. 249, B.

‡ Ἐκ δὲ τοῦ μηδὲ Ἠλίαν ἐληλύθεναι οὐδὲ τοῦτον ἀποφαινόμενον εἶναι. Dial. p. 268, A.

§ Ὅτι Ἠλίαν δεῖ ἐλθεῖν πρῶτον, Mark. ix. 11.

‖ Chron. 2.

¶ Lib. ii. cap. 45.

were all observers of the law of Moses. And by the unbelieving Jews nothing was more abhorred than the thoughts of changing their Mosiac customs: for upon this account St. Stephen was accused of blasphemy against Moses and the law, because he said, "that the Messiah should change the customs which Moses had delivered to them" (Acts vi. 11. 14). This accusation before the scribes, the elders, and high-priest, was deemed sufficient to prove him guilty of that capital offence of blasphemy. On this account they bring St. Paul before the judgment-seat of Gallio; because, say they, he did persuade men to worship God παρὰ τὸν νόμον, "against or otherwise than was commanded by the law of Moses" (Acts xviii. 13). And this opinion they grounded chiefly upon those places which seem to speak of the perpetual duration of those statutes, and say they shall be "ordinances to them for ever" (Exod. xii. 17, Lev. xxiii. 21, Deut. xxix. 29); and consequently seem to infer a declaration from the mouth of God, that they should not be altered.

Moreover, it is certain, that as the protestants condemn as sinful and pernicious many traditions and customs of the Romish church; so did that Jesus, whom Christians honour as the true Messiah, as frequently inveigh against and solemnly condemn many traditions, which then were generally received and practised in the Jewish church, as vain and sinful customs, and such as tended to make void the scriptures, and render the whole Jewish worship vain. He therefore seemeth to have been as great an enemy to ecclesiastical traditions, though they were generally owned by the then present church as such, as protestants can be esteemed.

Lastly, Certain it is that the superiors and church rulers, or at least the major and prevailing part of the church rulers, did then as firmly and unquestionably believe that those traditions which were condemned by our Jesus, and which so evidently proved, if true, he was not the Messiah promised to the Jews, were both agreeable to the word of God, expounded by their church tradition, and were delivered to them by Moses, and the patriarchs, and prophets, and were continually practised by their forefathers, as doth the Roman church believe that her traditions were taught and practised by Christ or his apostles, and by their successors throughout all ages of the church. Hence are they often styled by them, "the traditions of the ancients,* or the traditions received by succession from their fathers:" and in their later writers they are always held to be derived from God by Moses, together with the written law, and as an explication of it. Hence, like good Roman catholics, they were more "exceedingly zealous for the traditions of their fathers," than for the law itself. They† accuse all who walked not according to these customs of their fathers, as persons who forsook the law of Moses; and to do any thing against these customs of their fathers was reputed criminal. This being so,

I ask, why the tradition of the major part of the church catholic, or Christians in any age whatsoever, and their concurring judgment, that what she doth at present teach and practise, she received from Christ and his apostles, should be esteemed sufficient to render all those persons guilty of heresy and schism, who do not yield assent to what they teach, or a compliance with their practices, as Roman catholics assert; and yet that the general tradition of the then present Jewish church, even including the disciples of Christ, should not conclude them schismatics and heretics, who, being members of that church, would not assent unto what they so generally taught, or comply with that which they practised, as delivered to them by Moses, and the patriarchs, and prophets?

§. 7. But to apply these things, if it be possible, yet more particularly unto the pleadings of the Romish church, and to show the weakness and the pernicious results of their most specious pretences, I add,

1. That notwithstanding it was the duty of the priests and rulers of the Jewish church, both to preserve and teach unto the people the knowledge of the law, yet did the major part of these church guides both oft and dangerously swerve from this their duty: for they did teach and practise, and direct the people into those ways, which were destructive to the eternal welfare of their souls. God by his prophets doth complain, without exception, of them, that "they erred in vision, and stumbled in judgment;" that "the teachers of his people made lies their refuge, and under falsehood hid themselves, saying, The overflowing scourge shall not come to us" (Isa. xxviii. 7. 15); that their "interpreters had transgressed against him, that his watchmen were blind, they were all ignorant, all dumb dogs that could not bark, sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber; that they were greedy dogs, that could not have enough" (Isa. xliii. 27, lvi. 10, 11); "shepherds that could not understand; that the priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handled the law knew him not; that the pastors also transgressed against him, and the prophets prophesied by Baal; and walked after the things that did not profit" (Jer. ii. 8): that "his prophets prophesied falsely, and the priests bare rule by their means" (Jer. v. 31): that "from the prophet to the priest every one dealt falsely" (Jer. vi. 13, 14): that "they healed also the hurts of the daughter of his people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there was no peace" (Jer. viii. 9): that "his wise men had rejected the word of the Lord" (Jer. xxiii. 1, 2); and that "the pastors, whose business it was to feed his sheep, destroyed, and scattered, and drove them away, and did not visit them" (ver. 11): that "both priests and prophets were profane" (Ezek. xxii. 26): that "they had violated his law, and had profaned his holy things, putting no difference betwixt the holy and profane, the clean and the unclean, and hid their eyes from the sabbaths" (Ezek. xxxiv. 1. 6); that "the shepherds of Israel fed themselves, but did not feed the flock, the diseased did they not strengthen, neither did they heal that which was sick, nor bring again that which was driven away, nor seek that which was lost, but with force and cruelty they ruled; so that the sheep were scattered because there was no shepherd" (Hos. iv. 6): that "they rejected knowledge, so that God's people were destroyed for lack of it" (Zeph. iii. 4): that "her prophets were light and treacherous persons, her priests had polluted the sanctuary, they had done violence to the law: that they had forgotten the law of their God, they departed out of the way, they caused many to stumble at the law, they corrupted the covenant of Levi" (Mal. ii. 8).

Moreover, of these guides it is expressly said, that "they which led the people, caused them to err" (Isa. iii. 12), "and destroyed the way of their paths" (ix. 16): that "the leaders of the people caused them to err, and they that were led of them were destroyed, and that their shepherds caused them to go astray" (Jer. l. 6). Our Lord declares that "they were fools, blind guides, full of hypocrisy and of iniquity; that they had taken away the key of knowledge, and had shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, not going in themselves, nor suffering them that were entering to go in" (Matt. xxiii. 13, Luke xi. 52): that they made many false decisions in matters of so great importance, as to "make void the law of God, and render his whole worship vain" (Matt. xv. 6. 9): that "they transgressed the commandment of God by their traditions;" that notwithstanding their instructions, the "people were as sheep without a shepherd" (Matt. ix. 26), or only had "such guides as would most certainly," if they submitted to their guidance, "lead them to the pit" (Matt. xv. 14). Hence therefore I infer,

1. That even those spiritual guides, who are by God's appointment constituted to instruct his people, and to feed his flock (for such our Lord acknowledged the scribes and pharisees and rulers of the Jewish church to be), may scatter and destroy that flock: and they, who are set for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies, may violate, corrupt, pervert that law they should interpret; they may be partial in it; they may depart out of the way; they may make the commandments of God of none effect, and his whole worship vain by their traditions; they may cause their sheep to err, stumble, and go astray, and that so dangerously, that they who are led by them shall be destroyed with them, and find no entrance into bliss. And hence, I hope, I may assume the boldness to conclude against the infallibility of our spiritual governors, or the concurring judgments of the major part of them; which is sufficient to root up even the foundations of the Romish Babel.

* Παράδοσις τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, Matt. xv. 2. Αἱ πατρικαὶ παραδόσεις, Gal. i. 14.

† Ἀποστασίαν διδάσκεις ἀπὸ Μωσέως, λέγων μὴ τοῖς ἔθεσι περιπατεῖν, Acts xxi. 21, xxviii. 17.

2. Hence I infer, that notwithstanding all the forementioned scriptures, which say it was the duty of the people to ask of their spiritual guides the meaning of the law, and seek the knowledge of it at their mouths, and to inquire after their judgments in all those controversies they were not able to resolve; I say, hence I infer, that notwithstanding this, the people were not absolutely obliged to rest in the decision of the major part of these church guides, or bound to practise all that they approved; for then an obligation must be laid upon them, not only to err in judgment with them, to countenance false prophets, and to speak peace to themselves when there is no peace; but also to violate the law, and to comply with their false glosses and corrupt interpretations of it; nay, which is more unreasonable, they must be then obliged to be destroyed, to fall into the pit, and to exclude themselves from the enjoyment of Christ's kingdom: whereas it is a contradiction to say that God obligeth any person to transgress his law; and it is little less than blasphemy to say, he doth require them to destroy themselves, to fall into the pit, or to deprive themselves of the enjoyment of his kingdom. Hence therefore I infer this corollary:

That neither are all Christian people, churches, or nations, absolutely bound to rest in the decisions of the major part of Christian bishops, nor to practise all that they approve and impose: which proposition overthrows that absolute and blind obedience to their church guides or councils, which Romanists so stiffly plead for.

3. Hence it is also evident, that private persons, or that the minor part of the whole church, may have sufficient ground either from reason or clear scripture, for their refusal of assent and of submission to the authority and definitions of the major part of their church guides; for the Jews were bound to believe Christ to be the true Messiah, although the high-priest and the elders had pronounced him a deceiver and a malefactor: they were obliged to believe his miracles were wrought, not by Beelzebub, but the Spirit of God; that Christ's kingdom was not of this world; that John Baptist was that Elias which was for to come; and that to eat with hands unwashed, to heal the sick, to pluck some ears of corn on the sabbath day, were not unlawful actions, although the major part of their church guides taught and believed the contrary (Matt. xv. 5). They were obliged not to avoid that law of nature, which required children to relieve their own distressed parents; and therefore stood obliged not to comply with those traditions of the scribes and pharisees, which made the word of God of none effect, and would not suffer them to yield obedience to it. And seeing they had "many traditions and decrees of the like nature,"* which obtained amongst them, and only were rejected by the Sadducees and disciples of our Lord; in none of these could they comply with their church guides without the violation of that law of God, which sure they had sufficient ground and reason to observe. In a word: in all those cases, in which they were not bound to rest in the decision of the major part of the church guides, or practise what they did approve, that is, in all the cases mentioned in the former head, they must have had sufficient ground, either from scripture or from reason, for their refusal of submission to them. Now these three inferences do fully justify the reformation of the church of England.

§. 8. 4. From what hath been discoursed, we may see the weakness of those pleas the Roman doctors make in their own defence, and of the arguments they use to show, that it is impossible they should be guilty of those corruptions in doctrine, or in manners, which we charge them with. For their most specious pretences are to this effect; that we confess the church of Rome was once both true and orthodox: show then, say they, how we did cease to be so, whether by schism or heresy: with schism you cannot justly charge us; "for† that never can be of a much major and more dignified part, in respect of a less and inferior, subject to it; because this main body in any division is rightly taken for the whole, from which a separation is schism, and to which every member ought to adhere, as to the body and head here upon earth to which it belongs:" we therefore being the much major and more dignified part of the church, cannot be schismatics in reference to protestants, who are, and were at their departure, a less and an inferior body to us. If heresy be the crime charged upon us, by what church were we condemned? What body of men before you found fault with those corruptions which you pretend to reform? for sure, it was not possible for so many errors and corruptions to come into the church, and no one take notice of them? Could this be so, where was the watchful eye of Providence over the church? But, if we could suppose this Providence was unconcerned for the preservation of the church, could all the pastors fall asleep at once? Or, could they all conspire together to deceive their posterity? Moreover, since God will always have a visible church, what can you mention besides that which holds communion with the church of Rome, as the then present visible church of Christ, when you began your reformation (except perhaps some eastern churches, which you dislike almost as much as that of Rome)? And if that church could teach such errors as you charge her with, as matters of the Christian faith, what assurance can you have she hath not erred in defining the canon of scriptures, and delivering some book or books for the word of God, which are not so? This is the sum of all the pleadings of the Roman party in their own behalf: and they are only such as the Jewish doctors might have pleaded with as much plausibility against our Lord's disciples, and that first Christian church which they planted in that nation. For,

1. Where, they may say, will* you produce the men of former ages, who taxed the Jewish church with such errors and corruptions as your Jesus did, and bid men "beware of the leaven of the scribes and pharisees," that is, the most holy and learned members of our church? Do not the Christians themselves acknowledge, that we were once a "right vine," and the "beloved of the Lord?" How or when, therefore, did we cease to be so? If by schism, produce that major part or body of the Jewish church from which we separated, when first your Jesus, like another Luther, appeared among us? Or, if by heresy we ceased to be so, by what church, what councils, were we condemned? Who can believe that God would ever suffer such dangerous doctrines to prevail in his own church, and raise up no church guides, no prophets, to discover things so destructive to her very being, till these new teachers and reformers first arose? Where, then, had God a true church in the world, if not among the people of the Jews? What other church could Christ or his apostles mention, besides that which he so often taxed with voiding the commandments of God, and rendering his worship vain, because of some traditions which they had received from their forefathers? If then God suffered this church to be all overrun with such a fatal leprosy, and gave no clear discovery thereof, where was the watchful eye of Providence? Where was that God, who promised that he would "put his name for ever in Jerusalem, and that his eyes and heart should be perpetually there?" But suppose that Providence was unconcerned, did all our pastors fall asleep at once? Or, could they all conspire to deceive posterity? Were not the oracles of God committed to us Jews? Did not your Christians receive them from us? If then our church might teach her children such destructive errors as you charge her with, how can you be assured that she hath not erred even in that canon of scriptures which from her you have received?

Now though this instance, which I have largely prosecuted, may be sufficient to show the vanity of the most plausible pretences of R. H. against the protestants, both in his Rational Account and his Discourse, it might be farther manifested, that they as strongly plead for the heathen world against the Jews; for the Mahometan against the Christian; for the priests of Baal against Elias and those seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal; for the prevailing Arian against the orthodox; for the fornicator, the simoniac, the covetous, and the debauched person, in all those ages, in which these were the epidemical and almost general diseases of the clergy, that is, from the tenth to the sixteenth century; and, lastly, for antichrist himself, when he, according to the predictions of the scripture, and the confession of many Roman catholics, shall drive the church, that is, the orthodox professors of the faith, into the wilderness, and slay the witnesses of Christ, and of his doctrine. But,

* Παρόμοια τοιαῦτα πολλά. Mark vii. 8.

† R. H. Rational Account, disc. iii. ch. 5, §. 63, p. 203.

* Vid. Stillingfleet's Sermon on Acts xxiv. 14.

To conclude, If this be truly the result of the most specious pretences of the Roman party to draw our souls into their deadly snares, if all their fairest pleas do make for Judaism more naturally than they do for popery; if what they urge, to prove the protestant divines to be deceivers of the people, doth more strongly prove our blessed Jesus a deceiver, which is the highest blasphemy; I hope that no true lover of this Jesus will be much tempted by such pleas to entertain a good opinion of the Romish faith: it being certainly that faith which cannot be established but on the ruins of Christianity, nor embraced by any protestant, but with the greatest hazard, if not the ruin of his soul.

THE

ACTS OF THE APOSTLES,

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

The history of the acts of the apostles, if it relateth matters truly, is an invincible demonstration of the truth of Christian faith. For,

First, It confirms the truth of Christ's great promise, John xiv. 12, "He that believeth in me shall do greater works than I have done; because I go to my Father" (see the note there).

It confirms his promise made to his disciples, that the Spirit of his Father should speak in them, and "give them a mouth and wisdom which all their adversaries should not be able to gainsay" (Matt. x. 20, Luke xxi. 15, Acts vi. 10); that they who believed in him after that he was glorified, should "receive the Holy Ghost" (John vii. 39); and the saying of his forerunner, that "he who was to come after him, should baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Matt. iii. 11, Acts ii. 3); and of Christ's declaration, that "when this Spirit was come he should convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him" (John xvi. 9, Acts ii. 37), "and of righteousness, because he went to the Father" (ver. 33).

It confirms the truth of this prediction, that "after he was lifted up, he would draw all men after him" (John xii. 31); when he was "sown" in the earth, he should "bring forth much fruit" (ver. 14); and of his comparison of the kingdom of God to "a grain of mustard seed" (Mark iv. 30), for its wonderful increase (Acts ii. 41, iv. 4, v. 14): "so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed" (Acts xix. 20).

It confirms all that Christ had said concerning the kingdom of "Satan falling down like lightning" (Luke x. 17), the "casting out and judging the prince of this world" (John xii. 31, xvi. 11), and the conquest his disciples should have "over all the power of the enemy" (Luke x. 18), by showing the efficacy the gospel had to turn men "from the power of Satan unto God."

To make these things more evident, I shall reflect more largely upon two particulars which are the frequent subjects of this history, viz. the gifts of the Holy Ghost conferred upon the apostles and others, partly by the laying on of the apostles' hands upon them, and partly at the preaching of the apostles to them: and, (2.) the miracles which the apostles and other preachers of the gospel wrought for confirmation of their doctrine. And,

First, Of these miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, these Acts of the Apostles have left upon record these signal instances.

(1.) That on the day of Pentecost, the apostles and disciples of Christ Jesus being met together, "cloven tongues like to fire fell upon them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance;" adding, that when this miracle was wrought upon them, there were "devout men of every nation," who "heard them speak in their own tongues the wondrous works of God;" and upon this account did with amazement ask, "Are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongues wherein we were born?" and that St. Peter, one of Christ's disciples, did then and there declare, that the same Jesus, whom the Jews had crucified, was by God raised up, and exalted to his own right hand, and "having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, had shed forth this which they now saw and heard;" and that he with these sayings instantly converted three thousand souls; and that "God daily added to the church such as should be saved" (Acts ii.).

(2.) That when St. Philip had converted many people of Samaria to the Christian faith, and had baptized them, St. Peter and St. John laid their hands on them, "and they received the Holy Ghost:" and that Simon Magus, seeing this, offered them money to have this power imparted to him, that "on whomsoever he should lay his hands, they might receive the Holy Ghost" (Acts viii.).

(3.) That whilst St. Peter was preaching to Cornelius, his kinsmen, and near friends, "the Holy Ghost fell on all those that heard the word, and they spake with tongues, and magnified God," in the presence of the Jews (Acts x. 44, 45).

(4.) That St. Paul finding twelve disciples of John the Baptist who had not yet received the Holy Ghost, he baptizeth them in the name of the Lord Jesus; and "when he had laid his hands upon them, they received the Holy Ghost, and prophesied" (Acts xix. 6).

Now all these things were done, saith this record, in populous and famous cities; viz.

The first in Jerusalem at the great feast of Pentecost, immediately ensuing Christ's ascension, and therefore at a time when all Jerusalem was met to celebrate that feast, and when the fame of the Messiah, expected suddenly to appear (Luke xix. 11), had brought great multitudes of Jews and proselytes out of all nations to attend the issue of that expectation; and so the matter of fact, if true, must be well known by all Judea so to be: nor could it possibly be false, but all then present and alive, when first this fact was published to the world, would be so many living witnesses of the falsehood of it.

The second populous city whose converts received this effusion of the Holy Ghost, was the metropolis of Samaria, according to our Lord's prediction, "You shall be my witnesses in Samaria" (Acts. i. 8). The time when this was done is noted by three characters; viz. that it was done soon after the death of Stephen (Acts viii. 2), and before the conversion of St. Paul (ver. 1), and when Simon the celebrated magician was there, and had so gained upon the people of that city, that they all "gave heed to him," and owned him as "the great power of God" (ver. 9, 10).

The third happened in the city of Cæsarea (the seat of the Roman governor of Judea, inhabited by Jews, Samaritans, and gentiles, and well stocked with Roman soldiers), upon the person and kindred of Cornelius, a centurion of the Roman band, one "well reported of" by the whole nation of the Jews; and so, not only Cæsarea, but all Judea and Rome also, must be acquainted with the conversion of a man so eminent for his post, so well approved by the whole Jewish nation for his piety. The character of the time when this was done we learn from these circumstances, that before the word was preached to the Jews only; and that this was the first instance of their preaching to convert a gentile to the faith of Christ (Acts xi. 19).

The fourth was done in Ephesus, the metropolis of the proconsular Asia, about twelve years after the former, in a city where dwelt many Jews, who were teachers of the law in opposition to the gospel, and who had there a synagogue: and after this, "all Asia, both Jews and Greeks, heard the word of Christ" (Acts xix. 10. 17).

Secondly, Of the miracles performed by the apostles and other persons assisted by the Holy Ghost, this history saith in the general, that "with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus" (Acts iv. 33), and that in confirmation of it "many signs and wonders were done by the apostles' hands." In particular it informs us,

(1.) That at Jerusalem Peter and John cured by the name of Jesus a man forty years old, who had been so lame from his mother's womb, that he was carried from one place to another; that this was done to the astonishment of the people, who knew he had been so long impotent in his feet, but now saw him "leaping and walking, and praising God:" and that these two apostles being brought before the whole Sanhedrin on this account, and asked "by what power or by what name" they had done this cure, they openly declare to them that they had done it "by faith in the name of that Jesus of Nazareth" whom these men had crucified; and that the council, "seeing the man that was healed standing by them," were forced to confess, "that it was manifest to all them that dwelt at Jerusalem, that a notable miracle had undeniably been done by them" (iii. 2. 11, iv. 6. 16).

(1.) That when the chief priests and sadducees had put them by night into prison for preaching in the name of Jesus, though the prison was "found shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors," yet were the apostles on the morrow found standing in the temple, and teaching the people; the angel of the Lord having opened the prison doors and brought them forth, and commanded them thus to preach (v. 18—25): and that this so affected them, that they not only doubted what this might come to (ver. 24), but were prevailed upon by the great and celebrated Gamaliel to "let these men alone, lest haply they should be found to fight against God" (ver. 39).

(3.) That Stephen being "full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people" (vi. 8).

(4.) That these miracles were so certainly and so effectually performed, that thereupon the people "brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them;" and that "a multitude came out of the cities round about them to Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them that were vexed with unclean spirits, and they were healed every one" (v. 15, 16): and also, that by their miracles and preaching, they converted to the Christian faith at one time three thousand (ii. 41), at another time five thousand persons (iv. 4), that men were "daily added to the church" (ii. 47), that "believers were the more added to the Lord, even multitudes of men and women" (v. 14), that "the word of the Lord increased, and the multitude of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith" (vi. 7).

(5.) That upon St. Philp's preaching Christ at Samaria, the people "with one accord gave heed to the things which he spake, beholding the miracles which he did; for unclean spirits crying with a loud voice came out of many that were possessed with them, and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed:" and that these things prevailed there, not only with many men and women to receive Christian baptism, but also forced Simon Magus, a famous sorcerer, to believe; and, being baptized, to "continue with Philip, wondering at the signs and miracles done by him" (viii. 6, 7. 13).

(6.) That whilst St. Paul, a zealous pharisee, and a more zealous persecutor, "breathed out threatenings and slaughter" against the disciples of the Lord, and had received commission from the high-priests and elders "to bring them bound unto Jerusalem to be punished;" as he came nigh to Damascus, "a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun shone round about him," and struck him blind; and the Lord Jesus, by a voice from heaven, said unto him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" and that one Ananias being sent by the same Jesus to lay his hands upon him, he presently receives his sight, is "filled with the Holy Ghost," and preacheth Christ in the Jewish synagogues erected in that famous city (Acts ix.): and to this miraculous conversion he twice appeals (ch. xxii. xxvi.), in vindication of himself, declaring that partly the high-priests and elders, partly those persons that were with him then, partly one Ananias, "a devout man according to the law, and a man of good report among all the Jews," could bear witness to them (xxii. 5. 9. 12), and that "none of these things were hid" from king Agrippa's knowledge, "they being not done in a corner;" and by this narrative he almost persuaded that king to "become a Christian," xxvi. 26. 28 (see note on xxii. 6).

(7.) That when St. Peter, being at Lydda, a city of Palestine, said to one Æneas there, who had "kept his bed eight years, and was sick of a palsy, Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed;" he immediately did so; and that thereupon "all that dwelt at Lydda," seeing this, "were turned to the Lord" (ix. 32. 35).

(8.) That the same Peter at Joppa, a city of Phœnicia, lying upon the Mediterranean, raiseth one Tabitha from the dead; and that this being "known throughout all Joppa, many believed in the Lord" (ibid. ver. 39. 42). And here let it be noted, that at Jabneh, near Joppa, sat the great Sanhedrin; and at Lydda were famous schools and eminent persons of the Jewish nation and religion.

(9.) That at Cyprus St. Paul converted Sergius Paulus, the deputy of the island, by striking Elymas, a Jewish sorcerer there, blind with a word because he sought "to turn the deputy," or the proconsul, "from the faith" (xiii. 7. 12).

10.) That at Iconium, a city of Lycaonia, where also was a synagogue of the Jews, Paul and Barnabas so preached, that "a great multitude both of the Jews and Greeks believed" (xiv. 1), and that "the Lord gave testimony to his word by granting signs and wonders to be done by their hands" (ver. 3).

(11.) That at Ephesus Paul preached almost three years, and prevailed so much among them, that all Asia, both Jews, there very numerous, and Greeks, resorting to Ephesus, heard, and many of them believed the gospel, "God working," in confirmation of it, "special miracles by the hand of Paul; so that from his body were brought handkerchiefs and aprons;" and by this means "the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them."

(12.) That seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew (and of the priests' order, saith the Talmud), which were exorcists, perceiving how powerful Paul was to cast out devils by the name of Jesus, and therefore attempting to exorcise one that had an evil spirit, by the name of that Jesus whom Paul preached (supposing that the very name of Jesus, without faith in him as the true Messiah, would be effectual to cast out devils), they were set upon and overpowered by the evil spirit, and forced to fly from the place "naked and wounded;" and this being "known to all the Jews and Greeks," prevailed with many who formerly had used magic arts, to burn their books, confess their deeds, and believe in Jesus: so "mightily grew the word of God and prevailed" (ch. xix.).

(13.) That at the isle of Malta, St. Paul not only shook off a viper from his hand that had fastened on it, without harm, but healed the father of Publius, the chief man of the island, lying sick of a fever, by laying his hands upon him; and that thereupon others in that island, who had diseases, came and were healed; and that thereupon they honoured all Paul's companions, and loaded them at their departure with such things as they needed (Acts xxviii. 3. 10); which things, if true, must be known to the inhabitants, and also to the two hundred and seventy-six persons who were cast with Paul on that island (xxvii. 37).

So that this history affords us an account of miracles, great and many, done in many places, upon persons remarkable and well known, viz. the lame man laid at the Beautiful gate of the temple; upon Tabitha, eminent for her works of charity; upon Saul, a zealous persecutor of the church; upon Elymas the sorcerer, opposing "the right ways of the Lord;" upon the Pythoness at Philippi (Acts xvi. 18); upon the sons of Sceva; upon the father of Publius; to the conversion of many thousands, not only of the people, but of multitudes of the priests at Jerusalem; to the astonishment of Simon Magus, that prince of sorcerers, and the conviction and conversion of multitudes of the same wicked art at Ephesus, a city famous for those practices (see the note on xix. 19).

Moreover, these miracles were either done in Jerusalem, Samaria, Ephesus, cities of which we have already spoken, or where the Jews abounded; and that so certainly as St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, inquires, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which was confirmed to us by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost?" (Heb. ii. 3, 4.) And as for the conversion of St. Paul, it was done at Damascus, the metropolis and a noble mart of Syria, where flourished many thousand Jews; upon a person known by the whole nation of the Jews to be a strict and celebrated pharisee, and once a zealous persecutor of the Christian faith; one who, after his conversion, which happened the next year after our Lord's ascension, was hated and persecuted by his own nation, for preaching up that faith he formerly endeavoured to destroy: and so, not only they at Damascus, and they who journeyed with him, and saw and felt that glorious light which was the means of his conversion, but even the whole Jewish nation, must be acquainted with, and even alarmed at, this miraculous and sudden change. Lastly, These miracles were mostly done within two years, and all of them within twenty-seven years, after our Lord's ascension.

Now, when times and places, circumstances and events, are so particularly set down, and are of such a nature as seem to carry in them a conspicuous evidence of the notorious falsehood, or the clear truth of the narration, as it is a sign the historian intended no deceit, so neither seems it easy to conceive, how such great cities and regions should be ignorant of the truth or falsehood of them, or be capable of being imposed upon by such relations.

All that can possibly be offered to impair the credit of these evidences of the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost, exercised by the apostles, and conferred on such as did embrace the Christian faith, must be comprised in these two particulars, viz. either that these things were not written and published by St. Luke, or in his time; or, that they were not truly written, but contain false stories invented for the credit of Christianity.

Now that this history was universally and originally received, by the tradition of the church, amongst her true, undoubted scriptures, Eusebius* sufficiently informs us. Clemens of Alexandria* and Origen confirm the same tradition. And as all agree that this history was written by St. Luke, and owned as an unquestionable record of Christianity, so do we find it cited by St. Clemens,† St. Paul's companion; by Papias,‡ who conversed with men of the apostles' time; and by Polycarp,§ who was St. John's disciple; and Irenæus, who flourished in the second century, hath in a large chapter almost epitomized it: nor do I read of any Jew or gentile who did except against the truth or the sincerity of the relator of these things: now if a record so early and so generally received, and cited by the Christians, may be, without all proof, rejected, as not written by that author whose name it hath still borne; if a writing that has been always unanimously owned among the records of the Christian faith, may be, without all reason, rejected as a spurious or doubtful piece, the truth and credit of all history must be entirely subverted; and so there will be nothing certain left concerning any records of antiquity.

But if, according to this general tradition, this history was indeed writ and published by St. Luke, there must be many myriads still living in Judea, Samaria, Damascus, Ephesus, Cæsarea, and many other places mentioned in these Acts, who could be able to disprove these things, had they been false; which yet was either not at all or unsuccessfully attempted, as the issue, which concluded in its general reception, testifies. We therefore may conclude, that neither Jew nor gentile, orthodox Christian nor apostate, though they were all concerned to do it, found any cause to doubt the certainty of what was thus recorded.

But to give scepticism its utmost scope; be it, this history was not published till a hundred years after our Lord's ascension; beyond which infidelity cannot go, if we consider the citations of it before that time, and the abridgment of it made by Irenæus not long after; either the facts related in it were true, and then they are a signal evidence of the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost vouchsafed to Christians; or, they were false; and then, how is it possible they should obtain so easy and so general belief? Could they not know in Judea, Samaria, and Ephesus, and in other cities mentioned, by what means they were first converted to the Christian faith? must it not be sufficient prejudice to them against these tales, that they had lived so long in the profession of that faith, and had heard nothing of these things, too wonderful, too much conducing to the honour and confirmation of that faith to be so long concealed, had they been truly done by two such eminent apostles as were St. Peter and St. Paul?

* Ponit nempè Actus Apostolorum ἐν ομολογουμένοις, et inter κατὰ τὴν ἐκκλησιαστικὴν παράδοσιν ἀληθεῖς καὶ ἀπλάστους, καὶ ἀνωμολογημένας γραφάς. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 4.

* Et. 25. † Ep. ad Cor. §. 18.

‡ Apud Euseb. H. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 39.

§ Ad Philip. §. i. lib. iii. cap. 12.

CHAPTER I.

1 THE former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, [1] of all that Jesus began both to do and teach (as far as I thought this needful for the instruction of a catechumen),

2 Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he [2] through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen:

3 To whom also he shewed himself alive after his

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

[1] Ver. 1. Περὶ πάντων, Of all that Jesus began both to do and teach.] Since the apostle John hath left on record many things the blessed Jesus did and taught, which are not in St. Luke; yea, since St. Luke himself doth about ten times say Christ taught the people, iv. 15. 31, v. 3. 17, vi. 6, xiii. 10, xix. 47, xx. 1, xxi. 37, xxiii. 5, and yet in none of those places records the words he taught, it is necessary to limit the generality of these words. Now though the word all doth sometimes signify the chief of all the things related to, as when our Saviour saith to his disciples, ἐγνώρισα ὑμῖν πάντα, "I have made known to you all things which I have heard of my Father," and yet he adds, xvi. 12, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them yet;" notwithstanding, seeing all the excellent discourses of our Saviour mentioned by St. John, and two of his great miracles, the cure of the man born blind, John ix., and the raising of Lazarus, mentioned ch. xi., are not recorded by St. Luke, though these discourses and these miracles deserve well to be ranked among the chief things which Christ did and taught, I prefer the exposition of these words given in the paraphrase, as being in effect the exposition, which the evangelist's own words afford, Luke i. 4. Ὧν ἤρξατο, "Which Jesus began to do," that is, which Jesus did; for the gospel of St. Luke contains what was done by Christ from the beginning of his ministry to his assumption; and that ἄρχομαι is frequently an expletive, see Matt. xvi. 22, Mark ii. 23, Luke xv. 24, Acts xi. 15.

[2] Ver. 2. Διὰ Πνεύματος ἁγίου, By the Holy Ghost.] These words admit of several constructions, as, (1.) that he had chosen his apostles by the Holy Ghost; but against passion by many [3] infallible proofs (Gr. by many signs or testimonies of his resurrection), being seen of them forty days, and [4] speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:

4 And, being [5] assembled together (or, eating and conversing) with them, (he) commanded them that they should not (or, not to) depart from Jerusalem (till power from on high was come upon them, to fit them for their work, Luke xxiv. 49), but (to) wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me (Gr. for the promise of my Father, of which you have heard).

5 For John truly (Ἰωάννης μὲν, John indeed) baptized with water (only); but (as he said, Matt. iii. 11) [6] ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence (i. e. within ten days; for this was spoken on the day of our Lord's ascension, that is, ten days before Pentecost).

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him (that which they chiefly desired and expected), saying, Lord, [7] wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? (i. e. Wilt thou now set up that temporal kingdom, in which the Jews shall rule over all nations, which we impatiently expect?) this it is objected, that the scripture nowhere saith that Christ chose his apostles by the Holy Ghost: or, (2.) that he was taken up into heaven by the Holy Ghost, as by the same Spirit he was led into the wilderness (Luke iv. 1): or, (3.) that he gave commandments to his disciples by the Holy Ghost: which again is capable of divers constructions; as, first, that he gave them these commandments by the inward operations of the Holy Ghost, which he had breathed in them (John xx. 22): but this sense seems not very probable, (1.) because, after his breathing of the Holy Ghost upon them, he still saith, he will send the promise of his Father upon them, viz. the promise of the Holy Ghost; and bids them stay at Jerusalem till they had received him, Luke xxiv. 29, and here, ver. 4, and (2.) because he is said, ver. 3, to speak unto them the things which belonged to the kingdom of God; or, secondly, as he did all his miracles, and delivered all his doctrines, by virtue of the Holy Ghost, whilst he discharged his prophetic office (see note on Matt. iii. 16): so being yet on earth he spake these things, and gave these commands to his apostles touching his kingdom by the same Spirit. And his passion, mentioned in the verse following, renders it probable that St. Luke speaks of the commands relating to his kingdom, which he had given them before his passion.

---

[3] Ver. 3. Ἐν πολλοῖς τεκμηρίοις, By many infallible proofs.] For by speaking to, by walking, and by eating with them, he gave them certain indications that he lived; that he was seen and handled by them was a sure evidence that he had a true and natural body; that he permitted Thomas to view the scars of his feet and hands, and put his hand into his side, was a certain token that the body raised was the same which was crucified, and pierced by the soldier's lance.

[4] And speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.] viz. Of the teaching the doctrine of this kingdom to all nations, and the receiving them into it by baptism who believed and professed to own it (Matt. xxviii. 19); of the benefits which were promised to them who cordially believed their doctrine, and the condemnation which belonged to them who would not believe it (Mark xvi. 15, 16); of the encouragements and assistances he would afford them in the propagation of it by his continual presence with them (Matt. xxviii. 20), and the assistance of his Spirit (ver. 4, 5), and by the miracles by which their doctrine should be confirmed by them, and others who believed it (Mark xvi. 17, 18).

[5] Ver. 4. Συναλιζόμενος, Being assembled with them.] So Phavorinus saith that ἁλίζω is συναθροίζω, "I assemble together:" so Herodotus in Clio,* οὕτω μὲν δὴ συνηλίζοντο, "So they met together;" and again, Cyrus, συναλίσας εἰς ταυτὸ,† "gathering together all his father's herds;" and cap. 125, καὶ τὰ μὲν αὐτέων ὁ Κύρος συνάλισε, "Cyrus gathered together some of the Persians;" and in his Euterpe he saith that Pheron,‡ king of Egypt, εἰς μίην πόλιν συναλίζων, "gathering together all the women that had been false to their husbands into one city, burnt them all with the city;" and so in Melpomene, ἁλίζειν στρατὸν, is "to assemble," or "gather together" the army. Now this assembling them together is, by Dr. Lightfoot, thought to have been in Galilee; but this is contrary both to the text in Luke and here: for Luke xxiv. 49 he commands them καθίζεσθαι, "to abide in" the city of Jerusalem, here μὴ χωρίζεσθαι ἀπὸ, "not to depart from Jerusalem," ἀλλὰ παραμένειν, but to abide there; and it is added in both places, that having spoken this, "he led them out (of Jerusalem) to Bethany" (Luke xxiv. 51, Acts i. 9), and there was taken up into heaven, and that thence, ὑπέστρεψαν, "they went back (from Bethany) to Jerusalem" (Luke xxiv. 51, Acts i. 12); they must be therefore at Jerusalem when Christ thus conversed with them, and there abiding, were to expect the promise of the Father (Luke xxiv. 49). Al. κοινωνῶν ἁλῶν καὶ τραπέζης, Chrys. Œcum.

[6] Ver. 5. Βαπτισθήσεσθε ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.] The word ye, and the time affixed to this baptism, the day of pentecost, show that this baptism relates only to the disciples then present, and conversing with the holy Jesus: and to them the Holy Spirit was given, (1.) to render them powerful or able witnesses of our Lord's resurrection (Luke xxiv. 48, Acts i. 8), and consequently that he was the true Messiah, or that Prophet "which was to come into the world," and was to be the Saviour of it (John xvi. 8—10). And therefore Peter speaks thus to the Jews, "Ye have killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead, of which we are witnesses" (Acts iii. 15): and he with the apostles says to them, "The God of our fathers hath raised Jesus from the dead, whom ye killed and hanged on a tree; him hath God exalted to his own right hand to be a prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things, and so is the Holy Ghost, which he hath given to them that obey him" (Acts v. 30—32). (2.) To render them able to give us an exact account, as far as divine wisdom saw it necessary, of what our Saviour did and taught. "The Spirit," saith he, "shall bear witness of me, and you also shall be my witness, because you have been with me from the beginning" (John xv. 26, 27): and because, were they never so faithful, yet could we not so trust to the strength of their natural memories, as to depend on those long discourses we meet with in the gospels of St. Matthew, Luke, and John, as the very words of Christ, or be assured thence, that they delivered all the circumstances of Christ's miracles exactly as they were transacted; therefore hath he assured us that he would send "the Spirit of truth" to them, to bring those things to their remembrance which he had said unto them, John xvi. 26. (3.) To make them able ministers of the new testament, able to acquaint all Christians with all saving truth, and teach them all things which he had commanded to be observed throughout all ages of the church; and to declare unto them by the spirit of prophecy what should be hereafter: and hence he promiseth them the Spirit, to teach them all things (John xiv. 26), to lead them into all truth (xvi. 13), and to teach them things to come; and upon the strength of this promise all Christians of all ages have believed that the apostles and writers of the New Testament both spake and wrote "as they were moved, or directed, by the Spirit of God;" and received those doctrines they taught and indited, "not as the words of men, but, as they were in truth, the word of God" (1 Thess. ii. 13).

[7] Ver. 6. Ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ τούτῳ ἀποκαθιστάνεις; Wilt thou at this time restore?] That temporal dominion over all other nations, which the Jews then expected, being never before granted to them, the word here cannot well be rendered restore, but rather grant, or establish, as it may be rendered; for ἀποκαθιστῶν, say Suidas and Phavorinus, is διδοὺς, χαριζόμενος, "giving, or granting;" and in the Septuagint the word signifies to establish: so Amos v. 15, ἀποκαταστήσετε, "Ye shall establish judgment in the gates;" and Ps. xvi. 5, σὺ εἶ ὁ ἀποκαθιστῶν, "Thou sustainest," or establishest "my lot." Ingenious here is the conceit of Dr. Lightfoot, that the reason of the question, "Wilt thou do it at this time?" arose from their reflection on the indignities the Jews had done to Christ, and was to this effect: Lord, wilt thou restore the

---

* Clio, cap. 126. † Cap. 111. ‡ Cap. 12.

7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father [8] hath put in his own power (i. e. reserved to himself).

8 But (for your satisfaction in what more concerns you, know that) [9] ye shall receive (a miraculous) power, after that the Holy Ghost (which I have promised) is come upon you: and (then) ye shall be witnesses unto me (of what I said and did, John xv. 27) both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the [10] uttermost parts of the earth.

9 And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld (him), he was taken up (into heaven); and a cloud received him (and conveyed him) out of their sight.

10 And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two (angels, like) men stood by them in white apparel;

11 Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye (thus) gazing up into heaven (after him whom ye cannot now see? but the time will come, at the end of the world, when) this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, [11] shall so come (down from thence) in like manner as ye have (now) seen him go into heaven.

12 Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, [12] which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey (i. e. seven furlongs).

13 And when they were come in (thither), they [13] went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphæus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.

14 These all continued with one accord in prayer kingdom to those who have dealt so basely with thee? what! to this generation so unworthy of that honour, as lying under the guilt of thy bloodshed?

---

[8] Ver. 7. Which the Father hath put in his own power.] i. e. Reserved to himself: for "secret things belong to God" (Deut. xxix. 29); and not revealing the critical moment when they shall come to pass to any of his prophets, he left himself free to choose his own season when he will effect them. Grotius here saith, this kingdom was granted to the true Israel, i. e. the Christians, when Constantine and other Christian kings began to reign; but this agrees not with the predictions of the prophets, which plainly speak of a glorious kingdom belonging to the Jewish nation coming in to the faith of Christ. Dr. Lightfoot is positive that this place hath no relation to such a kingdom, and if he only means a temporal kingdom, this may be granted; but this answer speaking of times and seasons relating to a kingdom to be set up, or granted to Israel, I know not why he may not respect that time when the Jews generally shall be converted, and "all nations shall flow" in to them, and make Christ's kingdom glorious.

[9] Ver. 8. Λήψεσθε δύναμιν ἐπελθόντος τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος ἐφ' ὑμᾶς. Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.] Or, ye shall receive "the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you:" for ἐύναμις, in the New Testament, when it relates to God the Father, Christ, or the Holy Ghost, imports generally some miraculous or extraordinary power; and what is here, "Ye shall receive power, the Holy Ghost coming upon you," is, Luke xxiv. 50, "Ye shall be endued with power from on high," and then ye shall be my witnesses, enabled to confirm what you say of my words and actions, and especially of my resurrection, with signs and wonders, and divers distributions of the Holy Ghost (Heb. ii. 4).

[10] And to the uttermost parts of the earth.] That is, to the Jews first, then to the Samaritans, and, lastly, to all the nations of the world; and yet it is evident that the apostles and converted Jews at the first understood this of their preaching only to the Jews dispersed through the earth, for they preached the word "to the Jews only" (Acts xi. 19), and thought it unlawful, till by a vision from heaven they were taught otherwise, to preach to the gentiles.

[11] Ver. 11. Οὕτως ἐλεύσεται ὃν τρόπον, Shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up into heaven.] We are told, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8, that he shall come down from heaven "with his mighty angels in a flame of fire;" and 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, that he shall come down from heaven, and snatch us up into the clouds; as therefore here the angels attended on him ascending to heaven, so the cloud that received him (ver. 9), must be such a cloud of fire in which God was wont to appear with the attendance of his holy angels: of which see note on Phil. ii. 6, and this makes out the parallel; he being then to come also with a cloud of glory, in his body, and with the attendance of his holy angels. And thus Elias went up to heaven in a fiery chariot (2 Kings ii. 12).

[12] Ver. 12. Which is from Jerusalem a sabbath-day's journey.] Note here, (1.) that St. Luke doth not intend to give us the distance of the place of Christ's ascent from Jerusalem, that being from Bethany (Luke xxiv. 50), "which was from Jerusalem fifteen furlongs" (John xi. 18), but only from the foot of mount Olivet, which was, say the Syriac and Theophylact from Josephus,* "seven furlongs," though now we read in Josephus only "five furlongs." Now, say the Jews, a sabbath-day's journey is two thousand cubits, that is, a thousand yards, which is about eight furlongs, or a mile (see of this Buxt. Lex. Talm. p. 2582).

Note also, that the day of Christ's ascension seems not settled in the church then, or that Chrysostom thought not of it when he here said, That because Christ's ascension was on the sabbath-day, therefore St. Luke informs us, that the way the disciples went out with him exceeded not a sabbath-day's journey (Hom. 3 in Acts iii. 12).

[13] Ver. 13. They went up εἰς ὑπερῷον, into an upper room.] Where and what this upper room was, as it is not much material, so it is difficult to determine; that it was not the room in which Christ celebrated his last supper, appears from this, that it is called ἀνώγεον, Mark xiv. 15, Luke xxii. 12, which difference of names argues a difference in the thing itself. For ἀνώγεον is any room above stairs, be it only one story high, but ὑπερῷον is the highest room in the house (Acts xx. 8, 9). Note,

Secondly, That there was ὑπερῷον ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, "an upper room in the second temple," in which Ezra sat with the chief of the fathers of the people, as Josephus† testifies; it is therefore supposed there might be many such, in one of which Christ's apostles, and the other Christians with them, might abide.

It was also common among the Jews, not only for their rabbins to have an upper room for their Beth-Midrash, but also for others to have such an upper room where they discoursed of the law, or exercised other parts of religion; now in which of these two the apostles and disciples abode is the question.

That it was an upper room in the temple is argued, (1.) Because St. Luke tells us, that after their return to Jerusalem, they were διαπαντὸς ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, always in the temple" (Luke xxiv. 52, 53), and here, that after their return to Jerusalem they went up into this upper room, that they were καταμένοντες, "abiding there;" and ii. 46, it is said of them convened, and remaining in this upper room, that they were daily προσκαρτεροῦντες ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, "abiding in the temple." But to this it is answered,

1. That the phrase, they were "always in the temple," doth not prove this: for Christ saith of himself, John xviii. 10, I taught πάντοτε ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, "always in the temple," and yet he had no habitation in any part of it.

2. We read, iii. 1, that Peter and John ἀνέβαινον, "went up into the temple at the hour of prayer," whereas, had they been in an upper room of the temple, it should have rather been said that they went down into it. It is also said, that they continued there καθ' ἡμέραν, "day after day," which seemeth to import that they lodged not there by night.

3. It follows that they broke bread, κατ' οἶκον, that is, saith Dr. Hammond, "in the temple;" but both these and the former words are spoken of the whole number of Christians, which were now at least three thousand one hundred and twenty, too many sure to lodge together in one upper and supplication, with the women, and [14] Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

---

* Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. † Ibid. lib. xv. cap. 5.

15 ¶ And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the [15] number of the names (of which) together were about an hundred and twenty,)

16 Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been (Gr. be) fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.

17 For he was numbered with us (being one of the twelve sent out, and empowered by Christ to preach in his name, Matt. x. 1. 5), and had obtained part of this ministry.

18 Now this man [16] purchased a field with the reward of (his) iniquity (i. e. with the reward of his iniquity had no other advantage, but to return it back to them that gave it, who with it purchased a field); and (then) [17] falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.

19 And it (this fact) was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

20 [18] For it is written (by way of prediction concerning him) in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishoprick let another take (or, his habitation shall be desolate, and no man shall dwell in it, and his bishopric let another take).

21 [19] Wherefore of these men which have accompanied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, (and so can testify of all that he did and said, John xv. 27,)

22 Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us (into heaven), must one be ordained to be witness with us of his resurrection (and of his words and actions).

23 And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias (to be presented before the Lord).

24 And [20] they prayed, and said (Gr. and praying they said), Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew (by directing the lot to come out with his name) whether of these two thou hast chosen,

25 That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, [21] that he might go to his own place (as the reward of his iniquity).

---

room. Moreover, that κατ' οἶκον refers to houses distinct from the temple, we learn from this evangelist, saying, v. 42, they were teaching all the day, ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ καὶ κατ' οἶκον, "in the temple, and from house to house."

4. That there were ὑπερῶα "upper rooms" in the temple is granted, but then that they belonged to any besides the priests and Levites is not proved: the ὑπερῷον mentioned by Josephus was that of Johanan the son of the high-priest. And Maimonides, in his book de Ædificio Templi, mentions sixteen conclavia, or chambers, but saith, they were all appointed for sacred things or persons. How improbable therefore is it, that poor fishermen and Galileans, odious for their Master's sake, should be permitted to crowd in such numbers into one of these rooms (see the note on Luke xiv. 53).

[14] Ver. 14. And Mary the mother of Jesus.] Here is the last time that we have any mention of this blessed mother: of her ascension St. Luke saith nothing, because he knew nothing of it; that idle tale being the invention of latter ages from apocryphal writings and vain revelations.

And with his brethren.] They therefore then believed, though before they did not (John vii. 5).

[15] Ver. 15. The number ὀνομάτων of names.] i. e. Of persons. So Rev. iii. 4, "Thou hast ὀλίγα ὀνόματα, a few persons in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments:" so in Æschylus, τὸ Θηβαίων ὄνομα, is "one of Thebes:" in Cicero,* Romanorum nomen, is a Roman citizen; and in Virgil,† Silvius Albanum nomen, a man of Albania.

[16] Ver. 18. This man purchased a field, ἐκτήσατο χωρίον, with the wages of iniquity.] As in the Old Testament men are said to get or "purchase to themselves shame" (Prov. ix. 7), and in the New, to "receive to themselves damnation," and in profane authors, κτήσασθαι ἔχθραν καὶ συμφοράν, to "purchase enmity and calamities;" and we in our language are said to "create trouble to ourselves," when this is the event, though it is not the intention of the action: so is Judas here said to "purchase" this field by the wages of his iniquity, which was bought with the money he received as the reward of his iniquity, though he neither intended this nor was he instrumental to it.

[17] And falling headlong he burst asunder.] See note on Matt. xxvii. 5.

[18] Ver. 20. For it is written in the book of Psalms (Ps. lxix. 26), Let his habitation be desolate; and (Ps. cix. 1), His bishopric (or office) let another take.] That the first of these Psalms refer to that Messiah, of whom David was a type, we learn from the twenty-first verse, where it is said, "They gave me gall to eat, and when I was thirsty they gave me vinegar to drink," which was true only of Christ, and is applied to him, John xix. 29, and from the ninth verse, where it is said, "The zeal of thy house hath consumed me, and the reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me," which is applied to Christ, John ii. 17, Rom. xv. 3, and therefore what is said, ver. 26, of the enemies of David may reasonably be applied to Judas, the great enemy of Christ; what is said, Ps. cix. 8, if it primarily relate either to Doeg or Ahithophel, the mortal enemies of David, might by the Holy Spirit be intended to have its full completion in the betrayer of the Son of David, and this intention might be suggested to St. Peter by the same Spirit (see the appendix to the second chapter of St. Matthew).

[19] Ver. 21. Δεῖ οὖν, τῶν συνελθόντων ἡμῖν ἀνδρῶν, &c. Wherefore of these men who have accompanied with us all the time, one must be ordained to be a witness.] One must be chosen to make up the number twelve, answerable to the twelve tribes of Israel: he must be one who always had conversed with them, that he might be a witness of all that Jesus said and did, John xv. 27, whilst he discharged his office among them; for that is the import of the phrase, "go in and out;" as when Moses says, "I am grown old, I can no more go in and out before you," Deut. xxxi. 3, and when Solomon prays for wisdom, that he "might go in and out before that great people," 2 Chron. i. 10 (see Deut. xxviii. 6, Ps. cxxi. 8).

[20] Ver. 24. And they praying said, Κύριε καρδιογνῶστα, Lord, who knowest the hearts of all men, &c.] Here Woltzogenius truly notes, that they prayed to the Lord Jesus, because the apostles were at first chosen by him, were his apostles, and were to be his witness, and then they must ascribe to him the knowledge of all hearts, which is the property of God alone.

[21] Ver. 25. Πορευθῆναι εἰς τὸν τόπον ἴδιον, That he might go to his own place.] i. e. To the place worthy of him, and which he had deserved by his sin. So the Jews said of Balaam, ἀπῆλθεν εἰς τὸν τόπον αὐτοῦ, "He went into his own place" (Numb. xxiv. 14, 15), that is, saith Baal Turim, "to hell." So Ignatius* saith ἕκαστος εἰς τὸν ἴδιον τόπον χωρεῖν μέλλει, "Every one must hereafter go to his own place;" Barnabas† saith of those that walked in the light, that they do afterward ὁδεύειν εἰς τὸν ὡρισμένον τόπον, "go to the place appointed for them;" Clemens Romanus, that they do go εἰς τὸν ἅγιον τόπον, "to the holy place, εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον τόπον τὴν δόξης, to the place of glory due to them;" and Polycarp, that they are with the Lord, and go, εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον αὐτοῖς τόπον, "to the place appointed for them;" according to the Hebrew phrase here cited by Lightfoot, "He came from his own place, that is, from hell, appointed for idolaters."

---

* Lib. i. de Fin. † Æn. vi. 763.

* Ep. ad Magn. sect. 5.
† Sect. 19.

26 And (then) [22] they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles (making their number twelve).

Obj. 1. Hell is not the proper place of Judas, but common to him with all the wicked.

Ans. St. Peter doth not expressly say he went to hell, but into a place proper for him; now Ignatius saith there is appointed for every man, ἴδιος τόπος, "a proper place;" i. e. a place worthy of him, or agreeable to his actions. This in Plato* is the place whither the genius which he had chosen whilst he lived was appointed to bring him, viz. the incorrigible wicked soul, εἰς τὴν αὐτῇ πρέπουσαν οἴκησιν, "into a habitation fitted for it," but the pure soul, εἰς τόπον προσήκοντα, to a place convenient for it."

Obj. 2. Secondly, It is said that it belonged not to Peter to pass sentence on Judas, or affirm any thing of God's secrets, such as Judas's going to hell.

Ans. This is wonderful, that when Christ had pronounced him a devil (1 John vi. 71), "a son of perdition" (John xvii. 12), and declared that it had been "better for him that he had never been born" (Matt. xxvi. 24), it should be thought a diving into God's secrets to say, he went into a place prepared for, or due to, such miscreants. Moreover, doth not our Saviour say, this fall of the son of perdition was foretold by the scripture? (John xvii. 12.) Doth not St. Peter here apply those scriptures to him which foretell the most dreadful things? Does not Luke show the dreadful issue of his iniquity upon his body? and after all this, might he not say, he went to a place proper for him? "Whosoever betrays an Israelite into the hands of the gentiles," say the Jews, "hath no part in the world to come;" how much less he who betrays the Messiah, the king of Israel, into the hands of the gentiles (Matt. xx. 19, xxvi. 24).

Obj. 3. It seems improper to say such a one sinned that he might go to hell.

Ans. This is even such an impropriety of speech as God is pleased to use to his own people, when he saith by Hosea, viii. 4, "Of their silver and gold they made them idols, that they might be cut off;" and by the prophet Micah, vi. 16, "The statutes of Omri are kept, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make you a desolation;" and as Christ useth when he saith, the Jews had shut their eyes and hardened their hearts, "lest they should be converted and healed," or "lest their sin should be forgiven them" (Mark iv. 12, John xii. 39, 40). By all which places it appears, that in divine construction any man may be said to do an action to that end which he knows will be the event of it, and which by God is threatened to the doers of it.

Moreover, the other exposition, viz. that the κλῆρος διακονίας καὶ ἀποστολῆς, "portion of the ministry and apostleship," is the province which fell to the lot of Judas in the distribution of them among the apostles, and that this is called the proper place from which Judas fell by his sin, and into which Matthias is here said to go: I say this exposition is founded upon an evident mistake, viz. that the several provinces into which the apostles were to go for preaching the gospel, were distributed among them before they were filled with the Holy Ghost, which is abundantly confuted by Dr. Stillingfleet, Iren. lib. ii. cap. 6, §. 2. And when, where, and to what end, should a province of preaching the gospel after our Lord's ascension be distributed to him who was before to be a son of perdition? (2.) To succeed in the office of Judas, is not πορευθῆναι, to go into his place, but λαμβάνειν, to take his place; according to the words of the Psalmist, "His office λάβοι ἕτερος, shall another take." And, lastly, had this been intended, a conjunction copulative should have been put before πορευθῆναι, and the words should have run thus, λαβεῖν τὸν κλῆρον—καὶ πορευθῆναι, "to take the share of this apostleship, and to go into his place."

[22] Ver. 26. Καὶ ἔδωκαν κλήρους αὐτῶν, And they gave forth their lots.] That is, saith Grotius, they put two lots into two urns, the one containing the two names of Joseph and Matthias, the other the name of an apostle, and a void lot; and then drawing forth the name of Joseph, and the void lot, they knew that the lot containing the name of an apostle belonged to Matthias (see Lucian's Hermotimus, sive de Sectis, p. 232, 233).

* In Phæd. p. 80, B, D, E.

CHAPTER II.

1 [1] And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord (together) in one place.

2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind (Gr. as of a strong wind brought or coming thence), and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat (Gr. καὶ ἐκάθισε, sub. γλῶσσα, and a tongue sat) upon each of them.

4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues (than those which they had learned), as the (gift of the) Spirit gave them utterance.

5 And there were (then) dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, (by nation and by proselytism, ver. 10,) devout men, out of every nation under heaven (where the Jews dwelt).

6 Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded (or, astonished at the strangeness of the thing), because that (ὅτι, for)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

[1] Ver. 1. Καὶ ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι, And when the day of pentecost was fully come, they were ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, with one accord in one place.] Here the critical notes are these; (1.) that πληροῦσθαι and συμπληροῦσθαι, when they relate to time, signify only the coming of that time (see Dr. Hammond). But Dr. Lightfoot here more critically observes, that the phrase hath a particular respect to the words of the institution of the feast of pentecost, Lev. xxiii. 15, where it is said, "You shall count to you from the morrow after the sabbath" (that is, from the morrow of the first day of unleavened bread, which always was a sabbath, because no servile work was to be done in it; or from the sixteenth of Nisan), "seven sabbaths תמימת complete," ὁλοκλήρους, saith the LXX. (even to the morrow, after the sabbath, shall ye number fifty days). Now it is to be noted from R. Solomon, that this account of the seven weeks complete was to begin at the evening. "They reckoned," saith Maimonides, "from the night of the sixteenth of Nisan," for else the weeks would not be complete; and so this day, after the sabbath, was none of the forty-nine, which made seven sabbaths complete; but that even and Sunday made the first day of the first week, and so Friday even and Saturday the forty-ninth, and Saturday evening and the Lord's day the fiftieth; and so on that day pentecost was fully come, as our translation truly saith: so that, the evening beginning the account, pentecost was on the fiftieth day; but the day was not complete till the fifty-first.

So that two things may be noted for the dignity and honour of this day "which the Lord hath made:" that on this day he rose from the dead, "and became the first-fruits of them that slept:" and (2.) that on this day he poured forth the Holy Ghost on his apostles, and sent them forth to speak the "wonderful works of God" to men of every language and nation. It also is observable, that as the confusion of tongues in Babel spread idolatry through the world, and made men lose the knowledge of God and true religion, so God provided by the gift of tongues at Sion, to repair the knowledge of himself among those nations.

every man (of them, who were of several nations,) heard them speak in his own language.

7 And they were (therefore) all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak (these strange tongues by birth) Galileans?

8 And how (then) hear we every man (of us them speaking) in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 (For being) Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judæa, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia,

10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, 11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they (who said this) were all amazed, and were in doubt (what the issue of this might be), saying one to another, What meaneth this? (What importeth this great matter?

13 But) others mocking, said, These men are full of new wine (and this causes them to speak thus).

14 ¶ But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judæa, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words (which I am about to speak):

15 For these (men) are not drunken, as ye (scoffers) suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day (i. e. the ninth hour, or the time of the morning sacrifice, to which we Jews usually come fasting).

16 But this (which is come to pass) is (the comple-

Secondly, Dr. Hammond, note on i. 15, saith, that ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ signifies "assembling for the service of God;" but though this sometimes happens so to be, as when men meet ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, together to pray, to celebrate the Lord's supper, as 1 Cor. xi. 20, yet the phrase signifies only to meet ὁμοῦ ἢ εἰς τὸν αὐτὸν τόπον, together, or in the same place, without any relation to the business of the meeting; and indeed, I might as well argue that it signifies meeting after religious exercises are ended, because it is said, 1 Cor. vii. 5, "Let them not separate, except for prayer or fasting, and then let them come again ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ together" (see Deut. xxii. 10, Luke xvii. 35, Acts iii. 1).

But the great important question here is this, Whether "they all," here signify all the hundred and twenty mentioned i. 15, as Grotius and Dr. Lightfoot think, or only the twelve, as Dr. Hammond in his paraphrase? This is a question of some importance: for if the whole hundred and twenty be here intended, the cloven tongues must sit upon every one of them, as well as upon the twelve apostles, and so must give them a right, though not an equal power, to be Christ's witnesses; for a tongue sat upon "every one of them" (ver. 3) who were met together in the house.

The arguments of Dr. Lightfoot seem only probable; but this is certain, that there were many besides the apostles of their company, who had these gifts of the Holy Ghost: for when the apostles came to appoint seven deacons, they command the assembly to "look out among them seven men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom;" there must therefore be many such persons among them, known to them by the exercise of these gifts, who therefore must have received them either at this time, or when they, praying that "God would stretch forth his hands to heal, and to work signs and wonders by the name of Jesus, were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake the word with great freedom" (Acts iv. 30, 31). Now if these gifts were given then to others for this end, we may reasonably conceive that when that great promise of him was to be fulfilled, they might be given to others also. And if we consider what multitudes of several languages were then met, and even living at Jerusalem, it seems but rational to conceive this gift should be conferred on many, to enable them to discourse intelligibly for their conversion in the several synagogues, in which men of so many divers languages must meet for divine service. Moreover, seeing the apostles themselves imparted the same gift, by the imposition of hands, to those whom they ordained ministers in particular churches, it seems unreasonable to think that those extraordinary persons, who had been all along in company with Christ and his apostles, and were to be the great preachers of the gospel in several parts of the world, should not be enriched with the same gifts.

And, lastly, this seems to have obtained as a tradition, or a received opinion in the church; for, saith St. Jerome,* when Paula "came to Sion, they showed her the place where the Holy Ghost fell upon the hundred and twenty, to complete the prophecy of Joel:" and St. Chrysostom† and Œcumenius on the place say, "He fell not only upon the apostles, but also upon the hundred and twenty;" and that St. Luke would not have said πάντες, "all," when the apostles were present, εἰ μὴ καὶ ἄλλοι μέτεσχον, "if others also had not been made partakers of the Holy Ghost."

Concerning this gift of tongues, let it be farther noted:

First, That they mistake the matter, who imagine that the apostles only spake in their own mother tongue, and that the hearers, of what tongue soever they were, understood them as well as if they had spoken in their native language: for, as Gregory Nazianzen well notes, this makes the miracle to be wrought rather upon the hearers than upon the apostles; it also contradicts the words of the text, which saith, "The apostles began to speak ἑτέραις γλώσσαις, with other tongues," not "as the Spirit" gave the auditors ability to hear, but as he "gave" the apostles "utterance." Nor could the several auditors hear the apostles speak τῇ ἰδίᾳ διαλέκτῳ, "in their own proper dialect," unless they had spoken in the language of those nations who heard them. Nor,

Secondly, Are we to admit of the criticism of those who, instead of οἱ κατοικοῦντες Ἰουδαίαν, "the dwellers in Judea" (ver. 9), read οἱ κατοικοῦντες Ἰνδίαν, "the dwellers in India," because, say they, it was no miracle for the men of Judea to hear the apostles speaking in their language: for (1.) this criticism is confuted by the following verse, which saith, "All those men were Jews and proselytes." And (2.) the Jews are mentioned only to show that men of all nations heard them speak in their own language, and in that consists the miracle; not that the Jews, but that every nation, heard and understood them.

Note also, That the nations here reckoned up, living some in Asia, some in Africa, some in Europe, are said, though not without an hyperbole, to be "men of every nation under heaven" (ver. 5). And this phrase is not only used in the scriptures, as when God saith, he would make the dread of the Jews fall "upon every nation under heaven" (Deut. ii. 25); but it is frequent in Jewish writers who lived about this time; for Philo* often speaks of the Jews dwelling πανταχόθεν τῆς οἰκουμένης, "every where through the whole earth;" and says, that †πᾶσα οἰκουμένη, almost the whole earth was inhabited by them." Agrippa also in Josephus saith, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐπὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης ὄθνος, "There is not a people upon earth, among whom some Jews do not inhabit" (see the note on Col. i. 23).

Note, Fourthly, That it seems incredible that they, who said, "These men are full of new wine" (ver. 13), should be so foolish as to think that new wine should enable them to speak all languages, or to declare the wonderful works of God: it is therefore well conjectured by Dr. Lightfoot, that they who said this were men of Judea, who, not understanding what the apostles spake in other languages, imagined they had babbled some foolish gibberish they could make nothing of, as drunken men are used to do. Note, Fifthly, That St. Peter well confuteth this surmise, by saying, ver. 15, "It is not yet the third hour of the day," or nine of the clock; because, before that time, especially on the sabbath, and other feast days, the Jews were not wont so much as to taste any thing of meat or drink, as Dr. Lightfoot here shows. And, saith Josephus,‡ by their tradition, they were not to eat on their sabbaths till the sixth hour.

---

* Ubi super centum viginti credentium Spiritus Sanctus cecidisset. Epitaph. Paulæ, f. 61, M.

† Τί δαί, ἆρα ἐπὶ τοὺς δώδεκα μόνους ἦλθεν, οὐχὶ δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦς λοιποὺς; οὐδαμῶς· ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς ἑκατὸν εἴκοσι.

* Orat. in Flaccum, p. 752. † Leg. ad. Caium, p. 791. 802.

‡ Τὴν σύνοδον διέλυσεν ἐπελθοῦσα ἕκτη ὥρα, καθ' ἣν σάββασι ἀριστοποιεῖσθαι νόμιμόν ἐστιν ἡμῖν. De Vitâ suâ, p. 1320, D.

tion of) that which was spoken by the prophet Joel (ii. 28, in these words);

17 [2] And it shall come to pass in the last days (i. e. the times of the Messiah), saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh (upon persons of all ranks): and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy:

19 And (for the terror and condemnation of those who will not be convinced by this effusion of the Holy Ghost) [3] I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; (an extraordinary effusion of) blood, and (Matt. xxiv. 6, 7, strange appearances of lightnings and of) fire, (devouring towns and cities,) and (causing) vapour of smoke (to ascend up):

20 The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood (the government in church and state shall be dissolved), before that great and notable day of the Lord (be fully) come:

21 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved (from these direful judgments).

22 Ye men of Israel, hear these words (which I am now about to speak; viz.) Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of (i. e. declared to be sent from) God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know:

23 [4] Him, being delivered (into your hands) by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (declaring by his prophets that he should lay down his life for sinners), ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

24 (And he is that very person) Whom God hath raised up (from the grave), having loosed the pains (or bands) of death: (as you may be assured he hath done,) because it was impossible that he (who had life in himself, John v. 26, and the promise of a speedy resurrection, ver. 25,) should be holden of it.

25 For David speaketh (thus, not of himself, but) concerning him (Ps. xvi. 8, &c.), I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved:

---

[2] Ver. 17, 18. And it shall come to pass in the last days, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, &c.] For explication of these verses, let it be observed;

First, That even Kimchi owns, that אחרי כן in the prophet Joel is here all one with באחרית הימים, "in the last days," in the prophet Isaiah, ii. 2, 3, where is a plain prophecy of the exaltation of Christ's kingdom, and of the flowing in of the nations to it; and so St. Peter hath truly rendered what is in the prophet "afterward," by ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις, "in the last days;" and so it follows, that as there was no time before, in which this promise fully was made good, so are we not to expect any after times for the completion of it. Note,

Secondly, That as the words "all flesh" must be restrained to all men, they only being capable of spiritual gifts, as when the psalmist saith, Ps. cxlv. 50, "Let all flesh bless his holy name;" and the prophet Isaiah, lxvi. 23, "All flesh shall come, and worship before me, saith the Lord:" so must all men be here restrained to some of all ranks of men; as when Hazael is said to bring to the prophet Elisha כל טוב, "all the good of Damascus" (2 Kings viii. 9), i. e. some of every good thing: so Christ healed πᾶσαν νόσον, "all kinds of diseases," Matt. iv. 23 (see Glass. Phil. Sac. p. 437). So that the phrase includes all sorts of men, without exclusion of age, young or old; without exclusion of sex, viz. sons and daughters; without exclusion of conditions, servants and maidens; without exclusion of nations, Jews or gentiles, "even as many as the Lord shall call" (ver. 39). This promise being fulfilled as well upon the Samaritans (viii. 17), and upon Cornelius and his kinsfolk (Acts x.), as upon the Jews; and so this promise contradicts the Jewish rules, that "prophecy belonged only to Israelites, and to them only dwelling in Judea, and them only being מכנים, fitly prepared for it;" that is, say they, "upon those who are wise, and valiant, and rich, and who are free from sorrow" (see all this in Dr. Pocock on Joel ii. 28). Moreover, this effusion of this Spirit upon all flesh, as it denotes an inexhaustible fullness in that Spirit, who was to fill all men with all diversity of gifts, as the glory of God, and the good of the church required; so the effusion of it upon all the several ranks of men and women mentioned, is a full confutation of all the Jewish rules and glosses, requiring such qualifications as they do to make men capable of the gifts here promised. Again, these gifts being here styled "prophecy," "visions," "dreams," it is apparent that the promise of distributing them to all flesh could be meant only of the distribution of them to some of all ranks of men; for it being never so, that all men individually had the gifts of prophecy, dreams, visions, or revelations (1 Cor. xii. 29, 30), this could never be promised; it being certain that God did punctually fulfil his promise.

[3] Ver. 19, 20. And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke.] Τέρατα καὶ σημεῖα, the first relating to signs in the heaven, the second to those on earth (see note on Heb. ii. 4). So Josephus,* speaking of the calamities of the Jews, mentions πρὸ ταύτης σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, "the signs and wonders" that preceded them (Præf. ad. Bell. Jud. p. 708, C), καὶ ἐναργῆ τέρατα, "the prodigies" which manifestly portend their destruction, and the dreadful thunderings and lightnings, καὶ μυκήματα σειομένης τῆς γῆς ἐξαίσια, "and the vast earthquakes, which in the judgment of all men portend no small evil to them" (see note on Matt. xxiv. 7, 8, and on Luke xxi. 11). The "blood" very probably relates to that great effusion of blood which was then made, partly by their continual conflicts with other nations, and the insults of other nations upon them; the wars betwixt them and the Samaritans (Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5), betwixt them and the Syrians at Cæsarea (ibid. cap. 6, p. 695), betwixt them and the Greeks and Syrians (lib. xviii. cap. 12, p. 649, 650), the sedition betwixt them and the Greeks at Alexandria (Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 4), the vast slaughter of them there, mentioned by Philo in his oration against Flaccus, where τὰς μὲν ἡμέρας ἐν αἵματι διῆγον, and by Josephus, in almost all the cities round about them: and partly by the zealots and sicarii, of which Josephus† speaks very tragically. The "fire" here mentioned may relate either to the fiery meteors spoken of by Josephus, viz. the flaming sword hanging over the city, and the fiery comet pointing down upon it for a year; the light that shone upon the temple and the altar in the night, as if it had been noon-day, and the terrible lightnings now mentioned; or to the continual burnings of their synagogues, their oratories, their cities, villages, and houses, mentioned by Philo, as done at Alexandria by Flaccus; by Josephus,‡ as done there by Tiberius; in Galilee and in Judea, by Cestius and Vespasian: from whence must arise pillars of smoke.

Of the import of the sun's being darkened, and the moon turned into blood, see the note on Matt. xxiv. 20: and of the wonderful preservation of those who then called upon the name of the Lord, as the Septuagint hath it, of the εὐαγγελιζόμενοι, i. e. of "those who had embraced the gospel," see the note on ver. 12.

[4] Ver. 23. Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, τῇ ὡρισμένῃ βουλῇ, καὶ προγνώσει τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Here note, (1.) that in scripture that is said to be done by the determinate counsel of God, which is done according to what he had written and declared in his word, all his predictions concerning things future being declarations and determinations that they shall come to pass; "The Son of man goeth as it is written of him," saith St. Matthew, xxvi. 24, κατὰ τὸ ὡρισμένον, "as it is determined by God concerning him," Luke xxii. 22. Note, (2.) that in order to the completion of this prediction, it was necessary that God

---

* De Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 31.

† Lib. ii. cap. 34, 35.

‡ De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 36.

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also [5] my flesh shall rest in hope:

27 Because (ὅτι, that) thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (Gr. hades, i. e. my life in the grave), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

28 Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

29 Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is (still seen) with us unto this day (from whence his body never rising, this cannot personally belong to him).

30 Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ (from the dead) to sit on his throne;

31 He (I say) seeing this before spake of the re-

---

should suffer Christ to fall into the hands of wicked men, for they could have no power over him "unless it were thus given them from above" (John xix. 11), and that he should lay no restraints upon them from executing their malicious designs upon him; and this unrestrained permission is all that is or can be signified by God's delivering Christ up into their hands. Note, (3.) That this permission doth neither hinder nor abate their sin in crucifying Christ; for notwithstanding this, it is plainly said, that they by wicked hands had crucified him. Hence therefore it doth only follow (1.) That God foresaw what he foretold, that Christ would suffer by the hands of wicked men. (2.) That when their malice should incline them to bring him to these sufferings, he had determined not to interpose by his immediate power to hinder them from doing it, but rather to permit them so to do. But then it must be noted, that every divine permission of what God hath forbidden men to do, and of what he requires them to repent of when they have done it, as God doth by Peter here, is a permission of what he would not have done by them, whom he forbids to do it, and a permission of that which cannot be done by them without sin, for of that only are we called to repent. Hence therefore it must follow, that this foreknowledge and determinate counsel of God can be no intimation of his will that any man should do what he forbids him to do, but only of his will to permit the action to be done: for God cannot will that any one should do what he forbids, i. e. wills he should not do. Nor, secondly, can it lay on any person a necessity of doing what he thus determines to permit; for then it must remove the sin, because it takes away the freedom of the action, and renders it not mine, but his that laid upon me the unavoidable necessity of doing it. It only doth suppose that God can see and foretell what man, not hindered by him, but left to his own inclinations, will do; and if that foresight hath any influence upon the will to make the action necessary, then (1.) not only all our actions must be necessary, they being all foreseen, but also God must foresee that they are necessary, for he foresees them as they are in their causes, and doth not by foreseeing make them, i. e. cause them so to be, since that must necessarily make him the cause of all the sinful actions he foresees.

[5] Ver. 26, 27. My flesh shall rest in hope: that thou wilt not leave τὴν ψυχήν μου εἰς ᾅδου, neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption.] That is, saith Dr. Hammond, I am confident that though I die, yet shalt thou not leave me so long dead, as that my body shall be putrified; or, thou wilt not "leave my life in the grave," or in the state of death. To explain and confirm this interpretation, let it be considered,

First, That the Hebrew word nephesh, translated by the Septuagint ψυχή, doth, many hundred times, both in the Old and the New Testament, signify life: so σῶσαι, τηρεῖν, φυλάττειν τὴν ψυχήν is to "preserve life," Gen. xix. 17, xxxii. 30, 1 Sam. xix. 11, Job ii. 6, Ps. lxxxv. 2, Jer. xlviii. 6, li. 6 (see the note on Matt. xvi. 25, 26).

Ζητεῖν τὴν ψυχήν, is to "seek the life" of a man to destroy it, Exod. iv. 19, 1 Sam. xx. 1, xxiv. 9, xxv. 29, 2 Sam. iv. 8, 1 Kings xix. 10. 14, Ps. xiv. 4, xxiii. 3, xxxvii. 15, xxxix. 19, lxix. 2, cxli. 6, Jer. iv. 30, xi. 23, xxii. 25, xliv. 30.

Ῥῦσαι, ἐξέλεσθαι, λυτρῶσαι τὴν ψυχήν, is to "save life," or preserve it from death, Josh. ii. 13, 2 Sam. iv. 9, 1 Kings i. 12. 29, Ps. xvi. 14, xxi. 21, xxxii. 19, xl. 4, liv. 25, lvi. 5, lxxi. 13, lxxxv. 12, lxxxviii. 47, cviii. 30, cxiv. 5, cxix. 2, Isa. xliv. 20.

Δοῦναι λύτρον τῆς ψυχῆς, is to "give ransom for his life," Exod. xxiii. 30, xxx. 12.

Ψυχὴ ἀντὶ ψυχῆς, is "life for life," Exod. xxi. 23, Lev. xxiv. 18, Deut. xix. 21, 1 Kings xxiii. 39. 42 (see the note on Matt. xxviii. 23), and ψυχὴ ἡμῶν ἀνθ' ὑμῶν, is "our life for yours," Josh. ii. 13.

Τιθέναι τὴν ψυχήν μου ἐν τῇ χειρί μου, is to "put my life in jeopardy," Judg. xii. 3, 1 Sam. xix. 5, xxviii. 21 (see for this sense in the New Testament, the note on 1 Thess. ii. 8). Note,

Secondly, That when a man dies, his "life," in the scripture phrase, is said to go down to hades, to "the pit," or "into the house of silence;" and when he is snatched from the gates of death, his "life" is said to be "brought or lifted up from hades," or the grave; and therefore, when their bodies remain unquickened in the grave, their "life" may properly be said to be "left" in it. Thus Jacob saith, Gen. xxxvii. 35, "I will go down to sheol to my son mourning," καταβήσομαι εἰς ᾅδου, "I will descend to hell," saith the LXX. lebeth kebortha, "to the sepulchre:" so Jonathan, That I may be in the state of the dead as my son is: so again, xlii. 38, "If mischief befall" my son Benjamin, "you will bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to sheol," κατάξετε εἰς ᾅδου, "you will bring me down to hades"—"into the house of the sepulchre," saith Ben Uziel again; and that to bring down his gray hairs, was to bring down his "life to the grave," is evident, because, when Judah repeats these very words, xliv. 29. 31, he gives this reason of them, because ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ ἐκκρέμαται ἐκ τῆς τούτου ψυχῆς, "his life depended on the lad's life:" so 1 Sam. ii. 6, "The Lord," saith Hannah, "killeth, and he maketh alive, κατάγει εἰς ᾅδου καὶ ἀνάγει he bringeth down to the hades, and he raiseth up again;" where note, that these words are by Josephus* used as a proof of the resurrection; and that the Chaldee paraphrast was of the same opinion, his words testify, for thus he renders them, "He killeth, and he hath said we shall live again; he bringeth down to hades, and he will after bring us up to life eternal:" so again, Job vii. 9, If a man καταβῇ εἰς ᾅδην "shall go down to hades," shall he rise up again? And Job xxxiii. 18, we find these very words, "If God will teach him discipline he will deliver נפשו מני שחת his life from the pit"—"from corruption," saith the Chaldee; ἀπὸ θανάτου, "from death," saith the Septuagint; and ver. 22, "If this life draweth nigh to the pit," נפשו לשחת, ἡ ζωὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς θάνατον, "to death," and he says, "Redeem me from going down שחת into corruption, ἐν ᾅδῃ, to hades; he shall return to the days of his youth." And Jonah, who was a type of Christ in this very thing (Matt. xii. 39, 40), saith, "When, naphshi, my soul failed in me, taal mishechath chaii, thou causedst my life to ascend out of the pit" (Jonah ii. 6, 7). In the psalmist this expression is very frequent: "O Lord," saith he, ἀνήγαγες ἐξ ᾅδου τὴν ψυχήν μου, "thou hast brought up, min sheol naphshi, my life from hell," or hades, "thou hast preserved me from going down into the pit," Ps. xxx. 3. And again, Ps. lxxxvi. 13, "Thou hast delivered my life τὴν ψυχήν μου, from the nethermost hell," or hades—misheol haragihta "from sheol beneath," or from the low earth, saith the Chaldee; "from the state of death," Ainsworth; "from the sepulchre," I. T., into which Christ is said to have "descended," Eph. iv. 9 (see the note there); and into which David, had he then died, would only have descended and not into hell properly so called, Ps. lxxxviii. 3, chaii lesheol, "My life draweth nigh to hell;" ἡ ψυχή μου τῷ ᾅδῃ "to hades;" and Ps. xciv. 14, "If the Lord had not been my helper, my life had dwelt in silence, ἐν ᾅδῃ in the grave," the house of silence, as appears from those words, Ps. cxv. 17, "The dead cannot praise thee, nor οἱ καταβαίνοντες εἰς ᾅδου, they that go down into hades," LXX.; "into silence," Heb.—"into beth keborah, the house of the sepulchre," surrection of Christ ('s body thus), that his soul [5] was not (to be) left in hell (i. e. the grave), neither his flesh did (should) see corruption.

---

* Lib. de Maccab. p. 1101.

32 This Jesus (I say) hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses.

33 Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted (Gr. exalted to the right hand of God), and having [6] received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this (gift, of) which ye now see and hear (the effects).

34 For (this passage, which I am about to cite, cannot belong to) [7] David (himself, seeing he) is not (yet)

Chaldee; and Ps. lxxxix. 40, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of hell, τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἐκ χειρὸς ᾅδου, his life from the hand of hades," i. e. the grave? "Shall he be delivered from the angel of death, shall he not descend into the house of the sepulchre?" Parallel to which are the words of Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 18, οἱ ἐν ᾅδῃ, "They that are in hades," or sheol, "shall not praise, neither shall the dead bless thee:" so Tob. iii. 10, "I shall bring the old age of my father with sorrow" εἰς ᾅδου, that is, εἰς τάφον, "to the grave," vi. 14, so David saith to Solomon of Joab and Shimei, κατάξεις εἰς ᾅδου, "Thou shalt bring down their gray hairs to the grave" (1 Kings ii. 6. 9).

Note, Thirdly, That sheol throughout the Old Testament, and ᾅδης in the Septuagint, answering to it, signifies not the place of punishment, or of the souls of bad men, but the grave only, or the place of death, appears,

1. From the root of it, shaal, which signifies to ask, crave, and require, because it craves for all men (Prov. xxx. 16), and will let no man escape its hands (Ps. lxxxviii. 49), it is that sheol or hades, "whither we are all going" (Eccles. ix. 10). "The Hebrew sheol," saith Buxtorf, "signifies, in general, the place of human bodies, when they are separated from their souls; ἀΐδην νεκρῶν χωρίον, exponunt Græci, "The Greeks say, that hades is the place of the dead," saith D. Windet; it is ὁ τάφος, ὁ τύμβος, "the tomb, or sepulchre," saith Phavorinus; thus, "to go to the gates of hades," in Homer, is, saith the scholiast, περίφρασις θανάτου, "a description of death;"—"He shall knock at the gates of hades," saith Theocritus, τοῦτεστι ἀποθανεῖται, "He shall die," saith the scholiast (see the note on Matt. xvi. 18).

2. Because it is the place to which the good, as well as the bad, go; for they whose souls go upwards descend into it; thither went Jacob, Gen. xxxvii. 35; there Job desired to be, xvi. 13, "for he knew that sheol was his house," xvii. 13, and "that to descend into the dust, was to descend into hades;" where Olympiodorus brings him in speaking thus, οὐ κοινὸν ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις τὸ ἀποθανεῖν; οὐχὶ ᾅδης ἅπασιν ὁ οἶκος;" "Is not death common to all men? Is not hades the house of all men?" Hezekiah expected to be there after he went hence; for he said, "I will go to the gates of hades," Isa. xxxviii. 30, that is, saith Jerome, "to those gates of which the psalmist speaks, saying, Thou wilt lift me up from the gates of death." The ancient Greeks assigned one hades to all that died, and therefore say, παντας ὁμοῦ συηνοὺς ἀΐδης ἐίσεται, "Hades receives all mortal men together," εἰς κοινὸν ᾅδην πάντες ἥξουσιν βροτοὶ, "all men go to hades."

3. Had the penmen of the Old Testament meant by hades any receptacle of souls, they could not truly have declared there was "no wisdom or knowledge in sheol," Eccles. ix. 10, no remembrance of God there, Ps. vi. 6, no praising in sheol, Isa. xxxviii. 18; for those heathens who looked upon it as a receptacle of souls, held it to be a place in which they would be punished or rewarded.

Seeing then, καταγειν τὴν ψυχὴν εἰς ᾅδου, is "to bring down the life to the grave," ἀναγειν τὴν ψυχὴν ἐξ ᾅδου, is "to bring the life up from the grave;" μὴ ἐγκαταλείπειν τὴν ψυχήν μου εἰς ᾅδου, may very properly here import, "not to leave the life of Christ in the grave," but to revive his dead body by giving a new life and motion to the animal spirits, now dormant in it, and a reunion of his soul to it; and so this first part of the sentence, "Thou wilt not leave my life in the grave," will be in sense the same with the ensuing words, "Thou wilt not suffer thy Holy One to see corruption;" as are those words in the psalmist, "What man is he that shall not see death?" the same with the following words, "Shall he deliver his life from the hand of hades?" and those of Job, xviii. 18, "The grave is my house, I have made my bed in the darkness;" and those of Elihu, xxxiii. 28, "He will deliver his life from going down into the pit, and his life shall see the light;" and those of David, "Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave, thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down into the pit," xxx. 3, "My life draweth nigh to the grave, I am counted with them that go down into the pit," Ps. lxxxviii. 3 (see Ps. cxv. 17, Isa. xxxviii. 10—12). And that this must be the true import of the words, will be still farther evident,

1. From the precedent words, "My flesh shall rest in hope," that thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, it being a very proper prosopopœia to bring his dead flesh, hoping it shall be revived, but not so proper to introduce it, hoping that its soul shall not be left in hell or in the place of the damned; and also from the following words, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, for thou wilt show me the path of life:" for, as life is opposed to death, so showing to one dead, or in danger of it, the path of life, must signify the preserving him from death, or the restoring him to life when dead. And,

2. From the consideration of the person to whom these words do in the primary sense belong: for, being spoken by king David, when his life was continually in his hand, and he was still in danger of death from a persecuting Saul, they in respect of him can only signify his hope, that God would not give him over unto death; and so in reference to the Son of David will very naturally import, that though thou sufferest men to kill me, and lay me in the grave, yet wilt thou raise me from the dead. In a word, this phrase is by St. Peter imported of our Lord's resurrection; for so he speaks, "Him, whom you by wicked hands have slain, God hath raised up, loosing the bands of death," ver. 23, 24, "for David saith of him, Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," i. e. my life in the grave; and it is not opposed to David's continuing in the grave, and in the state of death; thus, "David is both dead and buried," and his body lies still in the sepulchre; he therefore could not say this of himself, but "being a prophet," and so foreseeing that God would raise up Jesus from the dead, he said this of the resurrection of Christ, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," or, my life in the grave (see the appendix to this verse at the end of the Acts).

[5] Ver. 31. Οὐ κατελείφθη ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς ᾅδου.] Here Dr. Mills is confident that the words ἡ ψυχη αὐτοῦ were inserted from ver. 26, because they are wanting in Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 12, p. 299, in the Vulgate, Syriac, and Cod. Alex., but as these words are owned by the Arab., Chrysostom, and Œcumenius, in locum, and by Origen,* in his commentary on the Kings, where he says that they are read in the Psalms, and are interpreted in the Acts of the Apostles; so is it evident from the very words that they ought to be retained, for the words of the psalmist being these, οὐκ ἐγκαταλείψεις τὴν ψυχήν μου εἰς ᾅδου, the apostle here saying that David spake this of the resurrection, ought to use the words that David spake: and, (2.) that is farther evident from the words following, οὐδὲ σὰρξ αὐτοῦ, "Nor did his flesh see corruption," they having a plain relation to ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ going before.

[6] Ver. 33. He received the promise of the Spirit from the Father.] i. e. The Spirit promised by him, and therefore styled his promise, Luke xxiv. 49, and received from him by Christ, who, as mediator betwixt God and man, is to convey all blessings to man, "from that Father of lights" from whom "comes every good and perfect gift;" and thus this one mediator betwixt God and man, "the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. ii. 5), is fitly said to have received this Spirit from the Father, though as to his divine nature he also is the Spirit of Christ (1 Pet. i. 11), and he receives of his to give unto us (John xvi. 14, see the note there); yea, he hath so received him as to be the Lord of the Spirit (2 Cor. iii. 18), and of all his administrations (1 Cor. xii. 5): so that all Christians ever did receive him "according to the measure of the gift of Christ" (Eph. iv. 7).

[7] Ver. 34. David is not ascended into heaven.] i. e. With his body, as Enoch and Elias did; but as Jesus, who is the ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself (of Christ), The Lord said unto my Lord, [8] Sit thou on my right hand, 35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

* Apud Huet. tom. i. p. 32.

36 Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that (by this exaltation of him to his right hand), [9] God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord (of all things, x. 36,) and Christ (i. e. the king of Israel, John i. 50).

37 ¶ Now when they heard this, they were pricked (or filled with sorrow) in their heart (for this sin), and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do (to obtain the pardon of so great a crime)?

38 Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the [10] name of Jesus Christ for the remission of (your) sins, (which by this baptism will be washed away, xxii. 16,) and (then) ye (also) shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39 For the promise (of him, mentioned Joel ii. 28,) is (made) unto you, and to your children, and (not to them only, but also) to all that are afar off (i. e. the gentiles), even (to) as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort (them to repentance), saying, Save yourselves from (the evils coming on) this untoward generation.

41 ¶ Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them (of the church) about three thousand souls (i. e. persons).

42 And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and (in) fellowship (with them, and one another, 1 John i. 3. 7), and in [11] breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43 And fear came upon every soul (that was acquainted with these things): and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44 And all that believed [12] were together, and had [13] all things common;

45 And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

Son and Lord of David, and was to sit upon his throne (ver. 33), and reign over the house of Jacob for ever (Luke i. 32, 33), must have ascended thither: for thus did David prophesy concerning him when he said, "The Lord said to my Lord," &c.; of which words see the notes on Matt. xxii. 46, Heb. i. 13.

[8] Sit thou on my right hand.] Christ's session at the right hand of God, imports, (1.) the unspeakable felicity which Christ, according to his human nature, now enjoys; for God's right hand is represented as the place of everlasting happiness and joy, as in those words, Ps. xvi. 11, "In thy presence there is fullness of joy, at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore;" and hence the psalmist, having prophesied of our Lord's resurrection, adds these words, "Thou wilt make me full of joy with thy countenance," ver. 28. (2.) The glorious majesty to which our Saviour is advanced; God's right hand being styled in scripture, "the right hand of majesty," Heb. i. 3; and as the most honourable place among men is the right hand, and Solomon showed his mother Bathsheba the highest honour, when he made her sit on the right hand of his throne (1 Kings ii. 19); so hath the Father advanced Christ's human nature to the highest dignity, by causing it to sit "on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens," Heb. viii. 1. (3.) It signifies that fullness of power with which he is invested over all things in heaven and earth (Matt. xxviii. 18); for so the scripture represents the greatness of his divine power by "the strength of his right hand" (Ps. xx. 6, lxxxix. 13): and hence our Lord is said to "sit on the right hand of power," Matt. xxviii. 64. (4.) Because princes sit on their thrones to execute judgment, and exert that dominion which God hath given them over their subjects; therefore this session at the right hand of God imports his authority to judge both the quick and the dead, as being by it constituted Lord of the dead and of the living (Rom. xiv. 9. 12).

[9] Ver. 36. God hath made the same Jesus both Lord and Christ.] Here the word Christ signifies the Messiah, according to his regal office, in which sense he is still styled by the Chaldee paraphrasts and Jewish writers, משיח מלך, Messias, or "Christ the king," as Buxtorf* shows in the word משיח; under which title the prophets frequently speak of him as of a king to reign over God's people, Ps. xxiv. 7, xlv. 1, Isa. xxxii. 1, Zech. ix. 9; and not the Jews only, but the whole east under that title did expect him (see note on Luke ii. 38).

[10] Ver. 38, 39. Be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise is to you and to your children.] Here let it be observed,

First, That St. Peter exhorts the Jews to be baptized, not in the name of the Father and the Holy Ghost, but only in the name of Jesus, because they did already believe in God the Father, and in the Holy Ghost, and profess obedience to the laws of God, and of the Holy Ghost speaking by the mouth of his prophets.

Secondly, That when it is said, "You shall receive the Holy Ghost," it is not intended that every one of them upon their baptism should be endued with the extraordinary gifts of tongues and prophecy: for it is manifest from the history of the Acts, and especially from vi. 3, that he was given only to some among them, though that was for the benefit of all; and hence is that inquiry of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 29, 30, "Are all prophets? do all speak with tongues?" But the meaning of St. Peter is, that he should fall upon some of all ranks of them, according to the true purport of the words of Joel. Note, Thirdly, That these words will not prove a right of infants to receive baptism: the promise mentioned here being that only of the Holy Ghost, mentioned ver. 16—18, and so relating only to the times of the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost, and to those persons who by age were made capable of these extraordinary gifts.

[11] Ver. 42. And in breaking of bread.] I see no necessity to think these words relate to the receiving of the sacrament; not from the phrase of breaking bread, for this is used by the evangelists when they relate Christ's miraculous feeding of the multitude, Matt. xv. 36, Mark viii. 19, 20, and in the forty-sixth verse of this chapter they are said to "break bread from house to house," and to "eat their meat with singleness of heart;" where it can only signify their friendly converse with one another: but, (2.) allowing this to relate to the receiving of the sacrament, and not to their breaking bread at the feast of pentecost, either wine was also consecrated with the bread, or it was not; if it was, then must bread signify, by a synecdoche, very usual in the scripture,* bread and drink; and therefore, when that drink is wine, as in the sacrament it is, bread and wine; and then, if both were consecrated, both might be distributed, according to our Saviour's precept, "Drink ye all of this;" if it was not, the officiator, even according to the principles of the church of Rome, must be guilty of sacrilege (see the notes on Luke xxiv. 30, Acts xx. 7).

[12] Ver. 44. They were ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, all together.] There being added to the one hundred and twenty, three thousand souls (ver. 41), it seemeth inconvenient to say, they were all together in one place, unless it were in one of those apartments in the towers of the temple, which, saith Josephus,† would receive a hundred beds; and therefore it seems better to prefer this to their communion in the same action, in which sense all the Jews are said to build ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, "together" (Ezra iv. 3), though they were far separated from one another (Neh. iv. 19), and Joab and Abner's men to be ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, "together" (2 Sam. ii. 12), though one were on the one, the other on the other side of the pool (see Ps. iv. 9, xlix. 2, Isa. lxvi. 17, Jer. vi. 12).

[13] And had all things common.] These words here, and iv. 32, do not signify that they had no longer any property

---

* P. 1267.

* Gen. xliii. 16. 25, Exod. ii. 20, xvi. 3, xviii. 12, Luke xiv. 1, Matt. xv. 2, Mark iii. 10, Acts xxvii. 35.

† De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 13, p. 915.

46 And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart (or sincere liberality one towards another),

47 Praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be [11] saved (Gr. the saved).

in what belonged to them, for then they could not sell them afterward; but that they used and disposed of them as things common, freely imparting of them to all that had need. And that this making sale of them was not done by command, Peter declares, by telling Ananias he was under no obligation so to do (Acts v. 4). Nor was it ever intended for an example or precedent to other Christians, as is evident from all the epistles, in which we have frequent mention of the distinction betwixt rich and poor; and frequent exhortations to the wealthy to be rich in good works, but not the least intimation that they ought to sell their possessions; this being now done on a particular account, either by them who had lands out of Judea, as Barnabas had his in Cyprus, and being resolved not to return thither, but to cleave to the apostles, could make but little benefit from them there; or else in Judea, and therefore they knowing, from our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, and from his exhortation, that they were shortly to fly from and quit them to the enemy, were willing to part with their estates for the benefit of the church, before they were snatched from them by the enemy.

[11] Ver. 47. Τοὺς σωζομένους, The saved.] The Christians are so styled elsewhere: so 1 Cor. i. 18, τοῖς σωζομένοις ἡμῖν, "To us the saved Christ crucified is the power of God;" and when the means of salvation, or that "grace of God which brings salvation," was vouchsafed to them, salvation is said to come (Luke xix. 9, Rom. xi. 11), or to be sent to them (Acts xiii. 16, xxviii. 28, see the note on Eph. ii. 18, Tit. iii. 5).

CHAPTER III.

1 Now (Gr. and) Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being [1] the ninth hour (Gr. at the ninth hour of prayer).

2 And a certain man (who had been) lame from his mother's womb was carried (thither), whom they (who brought him) laid daily at the [2] gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple; (by which means he became well known to all who entered into it, ver. 10;)

3 Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked (Gr. to receive) an alms (of them).

4 And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John (to raise his expectation of receiving some benefit from them), said (to him), Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto (Gr. looked on) them, expecting to receive something of them.

6 Then Peter said (to him), Silver and gold have I none (to give); but such as I have (Gr. what I have) give I unto thee: (saying to thee,) In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

7 And he (having said this) took him by the right hand, and lifted him up (Gr. and taking him by the

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 1. At the ninth hour of prayer.] Among the Jews there where three stated hours of prayer; the first at the third hour of the day (Acts ii. 15), which answers to our ninth; at which time they offered their morning sacrifice (Exod. xxix. 39, Numb. xxviii. 3, 4), at the ninth hour, or at three in the afternoon, when they offered their evening sacrifice (Acts x. 3. 30). Of these two, the Hebrew doctors say, The continual sacrifice of the morning made atonement for the iniquities that were done in the night, and the evening sacrifice for the iniquity that was done by day: but Philo* saith, "They were both sacrifices of thanksgiving for the blessings God was pleased continually to confer upon mankind by day and night." At both these times, special favours were shown by God to his people; thus, πρωὶ ἀναβαινούσης τῆς ϑυσίας, "In the morning when the mincha was offered," the thirsty land was miraculously filled with water (2 Kings iii. 20); and about the time of the evening oblation, God answers Daniel's prayer, by sending the angel Gabriel to him (Dan. ix. 21). Hence David says, "Let my prayer ascend to thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice" (Ps. cxli. 2); either because that also comprehends the morning sacrifice, as Kimchi conjectures, or, as R. Saadias, because by that all things were atoned, there being no sacrifice offered after that: and upon this account it might be, that the apostles, and other persons went always up into the temple at these "hours of prayer" (Acts ii. 46).

The third time of prayer was the sixth hour, that is, at twelve of the clock, before they dined, or after dinner; at which time we find Peter at his prayers, Acts x. 9. Of these three times the royal psalmist speaketh thus, "At evening, and at morning, and at noon, will I pray to thee" (Ps. lv. 17): and of Daniel it is recorded, that "he kneeled down three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks (Dan. vi. 10. 13). And the Jews say, they received these stated hours of prayer from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: but yet as their going to the temple is no precedent for us Christians to perform our private devotions in the church, which by our Lord's directions we rather are to do entering into our closets, God not being so present in our churches, as in a place of his perpetual and glorious residence, as he was in the tabernacle and the temple; so neither is their observation of these hours of prayer any warrant for our institution of canonical hours of prayer, much less an evidence that the apostles by going thither did institute these canonical hours, as Baronius fancies. Notwithstanding, seeing we Christians are as much obliged to perform both our public and private devotions to God, as the Jews could be, it must be laudable in us also to set apart solemn times for the performance of those duties, as they did. And hence the Constitutions* of the Apostles, having cited the Lord's prayer, τρὶς τῆς ἡμέρας προσεύξεσϑε, "Pray thus thrice a day:" and Tertullian† says that these three hours, morning, noon, and evening, were insigniores in orationibus diurnis, "the most celebrated in their daily prayers." And these three times, saith Theodoret,‡ we glorify God, τὰς ϑείας λειτουργίας ἐν ἐκκλησίαις ἐπιτελοῦντες, "using the sacred liturgies in the churches."

[2] Ver. 2. Πρὸς τὴν ϑύραν τοῦ ἱεροῦ τὴν λεγομένην ὡραίαν, To the gate of the temple called Beautiful.] This gate, being the very front and entrance into the temple, was built with such sumptuousness and glory, as became the frontispiece of that place where the divine Majesty vouchsafed to dwell, and hence bearing the name of the "Beautiful gate:" the other three gates belonging to the entrance into the court of the women, were, saith Josephus, χρυσοῦ τε, καὶ ἀργύρῳ κεκαλυμμένοι πανταχόϑεν, "covered over with silver, and then gilt;" but this gate, which he called the Corinthian gate, as being made of Corinthian brass, was, saith he,§ πολὺ τῇ τιμῇ τὰς καταργύρους καὶ περιχρύσους ὑπεράγουσα, "much exceeding in glory those of gold and silver."

* Ὑπὲρ εὐχαριστίας ἑκάτερον, τὸν μὲν ὑπὲρ τῶν μεθημερινῶν, τὸν δ' ὑπὲρ τῶν νυκτὸς εὐεργεσιῶν, ἃς ἀπαύστως καὶ ἀδιαστάτως τὰ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων ὁ Θεὸς χορηγεῖ. De Victimis, lib. i. p. 647, B.

* Lib. vii. cap. 24. † De Orat. C. ‡ Ep. 145, p. 1023.
§ De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 14, p. 916, G.

right hand, he arose): and (for) immediately his feet and ancle bones received strength (to arise).

8 And he leaping up (from his bed) stood (up), and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God (according to the prophecy, Isa. xxxv. 6, Then the lame shall leap as the hart).

9 And all the people saw him walking and (heard him) praising God:

10 And they knew that it was he which sat for (to beg) alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and (therefore) they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people (present) ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering (at what was done).

12 ¶ And when Peter saw it, he [3] answered (or, spake) unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power [4] or holiness we had made this man to walk?

13 (This miracle is wholly to be ascribed to the Lord Jesus; for be it known to you, that) The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; (placing him at the right hand of his Majesty in the highest heavens, Heb. i. 3, and giving him all power in heaven and earth, Matt. xxvii. 18, even that Jesus) whom ye delivered up (to be crucified), and denied him (or, refused him) in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go (κρίναντος ἀπολύειν, judging him rather fit to be released;

14 He, I say, would have released him,) but ye [5] denied the Holy One and the Just (i. e. him who was truly so), and (instead of him) desired a murderer (i. e. Barabbas, Luke xxiii. 19) to be granted unto you;

15 And (ye) killed [6] the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses.

16 And his name through (our) [7] faith in his name hath made this man strong (to walk), whom ye see and know (to have been unable from his birth to go): yea, the faith which is by him (i. e. which we have in him, or which is efficacious by his power) hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

17 And now, brethren, I wot that [8] through ignorance (of his mission from God) ye did it (i. e. these things), as did also your rulers (through the like ignorance, arising not from want of evidence that he was sent of God, but from those prejudices which obstructed their discerning it).

18 But those things, which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled (as that you, through this ignorance, have been the very means of fulfilling what they had foretold, Acts xiii. 27).

19 ¶ Repent ye therefore (of the murder of the Just One), and be converted (from your opposition to his name and doctrine to faith in him), that your sins may be blotted out, when [9] the times of refreshing shall

---

[3] Ver. 12. Ἀπεκρίνατο, He answered.] This word is often used without relation to any precedent question, and sometimes only signifies, that such a one began to speak, and is usually joined with λέγω or εἶπω, to speak; so Matt. xi. 25, Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν, Jesus Patrem compellans dixit, "Jesus speaking to his Father, said;" or, Jesus began to say, Matt. xii. 38. Some of the scribes, ἀπεκρίθησαν λέγοντες, "spake, saying," xvii. 4; ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πετρὸς εἶπεν, "And Peter speaking, said to Jesus:" see xxii. 1, xxvi. 63, xxvii. 21, xxviii. 5, Mark ix. 38, x. 51, xi. 14. Ἀποκριθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἶπεν αὐτῇ, "Jesus speaking, said to the fig-tree;" xii. 35, xiv. 48, John v. 19, Acts v. 8, viii. 34, x. 46, xv. 13, xxiv. 25, xxv. 9, so the Hebrew word אמר often signifies, as in Exod. xv. 21; so Exod. xxi. 5, ἐὰν ἀποκρίθῃ, "If the servant say:" so 1 Kings ii. 1, ἀπεκρίνατο, David "speaks;" and iii. 26, ἀπεκρίθη ἡ γυνὴ, "the woman said," Ps. cxix. 172, and frequently in the book of Job. Sometimes, though no question is asked, and no discourse requiring an answer preceded, yet our Lord answers to the secret thoughts and inward reasonings of the Jews, or to their admiration touching his words or works, as Matt. xvii. 4, xxviii. 5, Mark x. 24, Luke iii. 16, v. 22, viii. 40.

[4] Ἰδίᾳ εὐσεβείᾳ, Or holiness.] This is the reading of Chrysostom, and Œcumenius, and of all the MSS., and ancient versions, excepting only the Syriac: for it is confessed by Lorinus, that the ancient Latin copies, both MSS. and printed, read not potestate but pietate. Here then is a plain evidence of the variation of the Roman doctrine from that of the apostles, assisted by the Holy Ghost; for the apostles here plainly disclaim any excellency or piety in them, which might make them worthy to be God's instruments above any others, in working such miracles as these: but the catechism of the Trent council* plainly declares, that God confers upon us many benefits, eorum merito, "by virtue of the merits of the saints;" and Lorinus on the place declares, that innumerable histories, and the practice of the church, show, quòd sanctorum merita, ad impetranda miracula valeant, "that the merits of the saints are prevalent for the working miracles."

[5] Ver. 14. Τὸν ἅγιον καὶ δίκαιον ἠρνήσασθε.] These words I would render thus, "You refused the Holy One:" so styled by good angels, Luke i. 35, and by evil angels, Luke iv. 34, and even by Pilate's wife, that "Just One," Matt. xxvii. 19, for so ἀρνέομαι doth often signify both in scripture and profane authors. So Acts vii. 25, "This Moses ὃν ἠρνήσαντο, whom they refused:" Heb. xi. 24, ἠρνήσατο, "He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh." So in Phavorinus, ἀρνεῖται ὁ μὴ θέλων ποιῆσαί τι, is, "he that is unwilling," and refuseth "to do any thing:" in Suidas, τὸ ἀρνεῖσθαι δανειστὰς, is, "to reject the usurers." And to this sense, the very derivation of the word seems to lead: it being, say grammarians, ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴρειν τὰς χεῖρας ἐπὶ τῇ παραιτήσει, done "by lifting up the hands in way of refusal."

[6] Ver. 15. Ἀρχηγὸν τῆς ζωῆς, The Prince of life.] The person sent by God to lead you in the way to life eternal, having first declared it fully to the world, 2 Tim. i. 10, proposed it to believers, John vi., purchased it for them by his death, shown the way to it by his doctrine, and being appointed to give it to his faithful servants, John xvii. 2, whence he is styled, ἀρχηγὸς τῆς σωτηρίας, "the captain of our salvation," Heb. ii. 10, ὁ ἀρχηγὸς, "a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel, and remission of sins," v. 32. Or, as Grotius here hath it, he is styled "a Prince of life," as having life in himself, and power to raise all men from the dead, John v. 26. 29. To which sense the whole phrase, "Ye have killed the Prince of life," seems to lead us.

[7] Ver. 16. Ἡ πίστις ἡ δι' αὐτοῦ, The faith which is by him.] For ἐν αὐτῷ, "in him:" so Rom. xv. 20, "Nothing is unclean, δι' αὐτοῦ, in itself;" δι' ὕδατος, "in the water," 2 Pet. iii. 5, τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, "the things done in the body," 2 Cor. v. 10, "they that sleep διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, in Jesus," 1 Thess. iv. 14, and in this book, διὰ τῆς νυκτὸς, "in the night," v. 19, xxiii. 31.

[8] Ver. 17. Through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.] Though the ignorance of the whole nation, and especially of the "rulers" in this case, was such as took away all just excuse in them on the account of their infidelity (John xv. 22. 24); yet, because it was occasioned by those prejudices they had contracted through the meanness of his character, and their imagination that Christ should not die, and that his kingdom should be temporal, Christ bears with it till the time of the effusion of the Holy Ghost, and then calls them again by his apostles to repentance. See the discourse of the sin against the Holy Ghost in the appendix to Matt. xii.

[9] Ver. 19. Ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι καιροὶ ἀναψύξεως, When the

---

* Par. iii. cap. 2, §. 12.

(ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι, that times of refreshing may) come from the presence of the Lord;

20 And he shall send (καὶ ἀποστείλῃ, and that he may send) Jesus Christ, which [10] before was preached unto you (to give you a final absolution from them at the great day: him, I say,)

21 [11] Whom the heaven must receive until the [12] times of restitution (or completion) of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets [13] since the world began.

22 [14] For Moses truly said (or, said indeed) unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

23 And it shall come to pass, that every soul (i. e. person), which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

24 Yea, and [15] all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after (or, and the times following), as many as have spoken (of that prophet), have likewise foretold of these days (of grace and refreshment by him.

25 Now) [16] Ye are the children of (your fathers) the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham (Gen. xxii. 18), And in [17] thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

---

times of refreshing shall come upon you.] Here the critical notes are these, (1.) that ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι, is to be rendered "that," or, "so that they may come:" ut veniant; so Irenæus, lib. ii. cap. 12, p. 363, ut superveniant, Tertul. de Resur. Carn. cap. 23. So the phrase is often used both in the Old and New Testament, and in profane authors: in the Old Testament it answers to לְמַעַן, and is often rendered that: so Ps. ix. 14, ὅπως ἂν ἐξαγγείλω, "That I may show forth thy praises:" Ps. xcii. 7, ὅπως ἂν ἐξολοθρευθῶσιν, "That they may be destroyed for ever:" Ps. cxix. 101, ὅπως ἂν φυλάξω, "That I may keep thy words." In the New Testament, ὅπως ἂν ἐκζητήσωσιν, "That the residue of men may seek after the Lord," Acts xv. 17, ὅπως ἂν ἀποκαλυφθῶσιν, "That the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed," Luke ii. 35, ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς, "That thou mayest be justified," Rom. iii. 4; so in Aristophanes, ὅπως ἂν εἰδῇ, "That he may know" (see Budæus). (2.) Οἱ καιροὶ ἀναψύξεως, are times of rest, refreshment, consolation: sometimes after great danger and trouble, as when God had taken away the plague of frogs, "Pharaoh saw there was ἀνάψυξις, refreshment," or, as we say, a breathing-time: so when the evil spirit was on Saul, David played on the harp, καὶ ἀνέψυξε, "and Saul was refreshed" (2 Sam. xvi. 14). The king and all the people came weary, καὶ ἀνέψυξαν ἐκεῖ, "and were refreshed there:" so Ps. xxxviii. 13, "O spare me; ἵνα ἀναψυξῶ that I may revive:" Ps. lxv. 11, "We have gone through fire and water, and thou hast brought us forth, εἰς ἀναψυχὴν, to a place of rest" (see 2 Macc. xiii. 13): and sometimes without relation to it, as, a nation at ease, and without care, is ἔθνος καθήμενον εἰς ἀναψυχὴ, Jer. xlix. 30, I have found ἀναψυχὴν, "rest to myself," Hos. xii. 8 (see 2 Macc. iv. 46). Now these times of refreshing, rest, and comfort, are by some referred to the times of the gospel, in which Christ saith, "Come to me, ye that are weary and heavy laden, καὶ ἀναπαύσω, and I will refresh you" (Matt. xi. 28), "and ye shall find, ἀνάπαυσιν, rest to your souls" (ver. 30). So Dr. Lightfoot, who gives the import of the words thus, "Repent, &c. that your sins may be blotted out, that the times of refreshing from the gospel may come upon you." But against this interpretation there lies this objection, That these times of refreshing were to come by the sending of that Jesus who was ascended into heaven, and was not to come thence till the day of judgment (ver. 21, 22). Grotius and Dr. Hammond refer this to their deliverance from the destruction which shortly was to come on the obdurate Jews; but though that was then future, and there is frequent mention of a παρουσία, or "coming" of Christ, then, yet was it no coming of Christ from heaven, but only a coming by the Roman army. I therefore incline rather to the opinion of the ancients, which refers this to the time of Christ's second coming, to give all his servants, after their troubles and persecutions in this world, rest with him (2 Thess. i. 6—8), which he shall do by descending from heaven, raising them from the dead, and causing them to enter into everlasting rest (1 Thess. iv. 15, 16, 1 Cor. xv. 47). So the times of the resurrection are by the Jews styled the days of consolation, Targum in Hos. vi. 2.

[10] Ver. 20. Τὸν προκεκηρυγμένον, Who before was preached to you.] Some here read, τὸν προκεχειρισμένον, "before designed," viz. in the predictions of the law and the prophets, or, before preached to you by them.

[11] Ver. 21. Ὃν δεῖ οὐρανὸν μὲν δέξασθαι, Whom the heavens must receive.] They who render the words thus, "Who must receive the heavens," i. e. govern there, seem to be confuted by the limitation of time annexed to these words, Christ being to reign in the heavens for ever.

[12] Ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, Till the times of restitution of all things.] That these words cannot be meant of a restitution of all things to their former state, is certain; for sure, it is very improper to say, there will be a restitution of all things to their former state, "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his prophets:" for since these things relate to the forerunner of our Lord, Christ's coming in the flesh, his life, death, resurrection, and ascension, the preaching of the gospel to the gentiles, and the reign of antichrist, the calling of the Jews, and the coming in of the fullness of the gentiles, these things may very well be said to be exhibited, performed, accomplished, and consummated; but I see not with what propriety or truth they can be said to be restored to the former state, or be renewed; and therefore ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, is by the Syriac rendered, "Until the fullness of the time of all things;" by the Arabic, "Till the time in which all things shall be perfected or finished;" by Tertullian,* Adusque tempora exhibitionis omnium; by Irenæus,† Usque ad tempora dispositionis omnium; i. e. "Till the time of the exhibition or disposal of all things;" by Œcumenius, "Till the time of all things does, εἰς πέρας ἐλθεῖν, come to an end:" and for the confirmation of this import of the word, we have the suffrage of Hesychius and Phavorinus, that ἀποκατάστασις is τελείωσις, "the consummation" of a thing. Hence then I argue thus against the doctrine of the millenaries; since Christ is to continue in heaven till the completion or consummation of all things spoken by the holy prophets, if the millennium were any of them, Christ must continue in heaven till the consummation of that also, and therefore is not to come down from heaven to reign on earth till the millennium be ended; nor can that be contemporary with our Lord's second coming, which is from heaven.

[13] Ἀπ' αἰῶνος, Since the world began.] That is, "from times of old" (see note on Luke i. 70).

[14] Ver. 22. For Moses said, A prophet, &c.] Hence it appears that this prophecy doth primarily respect Christ, and not a series of prophets, as some imagine (see the note on John i. 45, v. 46).

[15] Ver. 24. And all the prophets from Samuel.] Samuel, saith Dr. Hammond, is here reckoned the first of the prophets, because the schools of the prophets were first instituted and erected by him; we reading in his time of a company or college of prophets at Ramah, "and Samuel standing among them" (1 Sam. xix. 20). He is reckoned, saith Dr. Lightfoot, after Moses, partly because prophecy from Moses to Samuel was very rare (1 Sam. iii. 1, 2), and partly because he was the first after Moses that wrote his prophecy.

[16] Ver. 25. Ye are the children of the prophets.] The prophets being styled spiritual fathers, 2 Kings ii. 12, xiii. 14, they who were taught by them were called "the sons of the prophets," 2 Kings ii. 3, and generally teachers were called "fathers," and they who were taught by them "children" (see note on 1 Cor. xiv. 13).

[17] In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.] Hence it is evident, that these words are not a form of blessing to this effect, "God bless thee as he blessed Abraham," but a promise of a benediction to all nations through Christ the seed of Abraham (see the note on Gal. iii. 16).

---

* De Carn. cap. 23. † B. iii. cap. 12.

26 Unto you (therefore) first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, (as he promised by Moses, ver. 22,) sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

CHAPTER IV.

1 And as they spake unto the people, the priests, and [1] the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them (violently,

2 The sadducees) Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached (to them) through Jesus the resurrection from the dead (which the sadducees denied, xxiii. 8).

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold (i. e. in prison) unto the next day: for it was now eventide.

4 Howbeit (δὲ, but notwithstanding this treatment of him) many of them which heard the word believed (their doctrine); and the (whole) [2] number of the men (that believed it) was about five thousand.

5 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and scribes,

6 And Annas the high priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

7 And when they had set them (Peter and John) in the midst (of the assembly), they asked (them), By what power, or by (virtue of) what name, have ye done this (cure)?

8 Then Peter (and John, being) filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, (if you inquire) by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name (and power) of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, (and) whom God (hath) raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11 [3] This (οὗτος, he) is the stone which (according to the words of the psalmist, Ps. cxviii. 22,) was set at nought of you builders, (and) which is (now) become the head (stone) of the corner (the prime foundation of the whole fabric of the church).

12 [4] Neither is there (such) salvation (promised by faith) in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby (or, by faith in which) we must (or may) be saved.

13 ¶ Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were [5] unlearned and ignorant men (and therefore could not be thus bold on the account of their own wisdom or skill in the Jewish

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1.] Of this "captain of the temple," see the note on Luke xxii. 52. Before our Saviour's passion, the chief agents against him were the scribes and pharisees; but now that the apostles do not only assert the resurrection of our Lord, but also "preach through him the resurrection of the dead" (ver. 2), the sadducees, who denied the resurrection of the body, become their fiercest adversaries (see the note on Acts xxiii. 6).

[2] Ver. 4. And the number of the men was about five thousand.] Not the number of the auditors, for they are never reckoned up in scripture, but the number of them that believed, hearing Peter and John preach, and seeing the miracle done by them: for so the words run, "Many of them that heard the word believed, and the number of them (that believed) was about five thousand." Note also, that the three thousand mentioned ii. 41, belong not to this number, but they were all new converts, converted by the word which Peter and John had preached, for of them only is the discourse from iii. 1 to this place.

[3] Ver. 11. This is the stone which the builders refused.] Though the Chaldee paraphrast interprets this clause of the psalmist (Ps. cxviii. 22), of David; and Aben-Ezra of the congregation of Israel, yet R. Solomon Jarchi, on Micah v., interprets these words of the Messiah, as our Saviour doth, Matt. xxi. 42, the Jews not contradicting him, or saying they belonged not to him.

[4] Ver. 12. Καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἄλλῳ οὐδενὶ ἡ σωτηρια, Nor is there salvation in any other.] This some interpret thus, There is no other name under heaven by which health can be given to the diseased, or feet to the lame, &c.; and this interpretation will not be so strange as at first sight it seems to be, if we consider,

First, That it is very frequent in the gospels to say of them who were cured, they were saved. So the woman saith, Matt. ix. 21, "If I do but touch the hem of his garment, σωθήσομαι, I shall be saved;" and Christ answers, "Thy faith σέσωκέ σε hath saved thee; καὶ ἐσώθη, and the woman was saved from that hour:" so the ruler of the synagogue prays Christ to "put his hand upon his daughter, ὅπως σωθῇ, that she might be saved," Mark v. 23, and vi. 56, "As many as touched the hem of his garment, ἐσώζοντο, were saved:" so to blind Bartimeus Christ saith, "Thy faith, σέσωκέ σε, hath saved thee," Mark x. 52, and so to the Samaritan leper, Luke xvii. 19.

Secondly, That this opinion had obtained among the Jews, and other nations, that there were some powerful names that could cure diseases; this seems to be insinuated in the question of the Sanhedrin, ver. 7, ἐν ποίῳ ὀνόματι, "In what name have you done this cure?" Josephus* speaks of the doing this by mention of the name of Solomon; the Talmud† of doing it by mention of the "separate name;" the Christians by the name of the God of Abraham, &c. (see note on Matt. xii. 27).

Thirdly, If we consider St. Peter's answer, viz. If the question be ἐν τινὶ οὗτος σέσωσται, "by what name this man is saved," i. e. healed, be it known to you that he is healed through the name of Jesus Christ, nor is there any other name by which we can be saved. And from this sense of the words it clearly follows, that no true miracles have been ever done since Christ's ascension, by the invocation of the names of saints; and, (2.) that the disputes of the schools from this place concerning the salvation of the gentiles, have been impertinent. If the common sense be rather liked, yet must it be acknowledged, that God is "no respecter of persons," as to their spiritual and eternal interests, but "in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him," Acts x. 34, 35 (see the note there): and that God would have all men diligently to seek, and to come to him with a firm belief that he is "a rewarder" of them that do so (Heb. ix. 6), and that he hath not suspended that reward on an impossible condition, though he will only give it with respect to what our Lord Jesus hath done or suffered for them: that he hath not "left himself without a witness" of his goodness to the heathen world, not only by doing good to their bodies without regard to their souls, or by being good only to them as we are to our hogs, by fattening them for a day of slaughter. It being, saith Maximus Tyrius,‡ "a thought unworthy of God, that he should be liberal in bestowing mean things on us, but penurious as to better."

[5] Ver. 13. They were ἀγραμματοι καὶ ἰδιῶται, unlearned learning), they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, Gr. ἐπεγίνωσκόν τε, but they knew) that they had been with (that) Jesus (in whose name they pretended to work this cure).

* Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2, p. 258. † Lightf. in locum.

‡ Ἡ πολλοῦ ἄξιον νομίζεις τὸ θεῖον πρὸς μὲν τὰ φαῦλα καλῶς καὶ ἀφθόνως παρεσκευασμένον, πρὸς δὲ τὰ κρείττω ἄπορον. Dissert. 22, p. 216.

14 And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it (i. e. their allegation).

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, What shall we do to (restrain) these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

17 But that it (their doctrine may) spread no further among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And (so) they called them, and commanded them (under pain of their displeasure) not to speak at all (henceforth) nor teach in the name of Jesus.

19 But Peter and John answered and said unto them, [6] Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you (forbidding), more (i. e. rather) than unto God (commanding us to preach in the name of Jesus), judge ye.

20 (As for us, be assured, we shall not obey your commandments;) For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.

21 So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing (done by them against the law) how (for which) they might punish them, (and not daring to do it against the law) because of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed (and so the cure was the more remarkable).

23 ¶ And being (thus) let go, they went to their own company, and reported (to them) all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them.

24 And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is:

25 [7] Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said (Ps. ii. 1), Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ: (and what thou saidst by him is now fulfilled.)

27 For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed (with the Holy Ghost), both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles (i. e. Roman soldiers), and the people of Israel, were gathered together, 28 For [8] to do whatsoever thy hand (of providence) and thy counsel determined before to be done.

29 And (therefore) now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants (such courage), that with all boldness they may (still) speak thy word,

30 (And assist them in so doing) By stretching forth thine hand to heal; and (by granting) that signs and ignorant (or private) men.] This for three centuries was the objection against the professors of Christianity; these were the names given them by Lucian,* Celsus,† Asclepiades,‡ Cecilius,§ Porphyry,‖ Hierocles,¶ Julian, and by all the heathens; as Justin, Tatian, Minucius, Tertullian,†† Arnobius,‡‡ and Lactantius§§ testify: and though that is not wholly true, yet it is a great confirmation of the Christian faith, and shows, as Justin Martyr‖‖ well observes, that "it was not of human, but divine original," and that "being with Jesus," was sufficient to make the ignorant and unlearned wise.

---

[6] Ver. 19. Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye.] So Socrates answered to his accusers, πείσομαι τῷ Θεῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ὑμῖν (Apol. p. 23), "O ye Athenians, I will obey God rather than you:" and so saith Arrian, When thy superiors command thee any thing thou must remember there is one above who sees thee καὶ ὅτι ἐκείνῳ σε δεῖ μᾶλλον ἀρέσκειν ἢ τοῦτῳ, "and that thou oughtest to please him rather than man."

[7] Ver. 25. Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, &c.] Here note,

First, Against some late innovators, that what was said by David is ascribed to God himself, to show that David spake and composed these Psalms by the prophetical afflatus of the Holy Spirit.

Secondly, That though the latter Jews will not admit that this Psalm belongs to the Messiah, yet R. Solomon Jarchi confesses that all their ancient rabbins did so interpret it (see the note on Heb. i. 5).

[8] Ver. 28. To do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.] Here note, what is usually observed, that the hand of God most frequently in the Old Testament relates not so much to his power, as to his wisdom and providential dispensations: so Job xxvii. 11, "I will teach you by the hand of God," i. e. by his wisdom in his providential dispensations (Eccles. ii. 24), "that a man should enjoy the good of his labours, that is, from the hand of God;" so "the good hand of God," is his favour or his gracious providence, Ezra vii. 9, viii. 18. 22, Neh. ii. 8. 18, and being here joined with God's counsel, and applied to what was done by Pontius Pilate and the Roman soldiers, and by the Jews towards the crucifixion of the holy Jesus, to which actions, so highly displeasing to God, his power could not actually concur, or effectively incline them, we have great reason here to prefer this import of the phrase before the other; and then the import of the words will be no more than this, That Jews and gentiles were assembled to accomplish those sufferings of our Saviour for mankind, which God had foretold, and by foretelling had determined should come to pass; according to those words of St. Paul, Acts xiii. 27, "They who dwelt at Jerusalem, and their princes, not knowing the voice of the prophets, have fulfilled them by condemning him, doing all things which were written of him," ver. 29. As therefore St. Peter and Paul, by calling the Jews to repentance for this sin in crucifying the Lord of life, do evidence their sin was not the less, because they did by it fulfil the counsel of God's holy will and kind intentions to mankind: so do they consequently evidence, that God's foreknowledge and determination of a thing future do not impair the liberty of men's wills in the

---

* Ἄνθρωποι ἰδιῶται. Lucian, Perigr. p. 338.

† Celsus Christianos confert, τοῖς ἀγροικοτάτοις τῶν ἀνθρώπων, Orig. contra Cels. lib. iii. p. 145, falsòque asserit, μόνους ἠλιθίους, καὶ ἀγενεῖς, καὶ ἀναισθήτους, πείθειν ἐθέλειν τοὺς διδάσκοντας τὸν θεῖον λόγον, p. 137. 141.

‡ Christiani sunt turba imperita, illiterata frequentia. Asclep. apud Prudent. in R. Mart. p. 208.

§ Literarum rudes, studiorum profani. Cæcil. apud Minut. p. 4.

‖ Origenes declinavit, πρὸς τὸ βάρβαρον τόλμημα. Porphyr. apud Euseb. H. Eccl. lib. vi. cap. 19.

¶ Petrus et Paulus, ψεῦσται, καὶ ἀπαίδευτοι, καὶ γόητες. Hierocl. apud Euseb. p. 512.

 Apud Tatianum, Christiani à Græcis appellantur, ἀνθρωποι ἀμαθεῖς· dogmata Christianorum, τὰ βαρβάρων δόγματα. Ed. Ox. §. 57.

†† Illi prudentes, nos inepti. Tertul. Ap. cap. 9. Nos hebetes, stolidi, fatui, obtusi pronuntiamur, et bruti.

‡‡ Arnob. lib. i. p. 15, lib. ii. p. 45.

§§ Vulgò pro stultis, et ineptis habemur. Lact. lib. iv. cap. 13, ἰδιωτῶν μὲν, καὶ βαρβάρων τὸ φθέγμα, σοφῶν δὲ καὶ πιστῶν.

‖‖ Τὸν ἰοῦν ἐχόντων, ὡς συνεῖναι οὐ σοφία ἀνθρωπεία ταῦτα γεγονέναι ἀλλὰ δυνάμει Θεοῦ λέγεσθαι. Justin. Apol. ii. p. 93.

and wonders may be done by (us in) the name of thy holy child Jesus.

31 ¶ And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together (as on the day of pentecost, Acts ii. 2); and [9] they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

32 And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul (united in love and affection): neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was (so) his own (as not to be imparted to others who had need of it); but they had [10] all things common.

33 And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace (of God) was upon them all.

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold,

35 And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was (by the apostles) made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And [11] Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) (he being) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus (by birth), 37 Having land (there), sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

---

accomplishment of it; as all the ancient fathers have declared in this particular (see the note on xxii. 22).

[9] Ver. 31. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost.] Not all the Christians, who, being now eight thousand, could not be all in one house, but the hundred and twenty mentioned i. 15, and being in the same house with the apostles, this is their own company to which they went, ver. 24, and therefore, if the Holy Ghost fell only on the twelve before, yet now he must be supposed to fall on this whole number, enabling them to speak the word of God with boldness, as it follows here.

[10] Ver. 32. They had all things common.] As ii. 45, not by possession, but as to use; in which sense that of Tertullian is only true, Omnia indiscreta sunt apud nos præter uxores, "Among us all things are common except our wives;" for it follows, that they had lands to sell (see note on ii. 45).

[11] Ver. 36, 37. And Joses a Levite, and by birth a Cypriot, having land, sold it.] For the Levites might have lands, not only in foreign countries, as Joses had in Cyprus, but even in their own: for Samuel, a Levite (1 Chron. vi. 33), was born upon his father's land, which had been purchased by his great-grandfather Zuph (1 Sam. i. 1, ix. 5), and that lands might fall to them by accident, which they might sell, see the Bishop of Ely on Lev. xxvii. 21.

CHAPTER V.

1 But a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,

2 And (but he) [1] kept back part of (Gr. he defalked from) the price (of it), his wife also being privy (and consenting) to it, and brought (Gr. bringing) a certain part (of it only), and laid it at the apostles' feet (pretending to do as the rest had done, iv. 35. 37).

3 But Peter said (to him), Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and (moved thee) to keep back part of (or defalk from) the (full) price of the land (which thou hast sold)?

4 Whiles it remained (unsold), was it not thine own (possession, no share of it belonging to any other)? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power (to dispose of the money as thou wouldest, and bring the whole as others did)? why (then) hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart (to defalk from the price, and present to us a part only of it, as if it were the whole? by doing this) [2] thou hast not lied unto men (only), but unto God (also).

5 And Ananias hearing these words fell down, and gave up the ghost: and great fear came on all them that (saw and) heard these things.

6 And the young men (there) arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter answered (i. e. said) unto her, Tell me

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 2. Καὶ ἐνοσφίσατο ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς, And he kept back part of the price.] It is generally here supposed, that Ananias and Sapphira had consecrated their estate to God by vow, so that they were guilty of the sin of sacrilege; but this may very well be doubted: (1.) because in all the sales of lands or houses, mentioned ch. ii. iv. and here, there is not the least hint or intimation of any such vow; that there was some fraud in the case, may be fairly gathered from the νοσφίζεσθαι, but that it was a sacrilegious fraud, cannot be proved from the word. (2.) St. Peter accuses neither him nor his wife of any such crime, but only of tempting, i. e. distrusting, and making trial, of the wisdom of the Holy Ghost, and going about to deceive him by this artifice: and, (3.) the apostle seems to own he had a right in his possession, and in the money for which it was sold (ver. 3), which yet he could not have, if he before had consecrated it to religious uses. But yet they were guilty of a double fraud: (1.) in laying down this part of the price at the apostles' feet, as the others had done, and thereby tacitly implying they had now the same right to be relieved from the public stock which others had, as having nothing of their own, when indeed they had money which they kept back: (2.) in presenting this before them as the whole price of the possession they had sold, when it was only a part of it, which it appears they did from St. Peter's question to his wife, "Tell me for how much the land was sold?" That the punishment of this sin was so heavy, will not be admired, if we consider, (1.) that it was a direct sin against the Holy Ghost, who was sent down from heaven to propagate the gospel, an attempt to put a cheat upon him, and questioning his wisdom to discern things secret, and therefore deserved the greater punishment, because it did so plainly tend to the hindrance of the gospel, by declaring that the Spirit which assisted the apostles was not able to discern things secret, and so might not be able to acquaint them with the secret things of God. (2.) We find God under the law very severe in his punishment of those who first offended in offering strange fire, as in the case of Nadab and Abihu; and violated the sabbath, as in the case of the man that "gathered sticks" upon that day, and especially against those who rose up against Moses the prophet, and Aaron the priest of the Lord, as in case of Corah and his company; it was therefore fit the first great offence of this kind should receive exemplary punishment from the hand of God, that others might the more dread those sins which thus affronted that Holy Spirit by whose power the gospel began to be propagated.

[2] Ver. 4. Οὐκ ἐψεύσω ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ, Thou hast not lied to man, but unto God.] Hence it is argued, that if he that deceiveth or lieth to the Spirit, attempteth to deceive or lie to God, the Holy Spirit must be God.

To this Woltzogenius here and other Socinians answer, that the like phrase is often used when the inference cannot be good: for the Jews murmuring against Moses and Aaron are said to murmur not against them, but against God, Exod. xvi. 8, and he that despiseth the preaching of the apostles whether ye sold the land for so much (only as Ananias said)? And she said, Yea, (only) for so much.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord (i. e. to try whether the Spirit of the Lord in us was able to detect your cheat)? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

10 Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.

11 And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

12 ¶ And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; (and they (of the church) were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13 [3] And of the rest (that were not of the church) durst no man join himself to them (i. e. to the apostles): but the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, (even) multitudes both of men and women) (who owned that Jesus was the Christ.

15 And so great and manifold were these miracles, ὥστε,) insomuch that they (who beheld them) [4] brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.

17 ¶ Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is (being) the [5] sect of the Sadducees,) and (they) were filled with indignation,

18 And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said (to them),

20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the [6] words of this life (which the sadducees deny, and I have commanded you to preach, Acts xiii. 26).

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought (out).

22 But when the officers came, and (Gr. but the officers coming) found them not in the prison, they returned, and (Gr. returning) told (the council of it),

23 Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors: but when we had opened (them), we found no man within.

24 Now when the high priest and [7] the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these things, they [8] doubted of (i. e. concerning) them whereunto this would grow (or, what the import of them might be).

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain (thither) with the officers, and brought them without violence: for they feared is said to despise "not man, but God, who had given them the Holy Spirit," 1 Thess. iv. 8, not them, but Christ, Matt. x. 40, Luke x. 16, but hence it will not follow, that either Moses, or Aaron, or the apostles, were God.

---

But to this answer, I reply, first, That these examples rather do confirm than infringe this argument: for as they who murmured against Moses and Aaron, murmured against God, because they did it against them who were invested with the authority of God, and acted in his name and by his power; and as they who despised the apostles, despised God for the same reason; so they who lied to the apostles acting by the Spirit of God, or sought to deceive them by lying, are said to lie to God, because they lied to the apostles acting by the power and authority of God; and therefore the power and authority of the Spirit must be the power and authority of God.

Secondly, Moses and Aaron, and the apostles sent out by Christ to preach, did only act in the name of God and Christ, because they did this by commission from them, and by their command; but Ananias is here said to lie to God, because he lied to the Spirit in the apostles, enabling them to discern the secrets of men's hearts and actions, which being the property of God alone, he that doth lie to him must therefore lie to God, because he lies to one who hath the incommunicable property of God, consequently the divine essence.

[3] Ver. 13. Τῶν δὲ λοιπῶν οὐδεὶς ἐτόλμα κολλᾶσθαι αὐτοῖς, But of the rest durst no man cleave unto them.] That is, saith Dr. Lightfoot, none of the hundred and eight durst join to the twelve, or equal themselves to them in office or dignity; but as there is no mention of that number in this chapter, so did they never before this join themselves to the apostles; nor doth the word κολλᾶσθαι import any such thing, but only to converse, associate with, or come to them; as when Philip is bid κολλᾶσθαι, "to join himself" to the chariot of the eunuch (viii. 29), and Paul assayed after his conversion, κολλᾶσθαι, "to join himself to the disciples" (ix. 16), and when Peter saith (x. 28), "You know that it is unlawful for a Jew κολλᾶσθαι, to join himself to one of another nation;" and, lastly, when it is said that some men κολληθέντες αὐτῷ, "joining themselves" to St. Paul, believed (xvii. 35), which seems to favour the opinion of Grotius and Beza, viz. that great fear came on all the church (ver. 11), but of the rest, which were not yet of the church, durst no man join themselves to, or associate with, them as members of the church, for fear of the like punishment. But notwithstanding this, the people magnified them, and multitudes of them were added to the Lord, i. e. believed in Christ, though they durst not yet consort with the twelve apostles.

[4] Ver. 15. They brought forth their sick into the streets, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.] Here it is left uncertain, whether it were the faith of believers, or the superstition of the Jews, which had such expectation from St. Peter's shadow, whether St. Peter passed by that way, or not, or whether his shadow wrought any cures, or not. But if God, intending to magnify Peter, the minister of the circumcision, in the eyes of the circumcised, healed some persons when his shadow went over them, he did more certainly as much to magnify St. Paul, the apostle of the gentiles; for "from his body were brought handkerchiefs or aprons to the sick, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them" (xix. 12); but hence it is ridiculous to argue, that the one, or the other, was prince of the apostles, or that the relics of holy men are to be venerated.

[5] Ver. 17. Ἡ οὖσα αἵρεσις τῶν σαδδουκαίων, Being the sect of the sadducees.] Not that the Sanhedrin then consisted chiefly of that sect, but because the doctrine of the resurrection destroyed their sect, and therefore they are still the readiest to oppose it (iv. 2), the pharisees being only concerned to avoid the guilt of Christ's blood.

[6] Ver. 20. Go, speak to the people all the words of this life, πάντα τὰ ῥήματα τῆς ζωῆς ταύτης.] i. e. Of this life which I have commissionated you to preach, and which the sadducees deny: so, xiii. 26, "Ye children of Abraham, and ye that fear God, ὑμῖν ὁ λόγος τῆς σωτηρίας ταύτης ἀπεστάλη, to you is the word of this salvation sent."

[7] Ver. 24. Ὁ στρατηγὸς τοῦ ἱεροῦ, The captain of the temple.] i. e. The captain of the garrison of the Levites (see the note on Luke xxii. 52).

[8] They doubted of them what this thing should be, τί ἂν γένοιτο τοῦτο.] i. e. What this miraculous deliverance of them might import, and to what this would tend. So, the people, lest they should have been stoned (by them).

27 And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the high priest asked them,

28 Saying, Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and (yet), behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to (Gr. would) bring (the guilt of) this man's blood upon us.

29 ¶ Then Peter and the other apostles answered (to the charge of disobeying their commands) and said, We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 (And as for the guilt of blood, that it is justly charged upon you, God himself hath testified; for) The God of our fathers (hath) raised up (that) Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree (by being instant with Pilate that he might be crucified).

31 [9] Him (whom ye thus treated) hath God exalted with (to) his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

32 And (this we say not without proof, for) we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 ¶ (And) when they heard that (these words), they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

34 Then stood there up one in the council (who was) a Pharisee, [10] named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and (he) commanded (the officers) to put the apostles forth a little space (or while);

35 And (then) said unto them (of the council), Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend (Gr. go about) to do as touching these men.

36 For [11] before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

---

x. 17, Peter doubted in himself, τί ἂν εἴη τὸ ὅραμα, "what the vision might import."

[9] Ver. 31. Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins.] Upon that repentance, to be a Prince and a Saviour, even the "Prince of life" (iii. 15), and "of salvation" (Heb. ii. 10), on which account he is styled, τὸ σωτήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the salvation of God" (see note on Luke iii. 30); and he is said to be exalted to give repentance and remission of sins, by giving the knowledge of that remission of sins which is promised to the penitent, and of those motives which should induce them to repent. So the Baptist is said to "go before him, to give the knowledge of salvation to his people, through the remission of sins;" and so God "gave unto the gentiles repentance unto life," when he sent Peter to them to preach that word by which they repenting should be saved (Acts xi. 14. 18).

[10] Ver. 34. A pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in great reputation among the people.] He was Paul's tutor (Acts xxii. 3), and was called Rabbin Gamaliel, a title of the highest eminency, and given, say the Jews, only to seven persons; which shows sufficiently the reputation that he had among the people.

The right reverend Bishop Pearson very probably conjectures, that the sadducees, after our Lord's resurrection, being the greatest enemies to the apostles; they being grieved that they "preached through Christ the resurrection from the dead" (Acts iv. 2, v. 17); Gamaliel being a pharisee, and so a stiff assertor of the resurrection, did therefore give advice for the dismission of the apostles; for we find the pharisees, almost in the same words, pleading for Paul, preaching the same doctrine, viz. that they ought not to molest him, "lest they should be found, θεομάχοι, fighters against God" (Acts xxiii. 9).

[11] Ver. 36, 37. Πρὸ γὰρ τούτων τῶν ἡμέρων ἀνέστη Θευδᾶς, For before those days rose up Theudas; μετὰ τοῦτον, after him rose up Judas of Galilee.] Here Gamaliel affirms two things, (1.) That before those days, in which that council were assembled, that is, before the twentieth of Tiberius, arose Theudas, mentioned by him; whereas the Theudas mentioned by Josephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5, arose and perished by the hands of Cuspius Fadus, in the fourth year of Claudius, that is ten years after the meeting of this council. (2.) He affirms that Judas of Galilee rose up after him, and yet that he arose in the "days of the taxing," which was under the emperor Augustus, at the birth of Christ, and so thirty-four years before this council; and so this Theudas that arose before him must have been at least thirty-five years before this council.

Some critics endeavour to solve these difficulties by torturing the words of the text, and making Gamaliel say, that Judas of Galilee arose, μετὰ τοῦτον, not after, but before Theudas, contrary to the rule of Phavorinus, that μετὰ with an accusative case ὀηλοῖ ὑστεροχρόνιον, "signifies posteriority of time." Dr. Lightfoot here seems inconstant in his opinion, for in his first notes upon the Acts he saith, that Gamaliel's Theudas and Josephus's "are not one and the same; but as it happened with Judas, that though he himself perished in his error, and as many as obeyed him were scattered abroad, as Gamaliel relateth, yet was not his error extinguished with him, but revived and grew again: so that at least forty years after his first appearing, his two sons, James and Simon, are crucified for it by Tiberius Alexander, the successor of Fadus (Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 3). And many years after that, Eleazar, a branch of the same Judas, appeareth in the same opinion, with a desperate company with him (De Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 20). Even so may it be conceived of the sect of Theudas, that it began before that of Judas, and that the first author of it took upon him great things, as, to be a prophet, and to work miracles, and the like; but he was soon slain, and all that obeyed him were scattered abroad, and came to nought; but his folly and fancy perished not with him, but (however at other times) in the times of Fadus one of the same foolery and name, and probably his son, would be a prophet again, and divide Jordan, and do I know not what, whom Fadus destroyed, and brought his company to ruin: so that Gamaliel's and Josephus's Theudas are very probably two men, but very likely father and son, or tutor and scholar; agreeing so exactly in the same folly and madness, that they agreed in the same name: and that name either given to the latter, as parents name their children by their own names, or assumed by him in imitation of the former Theudas, whom as he delighted to imitate in his enthusiastic folly, so delighted he to follow him in denomination: and I am the rather confirmed in this opinion about these two men, because that as soon as ever Josephus hath told the story of the destruction of Theudas by Fadus, he telleth of the destruction of the sons of Judas by Tiberius Alexander: and I cannot but interpret both the stories in one sense, that as in the latter he speaks of the offspring of Judas, whose sect had begun many years before, so in the former he speaketh of the offspring of Theudas, whose sect had begun before that of Judas:" yet, in his latter exercitations on this place he says, "This is but an imagination," and inclines rather to think, that Josephus slipped in his chronology, "to whom," saith he, "both in history and chronology, it is no unusual thing to trip, or go out of the road of truth."

I prefer his first opinion, as being generally embraced by the ancients; for (1.) Origen,* who had read Josephus, and declares that he examined things relating to the scripture, φιλαληθῶς, "out of love to truth," speaks thus, "We say that there was one Theudas before the birth of Christ, who among the Jews declared himself to be somebody." And again, that "Judas Galilæus, and Theudas that was before him, being not of God, perished." And a third time, "because they gathered from the scriptures that the time of the Messiah was come, first Theudas, and after him Judas of

---

* Ἐροῦμεν ὅτι Θευδᾶς πρὸ τῆς γενέσεως Ἰησοῦ γέγονέ τις παρ' Ἰουδαίοις, μέγαν τινα ἑαυτὸν λέγων, contra Celsum, lib. i. p. 44, et lib. vi. p. 282. Καὶ Ἰούδας ὁ Γαλιλαῖος, ὡς ὁ Λουκᾶς ἐν τοῖς Πράξεσι τῶν Ἀποστόλων ἔγραψεν, ἐβουλήθη ἑαυτόν τινα εἰπεῖν μέγαν, καὶ πρὸ ἐκείνου Θευδᾶς——ἐπεφύησαν Θευδᾶς οὐκ ὀλίγον πλῆθος, καὶ μετ' ἐκεῖνον Ἰούδας ὁ Γαλιλαῖος ἐν ταῖς τῆς ἐπιγραφῆς ἡμέραις. Tom. ii. in Joh. ed. Huet. p. 103, 104.

37 After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing (or enrolling), and drew away much people after him: (but) he also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38 And now (καὶ τὰ νῦν λέγω ὑμῖν, therefore) I say unto you (for the present), Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthow it (nor ought you to attempt to do so); lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

40 And to him they agreed: and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them (with rods), they commanded (them) that they should not speak in the name of Jesus (any more), and (then) let them go.

41 ¶ And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy [12] to suffer shame for his name.

42 And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach (the doctrine of) Jesus Christ.

Galilee, tumultuated in the time of the taxing." Hence do the fathers unanimously say, that those words of Christ, John x. 8, "All that come before me are thieves and robbers," relate to these two, Theudas and Judas of Galilee, which shows their belief, that both of them were before the time of Christ's preaching: so that it is extremely evident, that the ancient fathers agreed in this, that there was a Theudas pretending to great things, even before the coming of our Lord, though Josephus hath taken no notice of him.

[12] Ver. 41. Ἀτιμασθῆναι, To be reproached.] Or dishonoured, by being scourged: for as, among the Romans, a citizen of Rome was not to be scourged, so, among the Jews, saith Josephus,* it was τιμωρία αἰσχίστη, "the most shameful punishment," when inflicted upon a Jew, and that which did ὑβρίζειν τὸ ἀξίωμα, "stain his dignity."

* So Chrysost. Œcumen. Theoph. in locum, et Theod. Heracl. et Mopsevest. Cat. Gr. in locum, et Isid. Pelus. lib. iii. ep. 119.

* Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 8.

CHAPTER VI.

1 And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians (Gr. of the [1] Hellenists, or Jews of the dispersion who spake the Greek language) against the Hebrews (who used the Hebrew or Syriac tongue), because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration (of provisions, made for poor widows belonging to the church, 1 Tim. v. 16).

2 [2] Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason (-able) that we should leave (preaching) the word of God, and (daily be employed to) serve tables (or, make provisions for the poor).

3 Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, [3] full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, [4] whom we may appoint over this business (Gr. for this use).

4 But we (and we being eased of this burden) will

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

[1] Ver. 1. Τῶν Ἑλληνιστῶν, Of the Grecians.] It is much to be disputed who these Hellenists were: it is beyond doubt that they were not Greeks by nation or birth, whether unconverted or proselytes to the Jewish nation; for these are never called Hellenists, but always in the scripture Ἕλληνες, "Hellens," and by Josephus, Ἑλληνικοὶ, and are distinguished, not from the Hebrews, but the Jews; as when mention is made Ἰουδαίων τε καὶ Ἑλλήνων, "of the Jews and Greeks," Acts xvi. 1. 3. 19, x. 17, xx. 20, 21, Rom. i. 16, ii. 9, 10, iii. 9, x. 12, 1 Cor. ii. 22, 23, x. 32, xii. 13, Gal. iii. 28, Col. iii. 11, see John xii. 20, and of those Greeks who came to the Jewish synagogues, and therefore seem to have been proselytes, Acts xiv. 1, xviii. 4, and a distinction is made, not between Hebrews, but Jews and proselytes, Acts ii. 10. Moreover, they who were scattered upon the persecution which followed the death of Stephen (Acts viii. 1), "spake the word only to the Jews," Acts xi. 19, and yet they spake πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, "to the Hellenists," ver. 20. And, thirdly, Paul coming to Jerusalem, disputed πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, "against the Hellenists, and they went about to kill him," Acts ix. 29, as the Jews at Damascus had done before, ver. 23, which shows they must be Jews by birth, and not only strangers of other nations come thither; for how durst they attempt to kill a Jew among the Jews without bringing him to their tribunal?

Secondly, I think it not sufficient to say, with the Syriac or St. Chrysostom, that they were Jews, Ἑλληνιστὶ φθεγγόμενοι, "using the Greek tongue;" for this they of Judea, especially the learned among them, generally did: for we never find in Josephus, that they spake to the Romans, or others who used that tongue, by an interpreter. Dr. Lightfoot therefore adds, that they were Jews, who, living among the Greeks, understood and used that tongue only, and then they must be called Hebrews, who used the Hebrew or Syriac tongue as their usual dialect: but then, whereas Dr. Lightfoot will not allow that in their synagogues they used the Greek tongue, or read the scriptures according to the Greek translation, I incline rather to the opinion of the learned Grotius, that they used this tongue also in their sacred exercises; for why should they, whose synagogues consisted of persons understanding neither Hebrew nor Syriac, have both or either of those languages read to them in their assemblies? Moreover, that in their exhortation made in their synagogues, consisting both of Jews and proselytes of the Grecians, they used the Greek language, seems evident from this, that Paul and Barnabas so spake in them, that "a multitude of the Greeks as well as of the Jews believed" (Acts xiii. 43, xiv. 1, xvii. 4. 12, xviii. 4).

[2] Ver. 2. And the twelve calling the multitude of the disciples, Gr. τὸ πλῆθος τῶν μαθητῶν.] Here Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, that "the multitude of the disciples" doth not import the multitude of believers, they being many thousands (Acts iii. 41, iv. 4, v. 14), but only the one hundred and eight presbyters, mentioned Acts i. 15). But (1.) it is evident that the whole multitude of believers are called disciples, both here, ver. 7, and throughout this whole history of the Acts: and, (2.) we are told that this multitude were together (Acts ii. 44, iv. 23. 32): and, (3.) it is here noted, that the saying of the apostles was acceptable, ἐνώπιον πάντος τοῦ πλήθους, "before the whole multitude."

[3] Ver. 3. Full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom.] i. e. Of the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, and of the gift of wisdom, mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 8. So, when they had prayed that "God would stretch forth his hands to heal, and that signs and wonders might be done by the name of Jesus," Acts iv. 30, it is added, ver. 31, that "they were filled with the Holy Ghost;" and of Barnabas it is said, that "he was full of the Holy Ghost and of faith," another of these gifts, 1 Cor. xii. 9, and so, by his means, "a great multitude was added to the Lord," Acts xi. 24, and here, ver. 8, that "Stephen, being full of the Holy Ghost and power, did great signs and miracles among the people:" and these gifts of the Holy Ghost being given to them, not for their own use, but to profit the church with them (1 Cor. xii. 7), and so being not only qualifications of them for, but as it were preelections of them to, some sacred functions (Acts xx. 28); out of those who were thus endowed, they generally chose church officers, and the very deacons and helps had these gifts (Rom. xii. 7, 8, see note on 1 Cor. xii. 28); and hence the apostles here say, "Look ye out men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom."

[4] Ver. 3. 6. Whom we may appoint over this business;— give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

5 ¶ And the saying (of the apostles) pleased the whole multitude: and they (accordingly) chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch:

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and when and they laid their hands upon them.] Here two things are disputed:

First, Whether these seven were chosen and ordained to a civil office only, viz. that of ministering only to the necessities of widows and other indigent disciples; or else to the sacred office of a deacon, and so empowered to preach the word, and baptize. Certain it is, that of these seven, St. Stephen did preach the word, and that Philip did baptize (Acts viii. 12. 38). But then it is said, they did so, not as men chosen and ordained to this office, but as being of the number of the seventy disciples, ἐξ ὧν ἦσαν οἱ ἑπτὰ, "of whom these seven were," saith Epiphanius.* And, indeed, the ancients seem to have been divided about this matter: the council of Neocæsarea† saying expressly, that "there ought to be but seven deacons in the great cities, as we learn ἀπὸ τῆς βίβλου τῶν Πράξεων, from the Acts of the Apostles;" and the apostles in their Constitutions,‡ that they, "after our Lord's ascension, had chosen διακόνους ἑπτὰ τὸν ἀριθμὸν, seven deacons," of which number Stephen was one: and the synod in Trullo, on the other hand, saying, that the apostles spake not there περὶ τῶν τοῖς μυστηρίοις διακονουμένων, "of those who served at the altar, but of those that served ταῖς χρείαις τῶν τραπεζῶν, to the business of tables;" but this is as true of the deacons mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Tim. iii., that there is not a word said of their ministering at the altar: and it seems very unlikely that the apostles would have made this one requisite of the persons to be chosen, that they should be "full of" the extraordinary gifts of "the Holy Ghost, and of wisdom," if their office had confined them to the ministry of the widows at Jerusalem; or that they who were evangelists before, as Philip is expressly styled, should wholly lay aside the preaching of the word, and attend only on a civil office (see Acts xxi. 8). Moreover, it is certain that deacons were instituted before St. Paul wrote the first epistle to Timothy; for we have mention of them in the epistle to the Philippians, written three years before that to Timothy; and they are mentioned in the advice to Timothy, not as an office to be instituted, but as a standing office then settled in the church, as they must be if bishops were then so, they being necessary attendants on that higher function, according to the words of Epiphanius,§ ἄνευ δὲ διακόνου ἐπίσκοπον ἀδύνατον εἶναι, "a bishop cannot be without a deacon." Now if they were not instituted here by the apostles, I desire to know when, where, and by whom they were instituted, and what other record we have left us of such an institution of them.

Obj. 1. Against this it is objected, first, That these seven are never called deacons in the whole history of the Acts of the Apostles, and that this name is never given either to St. Stephen, or to Philip the evangelist.

Ans. But this objection can be of no strength against the suffrage of all antiquity, which hath still given them the name of deacons, seeing they have no other name ascribed to them in the whole Acts of the Apostles, or the sacred history; they are never called διάκονοι τραπεζῶν, "ministers of tables," in all the Acts, though here they are said to be appointed for that work: and so saith Jerome‖ of the deacons of his age, that they were mensarum et viduarum ministri, "the ministers not only of the priests, but also of widows and tables." So he styles them in his Epistle to Evagrius, and bids them learn the reason of their institution from the Acts of the Apostles.

Obj. 2. It is farther objected, That in St. Paul's account of the deacons of the church, there is no mention of this part of their office, to provide for widows and "serve tables," nor any quality required of them which respects that office.

I answer, That, according to this argument, should all that hath been said be granted, the deacons could have no authority to baptize, or administer either the bread or the cup to the laity, there being not one word of any such office belonging to them in St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy, nor of any assistance they are to give the bishop.

Secondly, I answer, That as the deacons of St. Paul are to be "grave," and "hold the faith in a good conscience," so are the deacons here to be "men of honest report and wisdom," ver. 3, as they were to be "approved," and then to "execute the office of a deacon," 1 Tim. iii. 9: so was it here, ver. 5, 6. Now men of "double tongues, and given to much wine," could neither be men of good report, nor men of wisdom, and much less could they be approved as such; so that the characters of the deacons here seem virtually to include all the characters required of them there, and two more, especially relating to sacred offices, viz. that they should be "men full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom;" and that which St. Stephen doth here, and St. Philip did in preaching to the Samaritans, and then baptizing them, is the foundation of the authority given by bishops to deacons to preach the word and to baptize. Moreover, their being ministers of tables, made them also ministers at the Agapæ, where the bishop was to be acquainted with the necessities of the widows and the poor, say the Apostolical Constitutions,* διὰ τῶν ὑπηρετῶν, τουτέστι, διὰ τῶν διακόνων, "by the ministers, that is, the deacons;" and so they became attendants also on him, or on the president, who consecrated the eucharist, celebrated at the same time with these feasts of charity; and so they distributed the bread and wine to the communicants, and carried them, saith Justin Martyr,† to those that were absent. Hence they are styled by Ignatius‡ and Polycarp,§ not only "the ministers of meats and drinks," but "the servants of the church of God," and said to be "servants not of men, but of God and Christ," as servants are in that relation said to serve the Lord Christ, and therefore are bid to do all things "as to the Lord, and not unto men" (Col. iii. 23, 24). And Clemens of Alexandria‖ saith, that in the church the presbyters have, τὴν βελτιωτικὴν εἰκόνα, τὴν ὑπηρετικὴν δὲ οἱ διάκονοι, "the representation of those who make men better, and the deacons of them that serve." And, because they performed this ministry under the inspection of the bishop, and gave him an account of the condition of the widows and the poor, and had from him, or his presbyters, the treasury of the church to distribute to others, therefore is this so often mentioned in church history as part of the episcopal office, to have the care of all that are in need, as Justin Martyr¶ saith, the presbyters and deacons doing this only by his authority.

In fine, To say that Philip and others of these deacons might preach and baptize, but not as deacons, but only as evangelists, is not sufficient in this case: for if they were all evangelists, or, as Epiphanius saith of the seventy, and afterward by the apostles ordained deacons, it is hence evident that they must have with this office a power to preach and baptize, as doubtless the evangelists and seventy disciples had; and hence we find, that Philip, being one of those seven (Acts xxi. 8), did both these offices by the direction and assistance of the Holy Ghost (Acts viii. 12. 29. 40). If they were not, yet being men "full of the Holy Ghost,"

* Hær. Herod. p. 50, §. 4.
† Can. 14.
‡ Lib. viii. cap. 46.
§ Hær. lxxv. §. 5, p. 908.
‖ Non meminit mensarum et viduarum minister, se in obsequium, et ministerium non solùm sacerdotum, sed et viduarum, et pauperum delegatum, tom. ii. f. 251, K. Sciant quare diaconi constituti sunt, legant Acta Apostolorum, recordentur conditionis suæ. Tom. ii. f. 117, H.

* Lib. ii. cap. 28.
† Οἱ καλούμενοι παρ' ἡμῖν διάκονοι διδόασιν ἑκάστῳ τῶν παρόντων μεταλαβεῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐχαριστηθέντος ἄρτου καὶ οἴνου καὶ ὕδατος, καὶ τοῖς οὐ παροῦσιν ἀποφέρουσι. Ap. ii. 97.
‡ Οὐ γὰρ βρωμάτων καὶ ποτῶν εἰσιν διάκονοι, ἀλλ' ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ ὑπηρέται. Ign. ad Trall. sect. 2.
§ Inculpati esse debent, ὡς Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ διάκονοι, καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώπων. Polyc. Epist. ad Philip. sect. 5.
‖ Strom. vii. p. 700.
¶ Καὶ ἁπλῶς τοῖς ἐν χρείᾳ οὖσι κηδεμὼν γίνεται, Just. p. 97, 98. Ὥστε κατὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ ἐξουσίαν πάντα διοικεῖσθαι τοῖς δεομένοις διὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ τῶν διακονων. Can. Apost. 34, vid. 31.

they had prayed (Gr. they praying), [5] they laid their hands on them.

7 And (so, by the labours of the apostles,) the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests (also) were obedient to the faith.

8 And Stephen, (being) full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 ¶ Then there arose [6] certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and (some of the synagogues of the) Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and (some of) them of Cilicia and Asia, disputing with Stephen.

10 [7] And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit (i. e. the wisdom of the Spirit) by which he spake.

11 Then they suborned men, which (being brought before the council) said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God (and so by the law he deserves to be stoned, Lev. xxiv. 16).

12 And they stirred up (against him) the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law:

14 For we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth (whom he preaches) shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered (to) us.

15 And all that sat in the council, looking stedfastly on him, [8] saw (on him a great splendour, making) his face (to shine) as it had been the face of an angel.

---

and of that wisdom which enabled them to teach others, we cannot reasonably conceive they were disabled, by their ordination to this office, from doing that work for which they were thus fitted, and as it were appointed, by these gifts of the Holy Spirit conferred upon them. In a word, it is evident from this history, that before the ordination of these deacons, the apostles themselves were engaged in this work; for the treasure of the church was laid at the apostles' feet, "and distribution of it was made to every man according as he had need" (iv. 35). This distribution therefore must be made by them who had this treasure in their hands, and therefore they appoint these seven over this business to ease themselves of this trouble, that they might "give themselves" more entirely "to prayer and to the ministry of the word," and might not, by attending on this work, be hindered in the execution of that higher office: now surely that work which the apostles personally performed for a season, must be consistent with their commission, to "teach and to baptize all nations."

[5] Ver. 6. The apostles laid their hands on them.] Here seemeth to be nothing in this relation which favours the authority of the laity in choosing persons to sacred offices: for though the choice of these seven was committed to them, yet was this done (1.) by the particular appointment of the apostles themselves; for "the twelve called the multitude, and said to them, Look ye out seven men," ver. 2, 3. (2.) They specify the number and the qualifications of the persons to be chosen to this office. (3.) They reserve to themselves the appointment of them to this work, saying, "Look ye out seven men whom we may appoint over this business:" and, lastly, they only laid their hands upon them (see Chrysost. in loc.). So in the case of the princes, or rulers over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens, Moses saith, as here, Choose to yourselves men of wisdom and understanding, and known to your tribes, votashmam, and I will set them to be your heads (Deut. i. 13, 14): accordingly, he both appointed them to (ver. 15), and instructed them in, the discharge of their office (ver. 16, 17).

[6] Ver. 9. Certain of the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and them of Cilicia, and Asia, disputing with Stephen.] That the word synagogue is to be repeated before all the places mentioned here, appears from this; that the Jews mention a synagogue of the Alexandrians at Jerusalem, as Dr. Lightfoot here noteth. Moreover, there being men of all these nations living in Jerusalem, and speaking their native language, and who yet were proselytes to the Jewish religion (ii. 8. 11), it is reasonable to conceive that they had also synagogues for prayer and hearing of the law, and pious exhortations in a tongue they understood. By the synagogue of these Libertines, some understand the Jews that were free-born, or had obtained the Roman freedom, as St. Paul had: so Dr. Lightfoot. Others think they were Roman servants who had obtained their freedom; οἱ Ῥωμαίων ἀπελεύθεροι οὕτω καλοῦνται, saith Œcumenius here. The first opinion seems to be most probable. For though Tacitus* in his Annals, saith, that quatuor millia Libertini generis Judaicâ superstitione infecta, "four thousand Libertines, infected with the Jewish superstition, were banished into Sardinia;" yet Suetonius† saith that they were "Judæorum juventus," "the young men of the Jewish nation that were sent thither;" and that reliquos ejusdem gentis, aut similia sectantes urbe submovit, "he only expelled the other Jews and their proselytes out of the city;" Josephus,‡ that he commanded πᾶν τὸ Ἰουδαϊκὸν τῆς Ῥώμης ἀπελαλυθέναι, "all the Jews to be expelled Rome," and that "four thousand of them were sent to Sardinia by the consuls:" and Philo§ saith that "he suffered a great part of the city beyond Tiber to be inhabited by the Jews," and that "these Jews, Ῥωμαῖοι ἦσαν οἱ πλείους ἀπελευθερωθέντες, were most of them Romans set at liberty; for being carried captives into Italy, they obtained their freedom from their masters."

[7] Ver. 10. And they were not able to resist the wisdom with which he spake.] So exactly was the promise made by Christ, Matt. x. 20, Luke xxi. 15, fulfilled in St. Stephen.

[8] Ver. 15. Saw his face as the face of an angel.] This expression of the "shining of the face like that of an angel," seems to have been proverbial among the Jews: for so Esther speaks to Artaxerxes, "I saw thee as an angel of God, and my heart was troubled, ἀπὸ φόβου τῆς ἕδξης σου, from fear of thy glory," Esth. xv. 13. And the Chaldee paraphrast, on Cant. i. 4, saith, "When Israel made the calf, their visage was black as that of an Ethiopian; but when they repented, and their sin was remitted, the splendour of the glory of their countenance was like that of an angel." Now God by this splendour of St. Stephen testified his innocence, and that he was pleasing to him as Moses was, in that he made his face to shine as he did that of Moses.

---

* Lib. ii. edit. Lips. p. 92. † In Tib. cap. 36.
‡ Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 5, p. 623.
§ Leg. ad Caium, p. 785, C.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Then said the high priest, Are these things so (as is suggested by these witnesses)?

2 And he said, [1] Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken, [2] The God of glory appeared unto our father Abra-

---

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

[1] Ver. 2. Ἄνδρες, ἀδελφοὶ, Men, brethren.] It is customary with the Hebrews to add the word man, when it imports no more than the word to which it is annexed; as Gen. xiii. 8, "Let there be no strife between thee and me, for we are men, brethren;" Exod. xii. 14, "Who made thee a man, a prince over us?" (see Gen. xxxviii. 1.) So accordingly, "men, brethren," occurs i. 16, ii. 29. 37, here, ver. 2. 26, xiii. 15. 26, xv. 13, xxii. 3, xxiii. 1. 6, xxviii. 17, so Matt. xiii. 28, ἐνθρὸς ἄνθρωπος is "an enemy" (see Luke xxiv. 7).

[2] The God of glory appeared to our father Abraham.]

ham, [3] when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran (Gen. xi. 33),

3 And said unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, (who are idolaters, Josh. xxiv. 2,) and come into the land which I shall shew thee.

4 Then came he (in obedience to this call) out of the land of the Chaldæans, and dwelt in Charran (his father Terah being then with him, Gen. xi. 31): and from thence, [4] when his father was dead, he (i. e. God) removed him into this land (Gen. xii. 5), wherein ye now dwell.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, [5] not so much as to set his foot on: yet (καὶ, although) he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and (that is) to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6 And [6] God spake on this wise, That his seed (beginning from Isaac) should sojourn in a strange land; and that they (among whom they sojourned) should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.

7 And (then) the nation to whom they shall be

How God appeared to him, whether it were by a dream, or a vision, or an angel, the text doth not tell us; but this phrase, "The God of glory appeared," seems to make it probable this was done by a voice from the Shechinah, or divine presence.

[3] When he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran.] Here note, that that part of Mesopotamia, which is next to Assyria, is called "the land of the Chaldees;" for Ur, of Chaldea, as Abarbinel observes, was in Mesopotamia, lying in the way from Tigris to Nisibis; and therefore Ammianus, lib. v., speaks of an Ur in Mesopotamia so situated. And Chaldea and Babylon are reckoned as parts of Mesopotamia, both by Josephus* and by Pliny.† That God appeared to Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, i. e. in Ur of Chaldea, before he dwelt in Haran, though it be not expressly said, Gen. xi. 31, yet it is to be understood there: for Gen. xv. 7, God saith expressly to him, "I am Jehovah, that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees;" and Neh. ix. 7, the Levites speak thus, "Thou art the Lord, which did choose Abraham, and broughtest him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees;" and therefore it is said of the rest, Gen. xi. 31, that "they went forth with them," that is, with Terah and Abraham, "from Ur of Chaldea, and came to Haran." Yea, it is observable, that Terah is made the chief agent in this remove; for he (saith the text) "took Abraham and Lot, and went forth from Ur of the Chaldees," with an intention to go to Canaan; whence we may gather, that Abraham had made known God's call to him, and that he believed now in that God, who had thus spoken to his son. For what should move him to leave Ur, but obedience to the divine call, which Abraham received, to which he would not have agreed, if he had not believed in God, as it is certain Lot and Sarah did, who went with them.

[4] Ver. 4. And from thence, after his father was dead, he (God, by another call) removed him into the land of Canaan.] Having proved in the former note, that Abraham went out from "Ur of the Chaldees" by an especial call from God; the call he received after his father's death, by virtue of which he removed from Charran into the land of Canaan, must be a second call, even that mentioned Gen. xii. 1, "Now the Lord said to Abraham, Get thee out of thy own country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, to a land that I will show thee." In the first call he is only bid to go out of his country, and from his kindred, which at his first removal was not completely done; for Charran was in the land of Mesopotamia, as well as Ur, Χάρρας πόλις Μεσοποταμίας, as Stephanus informs us: and though Nahor did not presently go along with his father to Haran, yet that he followed after him with all his family, and dwelt in Mesopotamia and in Charran, is evident; for Eliezer goes to Mesopotamia, to the city of Nahor, for Rebekah, Laban's sister, and the daughter of Bethuel, the son of Milcah the wife of Nahor (Gen. xxiv.), and Rebekah sent Jacob to her brother Laban to Charran (Gen. xxvii. 43, see also Gen. xxviii. 10, xxix. 5). At this second call therefore he is bid to depart from his country, where he yet was, and (from his kindred, and from his father's house, and) come to him there; and now he leaves his brother Nahor, and all his father's house behind him.

[5] Ver. 5. Not so much as to set his foot on.] He being forced there to buy a burial-place, that he might "bury his dead out of his sight" (Gen. xxiii. 3, 4. 16).

[6] Ver. 6. God said, That his seed should sojourn in a strange land, and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat him evil four hundred years.] This four hundred years cannot respect their sojourning in Egypt, for that was only two hundred and fifteen years, as both Josephus* and the scriptures testify; and so four hundred and thirty years after the promise made to Abraham, leaving Charran to go into the land of Canaan; for that two hundred and fifteen years after that promise they went down to Egypt, is thus demonstrated:—Abraham was seventy-five years old when he went from Haran to Canaan, and received the promise of that land (Gen. xii. 4. 7), and from that time to the birth of Isaac, when Abraham was one hundred years old (Gen. xxi. 5), is twenty-five years: from the birth of Isaac to that of Jacob was sixty years, for "Isaac was sixty years old when Rebekah bore" him (Gen. xxv. 26): from Jacob's birth to his descent into Egypt was, as he saith to Pharaoh, one hundred and thirty years (Gen. xlvii. 9): which sums put together make two hundred and fifteen years, and so their stay in Egypt two hundred and fifteen years more, makes exactly four hundred and thirty years. Some therefore well observe, that they sojourned not only in Egypt, but before in Canaan, ὡς ἐν γῇ ἀλλοτρίᾳ, "as in a strange land." Hence the whole land of Canaan is styled, the land in which they were πάροικοι, "strangers," or sojourners, Gen. xvii. 8, xxvi. 8, xxxv. 27, Exod. vi. 4, Ps. cv. 12, and the author to the Hebrews saith, "They dwelt in Canaan as in a strange land," xi. 9 (see the note there). Their evil treatment here, and their bondage in Egypt, saith the text, shall be four hundred years: these years some reckon from the birth of Isaac, from which time to their deliverance out of Egypt was four hundred and five years; they therefore tell us, that the five odd years are not mentioned, no notice being taken of small broken numbers: for thus, say they, the Greek interpreters, being seventy-two, are called the seventy; and the Roman writers call them centumviri, who were in all one hundred and five; and Moses, Numb. xi. 21, saith the Israelites were six hundred thousand, when they were three thousand five hundred and fifty above that number, as appears from Numb. i. 46, ii. 32. But others begin the account from the time when Ishmael the son of Hagar mocked Isaac, Gen. xxi. 9, for that it was done when Isaac was weaned, we read, ver. 8, and that this was when he was five years old, St. Jerome† doth inform us from some of the Jews, and this mocking is by St. Paul styled persecution, Gal. iv. 39. Now from this time to the deliverance of the children of Israel out of Egypt is exactly four hundred years, and from this time began the evil treament of his seed. Some, I know, begin the computation of the four hundred and thirty years, from the first call of Abraham from Ur of the Chaldees; but since the holy scripture hath given us no intimation of the age of Abraham when he went from Ur of the Chaldees to Charran, nor of the time of his stay there, this computation is upon both these accounts precarious; and the scriptures being so express in saying, Abraham was seventy-five years old when he left Charran to go into Canaan, the land of promise, if the

---

* Χαλδαίων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων Μεσοποταμιτῶν στασιάντων, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 8.

† Mesopotamia tota Assyriorum fuit vicatim dispersa præter Babyloniam et Ninum. Plin. lib. vi. cap. 26, p. 355. Vide ibid. p. 356, 357.

* Κατέλιπον δὲ τὴν Αἴγυπτον μετὰ ἔτη τριάκοντα καὶ τετρακόσια ἢ τὸν πρόγονον ἡμῶν Ἄβραμον εἰς τὴν Καναναίαν ἐλθεῖν, τῆς δὲ Ἰακωβου μεταναστάσεως εἰς τὴν Αἴγυπτον γενομένης διακοσίοις πρὸς τοῖς δεκαπεντε ἐνιαύτοις ὕστερον. Antiq. lib. i. cap. 6.

† Inter Hebræos autem varia opinio est, asserentibus aliis quinto anno ablactationis tempus statutum. Quæst. in Gen. tom. ii.

(last) in bondage will I judge, said God (Gen. xv. 14): and after that shall they come forth, and (shall) [7] serve me in this place (i. e. in this land of Canaan).

8 And he gave him the covenant of circumcision: and so Abraham (being circumcised himself) begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

9 And (the residue of) the patriarchs, (being) moved with envy (by reason of his dream), sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him (there),

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and (over) all his house.

11 Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12 But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first (without Benjamin).

13 And at the second time (when Benjamin was sent with them) Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, (who with their wives were) [8] threescore and fifteen souls.

15 [9] So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers,

16 And (our fathers) were carried over into Sy-

Holy Ghost designed to give us any chronological account of these matters, it seems more naturally to direct us to the time assigned by these years, than to the time of which it hath not given us any character at all: and though the scripture doth not tell us the exact time when Isaac was weaned; yet, since it tells us the child was grown up, or "increased," Gen. xxi. 8, and was playing with Ishmael, ver. 9, hence it is probable that the tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Jerome, that "Isaac was five years old when he was weaned," may be true.

[7] Ver. 7. And serve me in this place.] This is not said expressly, Gen. xv., but ver. 16, it is said, that "in the fourth generation they shall come forth, and return hither," which seems equivalent to this expression. This seems preferable to the exposition of some, who refer this to what is said Exod. iii. 12, four hundred years after, viz. "Ye shall serve me in this mount," that being mount Sinai in Arabia, and not the place or land where St. Stephen was when he spake these words.

[8] Ver. 14. Ἐν ψυχαῖς ἑβδομήκοντα πέντε, Threescore and fifteen souls.] The Hebrew text reckoned them only seventy, Gen. xlvi. 27, Deut. x. 22, but the Septuagint, adding five sons of Ephraim and Manasseh, born in Egypt, from 1 Chron. vii., makes them seventy-five; both which, for any thing I can see to the contrary, may be true: for mark the way of counting in the Hebrew, "All the souls that came into Egypt with Jacob from his loins were sixty-six;" and then ver. 27, it is said, that "to Joseph were born in Egypt two souls;" and then it is again said, that "all the house of Jacob which came into Egypt" (viz. if you add to them Jacob, Joseph, and his two sons) "were seventy souls." So also say the Septuagint, ver. 26. All the souls going with Jacob into Egypt were sixty-six, as the Hebrew said; then, ver. 27, the sons of Joseph were, with himself and father Jacob, nine, viz. five being descended from Ephraim and Manasseh, ver. 20, so that "all the souls of the house of Jacob going down into Egypt," if you add these nine to them, "are seventy-five:" Moses saith, all the souls that he had reckoned were seventy: but he says not there were no more; the Septuagint add the names of five more, and then say that "all the names they had reckoned were seventy-five:" nor can the names they have reckoned be disproved, for we find them in the book of Chronicles: so that I see no cogent reason why the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and Stephen, may not all speak the truth.

But, secondly, the texts both in the Hebrew and the Greek seem plainly to hint another solution; for Gen. xlvi. 26, "All the souls that came into Egypt from the loins of Jacob," besides Jacob's sons' wives, were sixty and six; add to these the wives of these eleven sons, and they made seventy and seven; take from them Hezron and Hamul, not yet born, and they were only seventy-five. Now it was the design of Moses only to give an account of those that came out of Jacob's loins, as it is said, ver. 6—8. 26, and therefore he excepts their wives out of his catalogue of sixty-six, and makes them up seventy, as before, ver. 27. But Stephen undertakes only to tell us the number of those that Joseph called into Egypt, viz. his father, καὶ πᾶσαν συγγένειαν αὐτοῦ, "and all his kindred." Some therefore of the list of Moses must be left out of St. Stephen's number, viz. Joseph and his two sons, who were there already, Hezron and Hamul, who were not yet born, and Jacob, whom he reckons apart; that is, take out these six from the seventy, and there remain sixty-four; which with the eleven wives of his sons are seventy-five. Now that these wives were a part of those that were called by Joseph, is certain, because he called "Jacob and his household, and all that he had," Gen. xlv. 11. He sent "wagons for their wives," ver. 19, and the sons of Jacob carried their wives in them, xlvi. 5. And therefore Josephus* gives us the words of Joseph thus, "Bring your wives, and your little ones, and all your kindred hither." And that the words συγγενεῖς and συγγένεια, belong to wives, we learn from Lev. xviii. 14, xx. 20, Josh. vi. 23, as well as from Josephus.

[9] Ver. 15, 16. So Jacob went down into Egypt and died, he and our fathers: and were carried over into Sychem, and were laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem.] These words have in them many difficulties, I will begin with the easiest of them. And,

First, That Ἐμμὸρ τοῦ Συχέμ, is well rendered "the father of Sychem;" and that the Greek bears this interpretation, is proved, note on Luke xxiv. 1.

Secondly, It is evident, that Jacob was buried with his fathers, Abraham and Isaac, in the cave of Machpelah. For thus he speaks to Joseph, "I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt bury me in their burial-place" (Gen. xlvii. 30); and accordingly we read, that Joseph "buried him in the cave of Machpelah," Gen. l. 13. Hence then it is certain, that it cannot be said of Jacob, that he was carried into Sychem, and buried there.

Thirldy, I add, that only Jacob was there buried, and that all the rest of the patriarchs were translated to Sychem, and buried there. That Jacob only, of all here mentioned, was buried there, is evident from an old tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Jerome,† Hegesippus,‡ and R. Sol. Jarchi;§ that Hebron was called Kirjath-Arba, "the city of the four," because four patriarchs, viz. Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were buried there: and from the observation of the cabalists, that in the word ישראל is contained by Rose Theboth all that were buried in Hebron; to wit,

Isaac and Jacob,	Adam, Abraham,
Sarah,	Leah.
Rebekah,

As for the patriarchs, styled here "our fathers," that they being dead, were carried to Sychem, is here said in express words. And St. Jerome,‖ giving us a description of the travels of Paula through the Holy Land, saith, "She came to Sychem, atque inde divertens vidit duodecim patriarcharum sepulcra, and passing thence she saw the sepulchres of the twelve patriarchs," they being buried, not in, but near to Sychem (Josh. xxiv. 32). That Moses took the bones of Joseph with him when he went out of Egypt, as he had charged his brethren to do when God brought them thence,

---

* Αὐτὸν δὲ τοῦτον, καὶ γυναῖκας ὑμετέρας, καὶ τέκνα καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν συγγένειαν ὑμῶν ἀναλαβόντες ἐνθάδε μετοικίζεσθε. Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 3.

† Quia ibidem Abraham, et Isaac, et Jacob conditus est, et ipse princeps humani generis Adam. Qu. et Trad. in Gen. f. 74, G.

‡ In Descript. Terræ Sanctæ. § In Gen. xxiii.

‖ Epitaph. Paul. tom. i. f. 62. 1.

chem, and (he was) laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money (they, in the sepulchre bought) of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17 But when the time of the promise drew nigh, (concerning) which God had sworn to Abraham (Gen. xxii. 16—18), the people grew and multiplied in Egypt, 18 Till [10] another king arose, which knew not Joseph.

19 The same (Gr. he) dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 In which time Moses was born, and (he) was [11] exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months:

21 And when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

22 And (so it came to pass, that) [12] Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and (he) was mighty in words and in deeds (i. e. his words came to pass, and his deeds were wonderful).

Gen. l. 25, we read, Exod. xiii. 19, that is, the children of Isreal did it by his command, Josh. xxiv. 32. And R. Solomon, on Exod. xiii. 19, saith, "We may learn from this very place, that the bones of all the patriarchs were brought up with him:" and this will appear very probable,

First, Because the same cause that moved Joseph to desire burial in the land of Canaan, could not but move all his brethren to desire the like, they having the same faith in the promise, and the same interest in the land, and so the same principles to move them to desire it that Joseph had.

Secondly, The rest of the tribes bore the same honour to their patriarchs that the tribe of Joseph did to him; and therefore they must be as much concerned to preserve their bones to be carried out of Egypt with them. And seeing Jacob their father was so concerned to be buried, not in Egypt, but in the land of promise (Gen. xlvii. 30), and Joseph to have his bones carried from thence into it from the same faith (Heb. xi. 22), who can imagine that the twelve fathers of the church of Israel, and heirs of the land of Canaan, should be left in the land of bondage, and not interred in their own land?

Moreover, that their bones were buried in Sychem, with the bones of Joseph, may be made probable from these considerations:

First, That though Joseph's bones were brought up with them out of Egypt, they were not buried till Joshua had divided the land among them, and had called all Israel to Sychem, to renew the covenant God made with their fathers; for then only it is said, "The bones of Joseph which the children of Israel brought out of Egypt they buried in Sychem." Either then they buried the bones of the other patriarchs at the same time, or not at all; for we read nothing of their doing it in any other assembly, at any other time or place, and so may reasonably conceive, that as they were removed at the same time, so likewise were they buried.

Secondly, There were but two places assigned of the burial of the other patriarchs; one by Josephus, who saith, "They were buried in Hebron;" the other by St. Jerome and R. Solomon, that they were buried in Sychem. Now that they were not buried by Joshua in Hebron, we have great reason to believe:

First, Because we do not read that Joshua ever came to Hebron, but to destroy the city. Secondly, from the traditions already produced, that it was called Kirjath-Arba, because the four great patriarchs only were buried in it. And thirdly, from the places where Josephus saith the contrary; for in his second book of Antiquities, ch. iv., he hath many other idle tales, which may cause us to suspect this; and in his book of the Jewish Wars he begins the story thus, μυθεύουσι,* "They of Hebron tell a tale so and so, καὶ δείκνυσι, and they show their sepulchres to this day, πάνυ καλῆς μαρμάρου καὶ φιλοτίμως εἰργασμένα, wrought curiously in fine marble, and a tree that had stood there from the creation." So that if you will believe Josephus here, you must believe they had sepulchres of fine marble curiously wrought; and then how wonderful is it that St. Jerome,† giving us what was chiefly observable in every place that Paula came at, saith only that "she came to Hebron," that is, Kirjath-Arba, id est, oppidum quatuor virorum, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, et Adam; "that is, to the town of the four patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Adam;" and bringing her from Hebron to Sychem, should tell us, "she saw the sepulchres of the patriarchs there," not only being silent as to these curious marble sepulchres, but contradicting Josephus in the whole story.

Now if these things are duly fixed, it is necessary, either to say, with the great Bochart, that some unskilful grammarians thinking a nominative case was wanting before the word ὠνήσατο, "was bought," wrote in the margin the word Ἀβραὰμ, which others put into the text, without which the words run thus with the exact truth, "So Jacob went down into Egypt and died (there); he, and our fathers, and they (viz. our fathers) were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that was bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem." For that Jacob bought of the sons of Hamor, the father of Sychem, a field near Sychem, "for a hundred kesita," we read Gen. xxxiii. 19, and that kesita is to be rendered "pieces of money," he proves in Hieroz. lib. ii. cap. 43, where he treats largely on this verse: the only objection against this conjecture, which makes the words so plain, is this, that it is not supported by any copies or versions, and on this account it seems necessary to admit of the sense given in the paraphrase; viz.

Ver. 15. And Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers.

Ver. 16. And (our fathers) were carried over into Sychem, and they were laid (Jacob) in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money (they in the sepulchre bought) of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

In which paraphrase there be three ellipses of words to be repeated from the former words, but they are such as may be often met with both in the Old and the New Testament; as v. g. Ps. cxxxiii. 3, "As the dew of Hermon (and as the dew) which fell upon the hills of Zion;" for Hermon and Zion were far asunder; Eccles. x. 1, As "dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour, so a little folly (causeth) a man of reputation for wisdom and honour (to become unsavoury)." See Numb. xxvi. 4. In the New Testament we have the like examples: so 2 Thess. ii. 7, "He that letteth (will let) till he be taken away," John ix. 3, "Neither hath he sinned, nor his parents" (so that he should be born blind on that account, ver. 2); 1 John ii. 19, "But (they went out from us) that it might appear they were not of us" (see Glass. lib. iv. de Figuris Gram. tract. 2, from observ. 8 to the 13th).

[10] Ver. 18. There arose another king who knew not Joseph.] As it might very well be; this happening one hundred and thirty-five years after the coming of the children of Israel into Egypt; for they went out of it eighty years after, when Moses was so old, and this happened sixty-four years after the death of Joseph, so that the king reigning at that distance, might know little of, and less regard, the good deeds Joseph had done for Egypt.

[11] Ver. 20. And Moses was ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, exceeding fair.] The word God being added to increase the signification; so Nineveh is called πόλις μεγάλη τῷ Θεῷ, "an exceeding great city," John iii. 3; so ὅπλα δυνατὰ τῷ Θεῷ, 2 Cor. x. 4, are "very strong weapons:" so "cedars of God," i. e. goodly cedars, Ps. lxxx. 10, "mountains of God," Ps. xxxvi. 7, i. e. great mountains (see Glass. tract. 1, de Nom. can. 17, sect. 3). With this great beauty of Moses, the ancient heathens were acquainted: for Justin out of Trogus saith,* that eum formæ pulchritudo commendabat, "The gracefulness of his countenance recommended him to others:" and Huetius† shows that the whole story of Adonis hid by Venus in an ark and delivered to Proserpina, because she admired the great beauty of the infant, was framed out of this story of Moses.

[12] Ver. 22. And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in word and deed.] Like to

---

* Lib. v. † Ubi supra, E.

* Cap. 36, 2.

† Demonstr. Evang. prop. iv. cap 4, p. 113.

23 And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel (and to make himself known to them, as one appointed of God to be their deliverer).

24 And (therefore) seeing one of them suffer wrong (from an Egyptian taskmaster), he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed (by him), and smote the Egyptian:

25 For he [13] supposed (that by this action) his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood (it) not.

26 And the next day he shewed himself unto them as they strove (one with another), and would have set them at one again (i. e. made them friends), saying (to them), Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me (now), as thou diddest the Egyptian yesterday?

29 Then fled Moses (from Egypt) at this saying, (the Egyptian king seeking his life on that account, Exod. ii. 15,) and (he) was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he (was married to Zipporah the daughter of Jethro, and) begat two sons.

30 And when forty years were expired, [14] there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sina an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush (sent from the Shechinah, where God was).

31 When Moses saw it (this angel), he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord (from the Shechinah) came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses (perceiving that God himself spake to him) trembled, and durst not behold (the vision).

33 Then said the Lord to him, Put off thy shoes from thy feet (in token of thy reverence to me, thus speaking to thee): for the place where thou standest is holy ground (being made so by my presence there).

34 I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning (under their hard labour), and am come down this saying is that of Lucian,* of an "Egyptian priest skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." But what this learning of the Egyptians then was, it is not easy to define; I suppose with the Pseudo-Justin,† that it might be astronomy, astrology, and geometry; to which you may add, from Clemens of Alexandria,‡ "skill in physic;" but whereas Philo§ adds, "arithmetic, music, hieroglyphical writing," and saith, τὴν δὲ ἄλλην ἐγκύκλιον παιδείαν Ἕλληνες ἐδίδασκον, that "the Greeks, sent for into Egypt for that purpose, taught him the liberal sciences," he is utterly out; for the Greeks had no learning till long after the time of Moses, as Clemens Alexdrinus,‖ Josephus,¶ and many others testify; and what they had, was at first borrowed from other nations: Moses, saith Josephus, being older, not only than their learning, but even than their laws and gods.

---

[13] Ver. 25. He supposed that his brethren would have understood how that God, by his hand, would deliver them.] Two things are here fit to be inquired into, viz. by what authority or right Moses slew the Egyptian, and what reason he had to expect the people should understand that God designed him for their deliverer? The Jewish historians will give us a very easy solution to these difficulties; for their priests, saith Clemens of Alexandria,†† declared, that "Moses slew the Egyptian with a word," and so gave them a miracle to prove his mission, and so then he must be killed by him who is the Lord of life and death. Josephus also saith expressly,‡‡ that "God appeared to Amram, the father of Moses, as he was praying to him for the afflicted Jews, and told him, Thy son now in the womb of thy wife shall escape the hands of the Egyptians, and τὸ μὲν Ἑβραῖον γένος τῆς παρ' Αἰγυπτίους ἀνάγκης ἀπολύει, shall deliver the Hebrews from the afflictions of the Egyptians;" and that to confirm this vision his wife brought him forth without any pain. He also adds, that a celebrated prophet among the Egyptians declared, that "a Hebrew should be born then, who should afflict the Egyptians;" and when Moses was grown up, counselled the king of Egypt to destroy him, saying, that "by killing him he would free the Egyptians from fear, and cut off the hopes of the Hebrews."§§ But not to depend on these things, the Jerusalem Talmud declares, that Moses slew the Egyptian "by the spirit of prophecy," or that he did it by an extraordinary impulse from God; and Maimonides* makes this action one degree of prophecy, and thus (as Stephen saith) "it came into his heart (from God) to visit his brethren" (ver. 23); and indeed otherwise he could not have justified this fact to God and his own conscience. Now Moses knowing what an extraordinary person he had been "in words and deeds" (ver. 22), and what had been declared of him to his father, and by this action working deliverance to one of them, must justly hope they would look upon him as one appointed by God to be their deliverer. For to be δυνατὸς ἐν λόγοις may well signify one that is endued with the spirit of prophecy, λόγος σοφίας καὶ γνώσεως, being frequently used to signify some extraordinary knowledge and wisdom, and the person gifted with them being, by Clemens Rom.† styled ὁ δυνατὸς γνῶσιν ἐξειπεῖν, a man able to declare this knowledge; and then δυνατὸς ἐν ἔργοις will signify a man of extraordinary and miraculous performances.

---

[14] Ver. 30. There appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sinai the angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.] That God himself was gloriously present here, attended with his holy angels as his ministers, of which one appeared in the bush, and was by God employed in forming the voice by which he spake to him, is evident, (1.) from the express assertion of Christ, viz. that ὁ Θεὸς, "God spake to Moses in the bush" (Mark xii. 26): so Moses himself informs us, when he prays, Deut. xxxiii. 16, that "the blessing of him that appeared in the bush might fall upon the head of Joseph," that is, saith Onkelos, "of him whose majesty dwells in the heavens, and was revealed to Moses in the bush;" saith B. Uziel, "of him who made the glory of his divine Majesty dwell in the bush." (2.) This appears from the words here spoken, saith Stephen, by the voice of the Lord, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, I have heard the affliction of my people, I will send thee into Egypt;" and also from the words in Exodus, for there Moses, who went boldly towards the angel to see that great sight, when God said, "I am the God of Abraham, trembled, and durst not behold," Exod. iii. 6, being afraid to look upon God; and ver. 13, "Moses said to God, What is thy name?" and God answers, "I AM," and bids him say, "I AM, and the God of your fathers, hath sent me to you." And, lastly, if these names could belong to a created angel, I would gladly know how Christ received "a more excellent name than the angels," as we read, Heb. i. 4. So that God was here present, as the chief person speaking to Moses, the angel only as his minister and his attendant (see the note on John i. 1).

---

* Μεμφίτης ἀνὴρ τῶν ἱερῶν γραμματέων θαυμάσιον τὴν σοφίαν, καὶ τὴν παιδείαν πᾶσαν εἰδὼς τὴν Αἰγύπτιον. Philosop. p. 842, C.

† Resp. ad q. 25.

‡ Ἰατρικὴν. Clem. Strom. vi.

§ De Vita Mosis, p. 470.

‖ Γραμματικὴν Ἕλληνας παρὰ Φοινίκων. Strom. i. p. 344. Ἐκ τῆς βαρβάρων φιλοσοφίας πᾶσαν φερομένην τὴν παρ' ἕλλησιν ἐνδεικνύμενοι σοφίαν. Strom. vi. p. 614.

¶ Joseph. cap. 10, contra Apion. p. 1034.

 Antiq. Præf. p. 3.

†† Apud Clem. Strom. i. p. 344.

‡‡ Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 5, p. 55. §§ P. 57.

* Nev. par. ii. cap. 14.

† Epist. ad Corinth. §. 48.

to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt (to that end).

35 [15] This Moses whom they (formerly) refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge (over us)? the same (Gr. him) did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hand (or ministry) of the angel which appeared to him (as God's messenger) in the bush. (And)

36 He brought them out (of Egypt), after that he had shewed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red sea, and in the wilderness (after they came from Egypt) forty years.

37 ¶ This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel (Deut. xi. 15), [16] A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear (which prophet was Christ).

38 This is he, that was in the church (or congregation) in the wilderness [17] with the angel which spake to him (from the divine presence) in the mount Sina, and with (to) our fathers: [18] who received the lively oracles to give unto us (which spake of him:

39 This is he) To whom our fathers would not obey, but (they) thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt,

40 Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him (and so it is no wonder that they will not hear God's prophet now).

41 [19] And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

---

[15] Ver. 35. This Moses whom they refused.] For though only one of them said to him, "Who made thee a ruler or judge over us?" yet that one is thought to have been a ruler of a tribe, and so to have spoken in the name of the rest. Moreover, none of them acknowledged him as one by God appointed to be their prince and Saviour out of the hands of the Egyptians (ver. 27); and therefore it is said, that ἠρνέσαντο, "they denied him," as the Jews are said to deny that Jesus whom they would not acknowledge (see the note on iii. 14).

[16] Ver. 37. A prophet shall the Lord—raise up to you, &c.] See note on iii. 22.

[17] Ver. 38. With the angel that spoke to him in mount Sinai.] Perhaps the same angel which appeared to him as an attendant on the divine Majesty in the bush, for though the law was given "by the disposition of angels," ver. 53, (of which place see the note on John i. 1, Heb. ii. 2), yet seems there to have been a principal angel (perhaps Michael their prince, Dan. x. 21), who attended upon Moses and the children of Israel, and who is therefore styled by God, "my angel:" so, Exod. xxiii. 23, "My angel shall go before thee," that is, saith Baal-Hatturim, "Michael, my peculiar angel:" so also xxxii. 34. This Moses owns by saying, Numb. xx. 16, "When we cried to the Lord—he sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt," that is, "Michael the prince," say the Jews, and therefore he saith, "I am come, as captain of the host of the Lord," Josh. v. 14, which is the title of Michael, Dan. x. 13; but this is not so to be understood as to exclude the presence of God himself, for this angel was sent from the Shechinah or divine presence, which was in the pillar of the cloud.

[18] Who received λόγια ζῶντα, the lively oracles to give to us.] The law of Moses is here styled, "the lively oracles," not because they were able ζωοποιεῖν, "to give life," for that St. Paul expressly denies, Gal. iii. 21, calling this law "the ministry of death and condemnation," 2 Cor. iii. 6. 9; but because they were oracles, proceeding, not from dumb idols, but from "the living God," and promising a prosperous and happy life in Canaan, to all that obeyed them (Lev. xviii. 5, Deut. xv. 16, xxxii. 47), on which account this word is styled, Heb. iv. 12, λόγος ζῶντος Θεοῦ, "the word of the living God," and, 1 Pet. i. 23, "the living word of God," as being quick and vigorous in its operations (see the note on Heb. iv. 12).

[19] Ver. 41. And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice to the idol.] Here note,

First, That the calf worshipped by the Jews is expressly called an "idol," and they who worshipped it are expressly styled "idolaters," 1 Cor. x. 7, and with good reason, because "they changed the image of the incorruptible God into the similitude of a calf," Ps. cvi. 19, 20. Note,

Secondly, That the worship performed by them to this golden calf, was worship directed by them to the true God, viz. to that God "which brought them from the land of Egypt;" for when they had made them "a molten calf," they said, "This is thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt," Neh. ix. 18.

Nor can we otherwise conceive, if we consider, (1.) that by this God they could not possibly intend to signify the very image they had made, there being nothing more repugnant to common sense, and more irrationally stupid, than to conceive that what they made the other day, was both their maker and preserver, whilst it was nothing in the world; and that it gave them power, before it was in being: men may assert such things, who have no other refuge or defence, but cannot possibly believe themselves in what they so wildly do affirm. (2.) They could not be conceived to affirm, that this God, who brought them out of the land of Egypt, was the Egyptian Serapis; for then they must imagine, that this Egyptian god wrought all the miracles they saw done in Egypt upon those that owned and worshipped him, in favour of those persons who did not own him for a god, but looked upon him as a devil, and that he did inflict the heaviest judgments upon them that feared him, and showed the greatest kindness unto those that feared him not, by separating betwixt them and the Egyptians, and not permitting any of his judgments to molest or touch them. They must believe that the Egyptian Serapis had enjoined them to abstain from all those modes of worship with which he was served in Egypt, as an abomination to him; "for in the day that he lifted up his hand unto them to bring them forth of the land of Egypt,"—then said he unto them, "Cast away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt, I am the Lord your God," Ezek. xx. 6, 7. Lastly, They must believe that he, who executed his judgments on the Egyptian gods, was the Egyptian god, and that the God of the Hebrews, who said, "Let my people go, that they may serve me," Exod. vii. 1, was the god of Egypt, and that he, who wrought those miracles unto this end, that the Egyptians might know that he was the Lord, Exod. xiv. 18, was he whom the Egyptians owned as their god; all which deductions are too absurd to be believed. Moreover, (1.) the reason why they desired the making of this god to go before them, as delivered thus, "Up, make us gods which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him," Exod. xxxii. 1. And from these words it is apparent, that the want of Moses was the only cause why they required this golden calf to "go before" them. Now it is certain, they esteemed not Moses to be God, but only one who represented God, and who declared his mind unto them; on which account God himself saith, that he should be "to Aaron instead of God," Exod. iv. 16, and therefore it is also certain that they desired only some other representative of God, which Aaron might consult to know the mind of God. (2.) Here they expressly do acknowledge that Moses brought them out of the land of Egypt, i. e. the God of Moses did so. Now they all knew the true Jehovah was that God whom Moses taught them to adore, and that the God of Moses was not that calf, which he knew nothing of, nor that Egyptian Apis, which he had so much opposed and vilified: when therefore they affirm, at the beholding of this calf, "These are thy gods," this affirmation must be supposed consistent with their former words, which do acknowledge that the God of Moses brought them forth, &c. Now since the golden calf, or the Egyptian Apis, was not, even in the apprehension of these men, the God of Moses, these words, viz. "These are thy gods," cannot be spoken of the calf, or the Egyptian Apis, and therefore must be understood of him who was indeed the God of Moses, and so must signify, This is the sign, this is the representation of that God which brought us forth, &c.

42 [20] Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets (Amos, saying, v. 25), O ye house of Israel, [21] have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?

Again, this we may gather from the feasts they consecrated, for Aaron doth expressly say it was "a feast to Jehovah;" whereas had it been really intended as an honour done to the Egyptian demons, it cannot be conceived that Aaron would both give unto those devils the proper and incommunicable name of God, and also offer sacrifices to devils. He therefore, whom he called Jehovah, and to whom he offered those peace-offerings, was he who truly bears that name. And, (3.) this is plain from St. Stephen's words, ver. 41, 42, "And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto idols, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands; then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven:" for it is observable, that the idolatry of the calf was distinct from the other heathen idolatry, this being the punishment of the other, and only a consequent of that, for "then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven." Since then the worship of Osiris under the species of a golden bull, and of the Egyptian Apis in the symbol of a living calf, was really the worship of the sun and moon, as the great Selden* doth inform us, it follows, that when they worshipped the golden calf, they were not given up unto the worship of Osiris, or the Egyptian Apis, which were adored by the Egyptians as the most glorious part of all "the host of heaven."

Hence then it must demonstratively follow, that the worship of the true God in an image, or material representation, is, in the scripture sense, idolatry.

Ver. 40. Ὁ γὰρ Μωσῆς οὗτος οὐκ οἴδαμεν, As for this Moses.] This construction occurs often both in the Old and New Testament: so Ps. xi. 4, Jehovah in the heavens is his throne; Κύριος ἐν οὐρανῷ ὁ θρόνος αὐτοῦ, LXX., Ps. xviii. 30, ὁ Θεός μου ἄμωμος ἡ ὁδὸς αὐτοῦ, "As for God, his way is perfect;" Ps. civ. 17, "The stork, the fir-trees are his house" (see Eccles. ii. 14, Hos. xii. 2, Nah. i. 3). So Matt. xxi. 42, Λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν, οὗτος, "As for the stone which the builders refused, it is become the head corner-stone:" see also Rev. ii. 26, and the note on 1 John ii. 27, καὶ ὑμεῖς τὸ χρίσμα ὃ ἐλάβετε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, &c.

[20] Ver. 42. Then God gave them up to worship the host of heaven.] i. e. From their worshipping him in images against his command, he suffered them to proceed to "worship the creature instead of the Creator:" see note on Rom. i. 21. 24. "The invention of idols" (i. e. images), saith the book of Wisdom, "was the beginning of fornication," i. e. idolatry (see note on John viii. 41): and therefore God is said to have "given this host of heaven to the heathens to worship," εἰς θρησκείαν καὶ προσκυνεῖν ὃς στοῦς. See Drusius and the Septuagint, Deut. iv. 19, Just. M. Dial. p. 274, Clem. Alex. Strom. p. 609, B. viz. He suffered them to proceed to that more vile idolatry in punishment of their worship of him by images. And to this alludes that of the Septuagint, Hos. xiii. 4, "God gave not the host of heaven to you, πορεύεσθαι ὀπίσω αὐτῶν, to go after them," but sent his prophets to forbid it, which he did not to the heathen world.

[21] Have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?] This question is a strong negative, importing that though they really did offer sacrifices, as he had commanded, yet did he not accept or look upon them as offered to him. The expression is like that of the prophet Zachary, vii. 5, "When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh months, these seventy years, did ye at all fast to me, even to me?" And this is here denied.

First, Because God will accept of no worship as done unto him, which is not done unto him alone; and when any other is worshipped with him, he looks upon himself as not worshipped at all. So of those nations which came from Assyria into the cities of Samaria, it is said, 2 Kings xvii. 23, "They feared the Lord and served their own gods;" and then it is added, ver. 34, that "they feared not the Lord."

* Lib. de Diis Syris, cap. 4.

(i. e. μὴ προσηνέγκατε, ye have not offered these things to me.)

43 Yea, (καὶ, but) [22] ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch (i. e. the sun), and the star of your god Remphan (i. e. and a star to represent to you Saturn, these

Secondly, Because God will not own any worship as performed to him, whilst men continue in their disobedience to his laws, and in their hearts depart from him, and incline to a worship he approves not of: thus the Jews in Zachary are said, not to fast to him, because they would not hearken to or obey his words (ver. 8), and he is said to have been angry with them in the wilderness forty years, "because they erred from him in their hearts," Ps. xcv. 10, that is, saith the Chaldee, "They had their idols in their hearts." And the Samaritans are said to "worship they know not what," John vi. 22, because they did not worship him according to his will revealed in his word (see the note there).

[22] Ver. 43. Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which you made to worship them, &c.] Here note,

First, That these words are taken from Amos v. 26, where the words in our translation are, "Ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch, and Chiun your images, the star of your god." Note,

Secondly, That these words of the prophet are by St. Stephen produced to prove, that God gave them up to worship "the host of heaven," as the punishment of their worshipping of the golden calf; even as God is said to have given up the heathens to uncleanness and vile affections, Rom. i. 21—26, as the punishment of their former idolatry, ver. 21. 23. So that the gods here mentioned must belong to "the host of heaven." Note, Thirdly, That Moloch is thought to be the sun, for the whole east did worship the sun and moon as the "king and queen of heaven;" and interpreters almost generally agree, that Baal, Bel, or Belus, so often mentioned in the scriptures as worshipped by the heathens, is the sun, or "lord of heaven." Now Baal the lord, and Moloch the king of heaven, is the same. So Eusebius* tells us of the Phœnicians out of Sanchoniathon, that "when drought happened, they did τὰς χεῖρας ὀρέγειν εἰς οὐρανοὺς πρὸς τὸν ἥλιον· τοῦτον γὰρ φησὶ θεὸν ἐνόμιζον μόνον οὐρανοῦ κύριον Βεελσάμεν καλοῦντες, lift up their hands to heaven, to the sun, whom they owned as the only lord of heaven, calling him Beelsamen, that is, the lord of heaven;" and Damascius† in Photius saith, the Syrians and Phœnicians τὸν Κρόνον Ἦλ καὶ Βῆλ ἐπονομάζουσι, "call Saturn El and Bel;" and Servius‡ upon Virgil says that "the sun and Saturn were worshipped by the Assyrians and the Africans under the name of Bel." See for the farther proof of this, Voss. de Idol. lib. ii. cap. 4, Spencer de Ritibus Hebr. p. 551.

As for the other word "Chiun," changed by the Septuagint into a name better known, viz. "Rephan" or "Remphan," Vossius thinks it signifies the moon, ibid. cap. 23. But Aben-Ezra on the place informs us that it signifies Saturn, and that with great probability, Saturn§ bearing that name, say the learned, in the Arabian and Persic tongues; and in the Egyptian alphabet Ῥῆφαν is Saturn. Note,

Fourthly, That to Moloch is ascribed succoth, a tabernacle or tabernacles, because he was worshipped in little shrines, chapels, and tabernacles, which they used to carry about with them, as Grotius and Dr. Hammond here prove;

Remphan a star, because the heathens worshipped their gods, demons, and heroes, under the name of some star appropriated to them, as Dr. Spencer‖ shows; and so the Egyptian god Remphan or Remphin, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, might be worshipped in the star Saturn.

And because they made images of these gods, and put them into these shrines, and chapels or tabernacles to be

* Præp. Evang. lib. i. cap. 10, p. 34.

† Cod. 242, p. 1050.

‡ Assyrios constat Saturnum (quem eundem et solem dicunt) coluisse, quæ numina etiam apud Afros postea culta sunt; unde et Punicâ linguâ Bel Deus dicitur, apud Assyrios autem Bel dicitur quâdam sacrorum ratione et Saturnus et sol. In Prim. Æneid. Virg. 733.

§ Spencer, p. 551, 552. ‖ P. 554.

being) figures which ye made (whereby) to worship them: and (therefore) I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44 (And yet) [23] Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he (God) had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen.

45 Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus (i. e. Joshua) into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, (and this tabernacle continued) unto the days of David;

46 Who found favour before God, and desired to find a tabernacle (a habitation) for the God of Jacob (the father of the Israelites).

47 But (he being a man of blood, 1 Chron. xxii. 8, his son) Solomon built him an house.

48 Howbeit (ἀλλ', but this he did, acknowledging at the same time, 1 Kings viii. 27, that) the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet (Isaiah, lxvi. 1, in these words spoken from God),

49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house (then) will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?

50 Hath not my hand made all these things? (you must not therefore think with the heathens, I leave heaven to be present there, or am confined to rest in any building made with your hands).

51 ¶ Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye (surely deserve more than the heathens, uncircumcised in the flesh, to be excluded from God's presence and habitation; for ye) do always resist the Holy Ghost (the Shechinah): as your fathers did, so do ye.

52 Which of the prophets (acted by that Holy Spirit) have not your fathers persecuted? and (καὶ, yea) they have slain them which shewed before (by the same Spirit) of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53 (Yea, you are the very same persons) [24] Who have received the law (immediately from the mouth of God) by the disposition (administration) of angels, and have not kept it (but violated even those laws which were delivered from God immediately, as well as those which he spake by the Holy Spirit in the prophets).

54 ¶ When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth (through indignation).

55 But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up stedfastly into heaven, and [25] saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, 56 And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man (the Messiah) standing on the right hand of God.

57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and [26] ran upon him with one accord,

58 And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: [27] and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.

59 And they stoned Stephen, [28] calling upon worshipped; therefore the prophet calls them צלמים images of their gods, which they had made.

---

Lastly, Because the tabernacles of Moloch and Saturn, to whom they offered their sons and daughters, had septem conclavia,* "seven cells," or receptacles, according to the number of the seven planets; therefore perhaps it is that St. Stephen saith, they worshipped "the host of heaven."

Fifthly, That they were guilty of this idolatry whilst they continued in the wilderness, though we read nothing of it expressly in the five books of Moses, we cannot doubt, if we believe the prophet Amos, declaring from God, that "they did not offer sacrifice to him in the wilderness," because they were then guilty of this idolatry; or Stephen saying, that in punishment of the calf they made and worshipped there, God gave them up to worship the host of heaven. And to this we may refer the complaint of the psalmist, that even then "they erred in their hearts, and knew not his ways;" and more certainly the words of Joshua (xxiv. 14), "And now put away the strange gods which your fathers served on the other side of the river, and in Egypt, and serve the Lord;" for if they had them not among them they could not put them away; and his following words (ver. 19), "Ye cannot serve the Lord (whilst ye retain your idols), for he is a jealous God."

And, Lastly, Whereas Stephen saith, "I will carry you beyond Babylon," though the prophet had only said, I will carry you beyond Damascus, this need give us little trouble, seeing this prophecy was fulfilled by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, carrying them both beyond Damascus and Babylon, into the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6.

[23] Ver. 44. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness.] i. e. In which the true God gave them signal testimonies of his presence with them, and indications that he dwelt among them, though, as in the wilderness, so till the times of David, they fell off from him to idolatry: this David desired to build God a temple, and his heart was set upon it (Ps. cxxxii.), and his son Solomon built it, and in this you place your confidence, saying, "The temple of the Lord are we" (Jer. vii. 4); but know, says St. Stephen, that the great God of heaven cannot be confined to your temple, or to choose it for a place of rest, as that he should not depart from it or suffer it to be destroyed again, as he formerly did for your crying provocations; this therefore you may reasonably expect, who are still a stiffnecked people, and uncircumcised in heart, still resisting the Holy Ghost in God's prophets, as your fathers did, and adding to all your sins the murder of your promised Messias; this, I say, you have reason to expect, did not I warn you of it.

[24] Ver. 53. Who have received the law, εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγέλων.] That is, saith Grotius, inter angelorum turmas, "by God's appearing with his host of angels," for so we read he did at mount Sinai, when he gave the law: so Deut. xxxiii. 2, "The Lord came from Sinai, he came with ten thousand ἀγγέλων, of angels; from his right hand went a fiery law for them;" and Ps. lxviii. 17, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels, and the Lord is among them as in Sinai." I rather choose to say, "by the administration of angels," they all here ministering to God when he gave the law (see note on John i. 1, and on Heb. ii. 2).

[25] Ver. 55. He saw the glory of God.] That is the Shechinah, the symbol of God's glorious presence (see the notes on Rom. i. 23, and on Heb. i. 3); and Jesus standing at the right hand of God, as in a posture ready to receive him.

[26] Ver. 57. They ran upon him with one accord.] Though they rush upon him in this case, yet they do it only because by fresh words of blasphemy, as they conceived, he had confirmed the former blasphemy testified against him by two witnesses, and therefore they drew him out of the city, because their traditions said, that "no man was to be stoned in the camp, or in the city;" and stone him after the legal manner, the witnesses against him beginning the execution; and so here is no evidence that this was done jure zelotarum, and not by course of justice, the Sanhedrin having before sufficiently showed what they thought of him, by being "mad against him, gnashing upon him with their teeth."

[27] Ver. 58. And they laid their clothes at the feet of a young man, whose name was Saul.] See note on Philem. ver. 9.

[28] Ver. 59. Ἐπικαλούμενον, Calling upon Christ and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.] Here we find Stephen, "full of the Holy Ghost," calling religiously upon Christ, now in heaven, to receive his spirit, and thereby testifying, not only that religious worship was due to him, but also that he could hear his prayer, and receive his spirit at that distance, and therefore was omnipresent, and the searcher of

---

* See Voss. de Idol. lib. ii. cap. 5, p. 169.

God, and saying, Lord Jesus, [29] receive my spirit.
60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he [30] fell asleep.

the hearts, and he in whose hands the spirits of men were: for he doth not say, Κύριε τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, "Thou who art the Lord of Jesus;" that phrase being never used in the New Testament, but Κύριε Ἰησοῦ, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit:" like to this is that prayer of St. John, Rev. xxii. 20, Κύριε Ἰησοῦ, "Lord Jesus, come quickly."

[29] Receive my spirit.] Hence it appears that the spirit of man is a substance distinct and separable from the body, and which dies not with it; for Stephen prays not to the Lord Jesus to receive his body, but only to receive his spirit, now to be separated from it (see the notes on Luke xxiii. 40, and on 2 Tim. i. 12). Now, if the spirit of a man died with the body, no reason can be given why St. Stephen should pray to the Lord Jesus to receive his spirit rather than his body. Moreover, this, being said by a Jew in presence of the Jews, is doubtless to be understood to the sense and the opinion of the Jews, who held, that "the souls of just men were in the hand of God" (Wisd. iii. 1), and were "in peace:" which expressions agree not to a thing which is insensate; nor could an insensate being have any hope at all, much less "a hope full of immortality," as he there speaks, ver. 2, 3.

[30] Ver. 60. He fell asleep.] See note on John xi. 11.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 And Saul (when Stephen thus died) was consenting unto his death. And [1] at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they (that were of it) were all scattered abroad [2] throughout the regions of Judæa and Samaria, except the apostles.

2 And devout men carried Stephen [3] to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3 As for Saul, he made havock of (Gr. and Saul wasted or afflicted) the church, entering into every house (of the faithful), and haling men and women (thence, he) committed them to prison.

4 [4] Therefore they that were (Gr. they therefore being) scattered abroad went every where (Gr. went through Judea and Samaria, ver. 1) preaching the word.

5 Then [5] Philip (the evangelist, being one of the seven, xxi. 8) went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did (to confirm his doctrine).

7 For unclean spirits, crying with (a) loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city (that a person so beneficial was come to them).

9 But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched (Gr. and a certain man named Simon was before in that city, using magic, and astonishing) the peo-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

[1] Ver. 1. At that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem.] The rage they were in for what was spoken, as they conceived, against the law and the temple,* for which they had the highest veneration, and the cutting words St. Stephen had pronounced before, and even of, the Sanhedrin, as of a stiffnecked and uncircumcised generation, wanting that circumcision they so gloried in, not observing that law they seemed so zealous for, persecuting the prophets who foretold of the Messias, betraying and murdering him when he was come, gave, in all likelihood, the occasion to this persecution of all others who believed this, as St. Stephen did; and that this persecution was set on by the authority of this great council, we may learn from the part Saul bore in it; for he confesses that he received his authority to treat the Christians thus from them (xxii. 5, xxvi. 11).

[2] They were all scattered abroad, πλὴν τῶν ἀποστόλων, except the apostles.] It is a very ancient tradition, mentioned by Clemens of Alexandria,† that our Lord assigned twelve years after his ascension for the conversion of the unbelieving Jews in Judea, lest any of them should say οὐκ ἠκούσαμεν, "We have not heard;" saying to his apostles, μετὰ δώδεκα ἔτη ἐξέλθετε εἰς τὸν κόσμον, "Go ye out into the world after twelve years;" and Apollonius,‡ who flourished at the same time, speaks of this, ὡς ἐκ παραδόσεως, "as delivered by tradition," that our Lord commanded his apostles ἐπὶ δώδεκα ἔτεσι μὴ χωρισθῆναι τῆς Ἱεροσολύμων, "not to recede from Jerusalem by the space of twelve years." Now if there be any truth in this tradition, it shows the reason why the apostles continued at Jerusalem when the rest of the disciples were scattered abroad.

[3] Ver. 2. Συνεκόμισαν, Buried Stephen.] i. e. They prepared Stephen for his burial, as the Greek word properly imports; i. e. they did all things in order to it, washing his body (Acts ix. 37), anointing it, and winding it up in linen, putting it in the coffin, carrying it forth to the burial-place, and weeping there over it after the manner of the Jews. But whereas Grotius tells us from Austin,* De Civ. Dei, lib. xxii. 8, that the relics of Stephen cured many diseases, it is wonderful he should depend much on the authority of St. Austin in this matter, seeing he tells us, that hujus martyris corpus ex illo usque ad ista tempora latuit, nuper autem apparuit, sicut solent apparere sanctorum martyrum corpora revelatione Dei, "the relics of this martyr were latent for about four hundred years, and only found by revelation in his time:" for is there not sufficient reason to suspect such revelations appearing only in that age, when religion began much to decline, and superstition, as St. Austin confesses, to abound? Would God thus honour this martyr only then, and neglect to do it four hundred years? or, did not Grotius know, that Austin saith in that very chapter of these very miracles, that they are "not of such authority, that we should believe them without difficulty or doubting?"†

[4] Ver. 4. They that were scattered abroad went through all places preaching the word.] Hence it is highly probable that it was not the whole church of Jerusalem, or the body of the laity (seeing we find "devout men" burying Stephen, ver. 3), that was thus "scattered abroad:" for what authority had they to preach the word? but the hundred and eight that were full of the Holy Ghost: this persecution aiming chiefly at those who were such as Stephen was; and therefore the discourse passes on from him to Philip, another of those persons so qualified to preach the gospel.

[5] Ver. 5. Philip.] That this was Philip the deacon, and not the apostle, seems evident from these considerations: (1.) That he seems not to have had the power of giving the Holy Ghost by imposition of hands; for "he fell upon none" of the Samaritans till Peter and John came and "laid their

* Ἐξαίρετός ἐστιν αὐτοῖς ἅπασι ἡ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν σπουδή. Philo Legat. p. 791.

† Stromat. lib. vi. p. 636, 637.

‡ Apud Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. v. cap. 17.

* Serm. xv. ed. à Sirmond. tom. x. p. 881.

† Non tanta ea commendat autoritas, ut sine difficultate, vel dubitatione credantur.

ple of Samaria, giving out (Gr. saying) that himself was [6] some great one:

10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched (astonished) them with (his) sorceries.

12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things [7] concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women (for the remission of sin, ii. 38).

13 Then Simon himself believed also (that this Jesus, who enabled Philip to do these things, was some power superior to any he conversed with): and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, [8] they sent unto them Peter and John:

15 Who, when they were come down, [9] prayed for them (περὶ αυτῶν, over them whom the Holy Ghost saw fit to be endued with prophetical gifts for the ministry there), that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

---

hands upon them," ver. 15—17, and ver. 18, it is particularly noted, that the Holy Ghost was given only by the imposition of the apostles' hands. (2.) That the apostles were still at Jerusalem, ver. 1, whereas this Philip was one of those that were dispersed; for when St. Luke had said, that the rest were dispersed, preaching the gospel, ver. 4, he adds, ver. 5, "And Philip went down to Samaria preaching Christ." And (3.) he goes from Azotus, evangelizing in the cities till he came to Cæsarea (ver. 40), and there we find Paul abiding in the house of that Philip, "who was one of the seven deacons" (Acts xxi. 8).

[6] Ver. 9. Λέγων εἶναί τινα ἑαυτὸν μέγαν, Saying he was some great one; and of whom the Samaritans said, that he was ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη, the great power of God, ver. 10.] The account, which, according to St. Luke, this magician gives of himself, is only this, that he was μέγας τις, "some great person," as mountebanks usually represent themselves; and the opinion which his magical pranks had wrought in the Samaritans, only this, that he was "the great power of God;" by which words perhaps they only meant some legate or minister of God, assisted by his mighty power; and yet the fathers tell us, he declared himself to be, eum qui sit super omnia Pater, "the Father which is above all." So Irenæus,* that he was bold to call himself "the chief God," so Tertullian;† and that the Samaritans held him to be πρῶτον Θεὸν, "the prime God;" yea, to be God ὑπερὰνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως, "above all principality, power, and virtue;" so Justin Martyr;‡ though he who reads these words of Irenæus, Esse se docuit sublimissimam virtutem, hoc est, eum qui sit super omnia Pater; and these of Tertullian, Hic ausus est summam se dicere virtutem, id est, summum Deum, will be apt to think, they only did infer this from these words of St. Luke, that the Samaritans held he was ἡ μεγάλη τοῦ Θεοῦ δύναμις, "the great power of God." St. Luke goes on to inform us, that "he believed and was baptized" in the name of Jesus, with the rest of the Samaritans; and after this, it is difficult to conceive how he should persuade the Samaritans that he was God the Father, or the Jews that he was that Son, that Jesus, into whose name he was baptized, or the gentiles, that he was that Spirit which he would have purchased with money. How can we easily conceive, that all Samaria should own him as a great God, and yet he, as Theodoret§ informs us, should presently after this leave them, as having received the doctrine of Christ, and go thence to those who had not yet received it, and come in the second year of Claudius, i. e. about eight years after, to Rome, where he was confounded by the prayers of Peter? or that, being overcome in the sight of all that dwelt at Rome, they should still have erected, till the time of Justin Martyr, a statue, Simoni Deo sancto, "to Simon the holy God?" These things, I say, seem neither easy to be believed in themselves, nor well consistent with what is here recorded by St. Luke. However, seeing both Irenæus and Theodoret, in the places mentioned, say expressly, Ἰουδαίοις μὲν ὡς υἱὸν φανῆναι, πρὸς δὲ Σαμαρείτας ὡς πατέρα κατεληλυθέναι, ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἔθνεσιν ὡς Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπιφοιτῆσαι, "that Simon pretended to appear to the Jews as the Son, to have descended to the Samaritans as the Father, and to other nations as the Holy Ghost;" this seems to show that the doctrine of the blessed Trinity was embraced by all Christians from the beginning, as St. Basil proves from the testimonies of the fathers from the beginning, and from these words of Clemens Rom., ζῇ Θεὸς, καὶ ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα ἅγιον (Basil de Spiritû Sancto, tom. ii. cap. 29, p. 357, 358).

[7] Ver. 12. Περὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος, Concerning the name of Jesus Christ.] That is, concerning the power of that name, when it was used by believers to do the greatest miracles; so, iii. 16, "His name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong," that is, his power upon the invocation of his name with faith hath done it: so the sadducees inquire of the apostles, iv. 7, "By what have ye done this?" and they answer, ver. 10, "By the name," that is, the power, "of Jesus;" and afterward they pray, ver. 30, "that signs and wonders may be done by his name," i. e. by using of his name with faith, and invocating of him; the power of Christ being then present with them that did so.

[8] Ver. 14. They sent to them Peter.] Here we find Peter sent by the other apostles, and by the church, which is a sign he was not their head and superior; for "greater is he that sends, than he that is sent."

[9] Ver. 15. Who prayed over them that they might receive the Holy Ghost.] Not that all, who had been baptized, might receive it; for it was never so in any church; no, not at Jerusalem; there being only some among them full of the Holy Ghost (Acts vi. 3); and therefore it seems reasonable to say, with Dr. Lightfoot here, that they were such as the Holy Ghost had pointed out to be ordained ministers, or for the receiving of the prophetical gifts, which enabled men then λειτουργεῖν, "to do sacred offices" in the assemblies where they were (Acts xiii. 2, 3); and these gifts being conferred, either by God immediately, as in the case of Cornelius, or only by the apostles' hands; Epiphanius* observes rightly, that Philip, being only a deacon, had not the power to confer them, and therefore these apostles were sent to do it. But whereas Dr. Hammond saith, this laying on of hands was "to confirm, and to ordain elders and bishops, in every city one," this latter clause, of the ordaining one bishop for every city of Samaria, when one city only had received the faith, is very surprising, it being new to hear of a bishop settled where there were no Christians, and therefore they could have no flock. Moreover, as this is spoken gratis, without any colour from the text, so is there not the least mention of any deacons here ordained, though Epiphanius saith, "there cannot be a bishop without deacons." And if this imposition of hands made them bishops of so many cities of Samaria, by the same reason St. Paul imposing his hands on twelve men at Ephesus (xix. 6), must make them also bishops of twelve cities of Asia. In a word, it is evident that by this imposition of hands the Holy Ghost fell on them not to make them bishops of any city, but only prophets and teachers in the churches where they came, and to which they travelled; thus Silas, coming a prophet from Jerusalem, returns not to Judea, to exercise any episcopal function there; but goes on with Paul to the gentiles to visit and confirm the churches (Acts xv. 34. 41). Nor was one of them only placed in a city, but many; five at Antioch (Acts xiii. 1), more at Corinth, and perhaps at Ephesus. As for the other opinon, that these hands were laid on to confirm them; if hands were not laid on all that were baptized, this makes nothing for confirmation; if they were, then Simon Magus must be confirmed, and receive the Holy Ghost. And both these opinions seem dangerous

---

* Iren. lib. i. cap. 20.

† Tertul. de Præscr. cap. 46.

‡ Just. Apol. ii. p. 691, Dial. p. 349, C.

§ Hær. Fab. lib. i. cap. 1.

* Hær. xxi. sect. 1.

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they (visibly) received the Holy Ghost (so as to speak with tongues and prophesy, xix. 6).

18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money (to obtain the same power), 19 Saying, (Let this reward induce you to) give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay (my) hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20 But Peter said unto him, [10] Thy money perish with thee (i. e. without repentance thou wilt perish with it), because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter (i. e. the blessings of this kingdom): for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and (by the way) preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26 And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto [11] the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which (way) is (through the) desert (of Judah, or, to old Gaza, which is desert).

27 And he arose and went: and, behold a [12] man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship, 28 Was returning (to his country), and sitting in his chariot (he) read (in) Esaias the prophet.

29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read (in) the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?

31 And he said, [13] How can I (understand a prophecy of future times, with which I am wholly unac- on this account, that the Holy Ghost was never thus conferred but by the hands of an apostle; and consequently, if confirmation and ordination be laid on this foundation, they may be said to cease with the apostles. Notwithstanding this may well be deemed a fit pattern for bishops to follow in the apostolical rite of confirmation and ordination, by laying on of hands; by which rite they, as successors of the apostles, confer the ordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost as the apostles did the extraordinary gifts of the same Spirit.

---

[10] Ver. 20. Thy money perish with thee; because thou hast thought that the gift of God might be purchased with money.] As for the first clause of these words, the fathers look upon them rather as a prophetical prediction than an imprecation: and as for the sin of Simon, it seems not to consist so much in his ambition and his avarice, that he would be advanced to this highest dignity, and have those gifts, by the excercise of which he hoped to be the greater gainer; as in this, that he struck at the very foundation of the Christian faith, supposing that the apostles and other Christians did their miracles, in confirmation of it, by some higher art of magic than that which he had learned, and so they by the same art could teach others to do the same works for any other end. Now what relation this sin hath to what we now call simony, it is not easy to conceive; only because he would have purchased this spiritual gift with money; hence, by analogy, all purchasing of spiritual offices or places, by such sordid means, doth bear that name.

[11] Ver. 26. Ἐπὶ τὴν ὁδὸν τὴν καταβαίνουσαν εἰς Γάζαν· αὕτη ἐστὶν ἔρημος. In the way which leadeth to Gaza, which way is a desert.] So Œcumenius, There is a way to the south, τὸ δὲ αὐτή ἐστιν ἔρημος εἶπεν, "and that way, saith he, is desert." So Pliny,* Per continentem deserta, oppidum Gaza. And this may be said to distinguish this Gaza of the Philistines from another Gaza in the tribe of Ephraim, mentioned 1 Chron. vii. 28, not far from the place where Philip now was.

[12] Ver. 27. Ἀνὴρ Αἰθίοψ εὐνοῦχος, δυνάστης Κανδάκης τῆς Βασιλίσσης Αἰθιόπων, A man of Ethiopia, a eunuch, a man of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians.] This was not Ethiopia in Arabia, where the queen of Sheba dwelt, but Ethiopia in Africa, under Egypt; where Candace had long been the name of their queens. So Pliny,† speaking of Meroe, saith, There reigns Candace, quod nomen multis jam annis ad reginas transiit, "which hath for many years been the name of their queens" (see Bochart. Geogr. S. lib. iv. cap. 26, §. 4).

Moreover, that this eunuch was a proselyte of justice, or one who had embraced the Jewish faith, to which he was converted by those Jews, which from Alexandria spread themselves into Ethiopia, Grotius concludes; not only because he came so long a journey to worship at Jerusalem, and there to celebrate the feast of pentecost, but because Cornelius was the first-fruits of the gentiles; and perhaps the fame that he had heard in Jerusalem of the sufferings and resurrection of Christ, might induce him to read this prophet.

[13] Ver. 31. How can I, except some man should guide me?] Here Grotius notes, that "the eunuch did not think the scripture was every where so perspicuous, or contained a sense so obvious to all, as do now our mechanics and women, who would do better if they thought they needed a guide:" but sure it will not follow, that because the eunuch wanted a guide in an obscure prophecy, therefore we must want one to obtain the knowledge of the plain principles and precepts of Christianity; nor surely could he be ignorant, that when we assert the clearness and perspicuity of scripture, in all things necessary to be believed or done, we do this not in opposition to the assistance of reason, or in exclusion to the instruction and help of others, but in opposition to the necessity of a living judge and infallible interpreter, supposed necessary to the knowledge of that will of God, by which alone we can be saved. Moreover, we do not say, that holy scripture is absolutely and in all things perspicuous, for we willingly acknowledge with Origen,* Chrysostom,† Theodoret,‡ St. Austin,§ Gregory, and almost all the fathers, that there is in scripture a mixture of obscure and plain texts, some things which are δυσνόητα, "hard to be understood," and some things which are easy to be apprehended by very mean capacities; but our assertion is that of St. Chrysostom,‖ that πάντα τὰ ἀναγκαῖα δῆλα, "all things necessary to be believed or done are there delivered with sufficient clearness;" or so that all, who are concerned to know and do them that they may be saved, may hence learn them; and that of St. Austin,¶ that quisque ibi fidem teneat, sine quâ piè rectèque non vivitur, "every one may there obtain that faith, without which we cannot piously and rightly live." And the reason hereof, saith Mr. Chillingworth, is convincing and demonstrative, because nothing is necessary to be believed, but what is plainly revealed: for to say, that when a place of scripture, by reason of ambiguous terms, lies indifferent between divers senses, whereof one is true, the other is false, that God obliges men, under pain of damnation, not

---

* Lib. vi. cap. 29. † Lib. vi. cap. 29, ad finem.

* Philocal. cap. 2, 12.
† Hom. 36 in 1 ad Cor. tom iii. p. 488.
‡ In cap. ix. Dan. ep. iii. § Ep. ad Leand. cap. 4.
‖ Hom. 3 in 2 ad Thessal. ¶ Ep. iii. p. 8.
 Chil. ch. 2, sect. 104.

quainted), except some man should guide (direct, or instruct) me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

32 The place (or section) of the scripture which he read was this, [14] He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before the shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33 [15] In his (state of) humiliation his judgment was taken away (and no right done him): and who shall declare (the wickedness of) his generation? for his life is (was) taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, [16] I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

---

to mistake through error and human frailty, is to make God a tyrant, and to say that he requires us certainly to attain that end, for the attaining whereof we have no certain means. Moreover, the apostles did not write only for the learned, but for all men; and therefore, unless we will imagine the Holy Ghost and them to have been wilfully wanting to their own desire and purpose, we must conceive that they intended to speak plain, even to the capacity of the simplest, at least touching all things necessary to be published by them and believed by us.

Secondly, We do not say that all things necessary to be believed or done are conspicuously mentioned in all places of the holy scripture, which respect those things; but then we say, with Irenæus,* and the generality of the fathers, that those things which are ambiguously spoken in some places, are to be expounded by those things which apertè, et sine ambiguo posita sunt in scripturis, "are plainly, and without ambiguity, contained in the scriptures;" or if they cannot be this way expounded, the sense of them cannot be needful to be known:† for if God's will had been we should have understood him more certainly in such places, he would have spoken more plainly.

[14] Ver. 32. He was led as a sheep to the slaughter.] These words are taken from Isa. liii. 8, where that the prophet speaks of Christ no Christian can reasonably doubt, there being scarce a verse in this whole chapter which is not by the Holy Ghost in the New Testament applied to Christ; the first verse, John xii. 38; the third, Mark ix. 12; the fourth, Matt. viii. 17; the fifth, Mark xv. 28. And though the latter Jews will not allow of this interpretation, yet some of them not only do own that their "ancient rabbins did with one mouth confess these words were spoken of Messiah the king,"‡ but also spake thus of him, "The holy blessed God began to covenant with the Messiah when he created him, and said to him, The sins of those who are laid up in secret with thee, will make thee to come under an iron yoke, and make thee like to this young heifer, whose eyes are dim, and fill thy spirit with anguish; and because of their iniquities thy tongue shall cleave to the roof of thy mouth: wilt thou then undergo this condition for them? The Messiah said,§ I undertake it with the joy and exultation of my heart on this condition, that not one of Israel may perish, and that not only they may be saved who live in my days, but also they who are dead from the days of the first man to this very day. And again, when God created the world, he held forth his hand under the throne of glory,‖ and created the soul of the Messiah, and his company, and said to him, Wilt thou heal and redeem my sons after six thousand years? He answered him, Yes. God said to him, If so, wilt thou bear chastisements to expiate their iniquities, according to what is written, Isa. liii. 4, 'Surely he bore our griefs?' he answered, I will endure them with joy." Whence three things are observable:

First, That what seems so strange and precarious to Crellius, viz. that God should make a covenant with the Messiah concerning his sufferings for the sins of his people, seems to be only that with which the Jews were well acquainted, and which seems also to be insinuated here by the prophet, saying, "If he shall make his soul an offering for sin, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; he shall see the travail of his soul, and be satisfied:" and in those words of the psalmist, "Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened: burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required. Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O God: yea, thy law is within my heart" (Ps. xl. 6—8, Heb. v. 6—8).

Secondly, That their Mesiah was to suffer for their sakes, to make atonement for their sins. And,

Thirdly, That he was to be the salvation, not only of those who were to live in and after his time, but of all men from the beginning. And though Grotius, in his notes upon this chapter, endeavours to interpret the words concerning the prophet Jeremy, yet in his excellent book of the truth of Christian religion, having cited this whole chapter, he inquires,* Quis potest nominari aut regum aut prophetarum in quem hæc congruunt? Nemo sanè.

[15] Ver. 33. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away.] Here Mr. Clerc gives a good sense of these words, viz. In his humiliation was his judgment; i. e. he appeared so mean to Pilate and the Jews, that they passed judgment against him, and he was taken away by them as an inconsiderable person, fit to be sacrificed to prevent seditions, or the coming of the Romans. The Hebrew saith, "From force and from judgment he was taken away;" i. e. it proceeded from the judgment of Pilate, and from the force, the continual clamours the Jews laid upon him to pass that judgment, that he was taken away, and who shall declare the wickedness of that generation who dealt thus with their Messiah? which therefore in the gospels is styled a viperous, Luke iii. 7, an adulterous, Matt. xii. 31. 39, a wicked, ver. 45, an untoward generation, Acts ii. 40, and was so to be, say the Jews, in the days of the Messiah (see note on Phil. iii. 2, and Dr. Lightfoot here).

Ver. 37. Εἰ πιστεύεις ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας, ἔξεστιν.] This clause by Dr. Mills is taken pro commate παραβεβλημένῳ, à primis Christianismi sæculis injecto, ut et alia in libro Actorum Apostolicorum haud pauca, "for a suppositious clause put into the text from the first ages of the church, as many other clauses are in the Acts of the Apostles:" and yet this clause is found in the Vulgar and Arabic versions, in Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 12, lib. iv. cap. 40, in Tertullian, de Baptismo, cap. 18, in Cyprian, ad Quirinum, lib. iii. §. 33, in Jerome, tom. iv. fol. 46, lit. 1, in Austin, de Fide et Operibus, cap. 9, 12, and in Œcumenius in locum: and even the doctor, Prolog. p. 40, col. 2, owns it in contradiction to his former self; and hence we may judge of his other supposed additions, so confidently and so frequently mentioned, in this and in the other sacred books; which, were there any truth in what he says, as blessed be God there seldom is, would render the whole scriptures of the New Testament dubious and uncertain (see Examen Millii, in ix. 5, x. 6. 21, xi. 6. 12, xv. 20. 29, xvi. 17, xviii. 10. 17. 21. 27, xx. 24, xxi. 3. 8. 13. 22, xxii. 20, 21. 29, xxiii. 9. 30. 35, xxiv. 16. 18, xxv. 16, xxvi. 7, xxvii. 28, xxviii. 1. 16. 29).

[16] Πιστεύω τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶναι τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, &c.] Four things are hence observable: (1.) That baptism was here performed by a κατάβασις, or descent of the baptized person in the water. (2.) That upon this faith, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, and that he died for our sins, which was the thing which Philip preached to the eunuch, adult persons, who before owned one God, and the spirit of prophecy, as the eunuch did, were received to that baptism, in which they were

---

* Lib. ii. cap. 46. 47. † Chil. ch. 2, sect. 84.
‡ Abarbanel ad Es. liii. 13, qu. 1. R. Mosis Ashee, ibid.
§ Vide Cartw. Mellif. lib. i. Crit. S. tom. ix. p. 2974.
‖ Hulsius ex Pesikta, lib. i. 1, de Judæorum Messiâ, par. ii. p 309. Cartw. ibid. p. 2975.

* Lib. v. p. 283.

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he (Philip) baptized him.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, [17] the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through (it) he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea (or, the tower of Straton, as it was named before it was rebuilt by Herod).

---

taught, and by which they were obliged to observe all things that Jesus had commanded: for though the belief, that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, was the great article propounded, and first preached to every convert; yet the end of baptism being the remission of sins, and the effect of it justification, or the absolution of the baptized person from his past sins, and this justification and remission of sins being declared to be obtained only through faith in his blood, it is certain that believing in the Lord Jesus must include faith in his meritorious death and passion, or, as the scripture saith, "faith in his blood." Hence the apostle reckons this article, ἐν πρώτοις, "among the first" he preached to the Corinthians, "that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures," 1 Cor. xv. 3, and tells them, that he preached to them "Christ crucified," 1 Cor. i. 23, as the means of their justification and salvation (see the preface to the General Epistle of St. John). (3.) Observe that to the Jews and proselytes, who already owned the true God, and believed his prophets were inspired by the Holy Ghost, baptism was administered in the name of Jesus Christ (Acts ii. 38, viii. 16, x. 48), or in the name of the Lord; but when the apostles were sent εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, "to the gentiles," who believed not these things, they are commanded to "baptize them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," Matt. xxviii. 20. Observe, (4.) that in some copies we read thus, Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπεσεν ἐπὶ τὸν εὐνοῦχον, καὶ ἄγγελος Κυρίου, "The Holy Ghost fell upon the eunuch, and the angel of the Lord caught away Philip:" so the Alexandrian and other manuscripts, and so St. Jerome cites it, Dial. contra Lucif. f. 50, l, and, according to this reading, the eunuch was sufficiently authorized to preach to and convert the Ethiopians, as it is said he did (see Iren. lib. iii. cap. 12, lib. iv. cap. 40, Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 1, Hieron. in Isa. liii.).

[17] Ver. 39. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip.] He did it, saith Œcumenius, because the eunuch had requested him to go with him into Ethiopia; whereas God had designed him to preach the gospel in other places of the world, and so, by removing him thus from the eunuch, prevented his compliance with him in that request.

Ἐπορεύετο γάρ, Pergebat autem.] As the Hebrew ו, so the Gr. γὰρ often signifies but: so Luke xii. 58, ὡς γὰρ ὑπάγεις, "But as thou goest with thine adversary:" so Phavorinus, ἀντὶ τοῦ, δέ, κεῖται, it is put for but.

CHAPTER IX.

1 And Saul, yet [1] breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest (and to all the elders of the Sanhedrin, Acts xxii. 5),

2 And desired of him (and them, ibid.) [2] letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem (to be judged and punished by them; ibid.).

3 And as he journeyed (in pursuit of his commission), he came near Damascus: and suddenly (about midday, Acts xxii. 6) there shined round about him (and those that were with him, Acts xxvi. 13) a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun, ibid.):

4 And he (and all that were with him, Acts xxvi. 14) fell to the earth, and (he) heard a (-n articulate) voice saying unto him (in the Hebrew tongue, ibid.), Saul, [3] Saul, why persecutest thou me?

5 And he said (in answer to it, Acts xxii. 8), Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is (or will be) [4] hard for thee to kick against the pricks (thus to set thyself to fight against God).

6 And he trembling and (being) astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do (to avoid thy farther displeasure)? And the Lord said unto him, Arise (stand upon thy feet), and go into the city (of Damascus), and (there) it shall be told thee what thou must do (or, of all things which thou art appointed to do, Acts xxii. 10, for for this cause have I appeared to thee, Acts xxvi. 17, 18).

7 And the men which journeyed with him stood

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. And Saul ἐμπνέων ἀπειλῆς καὶ φόνου, breathing out threatenings and slaughter.] It appears hence, that the power of capital punishments was not so taken from the Jewish Sanhedrin, held at Jerusalem, but that they might inflict this punishment upon those of their own nation, either by their own power, or by the consent of the Roman governors, in cases punishable with death by their laws and customs. For Saul confesses that he "persecuted this way unto the death," by virtue of this power received from the Sanhedrin, binding and delivering up to prison men and women, Acts xxii. 4 (see the note on John xviii. 31).

[2] Ver. 2. Letters to Damascus to the synagogues.] From this, and from the twentieth verse, where Paul is said to preach Christ at Damascus in the synagogues of the Jews, it appears that there were more synagogues of the Jews than one in that city; and that it was so also in other cities, see Vitringa de Synag. Vit. lib. i. par. i. cap. 14, p. 255, &c.

[3] Ver. 4. Saul, why persecutest thou me?] The persecutions of Christ's members are represented as the persecutions of Christ himself, by reason of their union to him by the Spirit, which renders them his body, and of that sympathy he hath with them under all their sufferings, which makes him συμπαθῆσαι, "to suffer with them" (Heb. iv. 15, Isa. lxiii. 9).

[4] Ver. 5. It is hard for thee πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν, to kick against the pricks.] This is a proverbial expression, signifying the damage and hurt they are likely to receive who resist and fight against those who are superior to them, and especially against God. So Euripides in Bacch. v. 794.

Θύσιμ' ἂν αὐτῷ μᾶλλον, ἢ θυμούμενος
Πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζοιμι, θνητὸς ὢν, θεῷ.

"I will rather offer sacrifice to him, than, being a mortal man, be angry with God, and kick against the goads."

And Pindar* saith, we must not contend against God, but bear the yoke he puts upon our neck mildly, "and not kick against the goads," ποτὶ κέντρον δέ τοι λακτίζεμεν, that is, saith the scholiast, not μάχεσθαί τῇ τυχῇ ἄνθρωπον ὄντα, "to fight against God, being only men." The great Bochart† will not have this proverb taken from Æschylus, Euripides, Pindar, or Plautus, but from the scriptures, it being used, saith he, by Moses, saying, "Jeshurun waxed fat, et recalcitravit, and kicked against the law," Deut. xxxii. 15, and by God himself, inquiring, "Why kick ye against my sacrifices?" 1 Sam. ii. 29 (see Examen Millii).

[5] Ver. 7. Ἀκούοντες μὲν τῆς φωνῆς, Hearing a voice.] To reconcile this with xxii. 9, where it is said, that the men that speechless (through fear, Acts xxii. 9),[5] hearing a voice, but seeing no man (nor knowing what was said to him).

---

* Pyth. Od. 2.

† Hieroz. lib. ii. cap. 39, p. 587.

8 And Saul arose from the earth (and they that were with him); and when (the lids of) his eyes were opened, he saw no man (his eyes being dazzled with the glory of that light, Acts xxii. 11): but they (who were with him) led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10 ¶ And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias (a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews that dwelt there, Acts xxii. 12); and to him said the Lord[6] in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind[7] all that call on thy name (i. e. all thy disciples).

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way (upon this my message): for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear were with him, τὴν φωνὴν οὐκ ἤκουσαν, "heard not the voice of him that spake to, or with, him;" Dr. Hammond notes, that the word φωνὴ signifies thunder, and so reconciles these places, by saying, "They that were with me heard the voice of the thunder, but heard not the voice of him that spake unto me." That this importance of the word φωνὴ is frequent in the Old Testament, cannot be doubted; thus Exod. ix. 23, "The Lord sent thunder and hail," φωνὰς καὶ χάλαζαν· and, ver. 29, "I will stretch forth my hand, and the thunder shall cease," καὶ αἱ φωναὶ παύσωνται· and ver. 33, "He stretched out his hand," καὶ αἱ φωναὶ ἐπαύσαντο· and ver. 34, "When Pharaoh saw, ὅτι πέπαυται ἡ χάλαζα, καὶ αἱ φωναὶ, that the hail and the thunder were ceased, he hardened his heart:" so, Exod. xix. 16, "It came to pass on the third day, that there were thunderings and lightnings, φωναὶ καὶ ἀστραπαί· xx. 18, "All the people saw the thunderings and lightnings," τὴν φωνὴν, καὶ τὰς λαμπάδας· so, Ps. xviii. 13, "The Lord thundered out of heaven, and the Highest gave his voice;" xxix. 3, "The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, and the God of glory thundereth:" so, Ps. xix. 1. 3, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament (or clouds of heaven) showeth his handywork: there is no speech nor language where their voice (i. e. their thunder) is not heard." If it be said, we find no mention of any thunder here, it may be answered, that it was usually an attendant of such glorious coruscations as this was: if you add, that here is mention of a voice speaking in the Hebrew tongue, it may be still replied, that thus it was at Sinai, where God answered Moses τῇ φωνῇ, "out of the thunder," Exod. xix. 19. If, thirdly, you object that it is said, they heard a voice, "but they saw no person," and in thunder this is not expected; I answer, this is true of common thunder, but in such an extraordinary illumination as this was, they reasonably might expect the vision of an angel, or some glorious person; especially if the conjecture of most interpreters be true, that Paul not only heard, but saw the Lord Jesus speaking to him: this will be no objection against the interpretation of this learned man. Or, (2.) this seeming contradiction may be reconciled thus; they heard a voice, but οὐκ ἤκουσαν, "they understood not" the words of him that spake unto me; for οἰκ ἀκούειν frequently in scripture signifies not to understand what we hear: thus God saith of the builders of Babel, "Let us confound their tongues, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσωσιν, that they may not understand one another's speech," Gen. xi. 7, xlii. 23; "The Lord shall bring upon thee a nation, οὗ οὐκ ἀκούσῃ τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ, whose tongue thou shalt not understand," Deut. xxviii. 49; "I will bring upon thee a nation, οὗ οὐκ ἀκούσεις τῆς φωνῆς τῆς γλώσσης αὐτοῦ, whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say," Jer. v. 15; "Speak in the Syrian tongue, ὅτι ἀκούομεν ἡμεῖς, for we understand it," 2 Kings xviii. 26; "I sent thee not unto a people of a strange speech, and hard language, ὧν οὐκ ἀκούσῃ τοὺς λόγους, whose words thou canst not understand," Ezek. iii. 6; "He that speaketh in an unknown tongue, speaketh not to men, but to God, οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἀκούει, for no man understands him," 1 Cor. xiv. 2. (3.) Œcumenius affords a third solution, viz. that they heard the voice of Saul speaking to Christ, οὐ τῆς ἄνωθεν, not the voice of Christ speaking to him.

---

[6] Ver. 10. The Lord said to him in a vision.] That is, saith Grotius, "an angel in the shape of the Lord;" but as we have no example in the New Testament of any such appearance of an angel in the person of Christ, so is it certain that here it was not so, but really was a vision of the Lord Jesus: for Ananias not only calls him "Lord," but calls Christians "his saints," and those "that call upon his name" (ver. 13, 14).

[7] Ver. 14. All that call upon thy name.] There be two periphrases of a Christian, which occur in this chapter and in other places of the Acts; the first (ver. 2), that they are men and women τῆς ὁδοῦ, "of the way." So when St. Paul went into the synagogue at Corinth, they did κακολογεῖν τὴν ὁδὸν, "speak evil of the way" (Acts xix. 9); and at Ephesus, "there was no small disturbance, περὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ, touching the way" (see xxiv. 22). And so some of the ancients seem to have spoken: so, in the history of the persecutions of the Gallican church,* we read of some apostates from the faith, βλασφημοῦντες τὴν ὁδὸν, "who blasphemed the way:" and Epiphanius† introduceth the Melchisedecians, saying that Christ was chosen that he might turn us from idols, καὶ ὑπέδειξεν ἡμῖν τὴν ὁδὸν, "and might show us the way." The second periphrasis was this, that they were such as invoked Jesus Christ, or "called upon his name." Thus Ananias complains of Saul to Christ, saying, "He hath done much evil to thy saints, and is come hither to bind all that call upon thy name;" and the unbelieving Jews say of him, preaching Jesus Christ in their synagogues, "Is not this he who wasted τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, those that called upon that name?" (ver. 21.) Thus Paul writes to saints called, and to all other Christians, under the title of "all that call upon the Lord Jesus Christ in every place," 1 Cor. i. 2, and then in the very next verse, he himself prays that "grace and peace may be derived upon them, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ" (see the notes there); and 2 Tim. ii. 22, bids Christians follow after peace μετὰ τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων τὸν Κύριον, "with those that call upon the Lord with a pure heart," that is, with all believers, it being the same thing to believe in, and to call upon, the name of the Lord Jesus. Hence Peter saith, "He that believeth in him shall not be ashamed; because it is written (Joel ii. 32), Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (see the note there). And hence we learn who that Lord is, whom Ananias bids Paul invoke, when he saith, xxii. 16, "Arise, and be baptized, ἐπικαλεσάμενος, calling upon the name of the Lord," even the Lord Jesus, who appeared to him, ix. 17 (see the note on xxii. 16), and what is meant by that phrase, viz. Profess thy faith, by being baptized in, and by calling on, his name; this was a thing so continually practised by the first Christians, that Pliny mentions it in his epistle to Trajan, telling him, that it was the custom of the Christians, carmen Christo quasi Deo canere, "to sing a hymn to Christ as God:" for as Paul, in his thirteen first epistles, prays for grace and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ; and John, in his second epistle (ver. 3), doth the same; so doth Polycarp, the disciple of John, in the proem of his epistle to the church of Philippi, pray that "mercy and peace may be multiplied to them from God omnipotent, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, and from our Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour;" and the church of Smyrna, in her circular epistle to all Christians, prays that "mercy, peace, and love, may be multiplied to them from my name before (i. e. to preach Christ to) the Gentiles, and kings, and (to) the children of Israel:

---

* Euseb. Hist. lib. v. cap. 1, p. 163.

† Hær. Melch. p. 574, sect. 8.

16 For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake. (And yet the prospect of them shall not make him disobedient to the heavenly vision, but as forward to preach as ever he was to persecute the preachers of the gospel.)

17 And (then) Ananias went his way, and entered into the house (where Saul was); and putting his hands on him (i. e. his eyes) said, Brother Saul, [8] the Lord, even (that) Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest (hither), hath sent me (to thee), that thou mightest receive thy sight, and (at thy baptism into his name mayest) be filled with the Holy Ghost (as his other apostles were; I therefore say to thee in his name, Receive thy sight, xxii. 13).

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and (when Ananias had said to him, The God of thy fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldest know his will and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth, &c. Acts xxii. 14—16, he) [9] arose, and was baptized.

19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, (there proving) that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?

22 But [10] Saul increased the more in strength, and (by the evidence of his reasonings) confounded the (unbelieving) Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving (to them from the scriptures) that this (Jesus whom he preached) is (was the) very Christ (promised).

23 ¶ And after that [11] many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him:

24 But their laying await (to do it) was known of Saul. And (for) they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

26 And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he as-

God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ." Ignatius in like manner, in the proem to his epistle to the Magnesians, wishes them health "from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, Θεῷ ἡμῶν, our God:" in that to the church of Smyrna, "Health ἐν ἀμώμῳ Πνεύματι, καὶ Λόγῳ Θεοῦ, in the immaculate Spirit, and the Word of God." And as St. Paul, in his epistles, often prays to Christ both for himself (1 Cor. xii. 8—10, see the note there), and for other Christians (1 Thess. iii. 11, 12, 2 Thess. ii. 16, iii. 16), so did the primitive Christians pray, and entreat others to pray to him. So Ignatius* saith to the church of Rome, λιτανεύσατε τὸν Χριστὸν ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, "Pray to Christ for me, that by the beasts I may be found a sacrifice to God;" and saith to the church of Ephesus,† "If Jesus Christ shall make me worthy by your prayer:" and the church of Smyrna saith,‡ they "could not leave Christ, καὶ εὔξασθαι, orationis precem impedere, and worship or pray to any other."

[8] Ver. 17. The Lord Jesus who appeared to thee, ὁ ὀφθείς σοι, who was seen of thee.] I think it not necessary from these words to affirm that St. Paul here saw the person of Jesus Christ, seeing in three relations of this matter he mentions no such thing, but only that he saw the glorious light in which he did appear, and which was the symbol of his presence; for so in the Old Testament men are often said to have seen the Lord, when they saw only the glory in which he did appear, for they never saw his shape. Thus of the nobles that went up with Moses into the mount, it is said, Exod. xxiv. 10. 12, that "they saw God, the God of Israel," and yet they "saw no manner of similitude," Deut. iv. 12. 15, whence the Chaldee paraphrast in all these places saith, "They saw the glory of God;" but if it were necessary to say St. Paul saw his person, the text seems rather to require us to say, he saw him in the way, than in the heavens.

But yet by comparing these with the words of the same person, "The God of our fathers hath before chosen thee to see that Just One" (xxii. 14), as also from the inquiry of St. Paul, "Am I not an apostle? have not I seen the Lord?" (1 Cor. ix. 1,) and from those words (1 Cor. xv. 8), "Last of all, ὤφθη κἀμοί, he was seen of me also;" it is certain that St. Paul saw the person of Christ, and therefore highly probable that he did it at this time, or at his return to Jerusalem (Acts xxii. 17, 18).

[9] Ver. 18. He arose, and was baptized.] With water and the Holy Ghost; according to Christ's promise made to his apostles, Acts i. 6. 8. And note here, that this Ananias, who at most is only supposed to have been one of the seventy disciples, only laid his hands upon him that he might receive his sight, and that he was replenished with the Holy Ghost by the immediate gift of Christ, he being an "apostle not of man, nor by man" (Gal. i. 1), but by Christ alone.

---

* Sect. 4. † Sect. 20.
‡ Act. Polycarp. apud Usser. p. 27.

[10] Ver. 22. Paul increased in strength.] By the Spirit of wisdom and of prophecy, συμβιβάζων, "proving that he is the Christ." The word here rendered proving, signifies to persuade, teach, confirm, or discourse; hence συμβίβασις is, by Hesychius and Phavorinus, rendered πείσις, ἐιδαγὴ, πίστις, "persuasion, doctrine, confirmation;" συμβιβάζω by Suidas, διδάσκω, "I teach:" so 1 Cor. ii. 16, τίς συμβιβάσει αὐτὸν; "Who shall instruct," or teach, God? so Exod. xviii. 6, συμβιβάζω αὐτοὺς, "I make them known," or teach them the statutes of God; Deut. iv. 9, συμβιβάσης, "Thou shalt teach them thy sons:" so also Lev. x. 11. So God saith to Moses, Exod. iv. 12, συμβιβάζω σε, "I will teach thee what to say;" ver. 15, συμβιβάσω ὑμᾶς, "I will teach" or instruct thee and Aaron what to do; and the angel to Daniel, ix. 12, "I came forth συμβιβάσαι σε, to instruct thee:" so Ps. xxxii. 8, συμβιβῶ σε, "I will instruct thee in the way in which thou shalt go" (see Judg. xiii. 8, Isa. xl. 13). The doctrine he taught and proved to the Jews was, ver. 20, that "Jesus was the Son of God," foretold Ps. ii., here that he was "the Christ;" and when the Jews speak of the Son of God, or the apostles or others speak to the unbelieving Jews of the Son of God, it may reasonably be granted that no more is meant by that phrase than the Messiah, they understanding nothing of the divine original of the Son of God, and being first to be convinced that he was the Messiah; but hence it follows not that this phrase signifies no more when he is styled, ὁ μονογενὴς, "the only-begotten," or ἴδιος υἱὸς, "the proper Son of God," Rom. viii. 32, or when Christ argues from his doing the works of God, that "God was his Father."

[11] Ver. 23. And when many days were fulfilled.] The history of St. Paul's preaching at Damascus, and going after to Jerusalem, is somewhat intricate, and interpreters differ much about it; some thinking that St. Paul preached at Damascus immediately after his conversion, and that the Jews then thought to kill him, and that then also he went thence to Jerusalem; others, that this only happened three years after his conversion, and that then only he went to Jerusalem: I shall therefore endeavour to give a brief account of this matter. And,

First, I grant that St. Paul preached at Damascus immediately after his conversion; this seems plain from the text, which says, "He was baptized, and receiving meat was strengthened, καὶ εὐθέως, and straightway he preached Jesus in the synagogues of Damascus" (ver. 18—20). And, secondly, from the amazement of the Jews, that he should do this who "came hither for this very purpose, to bind them that call upon this name."

Secondly, It seems as evident that this consultation to kill him could not be at his first conversion, but some years after; for he was let down the wall in a basket, and escaped their hands, and then went to Jerusalem, and was brought by Barnabas to the apostles (ver. 26, 27). Now he himself declares, that εὐθέως soon after his conversion, he went not sayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way (to Damascus), and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians (i. e. the Jews that used the Greek tongue): but they (also) went about to slay him.

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cæsarea (Philippi), and sent him forth to Tarsus.

31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judæa and Galilee and Samaria, [12] and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

32 ¶ [13] And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters (of Judea, where disciples were), he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda (a city of Palestine).

33 And there he found a certain man named Æneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and (who) was sick of the palsy.

34 And Peter said unto him, Æneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: (I therefore say to thee, in his name,) arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

35 And all that dwelt at Lydda and (in the plain of) Saron (extending from Cæsarea Palestine to Joppa) saw him, and (by this means) turned to the Lord.

36 ¶ Now there was at Joppa (a Phœnician city, lying upon the Mediterranean) a certain disciple named [14] Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas (a roe): this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed (in preparation for her interment), they laid her in an upper chamber.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him (Gr. whom being come they brought) into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and shewing the coats and garments which Dorcas (had) made, while she was with them.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body, said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her (to them) alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many (upon that account also) believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

---

up to Jerusalem "to those that were apostles before him, but went into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus, and after three years went up to Jerusalem, where he saw Peter and James," Gal. i. 16—19. The series of the history, therefore, seems to lie thus: (1.) St. Paul after his conversion instantly preaches in the synagogues of Damascus, that Jesus was the Son of God (ver. 20). (2.) That going thence into Arabia, betwixt two and three years after, he returns to Damascus (Gal. i. 17); and of this journey Luke, being not with him, gives no account. (3.) That in his return, being increased in wisdom and strength, he continues many days in Damascus, proving that Jesus was the Christ. (4.) That after three years, he, escaping from Damascus, comes to Jerusalem, and is by Barnabas brought to the apostles Peter and James, and continued there fifteen days (Gal. i. 18, 19). (5.) That there Christ appears to him in a vision; commanding him to "depart out of Jerusalem;" and he accordingly goes thence to Cæsarea Philippi in Cœlosyria, and to Tarsus in Cilicia (Acts ix. 30, Gal. i. 21). It being then so long before he came to Jerusalem, Barnabas might well know, either from the brethren of Damascus coming to Jerusalem, or from some journey he had taken thither, the certainty of his conversion to the Christian faith.

[12] Ver. 31. And were edified.] Of the import of the word edification, see note on Rom. xv. 2, it is added, "And walking in the fear of God, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied;" their shining piety above others, and their great joy in the Holy Ghost, attracting others to the faith.

[13] Ver. 32, 33. And it came to pass that Peter, passing διὰ πάντων, through all the forementioned places of Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, he came down also to the saints that dwelt at Lydda, a city in the tribe of Benjamin.] He, being the chief apostle of the circumcision, visits the brethren in those parts that were circumcised: but that he went down to Antioch, and founded the church there, and sat bishop in it five or seven years, as Baronius fancies, is not only besides the text, which mentions nothing of St. Peter's going beyond the places here mentioned, but is plainly inconsistent with his imprisonment at Jerusalem (ch. xii.), and with his abode at Joppa, till he went to Cæsarea (ix. 43, xi. 5). Still more ridiculous are they who say, he went to visit all Christian churches every where; it being plain from the history of the Acts, that he abode at Joppa till he went to Cæsarea, and that from thence he returned to Jerusalem (Acts xi. 2). And there is as much reason to say, that Philip did so, because from Azotus, a city of the Philistines (1 Sam. v. 2), "he preached through all the cities till he came to Cæsarea" (viii. 43). That ever he was at Antioch, till Paul and Barnabas having founded a church there, he came and was sharply rebuked by St. Paul, for his dissimulation against his own knowledge and miraculous conviction, I find no reason to believe.

[14] Ver. 36. Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas.] i. e. "A roe," both in Greek and Hebrew, say the allegorists, from her quick sight into spiritual things, and her high contemplations, these roes feeding on the mountains; as if this name had been given her by way of prophecy. The reason why St. Luke gives this interpretation of her Syriac name seems rather to be this, that she being a Græcizing Jewess, was called by the first name by the Jews, and by the second among the Greeks.

CHAPTER X.

1 THERE was a certain man in Cæsarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

2 (He was) A devout man and [1] one that feared (the true) God with all his house (they being all pro-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

[1] Ver. 2. Καὶ φοβούμενος τὸν Θεόν.] So we read, 2 Chron. v. 6, that king Solomon, "and all the congregation of Israel, were assembled καὶ οἱ φοβούμενοι, and the proselytes;" they being men, saith Solomon, who "know thy name, τοῦ φοβεῖσθαί σε, to fear thee," vi. 32. This was the title given to them sclytes of the gate, one also) which gave much alms to the (indigent) people, and [2] prayed to God alway (i. e. morning and evening daily, and at all the hours of prayer.

3 [3] And) he saw in a vision evidently [4] about the ninth hour of the day (the time of the evening sacrifice, when he was praying, ver. 39) an angel of God coming in to him (in the likeness of a man, ver. 30), and saying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord (thou wouldest say to me)? And he said unto him, [5] Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial (for good to thee) before God.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, [6] whose surname is Peter:

6 He lodgeth (there) with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he (being come) shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do (that thou mayest be saved, xi. 14).

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his houshold servants, and a devout soldier (who was a proselyte, and one) of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them (which the angel had said to him), he sent them to Joppa (for Peter).

9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, [7] Peter went up upon the housetop to pray (towards the temple) about the sixth hour (being an hour of prayer):

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready (Gr. were preparing something for him to eat), he fell into a trance (or ecstasy),

11 And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air (clean and unclean beasts together).

13 And there came a voice to him, (saying,) Rise, Peter; kill, and eat (of them without distinction).

---

who so far embraced the Jewish religion as to worship the God of Israel only, and were styled by them "proselytes of the gate," and "men fearing God." So Bemidvar Rabba on those words, "Blessed is the man ὁ φοβούμενος τὸν Κύριον, that feareth the Lord," Ps. cxii. 1, saith, "These are the proselytes, and therefore they are mentioned next to the men of Israel;" as when St. Paul saith, "Ye men of Israel, καὶ οἱ ἐν ὑμῖν φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν, and ye that fear God," hearken, Acts xiii. 16. 26, where, saith Œcumenius, φοβουμένους τὸν Θεὸν προσηλύτους ἐκάλει, "he calls the proselytes, men that feared God:" and because these men had a court in the temple, where they came to worship the true God, and offer sacrifices to him; hence they were called σεβόμενοι, "the worshippers," as when it is said, "Many of the Jews καὶ τῶν σεβομένων προσηλύτων, and of the worshipping proselytes, followed Paul and Barnabas," Acts xiii. 43, and "there followed them a great multitude, τῶν σεβομένων Ἑλλήνων, of the worshipping Greeks," that is, "the proselytes," saith Œcumenius. And these being also called by them chasidim, are in the New Testament called εὐσεβεῖς καὶ εὐλαβεῖς, "pious and devout men," as here, ver. 1. 7. But notwithstanding all these titles, they counted them unclean as well as other gentiles, saying,* "A sojourning proselyte is as a gentile in all things;" and therefore they of the circumcision contend with Peter for going in to converse with them. Yet it is not unpleasant to observe, that though they held their persons thus unclean, they deemed the alms they gave to the Jews clean, saith Lightfoot; and because Cornelius was free in giving them to the Jews of Samaria, he was "a man of good repute among them all," ver. 22.

[2] And prayed to God always.] i. e. Daily and at all the hours of prayer (see the note on 1 Thess. v. 17). It also well deserves to be observed, that "he feared God with all his house;" this being still the commendation of pious men, that they made all their house religious: so Gen. xviii. 19, "I know Abraham, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord:" and, Josh. xxiv. 15, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord:" and pious Christians made their whole families converts to the Christian faith: so we read of the nobleman at Capernaum, that "he himself believed, and all his house" (John iv. 53); of the jailor, that "he believed in God with all his house," and was baptized, "he, and all his straightway" (Acts xvi. 33, 34); and of Crispus, a chief ruler of the synagogue, that he "believed in the Lord with all his house" (xviii. 8). Hence they who had made their whole family Christians, are saluted by St. Paul thus, To such a one, "and the church in his house" (see note on 1 Cor. xvi. 19). And oh, that this was carefully observed and imitated by all that are called Christians!

[3] Ver. 3. He saw in a vision, φανερῶς, openly.] i. e. Waking, and with his bodily eyes; for there were also visions in a dream (Gen. xx. 3, xxviii. 12, Job iv. 13): so St. Paul saw, ἐν ἐκστάσει ὅραμα, "a vision in an ecstasy" (xi. 5), and when he was blind, "he saw in a vision Ananias" (ix. 12).

[4] About the ninth hour.] The time of the evening sacrifice; a very fit time to tell him, that his prayers and alms, which were spiritual sacrifices, were come up before God as an evening sacrifice: for at the same time, the angel was sent to tell Daniel that his prayer was heard (Dan. ix. 21).

[5] Ver. 4. Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial, &c.] The word μνημόσυνον, rendered "a memorial," is used both of the incense offered up with the sacrifice (Lev. ii. 2. 9), and of a part or handful of the mincha offered up to God (Lev. v. 12, Numb. v. 15. 18. 26); in which two places no incense was to be admitted, it being an offering for sin, or a memorial for iniquity; so that there, not the incense or perfume, but of the mincha or oblation put upon the altar, is called ascharah, "a memorial." Now seeing alms are the Christian sacrifices, and are called so by the apostle, Phil. iv. 18, and seeing our prayers are said to ascend as incense, and are so styled, Rev. v. 8, viii. 3, seeing they are our "sacrifice of praise," Heb. xiii. 15, and alms our "odour or sweet savour," Phil. iv. 18, the allusion here may very fitly relate to both.

[6] Ver. 5. Whose surname is Peter.] And so throughout this story: for Christ having said to him, "Thou art Peter," i. e. a rock, "and upon this rock will I build my church," i. e. lay the foundation of a church among the Jews, as he did by Peter (Acts ii. 47), and among the gentiles, as he doth here: therefore Cornelius is bid to send, not to Jerusalem to James or John, nor to Damascus for Paul, the apostle of the gentiles, but to Joppa for Simon, "whose surname is Peter," that from him he might hear those words "by which he and his house should be saved" (xi. 14).

[7] Ver. 9. Peter went up unto the housetop to pray at the sixth hour.] This being about noon, was, by the Jews, styled "the time of the mincha gedola," one of the three daily hours of prayer, which devout men used. So Daniel prayed "three times a day," vi. 10, "morning, evening, and at the mincha:" and David saith, Ps. lv. 17, "evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray to thee;" "evening, and morning, and at mincha, three times of prayer:" so R. Saadias and R. Solomon. Note also, that though Peter had been so long a convert to Christianity, he keeps close to the customs of the Jews, not only as to their hours of prayer, but as to their manner of praying towards the temple, when they were out of Judea or Jerusalem, and so could not go up to the temple at the hour of prayer; for he goes up to the top or roof of the house, to pray towards Jerusalem, as Daniel did, vi. 10: Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, praying so oft, that God would hear the prayers the men of Israel should make towards that place (1 Kings viii. 29, 30. 35. 38. 44. 48). And when it is said of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 2, Isa. xxxviii. 3, that he turned his face towards the wall, the Targum saith, this was the wall of the house of the sanctuary; and therefore, in all likelihood, St. Peter, being at Joppa, went up to the roof of the house to pray, for the same reason.

* Jerus. Jebamoth. f. 8, col. 4.

14 But Peter said, (I can) not (do) so, Lord; for (out of regard to the law) I have never eaten any thing that is (in it styled) common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time (saying), What (that) God (who instituted the law of Moses, by this declaration of his will) [8] hath cleansed, that call not thou (any longer) common.

16 (And) [9]This was done thrice (for the certainty of the thing): and (then) the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17 Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

19 ¶ While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20 Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing (of the unlawfulness of conversing with them): for I have sent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come (to me)?

22 And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and (is) of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee (to come) into his house, and to hear words of thee.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa (six in number, being Jews) accompanied him (the providence of God so ordering it, that they might be witnesses of what was said and done).

24 And the morrow after they entered in Cæsarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends (Gr. and Cornelius calling together his kinsmen and near friends, to hear what Peter should say to them concerning the way of salvation, xi. 14, was expecting them).

25 And as Peter was coming in, [10] Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man (and so cannot receive such worship).

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together (to hear his words).

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that (according to the traditions of the Jews) it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation (as being by them accounted

---

[8] Ver. 15. What God hath cleansed, call not thou common, μὴ σὺ κοίνου, do not thou pollute.] For explication of all that in this chapter is mentioned, with relation to this matter, let it be noted:

First, That it was the priest's office in case of leprosy, and other matters of like nature, to pronounce the thing or person under examination clean or unclean, and though this was done only by a declarative sentence, yet it is expressed effectively; for in the Hebrew the words are וטהרו וטמאו, and in the Greek, καὶ καθαριεῖ αὐτὸν, καὶ μιανεῖ αὐτὸν, "the priest shall cleanse, the priest shall pollute him:" so Lev. xiii. 6. 8. 11. 13. 17. 20, and so on. Accordingly, the voice here says, "What God hath cleansed (i. e. by this vision and command declared to be clean) that do not thou pollute (i. e. pronounce not thou unclean)." Note,

Secondly, That the two great things which made the partition wall betwixt Jew and gentile, were the rite of circumcision, and the distinction between clean and unclean meats; of these two, circumcision was common to them from the beginning with the Ishmaelites, and afterward with many other nations; but the abstaining from all meats, forbidden by the law of Moses as unclean, was peculiar to the Jews, and distinguished them from all the nations of the world; and that this was the true scope of these laws, even to separate them from all other nations, by a diet peculiar to themselves, which might keep them from familiar converse with the gentiles, and so from learning their idolatrous customs, God himself declareth, saying, Lev. xx. 23—25, "I am the Lord your God which have separated you from other people; ye shall therefore put a difference between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean; and you shall not make yourselves abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any manner of creeping thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean. And ye shall be holy to me, for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine." Hence it must follow, that though the Egyptians, the Syrians, and other nations, might abstain from some of these beasts as unclean, yet not any of them observed the distinction of meats prescribed by Moses, for then could God not, by it, have separated them from all other nations to himself. And suitable to this is the account which Eleazar the high priest gives of these laws in Aristeas,* that God, πάντοθεν ἡμᾶς περιέφραξεν ἀγνείαις, καὶ διὰ βρωτῶν καὶ ποτῶν, ὅπως ἐν μηδενὶ συναλισγουμένοι μηδ' ὁμιλοῦντες φαύλοις διὰ τροφὰς λαμβάνωμεν, "had hedged them in with these purifications, as to meats and drinks, that, not eating or conversing with evil men, they might not be defiled." Or as Eusebius* hath it from the same author, ὅπως μηδενὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐθνῶν ἐπιμισγώμεθα κατὰ μηδέν, "that they might in nothing be mixed with other nations, but be kept pure both as to soul and body."

And, Lastly, Being thus separated by this precept from all familiar converse with other nations, hence they came to look on them who did not use this abstinence as unclean; because they freely did eat of those things which the law made unclean to them; and to say that the unclean beasts did signify the people of the world (so R. Menahem on Lev. xi.). Now hence we learn,

First, Why in this vision there is a representation of all manner of beasts, fowls, and creeping things; viz. because all these are mentioned Lev. xx. 24, as things, by abstaining from some of which as unclean, God had separated them from other nations to himself.

Secondly, We see the reason why the men of the circumcision object to Peter these two things, viz. that he "went in to the uncircumcised, and did eat with them" (xi. 3); to wit, because it was chiefly by these two things they were separated from other nations.

Thirdly, We learn why Peter saith (ver. 28) that God had by this vision shown that he should "call no man common or unclean," viz. because he, by this declaration and command, had taken away that distinction which hindered their converse with other nations: and,

Fourthly, We see how necessary and expedient it was, that this liberty of eating meats indifferently should be so fully declared from heaven to the Jews; because it being by God declared a law given for this very purpose, that they might be severed to himself from other nations, they durst not do any thing, without a revelation, which seemed to violate it; and without breaking through the traditions they had received about it, they could not have executed their commission to teach, or "make disciples in all nations." Hence Peter is bid to go to them, μηδὲν διακρινόμενος, "putting no difference" betwixt them and the Jews, as that phrase often signifies (see Acts xv. 9, and the note on Rom. xiv. 23).

[9] Ver. 16. This was done thrice.] As Pharaoh's dream was doubled, for the certainty of the thing, Gen. xli. 32.

[10] Ver. 25, 26. Cornelius fell down at his feet and worshipped him. But Peter said, Stand up; I myself also am a man.] If the worship intended and given to him by Cornelius was religious worship, Peter declares such worship was not to be given to a mere man; if it was only civil worship,

---

* Apud Joseph. p. 17.

* Præp. Evang. lib. viii. cap. 9, p. 371.

unclean); but God hath shewed me (by a vision) that I should not (from henceforth) call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

30 And Cornelius said, [11] Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, (an angel in the shape of) a man stood before me in bright clothing,

31 And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee (ver. 6).

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast done well that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God (to say to us).

34 ¶ Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth [12] I perceive that God is no respecter of persons (i. e. he accepts no man merely because he is of such a nation, or descended from such ancestors):

35 But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

36 (Ye know) [13] The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace (and reconciliation to himself) by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) (God having exalted him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins, v. 21:)

37 That word, I say ye know, which was published throughout all Judæa, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth (i. e. Jesus of Nazareth ye know, and how God anointed him) with the Holy Ghost and with power: who (thereupon) went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

39 And ye are witnesses of the things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom (yet) they (of the Jews) slew and hanged on a tree:

40 (We also testify, that) Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly;

41 Not to all the people, but unto (us his) witnesses chosen before of God (to testify this to the world), even to us (I say), [14] who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

---

he, who thought it not fit to receive that, would much less have received religious worship.

[11] Ver. 30. Ἀπὸ τετάρτης ἡμέρας μέχρι ταύτης τῆς ὥρας ἤμην νηστεύων, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour.] The Greek, say some critics, is to be rendered thus, "From the fourth day to this hour I was, or have been, fasting;" so that Cornelius, according to this import of them, must have been fasting four days together; but this cannot be the true sense of the words of Cornelius; for "this hour" is the hour of his speaking to St. Peter, and the same day he saw his vision, which yet he saw not when St. Peter was come to him, but four days before; the meaning therefore is, that "four days since he was fasting till the same hour of the day in which he spake thus to St. Peter: ἀφ' ἡμέρων ἀρχαίων, is "a long time ago," Acts xv. 7, ἀπὸ πέρυσι, "a year ago," 2 Cor. viii. 10, ix. 2, and therefore Budæus, having said that ἀπὸ is often put for μετὰ, saith, these words are to be rendered, Quarto abhinc die; and Grotius renders them thus, Die ante hoc tempus quartâ jejunaveram; both justifying our translation.

[12] Ver. 34. I perceive God is no respecter of persons, &c.] I shall show, in the note on James ii. 1, that respect of persons in matters judicial is shown, when men judge others not according to the merits of the cause, but according to outward respects, which relate nothing to it, as the greatness, richness, meanness, and poverty of the person, relation, friendship, or affection; and so in spirituals, to accept persons is to respect them and their services, not on the account of any thing that makes them better, or more fit to be regarded than others, or which is more acceptable in the sight of God, but on the account of the nation to which they belong, or the ancestors from which they were descended. Thus, because God had chosen the Jews to be his people, by reason of the piety of their forefathers, and to perform his promise made to them, the Jews imagined that God would accept them and their services on that account, that they were of the Jewish nation, and of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, and that he would not accept the persons or regard the services of the gentiles, for want of these things; but these false conceptions Paul, in his epistle to the Romans, and Peter, here refute: showing (1.) that men, not only of the Jewish, but of any other nation, may be acceptable to God, there being "one God, who is rich (in goodness) to all that call upon him," whether Jew or gentile (Rom. x. 12), he being "the God not of Jews only, but also of the gentiles," and so as ready to justify them through faith, as to justify the Jews (Rom. iii. 29, 30). (2.) That God accepts such men, not on the account of their descent or circumcision, but because they "fear God and work righteousness:" thus Cornelius, being one that feared God, and gave much alms (ver. 2, 3), his "prayers and alms came before God for a memorial" for good to him; whence it is evident, that some of other nations, owning the true God, not only might, but actually did, "fear God and work righteousness," and otherwise they very ill deserved the title given to the proselytes of the gate (see the note on ver. 2); nor could Peter perceive that God was no respecter of persons on the account of a thing which never did nor could happen; or Paul say, "Glory, honour, and peace, shall be to every one that doeth good, to the Jew first, and also to the gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. ii. 10, 11). How far such persons may be accepted with God, and on what account, see my conjecture on Rom. ii. 14.

[13] Ver. 36. The word which God sent to the children of Israel, &c.] The apostle's discourse from this to the forty-third verse seems to be to this effect, viz. (1.) That there was an offer made by the gospel of peace, i. e. of reconciliation and salvation by Jesus Christ, the author of that gospel, ver. 36, 37. (2.) That he was able to make good that promise, as being Lord of all things. (3.) That he who preached this doctrine was a true prophet, he being anointed with the Holy Ghost for that office, and confirming what he said by powerful miracles, ver. 38. (4.) That this doctrine, and these miracles, could not be reasonably questioned, they who were with him from the beginning being witnesses of what he said and did, ver. 39. And (5.) whereas it might be objected, that he was dead, and so could not be able to confer these blessings on them who believed in him, it is added, ver. 40, that him God raised up the third day according to his own prediction, and that of this resurrection they were all eye-witnesses, sufficiently instructed to give in their testimony concerning it by his frequent appearances to, and familiar converse with, them, ver. 41. (6.) That after his resurrection they had received a commission from God to testify that he was "appointed to be Judge of the quick and dead," and so to give that peace and salvation he had promised in his gospel to his faithful servants, ver. 42. And, lastly, that to all this all the prophets had given in their suffrages, by declaring that "through his name all that believed in him should receive remission of sins," ver. 43. Note also, that it is not to be wondered that Peter should say to Cornelius and his kinsmen, who were already proselytes of the gate, and lived at Cæsarea, the seat of the governor of Judea, where the Jews dwelt, and whither they continually resorted, and where Philip had already preached the gospel (Acts viii. 40), "Ye know this word," he meaning not that they were persuaded of the truth of it, but only that they had heard the fame, and were acquainted with the report.

[14] Ver. 41. Who did eat and drink with him.] That in their presence he did eat part of a fish and of a honeycomb

42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was (is) ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.

43 To him give all the prophets witness, that through (faith in) his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

44 ¶ While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word (as on the apostles at the beginning, xi. 15).

45 And they of the circumcision which believed (conceiving God had no such regard to the gentiles) were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 [15] Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized (i. e. Can he gainsay the baptizing of them with water), which have received the (baptism of the) Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he [16] commanded them to be baptized [17] in the name of the Lord (Jesus). Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

---

they had then with them, we read expressly, Luke xxiv. 41—43, that they did eat of the bread and fish he had provided for them, may be collected from his invitation to them to "come and dine," John xxi. 12, which doubtless they refused not; and since we may reasonably suppose they did not dine without drinking, we must have reason to believe "they did eat and drink with him."

[15] Ver. 47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized?] These words contain a plain and a convincing demonstration of the falsehood of the quakers' doctrine, that water-baptism is unnecessary to them who have received the inward baptism of the Spirit; since the apostle here not only declares that water-baptism ought therefore to be administered to those persons, because they had already been baptized with the Holy Ghost, but also commands them to be baptized upon that account.

[16] Ver. 48. And he commanded them to be baptized.] Whom did he command to do this? the gentiles? It seemeth at first sight absurd, that they who were not yet baptized should baptize others: or was it the Jews that came then with him? they seem only to be lay-brethren, who only were permitted to baptize in case of necessity; it seemeth therefore reasonable to say, that he commanded water to be brought for their baptism, and then performed himself the office, or left it to be done by gifted persons.

[17] In the name of the Lord Jesus.] Here the note of Grotius is this, that in the name of Christ, the anointed, is understood he that anointed him, and the Spirit by whom he was anointed; but here the Spirit had fallen upon them already, and so they who thus felt his influence enabling them to speak with tongues must believe in him already, and being proselytes of the gate, they believed already in God the Father, and came to hear what he should say to them; it was therefore only necessary that, by receiving Christian baptism, they should profess their faith in the Lord Jesus.

CHAPTER XI.

1 [1] And (δὲ, then) the apostles and brethren that were in Judæa heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, [2] they that were of the circumcision (being still zealous for the law of Moses, and the traditions of the elders) contended with him,

3 Saying, Thou (violating the tradition of our fathers) wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them (Gr. ἀρξάμενος ἐξετίθετο αὐτοῖς καθεξῆς, beginning, expounded to them the matter orderly), saying,

5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, (viz.) A certain vessel descend (Gr. descending), as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me:

6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered (Gr. εἰς ἣν ἀτενίσας κατενόουν, attending to which, I observed), and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat (freely of them, to satisfy thy hunger, x. 10).

8 But I said, (I can) not (do) so, Lord: for (being a strict observer of the law of Moses) nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9 But the voice (of the Lord) answered me again (Gr. the second time) from heaven, (saying,) What (that) God (who instituted the law of Moses, by this declaration of his will) hath cleansed, that call not thou (any longer) common.

10 And this was done three times (for the certainty of the thing): and (then) all (the things I had seen) were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And, behold, immediately (after this vision) there were three men already come unto the house where I was, (they being) sent from Cæsarea unto me.

12 And the spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting (to converse with them though they were gentiles, or putting no difference betwixt them and Jews, as betwixt persons clean and unclean). Moreover these six brethren (here present, as witnesses of the truth of what I say,) accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house (who sent for me):

13 And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood (by him), and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and (by them) call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

[1] Ver. 1. When the apostles and brethren had heard that the gentiles had received the word of God.] This they then only heard, because it was then only done, they who before preached the word doing it only to the Jews, ver. 19.

[2] Ver. 2. Διεκρίνοντο πρὸς αὐτὸν οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, They of the circumcision contended with him.] I see no reason here to except any of the believing Jews (unless perhaps the apostles) from this contention, they being "all zealous of the law" and of their customs, and not enduring to hear that any Jew should act contrary to them (Acts xxi. 20, 21); and Peter himself being of that mind till he had received this vision, and laying it down as a known rule (Acts x. 28), that "it was unlawful for a Jew to converse with an alien," and even after this vision, withdrawing himself from the believing gentiles for fear of the Jews, which came from Jerusalem (Gal. ii. 12), and they of the dispersion preaching to the Jews only. Note also hence, that the believers knew nothing of the supremacy, and much less of the infallibility of St. Peter; for otherwise they would not have dared thus to rise up against their supreme governor, much less would they have condemned the actions of their infallible teacher.

14 [3] Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house (believing them) shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak (and had not long continued my discourse), [4] the Holy Ghost fell on them, as (he had done) on us at the beginning (Acts ii. enabling them to speak with tongues, and to prophesy, x. 44—16).

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord (Jesus), how that he said (to us, Acts i. 5), John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

17 Forasmuch then as God gave them (though gentiles and uncircumcised) the like gift as he did (he had given) unto us (circumcised Jews), who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God? (Gr. how was I able to hinder God; viz. by refusing to receive them into the church by baptism, x. 47, whom he had already baptized with the Holy Ghost?

18 And) When they heard these things, they held their peace (being satisfied with this account of St. Peter's actions), and (they) glorified God (for his goodness to the gentiles), saying, Then (Gr. ἄρα γε, surely) hath [5] God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

---

[3] Ver. 14. Who shall speak to thee words, by which thou and all thy house shall be saved.] God, saith Grotius, after he had sent Christ, would admit of no other way of obtaining the salvation promised in the gospel, but by the knowledge of him, which is certainly true of all who were capable of coming to the knowledge of him: how far he might accept of others, see my conjecture, note on Rom. ii. 14.

[4] Ver. 15. The Holy Ghost fell upon them, ὥσπερ καὶ ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ, as upon us at the beginning.] They therefore having received the like gifts, which were the fruits of faith, must be looked on as brethren and disciples of the Lord, and so must be admitted into his church by that baptism which Christ instituted to be administered to all his disciples; being united by his Spirit to Christ their head, they must be owned as his members; God having owned them, by imparting to them these spiritual gifts, they must be owned by us, and he having purified their hearts by faith (xv. 9), they must no longer be looked on by us as unclean.

[5] Ver. 18. Then hath God granted to the gentiles repentance unto life.] The Jews had the highest thoughts of themselves, as if all God's blessings were designed for them only, and the meanest and even vilest thoughts of all other nations, as if God counted them only "as spittle." "Thou madest the world for our sakes," saith the book of Esdras; "as for the other people, thou hast said, They are nothing, but like to spittle, and they have ever been reputed as nothing," 2 Esd. vi. 55—57. They imagined that the Messiah was to make them a glorious people, and to save them, but to destroy or to enslave all other nations to them; and that God would save all of them as being "children of Abraham," but that all the rest of the world were "fuel for hell-fire;" and this made them so to contemn them, and never think of their being saved any other way than by being proselytes to their law. Hence, in the former chapter, they so much admire that the Holy Ghost should fall on them, ver. 45, and here speak of it as a thing beyond their imagination that God should "grant repentance unto life" to them: hence do the unbelieving Jews forbid the apostles "to speak to the gentiles that they might be saved," 2 Thess. ii. 16, and cry out against St. Paul as one not fit to live, because he said Christ would send him to the gentiles, Acts xxii. 21, 22.

Τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ὁ Θεὸς μετάνοιαν ἔδωκεν, Then hath God given to the gentiles repentance.] From these words and from Eph. ii. 8, "Faith is the gift of God," and from God's promise to the Jews, "I will give them a heart to know me," Jer. xxiv. 7, "I will give them a new heart," Ezek. xi. 19, xxxvi. 26, some argue thus—What God gives, we only receive from him, and so are only passive in it; but God gives faith, repentance, and a new heart; therefore we neither do, nor can do, any thing towards the obtaining of them.

In answer, therefore, to these and all other passages of a like nature dispersed through the scriptures, I shall show, first, that they must be consistent with God's commands and exhortations directed to us to perform our duty, with his promises and motives to excite us to the performance of it, and with his threats denounced against those who do neglect it; and so must be so far from excluding, that they do rather presuppose our industry; as will be evident,

First, Because he promises those very blessings he is said to give, to their industry and diligence who receive them, v. g. "The Lord giveth wisdom" (Eccles. ii. 16), but then he gives it only on this condition, that we ask it in faith (James i. 4), that we "apply our hearts to seek" it (Eccles. vii. 25), so that to argue as these men do in this case is plainly to contradict the mind of the Holy Ghost, who, for this very reason, that God is the giver of it, requires us "to incline our ears to wisdom, and to apply our hearts to understanding; to cry after knowledge, and lift up our voice for understanding; to seek for her as for silver, and to search for her as for hid treasure;" suspending our enjoyment of her upon all this diligence, by saying, "Then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God: for the Lord giveth wisdom" (Prov. ii. 2—6). Again, "Faith cometh by hearing of the word of God" (Rom. x. 17); this is the ordinary instrument which works repentance and conversion in us; but that it may have this good effect, we must hear it with good attention, and improve the knowledge received from it, for "to him that (thus) hath shall more be given" (Mark iv. 24, 25); we must "receive it into a good and honest heart," and treasure it up there (Luke viii. 15): for to them only "it is given to know the mysteries" of Christ's kingdom, who thus improve the knowledge and talents which they have received (Matt. xiii. 11, 12, xxv. 20).

Secondly, When there is a want of these such-like dispositions, or some evil dispositions which prejudice us against, or indispose us for, the performance of those duties, then it is said that these things are not given: so Matt. xiii. 12, "To them it is not given: for this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and be converted, and I should heal them:" so Deut. xxix. 3, 4, "Ye have seen the temptations, signs, and miracles, which God wrought for you; yet the Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day;" which must not be imputed to any want of power in these things to move them, much less to a want of the divine grace to work upon their hearts by them, for then they could not be blamed for not having such a heart; but it was wholly to be ascribed to their own negligence and perverseness, which rendered them indisposed to receive this gift: as will be farther evident, first, from God's vehement desire that such good things might have been given them, which through their own defect in the performance of their duty were not given them; as, v. g. "a heart" to fear God: so Deut. v. 29, "Oh, that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always!" which is an expression of a most earnest desire that it might be so, and therefore an assurance that there was nothing wanting on God's part that was requisite to the obtaining such a heart. Secondly, from his frequent commands requiring men to believe, repent, and turn to him, and to give their hearts to seek him: so 1 Chron. xxii. 19, "And now ἔτι, give your hearts and your souls to seek the Lord:" for seeing God neither commands what is impossible for us to do, nor what he himself will do without us, these commands must relate to something which is in our power, because it is our duty to perform it: and, thirdly, from the commendations which the scriptures give to them who believed, repented, and turned to the Lord; and the reprehensions they give, the punishments they threaten, to them who neglect to do so: for seeing no man can receive a reward for what he had no hand in doing, or blame and punishment for not performing what he could not be capable of doing, these praises and reprehensions show that these things might and ought to have been done by us.

19 ¶ Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, [6] preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And some of them were (by birth) men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, [7] spake unto the Grecians (Gr. πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, to the Jews using the Greek language, see note on vi. 1), preaching the Lord Jesus.

21 And (they being men enabled and authorized for this work by the Holy Ghost's descent upon them for this end, Acts ii. 9, 10) the hand (or power) of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22 ¶ Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas (a Cyprian), that he should go (διελθεῖν, to go through those places) as far as (even to) Antioch.

23 Who, when he came, and had seen (Gr. coming, and seeing) the grace of God (i. e. the prevalency of the gospel among them), was glad, and exhorted them all, that with (full) purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the (gifts of the) Holy Ghost and of faith: and (by this means) much people were added unto the Lord (i. e. believed in the Lord Jesus).

25 Then departed Barnabas (from Antioch) to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: (perhaps that he being an apostle might lay his hands on some of them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost, Acts viii. 17:)

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year

---

Having premised this, I proceed,

Secondly, To show what are the various imports of this phrase in scripture, or how and why God may be said to give what, by our industry or our co-operation with his grace and blessing upon our endeavours, we enjoy.

First, then, When the thing said to be given is morally evil; that God, who can neither himself do, nor incline others to do, evil, can be said to give it, only because he gives those faculties by which men are enabled to do it, and suffers them, without restraint, to follow the inclinations of their own wicked hearts: so ἔδωκε Κύριος, "God gave a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets," 1 Kings xxii. 23: so ἐδόθη τῷ θηρίῳ, "It was given to the beast to speak great things and blasphemies," Rev. xiii. 15; and, ver. 7, ἐδόθη, "It was given to him to make war with the saints, and overcome them;" and that in this sense God is said to give the heathens up "to a reprobate mind, to the lustings of their hearts, and to dishonourable affections," see the note on Rom. i. 28; that thus only he gave to the Jews "a spirit of slumber," see the note on Rom. xi. 8. Secondly, Sometimes to give doth only signify to pronounce, teach, and prescribe; as when God saith, "Thou shalt put the blessing on mount Gerizim," Deut. xi. 29, i. e. thou shalt pronounce it thence: thus is God said to give to the Jews his sabbaths, viz. by commanding the observation of them, Exod. xvi. 29, and to give them those laws and commandments he prescribed and taught them by his servant Moses; and in this sense he is said to give wisdom, because "out of his mouth proceedeth understanding," Prov. ii. 6, and so he saith, "Give to the wise," i. e. instruction, "and he will still be wiser," Prov. ix. 9. And in this sense also may he be said to give both faith and repentance; because he hath so frequently prescribed them, and taught us the advantages we shall reap by them, the means to produce them, the inducements to perform them, and the evils we shall suffer from the want of them.

Thirdly, I lay this down as a most certain rule, That where God is said to give us any thing which it is our duty to obtain, the exercise of that faculty is still supposed which he hath given us already; and God is only said to give it by giving us those faculties by which we are enabled to obtain it, and the means and motives which are sufficient to excite those faculties to the performance of their proper actions; I say, the exercise of these faculties is always presupposed; and when God is said to give what we are to get, and what it is our duty and will be our advantage to perform, the meaning only is, he puts it into our power, by the exercise of those faculties which he hath given us, by attendance to the motives which he affords to excite us thus to exercise them, and by the assistance he is ready still to give us upon our willingness to do what he requires, to obtain those things. And,

First, Thus it is always with respect to natural gifts; for thus God giveth riches (Eccles. v. 19, vi. 2), because "he giveth power to get wealth" (Deut. viii. 18), but yet it is "the diligent hand," and the blessing of God upon our labours, that "maketh rich" (Prov. x. 4. 22); "he giveth us our daily bread," yea, "he giveth food to all flesh" (Ps. cxxxvi. 25), and yet we must eat it "in the sweat of our brows," and procure it with the labour of our hands (Gen. iii. 19); "he giveth all things to all men" (Acts xvii. 25), "and to the beasts their food" (Ps. cxlvii. 19), but then they must employ those faculties which God hath given them to get it: wherefore to argue thus—God giveth faith and repentance, and therefore we do nothing to obtain them, is as if I should say, God giveth us our daily bread, therefore we must not labour for it; God giveth food to all flesh, therefore they are not to seek after it.

Secondly, Thus it is also with respect to spirituals; thus "God giveth wisdom," but it is to them who incline their ears to the instructions he hath given them to make them wise, and who apply their hearts to understanding: thus the Jews argue that God had given repentance to the gentiles: because he had commissionated Peter to preach to them peace through Jesus Christ, and remission of sins, and they upon his preaching had believed in Christ, and received the Holy Ghost: so also, though faith be an assent to a divine revelation, and faith in Christ an assent to the revelation made in scripture concerning him, and so must be an act of the understanding, requiring only the evidence of the truth of that revelation to produce it; yet is it said to be "the gift of God," because the objects of that faith are only made known to us by divine revelation; the motives to embrace it are all contained in the same revelation, and both are confirmed and made credible to us by the testimony which God hath given to them, and so God hath done all that is requisite on his part to produce this faith in us.

[6] Ver. 19. Preaching the word to none but the Jews only.] As thinking it unlawful to converse with men of other nations, and not believing that God would give repentance to the gentiles. Woltzogenius here notes, that these men preached without any mission; and hence concludes, that an ordinary mission is not required to authorize men to preach the gospel. But this is said without just ground; for these men seem to be of the number of those on whom the Holy Ghost fell on the day of pentecost, among whom were those of Cyrene. Moreover, "the power of the Lord was with them," to confirm their doctrine by miracles, ver. 21. He then that will plead a commission from God to preach the gospel without an ordinary mission, must show the like extraordinary gifts or miraculous assistances; God never sending any person to do his work without some testimony from himself, or from persons commissionated by him.

[7] Ver. 20. And they spake πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, to the Hellenists.] Grotius here saith, certò legendum, πρὸς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, we must certainly read, "to the Greeks," because the Syriac, Arabic, and Latin so read; whereas, that is no ground at all; for so they all read, vi. 1, where Grotius himself acknowledges, the Jews are to be understood by the Hellenists: he adds, that the Alexandrian MS. so reads, but so it doth in opposition to all other MSS. Chrysostom here saith, that "they spake Greek, Ἑβραῖοι ὄντες, being Hebrews." Œcumenius saith, he styles them Hellenists, "not as being addicted to the worship of the Greeks, but as Ἑλληνιστὶ φθεγγόμενοι, speaking the Greek language;" and it seems necessary to understand the Jews using the Greek tongue, and reading the scriptures in that tongue in their synagogues, as Buxtorf says they did: (1.) because these persons preached to the Jews only (ver. 19). And (2.)

they assembled themselves with (or in) the church, and taught much people. And the (-y who formerly were called) disciples [8] were called Christians first in Antioch.

27 ¶ And in these days came prophets (i. e. men who had the gift of foretelling things to come) from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by (the afflatus of) the spirit that there should be great dearth [9] throughout all the world (i. e. the Roman empire): which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

29 Then the disciples (of Antioch and the places adjacent), every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa:

30 Which also they did, and [10] sent it to the elders (of the Jews) by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

because they of the church of Jerusalem send to them Barnabas, whom they would scarce send to the uncircumcised.

[8] Ver. 26. And the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch.] Before they were called "disciples," as here, "believers," Acts v. 14, men "of the church," Acts xii. 1, men "of the way," see note on Acts ix. 2, "the saints," Acts ix. 13, "those that called on the name" of Christ, ver. 14, and by their enemies, Nazarenes and Galileans; but now, by the conversion of Cornelius, and his kinsmen, and his family, the believing Jews and gentiles being made one church, that the name of Jew and heathen might no more continue the distance that was betwixt them, this new name was given to them both; as some conceive, according to the prophecy mentioned Isa. lxv. 15, a name embraced by all Christians as most expressive of their relation to their master Christ, and which they gloried in, and owned before the face of their enemies (Tertull. Apol. cap. 3. 5, Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 1). But that Evodius should be then bishop of Antioch, and give this name first to the Christians, and St. Luke should say nothing either of his doing this, or ever mention his being there, it is not easy to believe.

[9] Ver. 28. Ἐφ' ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην, Through the whole world.] That οἰκουμένη signifies the Roman empire, see the note on Luke ii. 1. Accordingly, Eusebius* saith of this famine, that it oppressed almost the whole empire; and that it was recorded by historians, "most averse to our religion;" viz. by Suetonius† in the life of Claudius, who saith, it happened, ob assiduas sterilitates, "through a long barrenness;" Josephus‡ saith, that it raged so much in Judea, πολλῶν ὑπὸ ἐνδείας ἀναλωμάτων φθειρομένων, "that many perished for want of victuals:" and Dion Cassius,§ that it was λιμὸς ἰσχυρός, "a very great famine;" and happened when Claudius and Caius Largus were consuls, that is, in the second year of Claudius, though it seems rather to have been that which happened, as Eusebius in his Chronicon, and Orosius, lib. vii. 6, place it, in the fourth year of Claudius.

[10] Ver. 30. And sent it πρὸς τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους, to the elders.] It is doubtless the duty of all Christians to be ready to relieve their Christian brethren in other nations according to their abilities, as Paul shows, 2 Cor. viii. 9, and those especially from whom they have received spiritual things (Rom. xv. 27). But here it is farther to be noted, that it was the constant custom of the Jews in their dispersions, to send money into the land of Canaan for the sustaining of the poor there, as Campegius Vitringa* proves. St. Paul was therefore careful, that the unbelieving Jews should not outdo the Christians in those offices of charity towards their brethren in Judea: and therefore, as he carries here the charity of the Christians of Antioch, and the parts adjacent, to the distressed brethren in Judea, so doth he show himself always ready to advance this work (Gal. ii. 10), to plead for and to promote it, as he did in the churches of Macedonia and Achaia.

But whereas some contend, the elders mentioned here were the bishops of Judea; it is not certain that they were Christians, or any other than the elders of the Jewish synagogues, or the πρῶτοι τῶν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν, "chief men of Jerusalem;" to whom, saith Josephus,† king Izates sent his charity at the same time; and if they were Christians, they might still be the elders of their synagogues, the Christians then retaining the Jewish rites.

* H. Eccles. lib. ii. cap. 8.
† Cap. 18.
‡ Antiq. lib. xx. cap. p. 686, D.
§ Hist. lib. lx. p. 146.

* De Syn. Vet. lib. iii. par. i. cap. 13, p. 808. 811.
† Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 2, p. 686.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Now about that time (that Agabus foretold of the famine, xi. 28,) Herod (Agrippa) the king [1] stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church (Gr. caught hold of certain of the church to afflict them).

2 And [2] he killed James the brother of John (who by this title was distinguished from James the son of Alpheus, bishop of Jerusalem,) with the sword.

3 And because he saw it pleased the Jews (to see the Christians thus afflicted and cut off), he proceeded further to take (into custody) Peter also. (And when this was done,) (then were the days of unleavened bread) (the paschal festival).

4 And when (therefore) he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers (i. e. sixteen soldiers) to keep him (four at a time); intending [3] after Easter (or when that festival was over, in which it was customary to release a prisoner to them, Matt. xxvii. 15,) to bring him forth to the people (to be slain before them).

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison (for this end): but [4] prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for (deliverance of) him.

6 And when Herod would have brought (was about to bring) him forth, the same night (that he had determined to do this on the morrow, ver. 9,) Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, (being) bound (to them)

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐπέβαλεν Ἡρῴδης τὰς χεῖρας, Herod laid hands upon.] Ἐπιβάλλειν χεῖρας being never used intransitively, but always with the dative case, or an accusative with the preposition ἐπί, cannot here be rendered, he attempted or resolved, but the whole sentence filled up seems to be this, ἔβαλε χεῖρας ἐπί τινας τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας κακῶσαι αὐτούς, "He laid hold of some of the church to afflict them:" the preposition being often included in the verb, and being to be taken or repeated from it to complete the sense.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἀνεῖλε δὲ Ἰάκωβον, He killed James with the sword.] Thus was the prediction of our Lord fulfilled, that James should "drink of his cup" (Matt. xx. 23). But then he being cut off, A. D. 43, the story of his being long in Spain must be an idle fable of the monks, like to that of their placing vincula Sancti Petri upon the first of August, when we learn from ver. 3, that he was put into those chains at the paschal feast, and delivered from them at the close of it (ver. 7), that is, above four months before.

[3] Ver. 4. Μετὰ τὸ πάσχα, After the passover.] He being reserved till then, either in honour of the feast, or that the Christians, who, though they were hated by the rulers of the Jews, were yet in favour with the people (ii. 47), might not prevail with others to beg his life, according to the custom of that feast (Matt. xxvii. 15), or to avoid a tumult.

[4] Ver. 5. Προσευχὴ ἦν ἐκτενὴς, &c. Prayer was made for him by the church without ceasing.] That such prayers are with two chains (Acts xxviii. 20): and the keepers (being two other soldiers that stood) before the door kept the prison.

7 And, behold, the (an) angel of the Lord came upon him (to deliver him), and a light shined in the prison (to enable him to see what he was to do): and he (the angel) smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying (to him), Arise up quickly. And (when he had so said) [5] his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And (then) he said unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9 And he went out, and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw (had seen) a vision (only).

10 (And) When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth (from the prison) unto the city; which (gate) opened to them of his (its) own accord: and they went out, and passed on (together) through one street; and [6] forthwith the angel (having done all that was requisite for his deliverance) departed from him.

11 And when Peter was come to himself (and saw where he was), he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had [7] considered the thing (done), he came to the house of Mary the mother of (that) John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken (what he who knocked would say, and she was) named Rhoda.

14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but (first) ran in, and told (them within) how Peter stood before the gate.

15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad (to entertain such a thought). But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, [8] It is his (good) angel (or a messenger sent from him).

16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17 But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had (by an angel) brought him out of the prison. And he said, [9] Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren. And (then) he departed (from them), and went into another place (of more safety).

18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, (inquiring) what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers (he questioned them in a judicial manner), and (when they could tell nothing of him, he) [10] commanded that they should be put to death. And (then) he (i. e. king Agrippa) [11] went down from Judæa to Cæsarea (to celebrate the solemnity kept prevalent for the preservation of very eminent members of the church, we learn, not only from this instance, but also from those words of St. Paul, "I know this shall happen to my preservation through your prayers" (Phil. i. 19), and "I hope I shall through your prayers be given to you" (Philem. 22). The word ἐκτενὴς primarily signifies extended; but because the fervency of our desire is usually the cause that we pray much, or long, for any thing; therefore to pray ἐκτενῶς, is also to pray fervently and importunately, Luke xxii. 14, and ἀγάπη ἐκτενὴς is "fervent love," 1 Pet. i. 22, iv. 8.

---

[5] Ver. 7. Ἐξέπεσον αὐτοῦ αἱ ἁλύσεις, His chains fell off from his hands.] That some soldiers of Herod, converted to the Christian faith, should mark and take away these chains, and give them to the bishop of Jerusalem, and that they should be kept as a treasure not only through all the Jewish wars, but about four hundred years after, till Juvenal, bishop of Jerusalem, gave them to Eudoxia, wife to Theodosius the junior, who gave one of them to the church of St. Peter's in Constantinople, and sent the other to Rome, is a tale of Surius, that smells too rank of superstition to deserve the least credit.

[6] Ver. 10. Ἀπέστη ὁ ἄγγελος ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, And forthwith the angel left him.] When he had done all things requisite on his part for his deliverance, and which could not be done by Peter, he leaves what was farther requisite to complete the deliverance, and render him secure from danger, to his own industry and prudence; hereby instructing us, not to expect an immediate assistance from God in things he hath already put into our power, and given us abilities to perform.

[7] Ver. 12. Συνιδών τε ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν οἰκίαν Μαρίας, And considering of the thing, he came to the house of Mary, where many were gathered together, praying.] Here note,

First, That it seems very unreasonable, without any authority, to change συνιδὼν, "considering," into σπεύδων, "hastening," either here or xiv. 6, against all the versions in both places.

Secondly, Note, from these words, "the house of Mary," that all the Christians had not then sold their houses, and their goods. And,

Thirdly, That they had then in those times of peril their sacred assemblies in the night, Peter here coming to them before day (ver. 18), and yet finding them praying; whence Pliny* makes mention of their cœtus antelucani, "assemblies in the night," and Cecilius† objects to the Christians, nocturnas congregationes, "their night meetings," as knowing they were forbidden by the Roman laws; as you may see in Cicero, lib. ii. de Legibus, n. 25. 35—37.

[8] Ver. 15. Οἱ δὲ ἔλεγον, ἄγγελος αὐτοῦ ἐστιν, But they said, It is his angel.] Here it is acknowledged, that the word ἄγγελος signifies not only a celestial spirit, but also a messenger sent from one to another; as may be proved from many other places besides those cited by the reverend Dr. Hammond; thus the messengers sent by the elders of Jabesh to the Ammonites, 1 Sam. xi. 3, and by Saul through the coasts of Israel, ver. 7. 9, are styled ἄγγελοι, "angels:" so Saul sent ἀγγέλους, "messengers," to take David, 1 Sam. xix. 20, 21, so David sent "messengers," ἀγγέλους, to salute Nabal, xxv. 14. Amaziah sent ἀγγέλους, "messengers," to inquire of Baalzebub, 2 Kings i. 2; so David saith, Ps. cli. Gr. ver. 4, he sent τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ, "his angel," viz. Samuel, and anointed me; and James ii. 25, Rahab received τοὺς ἀγγέλους, "the messengers;" but when it is hence conjectured, that the import of these words may be only this, that some messenger was come from him, to impart something to the church; as I have met with none of the ancients of this opinion, so is there this plain objection against it, viz. that the damsel could only know St. Peter by his voice, or face, both which they might believe his angel could imitate, whereas they knew a messenger, could he have had opportunity of sending one from the prison, could do neither. Since then it was a vulgar opinion among the Jews, that good men had their tutelar angels, or at least that angels were sent down from heaven about their affairs, they, by this angel, might understand either erroneously a guardian angel, attending on him, or, agreeably to scripture, an angel sent from heaven to acquaint them with something relating to him, in answer to their prayers. Here then is no foundation for a guardian angel still attending on good men, and had Peter himself thought so, it is likely he would have ascribed this deliverance, not to an angel sent from heaven, but to his guardian angel.

[9] Ver. 17. Go, shew these things to James, and to the brethren.] That they might bless God for this extraordinary answer to their prayers, and might be confirmed by it in for the honour of Cæsar), and there abode (during the time of that solemnity).

---

* Ep. 97. † Apud Minut. p. 8.

20 ¶ And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon (and designed to make war upon them): but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend, desired (by him, that they might have) peace; because their country was nourished by the king's country.

21 And upon a set day (the second day of the solemnity, appointed in honour of Cæsar,) Herod, arrayed in royal apparel (upon which the sun shining gave it a glorious lustre), sat upon his throne, and made an oration (in the theatre) unto them (i. e. to the nobles and governors which were come out of the whole province to that solemnity).

22 And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice (of him that speaketh, is the voice) of a god, and not of a (mere) man.

23 And [12] immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he (received this flattery without reprehension, as due to him, and) gave not God the glory: and he was eaten (and miserably tormented) of worms (in his bowels), and gave up the ghost.

24 ¶ But (and) the word of God (notwithstanding this opposition) grew and multiplied.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry (i. e. distributed the charity sent by the disciples from Antioch, and other places, to be given by them to the elders of Jerusalem, xi. 29, 30), and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

their faith, and in their expectation of divine assistance and protection in their endeavours to promote the interests of the gospel.

[10] Ver. 19. He commanded them ἀπαχθῆναι, to be put to death.] So in Hesychius ἀπάγεσθαι is εἰς θάνατον ἕλκεσθαι, "to be carried away to die," or to be sent away to punishment, as this phrase usually signifies in the best Greek authors, and in Seneca.*

[11] Καὶ κατελθὼν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας εἰς τὴν Καισάρειαν, διέτριβεν, And going down from Judea he abode at Cæsarea.] That it was not Peter, as some imagine, but king Agrippa, who went down from Judea to Cæsarea, we learn from Josephus, who gives us a full account both of this journey and the occasion of it, informing us that he went down εἰς πόλιν Καισάρειαν, "to the city of Cæsarea, to perform the solemnity, or the games celebrated there every Olympiad to the honour of Cæsar," and that "the nobles and governors of the province of Syria repaired to that city," on the same account; that "on the second day of the festival he came early into the theatre, clothed with a wonderful garment, wholly made of silver, on which the sun shining, it cast forth a glorious splendour" (Ant. lib. xix. cap. 7, p. 678, 679). He farther adds, that "flatterers came about him, θεὸν προσαγορεύοντες, calling him a god, and that the king οὐκ ἐπέπληξε, οὐδὲ τὴν κολακείαν ἀσεβοῦσαν ἀπεστρέψατο, did not repel or reprehend their impious blasphemy."

[12] Ver. 23. Παραχρῆμα δὲ ἐπάταξεν αὐτὸν ἄγγελος Κυρίου, And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, &c.] That he was smitten by the Lord immediately on his receiving this impious flattery, is evident from Josephus; for he saith, that μετ' ὀλίγον "after a while he sees the owl which was the messenger of his calamity," that ἄτροον ἄλγημα, "a sudden torment came upon him," and that thereupon he instantly tells the same auditors "he must die." Again, Josephus doth not say that he was σκωληκόβρωτος, "eaten up of worms," but he saith he had ἀλγήματα τῆς κοιλίας, "vehement torments in his bowels, which increasing upon him, in five days he died," and they in that time might breed worms in him, as he confesses they did in his grandfather. And examples of the like exits of the persecutors of the Christian faith we have many in church history: thus Tertullian* saith of one Claudius Heminianus, one of their persecutors, that cùm vivus vermibus ebullisset, "when worms broke forth of him whilst he was alive, he said, Let no man know it, lest the Christians rejoice." And Eusebius† saith of Maximinian, that "sudden ulcers arose in his fundament and secret parts, from which sprung ἀλεκτόν τι πλῆθος σκωλήκων, an incredible multitude of worms." And of the uncle of Julian the apostate, who persecuted the Christians, and trampled upon the sacred vessels, Theodoret‡ and St. Chrysostom§ inform us, that he perished by this disease, διαφθερὲς γὰρ αὐτοῦ αἰδοῖον σκώληκας ἔτεκεν, "for his scrotum corrupted and bred worms." An instance like to this we have in Pherecydes Syrus, ὑπὸ τῶν φθειρῶν ἀναλωθέντος, "eaten up of lice," for boasting of his great wisdom and his pleasant life, though he sacrificed, saith Ælian, to no god at all (Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. iv. cap. 28, Diog. Laer. lib. i. p. 75. 77; see Bochart. Hieroz. par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 23, p. 620, 621). So also was it under the Jewish state: for of Antiochus Epiphanes we read, ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ δυσσεβοῦς ἀραχεῖν, that "worms sprung out of the body of this wicked man" (2 Macc. ix. 8, 9), and of Herod the Great, Josephus owns that he had τοῦ αἰδοίου σῆψις σκώληκας ἐμποιοῦσα, "a putrefaction producing worms" (Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8, p. 597).

* Piso iratus cùm duci jussisset eum, qui ex commeatû sine commilitone redierat quasi interfecisset——ac jubet duci utrumque——ipsum centurionem qui damnatum reduxerat, duci jussit. De Irâ. lib. i. cap. 16. See Budæus in verbo ἀπάγω.

* In Scap. cap. 3. † Lib. viii. cap. 16.
‡ Hist. Eccl. lib. v. cap. 8.
§ Orat. S. Babyl. tom. v. p. 462.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 [1] Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἦσαν δέ τινες ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ κατὰ τὴν οὖσαν ἐκκλησίαν προφῆται καὶ διδάσκαλοι, There were some prophets and teachers in Antioch, belonging to that church.] So Grotius; and indeed Barnabas and Paul might well be reckoned such: Barnabas being sent thither by the church of Jerusalem, xi. 22, and he and Paul preaching there a whole year, ver. 26, and being sent by that church to Jerusalem, first, with their alms, ver. 30, and about the question determined by the council, Acts xv., and the rest being, very probably, some of the one hundred and eight, who, being scattered abroad by the persecution mentioned Acts viii. 1, came down to Antioch (xi. 19); for Niger is by Epiphanius* declared to have been "one of the seventy-two," and Lucius was of Cyrene, saith the text; and so one of them that came down to Antioch (xi. 20): but to say that either Paul or Barnabas were bishops of Syria, as Dr. Hammond doth, is that which never was before, nor can with any reason be asserted of the apostle of the gentiles, or of Barnabas appointed to go with him to the gentiles (ver. 2); nor could he have had any temptation to have made the other three there named bishops, but that he finds them laying on of hands (ver. 2), imagining that was for ordination, whereas it was by way of benediction on their enterprise only, or to recommend them to the grace of God (xiv. 26); for who ever heard before of an apostle ordained bishop, by laying on of the hands of prophets or teachers? or of one prophet, teacher, or bishop, laying his hands upon another prophet, bishop, or teacher, to ordain him bishop? And indeed, if there were so many bishops as he hath given us in Judea, Acts xv., in Syria and Cilicia here, and so many ordained in all other churches, as

* Hær. xxx. sect. 4, p. 50.

Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

2 (And) [2] As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said (to them), Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the (peculiar) work whereunto I have called them.

3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away (in pursuance of it).

4 ¶ So they, being (thus) sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from [3] thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also [4] John (surnamed Mark, xii. 25) to their minister (to minister to them).

6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain [5] sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-jesus:

7 [6] Which was with the deputy of the country, (named) Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God (from their mouths).

8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) (from the Arabic word Elim,) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then [7] Saul, (who also is called Paul,) (being) filled with the (afflatus of the) Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10 And said, O (thou that art) full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord (but plead for and use thy sorceries in opposition to them)?

11 And now (therefore), behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at (the power which attended) the doctrine of the Lord.

13 Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and (then) John departing from them returned to Jerusalem.

14 ¶ But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down.

15 And after the reading of the law and the prophets the [8] rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on (λέγετε, speak it).

16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand, said, Men of Israel, and ye (Greeks) that fear God, give audience.

17 The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers (the patriarchs), and exalted the people (descending from them) when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

18 And [9] about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness.

---

he saith, xiv. 23, is it not wonderful that St. Paul, in all his travels, should never meet with, resort to, or be entertained by, any one of them, but only by the brethren at large? Or that he should write to the churches of the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Colossians, and Thessalonians, before he went bound to Rome, and never salute any bishops there, or give any instructions to them, or so much as ever mention that he had ordained any elders, that is, saith he, bishops, there? It is also to be observed, that this only was a temporary mission to preach to the gentiles, that being the work to which St. Paul was called, ver. 2, and of which they give an account to the church of Antioch, "declaring how God had opened a door of faith to the gentiles," which mission they presently completed, and then returned to Antioch, declaring to the church there what they had done in prosecution of it (xiv. 26, 27).

[2] Ver. 2. Λειτουργούντων δὲ αὐτῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ, And as they ministered to the Lord.] Vain here is the inference of the papists from this word, that they sacrificed the mass: for λειτουργεῖν in Phavorinus and Hesychius is δουλεύειν, διακονεῖν ὑπηρετεῖν, "to serve and minister." In the Old Testament it often signifies the ministry of the Levites, who were not to offer sacrifices, as Numb. iv. 23, 24, 26—28. 30. 35. 37. 39. 43, viii. 22, xvi. 9, xviii. 6. 21. 23. By Chrysostom* and Œcumenius it is rendered "preaching," and in profane authors it is applied to any other work. Thus in Aristotle's Politics,† men are said λειτουργεῖν περὶ τὰς ἀρχὰς, πρὸς τεκνοποίαν, τὰ κατὰ τὸν βίον, "to minister about government, in getting children, and about the things of this life."

[3] Ver. 4. And thence they sailed to Cyprus.] Where the Jews so abounded, that Dio Cassius‡ tells us, that in the time of Trajan "they slew two hundred and forty thousand men there;" and Jerome,§ that the Jews "overthrew Salamis in Cyprus, killing all the gentiles there."

---

* Λειτουργούντων, τουτέστι κηρυττόντων, Chrysost. Œcumen. in locum.

† Lib. v. l. 7.

‡ Ἀπώλοντο καὶ ἐκεῖ μυριάδες τέσσαρες καὶ εἴκοσι, διὰ τοῦτο οὐδενὶ Ἰουδαίῳ ἐπιβῆναι αὐτῆς ἔξεστιν. In Vitâ Trajani, Epit. 255.

§ Salaminam Cypri, interfectis in eâ gentilibus, subvertêre Judæi. Chron. ad an. 19 Trajani.

[4] Ver. 5. Καὶ εἶχον Ἰωάννην ὑπηρέτην, They had John to minister to them.] As the wise men and prophets among the Jews had one to minister unto them, so the apostles had also those who were their companions and fellow-labourers, who ministered to them. So Timothy and Erastus are mentioned among those who ministered to St. Paul, Acts xix. 22.

[5] Ver. 6. A sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-Jesus.] God having raised up prophets in the Christian church, and given the apostles and other teachers of the word a power to confirm it with mighty signs and miracles; the Jews who opposed Christianity, and laboured to turn men from the faith, pretended to be prophets also, and endeavoured by magic and enchantments to work miracles, to cure diseases, and to cast out devils: of their magic and enchantments, see Dr. Lightfoot, Harm. of the New Testament, p. 95, and of their attempts to cure diseases and to cast out devils, note on xix. 13.

[6] Ver. 7. Ὅς ἦν σὺν τῷ ἀνθυπάτῳ, Which was with the deputy of the country (Gr. the proconsul), Sergius Paulus.] The difficulty which some find in giving the name of proconsul to the prætor or president of Cyprus, is solved by these words of Valla, that not he only is styled a proconsul who is sent to administer a province with consular power, but also a prætor or president (Elegant. lib. iv.).

[7] Ver. 9. Saul, who is also called Paul.] Origen, in his preface to the Epistles to the Romans, saith, that whilst he preached to the Jews he was called Saul, according to the name he had among them at his circumcision, Paulum autem appellatum esse cùm Græcis et gentibus leges et præcepta conscribit, "and that he was called by his Roman name, Paul, when he preached to the gentiles."

[8] Ver. 15. Οἱ ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, The rulers of the synagogue sent to them.] In what sense the rulers of the synagogue were many, and in what sense but one, see the note on Mark v. 22.

[9] Ver. 18. And about the time of forty years he suffered their manners, Gr. ἐτροποφόρησεν αὐτοὺς, in the wilderness.] Here Dr. Hammond thinks it is without doubt that the true reading is ἐτροφορόρησεν, "He bore them as a parent doth his child," because so the word is used, Deut. i. 31, where it is said, "The Lord ἐτροφοφόρησέ σε, bore thee in this wilderness as a man τροφοφορῆσαι, would bear his son," and the 19 And when he had (for their sakes) destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that he [10] gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And afterward they desired a king: and God gave them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, (who with Samuel reigned) [11] by the space of forty years.

22 And when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said (Ps. lxxxix. 11), I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will.

23 Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus:

24 When John had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

25 And as John fulfilled his course (i. e. performed his office), he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he (i. e. the Christ). But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his (i. e. the shoes of whose) feet I am not worthy to loose.

26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and [12] whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation (which Christ hath brought into the world) sent.

27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the (import of the) voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him (to that death which procures our remission of sins).

28 And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should (might) be slain.

29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree (John woman in the Maccabees entreats her youngest son to pity her τροφοφορήσασαν, "bearing him," 2 Macc. vii. 27. And according to this sense the word signifies τὴν τροφὴν φέρειν, "to bring them nourishment," as God did manna every day, or τρόφου δίκην φορεῖν, "to bear them, as a nurse or mother doth her child to give him suck," or bring him up; which in Eustathius is τροφοφορεῖν, Odyss. β. v. 131. But though this makes a very good sense, and very apposite, it seems not necessary; for, first, Origen* there reads as here, ἐτροποφόρησεν, and expounds it ἁρμόζεσθαί σε πρὸς τὰ ἀσθενές, "to accommodate himself to the infirmities of his children," and so the word is used by Cicero ad Atticum,† when he saith, τὸν τύφον μου τροποφόρησον, "Bear patiently my pride, or elation of mind." And again, Origen,‡ citing Deut. i. 31, thrice reads ἐτροποφόρησεν, "He bore their manners," saying it signifies ἁρμόζεσθαί σε πρὸς τὰ ἀσθενές, "to accommodate himself to the infirmities of his children." Procopius, on the words of Moses, saith, that τὸ τροποφορεῖν properly signifies τὸν παῖδα δυσχεραίνοντα τρέπειν καὶ μεταφέρειν διὰ συμψελλισμῶν καὶ συγκαταβάσεων, "to carry about and appease a froward child, by prattling with, and accommodating ourselves to, him;" and in the scholiast on Aristophanes τροποφορεῖν is τοῖς τρόποις ὑπηρετεῖν, "to bear with the manners of another;" and so the word is used by Cicero, &c. (See Examen Millii in locum.)

---

[10] Ver. 20. God gave them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years.] Grotius and Bishop Usher note here, that other copies read thus, κατεκληρονόμησεν αὐτοῖς τὴν γῆν αὐτῶν ὡς ἔτεσι τετρακοσίοις καὶ πεντήκοντα, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἔδωκεν κριτὰς, "He divided to them their land about four hundred and fifty years, and after that he gave them judges;" and they begin the time of this computation from the birth of Isaac, of whom it is said, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called," Gen. xxi. 12: from his birth to the children of Israel's going out of Egypt was four hundred and five years, their stay in the wilderness was forty years, seven years after their land was divided to them; these years put together made four hundred and fifty-two; and so the apostle saith, the space from God's election of them to the dividing the land to them was about four hundred and fifty years. But,

First, This reading is not owned by Chrysostom, or Œcumenius, or by the Syriac, or Arabic, who all read as we do.

Secondly, The words seem not to bear this sense, for the apostle goes on orderly thus; (1.) God chose our fathers; (2.) he brought them out of Egypt; (3.) he led them in the wilderness forty years; (4.) he divided the land to them; and therefore it is reasonable to conceive he should go on to tell what was done after the division of the land. Moreover, the apostle does not say, "And all these things were done in the space of four hundred and fifty years," but, "He divided their land to them about the space of four hundred and fifty years;" which according to this reading signifies, he was so long in dividing their land; I therefore prefer the other computation, which refers this to the judges, because if you compute the years of the judges till Samuel, you will find them three hundred and thirty-nine, and the years of the tyrants one hundred and eleven, which put together make four hundred and fifty.

* Cont. Cels. lib. iv. p. 210, et Com. in Matt. ed. Huet. p. 459. 475.

† Lib. xiii. ep. 29.

‡ Tom. i. in Matt. p. 459. 475, in Celsum, lib. iv. p. 210.

Thirdly, Because this computation then obtained among the Jews, for Josephus* saith, Solomon began to build the temple μετὰ ἔτη πεντηκόσια καὶ ἐννενήκοντα καὶ δύο, "after five hundred and ninety-two years of the children of Israel's going out of Egypt." Now if you make the time of the judges four hundred and fifty, the computation is exactly five hundred and ninety-one years; he therefore here, as in the following verse, accords with the computation of his nation at that time, that so they might not except against his words:

Wilderness . . .	40
Joshua	17
Judges	450
Samuel and Saul . .	40
David	40
Solomon	4
	591

And yet he saith, ὡς, to show that computation was not exact. Some here tell us, that the true reading here is three hundred and fifty years; but seeing I find not one copy, version, nor father, to countenance that reading, I think it dangerous to admit of that solution of this difficulty; especially if we consider that St. Luke continually, both in his gospel and in the Acts, follows exactly the computation of the Septuagint and of the Jews, as we learn from his inserting Cainan, Luke iii. 36, his making Saul to reign forty years, ver. 21 of this chapter, and from this verse, where he accords exactly with Josephus.

[11] Ver. 21. By the space of forty years.] So Josephus saith, he reigned whilst Samuel lived ἔτη ὀκτὼ πρὸς τοῖς δέκα, "eighteen years," and after his death ἔσο καὶ εἴκοσι, "twenty-two years;" but though this reckoning seems to have obtained in the time of Josephus, it is far from being true that Saul reigned twenty-two years after the death of Samuel; it is rather true, as the Jews conceive, that they both died in the same year: so that the words, "forty years" are to be connected thus—Until Samuel the prophet, who having judged them about thirty years, afterward they desired a king; and God, by Samuel, gave them Saul, whose reign with that of Samuel's was about the space of forty years. So saith Sulpitius Severus,† Ego arbitror à Paulo etiam Samuelis annos sub regis istius ætate numeratos, "I suppose that the years of Samuel also are added to the reign of that king by Paul;" as doubtless they were, they making together just forty years.

[12] Ver. 26. And whosoever among you feareth God.] So ver. 16, that is, the proselytes among you: so Bemidbar Rabba on those words of the psalmist, "Blessed is every xix. 31), and laid him in a sepulchre (and they sealed the sepulchre, and put a guard upon it, Matt. xxvii. 66).

* Antiq. lib. viii. 2. † Lib. i cap. 61.

30 But (notwithstanding this) God raised him from the dead:

31 [13] And he was seen (alive) many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, (viz.) how that the promise which was made unto the fathers (that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed),

33 [14] God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again (to be a Prince and a Saviour); as it is also [15] written (of him) in the second psalm (by God, saying, from the mouth of David,) Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that (Gr. and that) [16] he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption (is evident, because) he said on this wise, I will give you (Jews) the sure mercies of David.

35 Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. (Which words cannot respect David himself;)

36 For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and (his body) saw corruption:

37 But he, (that Jesus) whom God raised again, saw no corruption (as to his body.)

38 ¶ Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that [17] through this man (-'s death) is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

39 And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

40 Beware therefore, lest (for your infidelity) that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets;

41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall (will) in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

42 And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the [18] next sabbath (day).

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God.

44 ¶ And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming (them).

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary (by Christ's appointment, Acts i. 8) that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and (by your actions) [19] judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, [20] lo, we turn (from you) to the Gentiles.

47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee (O Christ) to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

---

one that feareth the Lord," saith, "they that fear the Lord," οἱ φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεὸν, are the proselytes.

[13] Ver. 31. Who was seen many days of those who came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses.] These seem to be the hundred and eight mentioned Acts i. 15, for these were Galileans, ver. 11, and συνελθόντες, "men coming with him," and men that go in to the apostles, ver. 13.

[14] Ver. 33. God hath fulfilled the promise made to your fathers in raising up Jesus.] i. e. From the dead, ver. 30, so as not to return to corruption. For the promise being this, that God would "raise up one to sit upon the throne of his father David," Acts ii. 30, and to "reign over the house of Jacob," Luke i. 33; Christ upon his resurrection having "all power in heaven and earth committed to him," Matt. xxviii. 18, and being "exalted to the right hand of God," Acts ii. 33, this promise, by his resurrection to that kingdom, was fulfilled.

[15] As it is written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.] That this psalm belongs to the Messiah, and speaks of his dominion and kingdom, appears from the preceding words, "I have set thee, my king, upon the holy hill of Sion; Jehovah hath said to me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." This also is apparent from the following words, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance;" and from the exhortation of all kings to submit to him (see the note on Heb. v. 5): and, by this resurrection and exaltation, he is said to be begotten, as being made the first-born from the dead, Col. i. 18, Rev. i. 5, constituted "the Son of God with power," Rom. i. 4, and having received a new birth: hence those two things are joined, Luke i. 32, "He shall be called the Son of the Highest, and God shall give him the throne of his father David" (see also Examen Millii in locum).

[16] Ver. 34. In that he raised him up, now no more to see corruption, he said (Isa. lv. 3), I will give thee τὰ ὅσια Δαβὶδ τὰ πιστα, the sure mercies of David.] That is, of Christ, the Son of David; for that David, both in the language of scripture and of the Jews, frequently signifies Christ, see note on Matt. ii., and that here it bears this sense, both Kimchi and Aben-Ezra confess, and the following verse assures us; for of this very David it is said, ver. 4, "Behold, I have given him for a witness, a leader and commander to the people;" and he being thus raised up to be a "King for ever," so as to see no more corruption, the blessings he confers upon his subjects must be sure and lasting.

[17] Ver. 38. Through him is preached to them forgiveness of sins.] i. e. Those sins, from the guilt of which the law of Moses could not cleanse the conscience, and from which we could not be justified, i. e. from the guilt and condemnation due to us, from which we could not be exempted by the law of Moses (see the note on xv. 1).

[18] Ver. 42. Εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον.] This phrase doth not signify "the intermediate week," as some conceive, or on the second and fifth day of the week, but "on the following sabbath;" for we learn from the forty-fourth verse, that they came not together till the following sabbath. So Josephus* speaks of David and Solomon, ἔτι δὲ τῶν μεταξὺ τούτων βασιλέων, "and of the following kings of Judah;" for there came none between them.

[19] Ver. 46. Καὶ οὐκ ἀξίους ἑαυτοὺς κρίνετε, And judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life.] Or rather discover, or by your actions show yourselves unworthy of it: for when our Saviour sent his apostles, he bid them, "into what village or house soever they entered, to inquire, τίς ἄξιος, who was worthy in it," and to "shake off the dust of their feet" against the unworthy (Matt. x. 11. 15); i. e. against those who would not receive their doctrine of salvation, or eternal life. This unworthiness, saith the apostle, κρίνετε, you discover, by thus contradicting and blaspheming it. This is the sense of the word κρίνεσθαι, viz. to discern, discover, or make known, when the apostle saith, he that cometh into the assemblies of the prophets, κρίνεται, "is discovered of them all," 1 Cor. xiv. 24, and the spiritual man "discovers all things," ii. 15.

[20] Lo, we turn to the gentiles.] Not from the Jews every where; for we find St. Paul still preaching to them in every synagogue where he came (Acts xvii. 2): but from those of Antioch in Pisidia, to the gentiles there, it being not reasonable that the Jews of other places should be deprived of the gospel for the perverseness of those here.

---

* De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 13, p. 913.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord (giving glory to him for it): and [21] as many (of them) as were ordained to (Gr. disposed for) eternal life believed.

49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51 But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

[21] Ver. 48. And ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.] These words cannot signify a fixed number of persons absolutely by God ordained to eternal life, so that they, and they only, shall obtain it, and all others be excluded from it, as upon this supposition they must be; for if God, by his ordination or decree, hath fixed the number of those whom he will bring unto salvation, all they who are not of that number will not partake of that salvation. And this is evident from these considerations:

First, That if the reason why these men believed be only this, that they were men "ordained to eternal life;" the reason why the rest believed not can be this only, that they were not ordained by God to eternal life: and if so, what necessity could there be that "the word of God should be first preached" to them? as we read, ver. 46. Was it only that their damnation might be the greater? This seems to charge that Lover of souls, whose "tender mercies are over all his works," with the greatest cruelty, seeing it makes him determine from all eternity, not only that so many souls, as capable of salvation as any other, shall perish everlastingly; but also to determine that the dispensations of his providence shall be such towards them, as necessarily tend to the aggravation of their condemnation. And what could even their most malicious and most enraged enemy do more? What is it the very devil aims at by all his temptations, but this very end, viz. the aggravation of our future punishment? And therefore to assert that God had determined that his word should be spoken to these Jews for this very end, is to make God as instrumental to their ruin as the very devil, and seemeth wholly irreconcileable with his declarations, that "he would have all men to be saved," and "would not that any man should perish."

Secondly, The apostle gives this reason why he turned from the Jews to the gentiles, viz. because the Jews "had thrust away the word of God from them, and judged themselves unworthy of eternal life" (ver. 46); whereas, according to this supposition, this could be no sufficient reason for his turning from them to the gentiles; for it was only they among the Jews whom God had not ordained to eternal life, who thus refused to believe and to obey the word of God; and as many among the gentiles as were not thus ordained to eternal life must necessarily do the same; and so there could be no sufficient cause why he should turn from the Jews to the gentiles on that account. And,

Thirdly, Were this the reason why the Jews believed not, that they were not by God ordained to eternal life, why doth St. Paul by God's commission speak here to them thus: "Be it known to you, brethren, that by this Jesus is declared to you remission of sins?" Why doth he add, "and by him every one that believeth is justified?" &c. Why doth he vehemently exhort them to "beware, lest that saying of the prophet Habakkuk should be verified of them, I will work a work in your days which you will not believe, though one declare it to you!" (ver. 38. 41.) For could God have determined that these very persons should not believe to life eternal, and yet commissionate his apostles to tell them that remission of sins and justification to life eternal was proposed to them? Could it be revealed to St. Paul that they could not believe to life eternal, as being not by God ordained to it; and yet would he so passionately exhort them to that faith in Jesus which he well knew, by virtue of this revelation, belonged not to them, nor could they possibly exert? These things seem clearly to evince that this cannot be the proper import of the words; but they will very well admit of these two senses: viz. (1.) As many as were disposed for eternal life believed: or, (2.) As many as were disposed to do it, believed to eternal life. And,

First, It is highly probable the genuine import of these words is this, ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι, "As many as were disposed for eternal life believed;" for this word τεταγμένος, by this very author, is used in this sense to signify a man, not outwardly ordained, but inwardly disposed; or one determined, not by God, but his own inclination, to do such a thing; as when it is said, Acts xx. 13, Paul "went on foot to Assos, οὕτω γὰρ ἦν διατεταγμένος, for so he was disposed to do:" so the son of Sirach saith, ἡγεμονία συνετοῦ τεταγμένη ἔσται, "The conduct or government of the wise man will be well ordered, or disposed" (x. 1). Thus Philo* saith to Cain, "Thou needest not fear being killed by them who are ἐν σῇ τεταγμένοι συμμαχίᾳ, ranked on thy side;" i. e. of the same dispositions and affections with thee. And he saith of those children who, having had vicious parents, have themselves proved virtuous, that they are ἀμείνῳ τεταγμένοι τάξει,† "placed in a better rank:" and speaking of Esau and Jacob, he represents Esau as fierce, subject to anger and other passions, and governed by his brutish part; but Jacob as a lover of virtue and truth; and so ἐν τῇ βελτίονι τεταγμένον τάξει,‡ "placed in a better rank of men," or one of a better temper and disposition; and adds, that Samuel§ was τεταγμένος Θεῷ, "one well disposed towards God:" so Simplicius interprets this word; for when Epictetus‖ had said, τῶν δὲ βελτίστων σοι φαινομένων οὕτως ἔχου ὡς ἀπὸ Θεοῦ τεταγμένος εἰς ταύτην τὴν τάξιν, "If thou hast a desire to be a philosopher, so retain those things which seem best to thee, as being by God placed in that rank;" that is, saith he,¶ ὡς ὑπὸ Θεοῦ προτρεπόμενος ἐπὶ ταῦτα, τὸ γὰρ μέγιστον τῶν ἐκ Θεοῦ ἐωρηθέντων ἀνθρώποις φιλοσοφία ἐστι, "as being incited by God to it; for philosophy," saith he, "eternal salvation," saith the scripture, "is the greatest gift that God has given to mankind." And to this sense the very context leads; the persons opposite to those disposed for eternal life being those who, for their indisposition to embrace the offer of it, were "unworthy of eternal life."

The second import of which these words are capable, is this: That "as many as were well disposed believed to eternal life;" and accordingly we are said to believe in Christ "to eternal life," 1 Tim. i. 16, and "to the saving of the soul," Heb. x. 39, and they who truly do believe are said to do it "to eternal life," because they, by believing, do obtain a perfect right to that life, of which they cannot fail but by departing from that faith, or suffering it to become unfruitful in those works of righteousness which make them meet to be partakers of eternal life.

* L. quod deter. p. 144.
† De Nobil. p. 702, C.
‡ De Præm. et Pœn. p. 712, B.
§ De Temul. p. 203, C.
‖ Enchirid. cap. 29.
¶ P. 139.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 And it came to pass in Iconium, that they (viz. Paul and Barnabas) [1] went both together into the syna-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

[1] Ver. 1. That they went κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, both together.] So 1 Sam. xi. 11, there were not two of them left יחד κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, "together;" 2 Sam. ii. 16, "They fell down κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ, together;" 1 Kings iii. 18, ἡμεῖς κατα τὸ αὐτὸ, "We were together."

gogue of the Jews (there), and so spake, that [2] a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks (i. e. the proselytes of the Jews) believed.

2 But the (οἱ δὲ, and that the) unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds (Gr. rose up, and made the minds of the gentiles) evil (-ly) affected against the brethren.

3 Long time therefore abode they (ἱκανὸν μὲν οὖν χρόνον διέτριψαν, for indeed they had tarried a long time) speaking boldly in (the name of) the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But (then) the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the (unbelieving) Jews, and part with the apostles.

5 And when there was an assault (or tumult) made both of (i. e. by) the Gentiles, and also of (by) the Jews with their rulers, (endeavouring) to use them despitefully (or contumeliously), and to [3] stone them (as blasphemers of the law),

6 They were ware of it, and (so) fled unto Lystra and (then to) Derbe (ver. 20), cities of Lycaonia, and (then) unto the region that lieth round about (those cities):

7 And there they preached the gospel.

8 ¶ And there sat a certain man at Lystra, [4] impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, (and so one) who never had walked:

9 The same heard Paul speak (-ing the word): who stedfastly beholding him, and [5] perceiving (by his gift of discerning spirits) that he had faith to be healed,

10 Said (to him) with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And (having said this) he (the impotent man) leaped and walked.

11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, [6] The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12 [7] And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius (i. e. his interpreter), because he was the chief speaker.

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which (i. e. whose image) was before their city, brought oxen and garlands (Gr. coronets) [8] unto the gates (where Barnabas and Paul were), and would have done sacrifice with the people (i. e. he and they would have offered sacrifice to them as gods).

14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes (to show their detestation of the fact), and ran in among the people, crying out,

15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye (attempt) these things? (seeing) we also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities (or dead idols) unto the (worship of the) living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

16 [9] Who in times past (since the days of Noah, 1

---

[2] A great multitude, Ἰουδαίων καὶ Ἑλλήνων, of the Jews and Greeks believed.] i. e. Σεβομένων Ἑλλήνων, "a great multitude of Greek proselytes;" for they made a part of the Jewish synagogue, and in it are converted to the faith: so xvii. 4, and xviii. 4, "Paul spake in the synagogue at Corinth," and persuaded Jews and Greeks; see also xiii. 42, xix. 8. 10. Note also, that the second verse is to be put in a parenthesis.

[3] Ver. 5. And to stone them.] As blasphemers against the law, Deut. xiii. 6. So they stoned Stephen as speaking "blasphemous words against the law and the temple," Acts vi. 13. So St. Paul here, ver. 19, and so they attempted to stone Christ for supposed blasphemy, John x. 33. And in like manner, Josephus saith,* that "Ananias the high-priest delivered up James, and other Christians, to be stoned, as being accused of impiety against the law."

[4] Ver. 8. Ἀδύνατος τοῖς ποσὶν, Impotent in his feet.] This word ἀδύνατος is frequently used in the Septuagint, for a man feeble and helpless; as when Job saith, he was πατὴρ ἀδυνάτων, "the father of the helpless," xxix. 16, xxxi. 20, and Joel, iii. 10, ὁ ἀδύνατος λεγέτω, "Let the weak say I am strong."

[5] Ver. 9. Seeing he had faith to be healed.] Faith, being an act of the understanding, could not be discerned by the eye of sense; this therefore is an instance of that power of discerning the inward working of men's spirits, mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 10.

[6] Ver. 11. Saying, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.] This was not only the imagination of the poets, Homer and others here cited by Grotius, but even of their philosophers: for Cicero hence proves the gods must be of human shape, because they never appeared in any other form (see the note on xvii. 29).

[7] Ver. 12. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercury, because he was ἡγούμενος, τοῦ λόγου, the chief speaker.] He is accounted, saith Justin Martyr,† λόγος ἑρμηνευτικὸς καὶ πάντων διδάσκαλος, "the word that is the interpreter and teacher of all men;" and he is called Hermes, saith Philo,‡ ὡς ἑρμηνέα καὶ προφήτην τῶν θείων, "as being the interpreter and prophet of divine things:" he is, saith Porphyry, παρασταικὸς, "the exhibiter or representer of reason and eloquence:" he is called Mercury, saith Seneca, quia ratio penès illum est (De Benef. lib. iv. cap. 7).

[8] Ver. 13. Ἐπὶ τοὺς πυλῶνας, To the gates.] Not of the temple of Jupiter, which was without the city, but the gates of the house where Paul and Barnabas lodged; for these things were done within the city (ver. 19). Hither the priest of Jupiter brought oxen for sacrifice and στέμματα, crowns or garlands, either to put upon the heads of Paul and Barnabas, according to the heathen custom of crowning their gods, mentioned in Jeremy's epistle to the Jews in Babylon, ver. 9, and especially of offering golden crowns to Jupiter, as Brissonius* shows they did; or to put on the ox or heifer to be offered: hence have we mention in Virgil† of the vittæ juvencûm, "garlands of the heifers," where, saith Servius, velatum auro vittisque juvencum, is coronatum auro vittisque, i. e. "a heifer crowned" with them. Athenæus from Aristotle saith‡ this was done, because nothing but what is perfect was to be offered to the gods; τὸ δὲ στέφειν πλήρωσίν τινα σημαίνει, "now to crown signifies perfection;" whence operi coronam imponere, is "to perfect a work."

Ἤθελε θύειν, He would have sacrificed.] Here see, saith Chrysostom, the devil's malice; he would have brought in ἀνθρωπολατρείαν divine worship of men by those very persons who were sent to convert men from it, persuading them again to esteem men as gods, as formerly they had done: and how fully he hath done this in the Roman church, where innumerable men are worshipped with invocation, and even mental prayers, which suppose them to know the hearts of the supplicants, and so to have the property ascribed to God alone in the scripture, I have fully shown in a treatise on that subject.

[9] Ver. 16. Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.] Not so as to allow of their manners, or to leave them without any means sufficient to convince them of the error of their ways, and their idolatrous worship; for this he had done so effectually, as to "leave them without excuse," in that "they did not worship him as God, neither were thankful" for his benefits (Rom. i. 20, 21). But he so far permitted this, as that he sent them no prophet to instruct them better; and gave them no positive revelation of his will, no written instructions of that way in which he would be worshipped, as he had done to the Jews.

---

* Λευσθησομένους παρέλωκε. Antiq. Jud. lib. xx. cap. 8, p. 698, B.

† Ap. ii. p. 67.

‡ Apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. iii. cap. 11.

* De Formulis, lib. ii. p. 249.

† Æn. v. 366.

‡ Lib. xv. p. 674.

Pet. iii. 20) suffered all nations to walk in their own ways (giving them no written law, and sending them no prophets to instruct them in the true worship of him, as he did to the Jews).

17 [10] Nevertheless he left not himself without witness (to them of his providence), in that he did good (to us all), and gave (Gr. giving) us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

18 And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done (i. e. from doing) sacrifice unto them.

19 ¶ And (then) there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people (against the apostles), and (so they), having [11] stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many (Gr. had made many disciples), they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,

22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and (telling them) that we (Christians) must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they had [12] ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting (Gr. and when praying with fasting, they had ordained, &c.), they commended them to (the protection of) the Lord (Jesus), on whom they believed.

24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

26 And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God (by prayer for his assistance, Acts xiii. 3) for the work which they (had now) fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with (i. e. by) them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode (a) long time with the disciples.

[10] Ver. 17. Nevertheless he left not himself without a witness, in that he did them good, and gave them rain from heaven.] From these words it appears (1.) that the giving of rain in its season, and of fruitful seasons of the year, is even to the heathens a testimony of the divine providence: for, this rain coming from the clouds of heaven, and these fruitful seasons depending so necessarily upon the sun, moon, and other luminaries of heaven, and being so constantly produced by them, must demonstrate that they must derive them from, and owe them to, him who made the heavens and the earth (ver. 15), and therefore that they ought to worship and be thankful to him for them. (2.) These being good things, and such as "filled their hearts with food and gladness;" and being conferred freely and constantly on them, who daily provoked him by their idolatries and ingratitude, were also a clear testimony of his goodness to them, and therefore an assurance to them that if they, knowing him by this means to be God, would turn from their dumb idols, and worship him as God, they might find grace and favour in his eyes, who was so good unto them, even whilst they did continue to provoke him: now the knowledge of the God that made heaven and earth, as the only true God, who is to be worshipped, and whose providence affords us all the blessings we enjoy, and the belief that he is well inclined to show mercy to all that thus turn to him, and are thus thankful to him, seems to be all that God expected from the gentiles, as may be gathered from Rom. i. 20, 21.

[11] Ver. 19. And stoned Paul.] God permitting this, saith Woltzogenius, for the punishment of his sin, in being active and assistant at the stoning of Stephen (Acts vii. 58, viii. 1).

[12] Ver. 23. Χειροτονήσαντες δὲ αὐτοῖς πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, And ordaining them elders in every church.] That χειροτονεῖν πρεσβυτέρους is not to choose elders by common suffrage, or by lifting up the hands of the apostles, is fully proved by Dr. Hammond and Mr. Selden; but then, that this constituting elders in these churches was making them fixed bishops of those churches, is not proved.

To clear up this, let it be considered, that in those times men received the gift of tongues and prophecy, or those spiritual gifts which fitted them to minister in the church, either immediately from heaven, as the apostles themselves did, and so by God himself were fitted and appointed for that work; so was it with the hundred and twenty who received the Holy Ghost on the day of pentecost (see note on Acts ii. 1), or when they prayed with Peter and John (Acts iv. 31), and with St. Paul, who was baptized and "filled with the Holy Ghost" (ix. 17); so was it with Cornelius and his kinsmen (Acts x. 44), for "they spake with tongues and magnified God," even as the apostles did when they had received the Holy Ghost; for as they spake with tongues μεγαλεῖα τοῦ Θεοῦ, "the great things of God" (Acts ii. 11), so did these men speak with tongues, μεγαλοῦντες τὸν Θεὸν, "magnifying God," and therefore St. Peter saith, they had "received the Holy Ghost even as we" (Acts x. 47, xi. 17): or else these gifts were given by imposition of the apostles' hands; so when the Samaritans believed, and were baptized, that they might have persons fitted to officiate in sacred things, the church of Jerusalem sends to them Peter and John, who lay their hands on some of them, and they "received the Holy Ghost" (Acts viii. 17). This being done, the apostles returned to Jerusalem (ver. 25), preaching the word to other villages of Samaria, but leaving the conduct of the church to those gifted men; and these seem to be the men who first officiated in all converted churches; and wherever we meet with them, we find no other persons constituted as bishops, or fixed overseers of those churches, as in the churches of Corinth, Galatia, Thessalonica, and therefore have reason to conceive there were no other elders constituted here, they being no more necessary for the churches of Lystra and Iconium than for those of Corinth and Galatia. Moreover, we have here only mention of elders constituted in these churches, not of one deacon placed under them, which shows, these elders were not bishops; since, by the rule of Epiphanius, a bishop cannot be without a deacon. In a word, these prophetical men, though they were officers placed in the church next to the apostles (1 Cor. xii. 26), yet were they not fixed ministers; but from what parts soever they come, and wherever they are, they take upon them to officiate: so doth Barnabas at Antioch, (xi. 23, 24), and the other prophets there (xiii. 1, 2); and so doth Silas, sent from Jerusalem to Antioch, continue there (Acts xv. 33), and from thence goes through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches (ver. 41).

CHAPTER XV.

1 And certain men which came down from Judæa (to Antioch) taught the brethren (of the gentiles), and said, [1] Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses (i. e. so as by that rite to submit to and observe his law), ye cannot be saved.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐὰν μὴ περιτέμνησθε, Except ye be circumcised after the manner (commanded in the law) of Moses, ye cannot be saved.] Here note, dissension and disputation with them (Gr. and a dissension being made among the brethren, and no small debate or reasoning of Paul and Barnabas against them who taught this doctrine),[2] they (of Antioch) determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem [3] unto the apostles and elders (there) about this question.

3 And being brought on their way by the church, they (Gr. οἱ μὲν οὖν προπεμφθέντες, they therefore being sent forth by the church) passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring (to them) the conversion of the Gentiles: and (by this) they caused great joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared (to them) all things that God had done with them (i. e. by them, ver. 12).

5 But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pha-

First, That these persons were of the sect of the pharisees (ver. 5), and perhaps they were only the zealots of that sect, for we find the Jews of different opinions in this matter, even as to men's admission into their religion; for some of them would not only permit them of other nations, who owned the true God, to live quietly among them, but even to embrace their religion without circumcision, whilst others by no means would permit them so to do. Thus when Izates,* the son of Helen, queen of Adiabene, embraced the Jews' religion, Ananias declared he might do it without circumcision, but Eleazar maintained, that it was ἀσέβεια, "great impiety" to remain uncircumcised. And when two eminent persons of Trachonitis fled to Josephus, the zealots† among the Jews were urgent for their circumcision, "if they would abide with them;" but Josephus "persuaded the multitude against it." And this controversy continued after they embraced Christianity, some allowing them to embrace Christianity without submitting to circumcision and the Jewish law; others contending, that without circumcision and the observance of the law, they "could not be saved." And these were the false apostles which troubled the churches of Corinth, Galatia, and Philippi, and were great enemies to St. Paul, who taught the contrary.

Secondly, Observe, that circumcision obliged those heathens which submitted to it to observe the whole law (Gal. v. 3); it is the same thing to say, "They must be circumcised after the manner of Moses" (ver. 1), and to say (ver. 5. 24), "They must be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses."

Thirdly, Observe, that they held this necessary to salvation (ver. 1), and by that doctrine they "subverted the souls" of the gentile converts (ver. 24), causing them to fall from the grace of the gospel offered to them without circumcision (Gal. v. 4). Now this they did agreeably to their common maxim, that omnes præputiati descendunt in gehennam, "all uncircumcised persons go to hell" (P. Eliezer, cap. 29, p. 66).

Fourthly, Observe, that they who did this went out from Judea (ver. 1), and were men going out as from the apostles (ver. 24), and therefore St. John saith of them, "They went out from us, but they were not of us" (1 John ii. 19).

[2] Ver. 2. They (of Antioch) determined that Paul and Barnabas—should go up to Jerusalem, &c.] St. Paul declares that he went then up to Jerusalem, κατ' ἀποκάλυψιν, "according to revelation" (Gal. ii. 2); as therefore the prophets and teachers of Antioch had before separated Paul and Barnabas by revelation to preach to some of the gentiles, and they having fulfilled that work returned to Antioch (xiv. 26); so is it probable, that by another revelation made to the same persons, they were sent up to Jerusalem, as being fittest to convince those of the contrary persuasion, by declaring "what God had wrought by them among the (uncircumcised) gentiles," and his acceptance of them without circumcision, or the observance of the law of Moses. Hence St. Paul tells us, that by what he had declared to them (ver. 4. 12), they saw, "the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed to him, as the gospel of the circumcision was to Peter;" because "he that wrought effectually by Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, was mighty by him towards the gentiles" (Gal. ii. 7, 8).

[3] To the apostles and elders.] Here Dr. Hammond tells us they were sent to the apostles and bishops of Jerusalem, and to the other bishops of Judea, and so, ver. 22, 23. 28, he makes the other bishops of Judea to be a part of this council, and for the proof of this he refers us to note b on Acts xi., where he affirms that elders signify bishops, but does not prove that the elders were bishops of Judea, unless it be by saying, elders and bishops; and therefore there being but one bishop at Jerusalem, and yet more elders, the rest, excepting James, must be the bishops of Judea. But this opinion I have sufficiently confuted, notes on James v. 14, 1 Pet. v. 1, and indeed it is mere novelty, not supported by the authority of any one ancient writer: for though some of them say, the names of bishop and presbyter, that is, elder, were used promiscuously in the first age of Christianity, none of them ever thought or said that the word presbyter or elder, in the New Testament, did always signify a bishop. My opinion of these elders is, that they were of the one hundred and eight who received the Holy Ghost at the beginning with the apostles (see note [1] on Acts ii.); those "who had been with Christ from the beginning," out of which one was to be chosen in the place of Judas (i. 21, 22), and of those witnesses of his resurrection, which came up with him from Galilee (xiii. 21). With these who had thus received the Holy Ghost, Peter ranks himself, saying to the Jews, "The elders that are among you I exhort, who also am an elder" (1 Pet. v. 1); and of these James seems to speak to the same persons, when he saith, "Is any man sick, let him send for the elders of the church" (v. 14): and perhaps these are the ἡγουμένοι, "who had the rule over them" (Heb. xiii. 7. 16); for Judas and Silas, two of these elders, being prophets, are styled ἄνδρες ἡγούμενοι ἐν τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, "leading men, or governors, among the brethren." That there were any other bishops of Judea, I believe not, as finding nothing in antiquity concerning them, but as Christians multiplied, or grew up in Judea, though they all still were zealous for the law and customs (Acts xxi. 20), and so still worshipped in the synagogue; yet as they saw occasion they sent one or more of these prophets or elders, to instruct and confirm them. Thus when many Jews at Antioch, "believed and turned to the Lord," upon "tidings of these things, brought to the church at Jerusalem," they sent forth Barnabas, one full of the Holy Ghost, that he should go as far as Antioch" (xi. 21—23). Such also were the governors and ministers of church affairs in other places; they who received the Holy Ghost at Samaria were to officiate there, and be a nursery for other churches of Samaria, which should embrace the gospel: such were the prophets and teachers of Antioch (xiii. 1), such the elders in every church (xiv. 23), such the προϊστάμενοι, those that "laboured among" the Thessalonians, and "were over them in the Lord" (1 Thess. v. 12), the prophets in the church of Corinth (1 Cor. xiii. 14), the spiritual men in the church of the Galatians (vi. 1, see the note there), the men who had the gifts of prophecy and teaching among the Romans (xii. 6, 7), and the twelve men on whom the Holy Ghost fell at Ephesus, and made them overseers of the churches there and in the neighbouring places: for at the first conversion of any church, there being none among them fitted to teach the Christian faith by their own skill and learning, it seemeth necessary they should be fitted and ordained for this work by the immediate afflatus and the miraculous endowments of the Holy Ghost: and when the apostles, who only had the power of giving the Holy Ghost, were about to leave the world, they placed fixed bishops and pastors in the churches. Thus St. Paul sends about Timothy and Titus for this work, giving them instructions concerning the persons to be ordained.

Moreover, that these were all elders of Jerusalem, and not of all Judea, we may learn because Barnabas and Saul were appointed to go up only to Jerusalem, to the bishops and elders there about this question (ver. 2), and when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received by the apostles and elders (ver. 4), and (ver. 6) the apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter. Now this meeting being risees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them (who believed among the gentiles), and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

---

* Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 2, p. 685, E.

† Vit. Joseph. p. 1007, B. 1010, C.

6 ¶ And (then) the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.

7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that [4] a good while ago (Gr. of days of old) God made choice among us (Gr. ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐξελέξατο, God chose me out among you), that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe; (commanding Cornelius to send for me, Acts x. 5, and me to go to him with the messengers sent for me, not making any difference betwixt him and others, ver. 20.)

8 And God, which knoweth the hearts (of all men), bare them witness (of his acceptance of them, though uncircumcised, by) giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us (believing Jews);

9 And (he) [5] put no difference between us and them (on the account of their uncircumcision, but supplied that by) purifying their hearts by faith (and so making them a pure people, as circumcision formerly did us).

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God (i. e. why distrust ye the truth of what he hath thus declared, by attempting) [6] to put a yoke (of obedience to the law of Moses) upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear (i. e. to perform so as to be justified by it)?

11 But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ (or through God's favour to us in him) we shall be saved, [7] even as they (are to be saved by it).

12 ¶ Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring (in confirmation of this point) what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the (uncircumcised) Gentiles by them.

13 ¶ And after they had held their peace, James answered (to the question), saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me:

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first did (by him) visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for (the glory of) his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets (Amos); as it is written (ix. 11),

16 After this I will return, and will build again [8] the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up (by raising up Christ to sit upon his throne, Acts ii. 30, and giving him the throne of his father David, Luke i. 32):

17 [9] That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18 (This he foretold by his prescience; for) Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

---

not at any festival, and there being no mention of any persons sent for to come thither from any other places, we have reason to believe they were only the elders at Jerusalem, or residing there.

[4] Ver. 7. Ye know that, ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων, a good while ago God made choice of me.] Not only when he actually sent him to Cornelius, but when he promised that by him he would lay the foundation of his church, which was to be erected among Jews and gentiles (see the note on Matt. xvi. 18, 19). And this is said to have been done ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων, "from days of old," as Mnason is styled, ἀρχαίος μαθητής, "an old disciple," Acts xxi. 16, and the first ministers of the gospel were styled οἱ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, "they that were from the beginning," and the doctrine preached to the Jews by the apostles is styled ἐντολὴ παλαία, "an old commandment, which they had received from the beginning," Luke i. 2, 1 John ii. 7.

[5] Ver. 9. And he put no difference, οὐδὲν διέκρινε, he made no discrimination betwixt us and them.] The argument here is plainly to this effect, That God by pouring his Holy Spirit on the uncircumcised gentiles, as he had done upon the circumcised Jews, had plainly demonstrated that he had received them to his favour, and made no discrimination, as to his choicest gifts, betwixt them and the Jews; and that legal purification, which seemed wanting to them on the account of their noncircumcision, he had fully and abundantly supplied in "purifying their hearts by faith;" and therefore, saith he, your endeavour to impose upon them these legal observances, to render them acceptable to God, after so signal an evidence that he accepteth them without them, must be a "tempting God," as that phrase constantly imports a distrusting or disbelieving him after sufficient evidence vouchsafed of his good-will and pleasure (see note on Matt. iv. 7).

[6] Ver. 10. To put a yoke upon the disciples' necks, which neither we nor our forefathers were able to bear.] Though these words are, by most interpreters, applied to the numerous ritual precepts, the costly sacrifices, and to the frequent tedious journeys up to Jerusalem, required by the law, which made the observance of it difficult and irksome, I rather would refer it to that defect that the apostle hath observed in it, that it could not "purge the conscience" from the guilt of sin, Heb. ix. 9, x. 1, that it could not give life, Gal. iii. 21, that it was a killing letter, leaving them under condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 7, vi. 9, and so making it necessary for them to believe in Christ, that they might be justified, Gal. ii 16, and redeemed from the curse of the law, Gal. iii. 13: according to those words of St. Paul, Acts xiii. 38, 39, "Be it known to you, that through this man is preached to you forgiveness of sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses:" for to this sense the following words incline, "We could not bear this yoke; for we believe that by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved."

[7] Ver. 11. Even as they.] This is not to be referred to the words, "our forefathers," as if the former Jews expected to be saved by the grace of Christ; for whatsoever truth may be in it with respect to the ancient Jews, it is certain that the latter Jews expected justification, not by faith, but "by the works of the law," Rom. ix. 32, and believed nothing of the Messiah, who should die to procure for them remission of sins: the controversy here was concerning the necessity of circumcision, and observation of the law of Moses to salvation (ver. 1): this, saith St. Peter, cannot be so, because God hath "purified their hearts by faith," and so prepared them by it for mercy and salvation; and as they are to be saved by the grace of Christ, so we expect salvation by the same grace; and this sense is confirmed from a like passage in St. Paul, declaring that "it is the same God who justifies both Jew and gentile through the same faith," Rom. iii. 30. And again, Gal. ii. 15, 16, "We Jews knowing that a man is justified, not by the works of the law, but by the faith of Christ, we have believed in him that we might be justified."

Nor is it any argument to the contrary, that "our fathers" are the nearest antecedent to the word ἐκεῖνοι, "they," for the words "our fathers" are only mentioned accidentally. Now it is very common in such cases for the relative to refer to a remoter antecedent, which is the subject professedly discoursed of: so Acts vii. 19, "He dealt subtly with our fathers," not Joseph immediately preceding, but the "king that knew not Joseph:" x. 6, "He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do," viz. not Simon the tanner, but Simon Peter (see the note on 1 John v. 20).

[8] Ver. 16. The tabernacle of David which is fallen down, hanepleth.] Hence the Jews called the Messiah, Bar Naphli, because it is written,* "I will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down," Amos ix. 10, 11. The most ancient way of dwelling being in tents and tabernacles, a man's house or habitation is usually, in the Hebrew language, called mischeneah, "his tabernacle," as you may see in the book of Job, and in the prophets; so here the "tabernacle of David" is the house and family of David."

[9] Ver. 17. That the residue of men might seek after the

* Sanhedr. fol. 69, 2.

19 [10] Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God (with the observation of our law and ceremonies):

20 But (count it sufficient) that we write unto them, that they [11] abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.

21 (Nor will this liberty be prejudicial to the Jews adhering to the law of Moses:) For [12] Moses of (from) old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.

22 Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia:

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain (men) which went out from us (1 John ii. 19) have troubled

---

Lord.] Amos ix. 12. In the Hebrew it is, "That they may possess the remnant of Edom," who being the greatest enemies to Israel, the calling of them must denote the calling of the worst of the nations; the Greek version also, which St. Luke follows, proves the thing more clearly, as making mention of "all nations seeking after the Lord."

[10] Ver. 19. Wherefore my sentence is, &c.] There be many things contained in this chapter, which show the Christians then had no apprehensions that St. Peter was by Christ appointed as the monarch of the church, or chief judge of controversies: for,

First, St. Paul and Barnabas were sent for the decision of this controversy, not to St. Peter in particular, but to the apostles and elders of the church in general.

Secondly, The decretory sentence was given by St. James, and not by Peter: κρίνω ἐγὼ, saith St. James, "I judge;" that is, saith Chrysostom, μετ' ἐξουσίας λέγω τοῦτο, "I with authority say this;" and this determination of the question was made by James, saith Chrysostom, ἐκεῖνος γὰρ ἦν τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγκεχειρισμένος, "because he had the government" (viz. of the church of Jerusalem) "committed to him."

Thirdly, The letters which are directed to the gentile churches, run after this manner, "The apostles, elders, and brethren, to the brethren which are of the gentiles in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, send greeting," without any particular mention of St. Peter, the supposed judge of this and other controversies, and the supposed governor of these and of all other churches. Now all these things are an indication, that the Christians of those times knew nothing of this supremacy of Peter, or of Christ's appointment of him to be his vicar, and the judge of controversies, to whom appeals were to be made in doubtful cases. For do any churches, which are now subject to the pope of Rome, and do acknowledge him to be Christ's vicar, send to the cardinals for the decision of their controversies, and make no mention of his holiness? Is it their custom, when such disputes as this was do arise, to have recourse to them in general, and not particularly to the pope? Doth any cardinal take upon him to pass the decretory sentence in any question of this nature? Or, do their letters when they decide such questions run after this manner, "We, the cardinals and bishops of the church of Rome, send greeting?" Since therefore they who now acknowledge this vicar, neither do, nor by their principles can do, as the Christians mentioned in the Acts did, it must be certain that those Christians did not own that vicar which is now set up by the church of Rome.

[11] Ver. 20. Ἀπὸ τῶν ἀλισγημάτων τῶν εἰδώλων, From the pollutions of idols, from fornication, from things strangled, and from blood.] Dr. Spencer here rejects all the interpretations given by others of these words, and then concludes, that all these things were forbidden, as being causes, signs, and attendants, on the idolatry of the heathens; things offered to idols, whether meat or drink, being after eaten in the idol's temple to his honour; and so, saith he, were blood and things strangled ways of confederacy with demons, and of offering the blood, that is the very soul, to them, as by fornication they did the body. But (1.) these four are plainly reckoned as things distinguished in themselves, and from one another, and so are separated by a καὶ, or and, interposed betwixt each of them; whereas, according to this exposition, they are all εἰδωλόθυτα, "things offered to idols," and much more are they all ἀλισγήματα, "pollutions of idols." Moreover, the things forbidden here, saith he, comprehend not only rites of fornication, but also of adultery and masculine impurity, and all the abominable filthiness committed by the heathens in their festivals of Venus, Bacchus, &c., and were all ways of entering into confederacy with devils. Now what kind of Christians could they be at Antioch, and other places, who were in danger of these things, of consecrating things by heathenish ceremonies to an idol, and afterward eating them in honour of him? Of offering blood, and things strangled, or their bodies to fornication and adultery, by way of confederacy with devils, after they had so solemnly turned from the service of them to the worship of the living God, and so had expressly renounced all these things in their very baptism?

Others think that the true reason why these things were particularly forbidden, was to avoid the scandal of the Jews, among whom they conversed, and with whom many of them still joined in the worship of the synagogue. This is explained several ways; viz. (1.) that all these things being formerly forbidden to the gentiles, who conversed among them, and were made proselytes of the gate, though they were neither circumcised, nor obedient to the law, they thought it necessary, though they remitted to the Christian converts among the gentiles circumcision and the observation of the law of Moses, they should be still obliged to those things, which had been formerly required of all that dwelt among or conversed with them, especially such things as seemed not to the gentiles forbidden by the law of nature, viz. the eating of things offered to idols, of blood, and of things strangled, and simple fornication, which was generally thought lawful by the gentiles (see the notes on Eph. v. 6, 1 Thess. iv. 5); and of which even Maimonides saith, that "before the law, common whores were not forbidden" (Treat. of Wives, cap. 1, §. 4). I confess it may be doubted, whether those which they call "the seven precepts of Noah," were precepts given to the gentiles before the law of Moses, though doubtless that of not eating blood was given to them, Gen. ix. 4, but then it is sufficient to countenance this interpretation, that the proselytes of the gate were, as Buxtorf* testifies, forbidden these four things.

Others conceive that these things were particularly forbidden the gentiles, as scandalous to the Jews, because Moses had so signally marked them out as things contrary to the holiness of a people, or to their separation from other nations to himself; so, of things strangled, or dead in their blood, God saith, Deut. xiv. 21, "Thou shalt not eat of any carcase," i. e. of any thing that dieth alone, or is not orderly slain, "for thou art a holy people to the Lord:" fornication is declared to be a thing not to be admitted in that commonwealth, for it is expressly said, Deut. xxiii. 17, "There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor any whoremonger of the sons of Israel;" the eating things offered to idols is forbidden as a thing contrary to the worship of the true God; the precept which commands abstaining from blood is not only called "a statute for ever," Lev. iii. 17, but God threateneth to set his face against, and to cut him off who did eat it, Lev. vii. 26, xvii. 10. These therefore being things so solemnly forbidden the whole nation of the Jews, either because they were a people "holy to the Lord," or as things not to be admitted in their commonwealth, or as things to be punished with cutting off, or as symptoms of idolatry, might for the present be forbidden the gentile converts, that they might not do things so abominable in their eyes (see Examen Millii in locum).

[12] Ver. 21. Μωσῆς γὰρ ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων, &c.] I cannot consent to the interpretation of these words given by Grotius and the reverend Dr. Hammond, viz. That the Christians could not be supposed to contemn the law of Moses, because you with words, subverting your souls, (by) saying, Ye must (ought to) be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment:

---

* In voce ger.

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul,

26 (Who are) Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by (word of) mouth.

28 [13] For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost (falling upon the uncircumcised gentiles), and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; (i. e. these things necessary at present, to avoid the scandal of the Jews: viz.)

29 That ye abstain from meats offered to idols (in the idol temples), and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation (it afforded them).

32 And Judas and Silas, being [14] prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35 Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also (that were prophets and teachers there, xiii. 1).

36 ¶ And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again (see Acts xiii. 3, 4) and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined (or counselled) to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who (when they went out before) departed from them from Pamphylia (to go to Jerusalem, xiii. 13), and went not (on) with them to the work (he had begun, xiii. 5).

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed (with him), being recommended by the brethren unto the grace (and favour) of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

---

that law was read in the Christian synagogues every sabbath day, as of old was done by the Jews; for, (1.) St. James doth not say that Moses was read ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν, "in their synagogues," but absolutely ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς, "in the synagogues," by which word, not the assembly of Christians, but the Jews, is always signified. (2.) He doth not say, as Dr. Hammond paraphrases the words, that "Moses was read in their synagogues ὡς ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων, as from former ages," but that Moses ἐκ γενεῶν ἀρχαίων, "from former ages, had those that preached him in every city," being read from old times in the synagogues; which cannot agree to the assemblies of Christians which began but a few years before. And (3.) the Christians did more certainly and frequently read Moses and the prophets on the first day of the week, as Justin Martyr testifies, than on the sabbath-day, and therefore their reading of him could not fitly be restrained to that day. I therefore think with Chrysostom, that St. James here gives the reason why they should write only to the gentile converts, viz. because there was no reason to write to the Jewish converts, they still adhering to the synagogue, where Moses was read every sabbath, and so this liberty, here granted to the gentiles only, could be no occasion to turn them from the observation of the law of Moses.

[13] Ver. 28. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, &c.] Vain is the pretence from these words, that other councils may use this preface to their decisions, viz. "It seemeth good to us, and to the Holy Ghost." For the reason why the council here assembled use these words, is not because they challenged to themselves any infallible assistance of the Holy Ghost in their conventions, rather than in their dispersions; but only upon this account, because the Holy Ghost had by a miracle declared the truth of what they had then decreed, that is, by falling down upon Cornelius and his friends and kinsfolk, who were Romans, and only proselytes of the gate at most, and so not circumcised (but obliged only to observe the precepts given to Noah, to abstain from things strangled, blood, idolatry, whoredom, &c.), I say, by falling down upon these gentiles, as he did upon our Lord's disciples, he evidently declared, that without their submission to any farther Jewish rites, the gentiles might be acceptable to him, and might enjoy the promise of the Father; and therefore that it was not needful, in order to their acceptance with God, to require their submission to the Judaic rites. This is the inference St. Peter makes from this miracle, when he first saw it, saying, Acts x. 47, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost even as we?" This was the answer he gives to them by whom it was objected, that he held communion with the gentiles, viz. Acts xi. 17, "Forasmuch as God gave them the like gift as he did to us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I, that I could withstand God?" This was the answer by which the sticklers for the Jewish rites were then silenced; and when the question was renewed by them, and it was vehemently contended that the gentiles must be "circumcised after the manner of Moses," St. Peter proves the contrary, by reminding them of the same instance, declaring, ver. 8—11, that God, who knew the hearts, bare them witness, that without circumcision they were acceptable to him, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did to the apostles; and therefore, by imposing this yoke upon them, they would "tempt the Lord," by a distrust of that which, by this miracle, he had perspicuously taught. This being then the very reason why they here say, "It seemed good unto the Holy Ghost," it is apparent, that no council can have hence any warrant to use the same phrase or preface to their decrees, who have not the like confirmation of their doctrine, by a miraculous operation of the Holy Ghost, designed purposely to confirm their sentence.

[14] Ver. 32. And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves.] That is, saith Dr. Hammond, being two bishops of Judea; but if so, why pleased it Silas to abide there still, rather than to go back unto his charge? (ver. 34.) Yea, why, after so long a stay at Antioch, doth he go along with Paul in his travels through Syria and Cilicia, "confirming the churches?" (ver. 41). Why do we find him still with Paul, ch. xvi., xvii. and xviii., preaching at Thessalonica, Corinth, and other places, but not at all returning to his see?

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Then came he to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, [1] the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a (-n uncircumcised) Greek:

2 Which (disciple) was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him (therefore) would Paul have to go forth with him (to the ministry); and (laying his hands upon him, that he might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, 2 Tim. i. 6, he) took (him) and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters (who would not endure to converse with one uncircumcised as they might suspect Timothy was): for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, [2] they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And so (by their progress, 3 John 7) were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and [3] were forbidden (by the afflatus) of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, (at that time:

7 And) After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into (towards) Bithynia: but the (same afflatus of the) Spirit suffered them not.

8 And they passing by (or through) Mysia came down to Troas.

9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; (For) there stood (as seemed to him) a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision (I Luke being with him), immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11 [4] Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to Philippi, [5] which is the chief (πρώτη, the first) city of that part of Macedonia (see the note on Phil. i. 1), and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the sabbath (day) we went out of the city by a river side, [6] where prayer was wont to be made (Gr. where there was, by law or custom, an oratory); and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

[1] Ver. 1. Υἱὸς γυναικός τινος Ἰουδαίας πιστῆς, πατρὸς δὲ Ἕλληνος, The son of a certain woman that was a Jewess, but his father was a Greek.] The law, saith Grotius, forbade the Jewish males to marry with a woman not subject to the law, but forbade not a Jewess to marry with a gentile, as Esther did with Ahasuerus; and this, saith he, may probably be concluded from the inquisition made by Ezra, of this crime, and the remedy prescribed for it, seeing he only inquires into those males who had taken strange wives, chapter the ninth and the tenth, but makes no mention of the women joined to strange husbands, or of their separation from them: yet it is certain from Josephus, that they esteemed this contrary to their law in his time; for he saith that Drusilla married with Felix, an uncircumcised person, in contempt of their law; and that this is contrary to their interpretation of the law, see Ainsw. in Deut. vii. 3.

Note also, That the reason why Timothy was not circumcised, seems not to have been this, that he was under the power of his father and not of his mother; for then Paul should not have circumcised him without his father's leave; but because his father being a Greek, he was not to be circumcised but by his own choice. Now St. Paul being to preach to the Jews in all places where he came, as his custom was, could not have used Timothy in that ministry had he not circumcised him; he therefore was only circumcised, as St. Paul became a "Jew to the Jews" for the gospel's sake, that he might be instrumental to gain the Jews.

I add my conjecture, that it was at or about this time that the gift given him by laying on of the apostle's hands (2 Tim. i. 6) might be conferred upon him; for seeing Barnabas was full of the Holy Ghost (xi. 24), John Mark was συνεργὸς, a coworker with Paul and Barnabas "for the kingdom of God" (Col. iv. 10), Silas was a prophet (Acts xv. 32), Luke an evangelist, it seems reasonable to conceive that Timothy, being taken with him for the same end, should be endued with the like gifts. Moreover, in the very next chapter, they came to Thessalonica, where Silas and Timotheus were so instrumental to convert them to the faith, that he indites his epistle to them thus, "Paul, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, to the church of the Thessalonians;" and speaks of him as his "brother," the "minister of God," and a "coworker" in the gospel of Christ, 1 Thess. iii. 2, yea as an "apostle of Christ," and one who was by God "put in trust with the gospel," ii. 4. 6. He therefore must then have that imposition of hands, and those extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, which fitted him for the ministry; and yet this being the first time that St. Paul met with him, he could not have them by imposition of his hands before.

[2] Ver. 4. And they delivered to them to keep, τὰ δόγματα τὰ κεκριμένα ὑπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, the decrees ordained by the apostles and elders that were at Jerusalem.] Here observe, that though it be said, xv. 22, that it seemed good to the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send men to Antioch; and though the proem of the decree runs thus, "The apostles, and the elders, and the brethren," write to the churches of Antioch, &c., ver. 22, 23, yet the decrees were made, not by the brethren, but only by the apostles and elders. Thus, in like manner, the epistle of Clemens begins thus, "The church of Rome to the church of the Corinthians."

[3] Ver. 6. They were forbidden by the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia.] viz. To preach it there at that time, not because that province belonged to St. John; for St. Paul preached there himself three years (xx. 31), and seven years after he leaves Timothy to correct the disorders that were then among them: in all which time we hear not one word of St. John's being there: nor, (2.) because those of Asia Minor were not disposed to receive the gospel; for the next year they do receive it; but because the Lord would hasten them to a new work which they had not yet begun, viz. to preach to a Roman colony (ver. 12. 21).

[4] Ver. 11. Loosing from Troas we came.] Here Œcumenius notes, that this being the first time that St. Luke speaks in the plural number, his travels with St. Paul must begin from this time.

[5] Ver. 12. Ἥτις ἐστὶ πρώτη τῆς μερίδος τῆς Μακεδονίας πόλις, κολώνια, Which is the first city of that part of Macedonia, which is a colony.] Not the chief city or metropolis of Macedonia, for that was Thessalonica; but the first city, which was a colony, which they who passed through the gulf of Strymon into Asia came unto (see the note on Phil. i. 1).

[6] Ver. 13. Οὗ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ εἶναι, Where prayer was wont to be made.] Or rather, Where a house of prayer, for the Jews and proselytes, was allowed to be by the law, or was accustomed to be; for νομίζεται signifies sometimes εἴθισται, it is accustomed, or usual; so νομίζεσθαι γυναῖκας πολ-

14 ¶ And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, (formerly) of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped (the true) God, heard us: [7] whose heart the Lord (so far) opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of (i. e. by) Paul.

15 And when she (and those of her household, were instructed in the Christian faith, and in the nature of the baptism required by it, she) was baptized, and her household, (then) she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And [8] she constrained (i. e. was instant with) us (so to do).

16 ¶ And it came to pass, as we went to (the house of) prayer, (that) a certain damsel possessed with [9] a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying (i. e. by telling of strange things):

17 The same (damsel) followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

19 ¶ And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers,

20 And brought them to the magistrates (i. c. the captains of the bands of Roman soldiers), saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city,

21 And teach customs, [10] which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being (a colony of the) Romans.

λας ἔχειν, in Herodotus, is "to have customarily more wives;" γυμνοὺς εἰσιέναι νομίζεται, in Aristophanes, Nub. i. 6, "It is customary to come in naked;" sometimes it signifies, saith Phavorinus, νενομισμένον ἐστὶ, "it is by law established," as when Aristophanes saith, Nub. iv. 3, καὶ μὴν νενόμισταί γε, "For so it is by law established;" and iii. 3, ἡ σωφροσύνη κενόμισται, "Modesty is by law established:" many instances of both these senses may be found in Stephanus. That προσευχὴ signifies an oratory, or a house of prayer, hath been noted on Luke vi. 12, and proved from the testimonies of Philo and Josephus. The synagogues, or oratories, say the Jewish writers, were often בשדות in the fields, and sometimes near rivers, as here, because of greater purity, saith Philo; and because perhaps the laws would not permit them to exercise a strange religion within the city (see Vitringa de Synag. Vet. lib. i. par. i. cap. 11). Accordingly Epiphanius saith,* that this very place proves that the Jews had oratories out of the cities, and that the Samaritans also had the like two miles from Sychem.

[7] Ver. 14. Ἧς ὁ Κύριος διήνοιξε τὴν καρδίαν, προσέχειν, Whose heart the Lord opened to attend to the things spoken by Paul.] To "open the ear," or "the heart," is a phrase used to signify the rendering any person willing or inclined to any thing. So Ps. xl. 7, "Mine ears hast thou opened," i. e. "Thou hast inclined me to hearken to thy commandments," Chald.; for so it follows, "Then said I, Lo, I come do to thy will:" so 1 Chron. xvii. 15, ἠνοιξας τὸ οὖς, "Thou hast opened the ear of thy servant to build thee a house." This God is sometimes said to do by awakening men by his afflicting hand: so Job xxxvi. 8. 10, "If they be bound in fetters, and holden with cords of affliction, he openeth their ears to discipline," ver. 10, and ver. 15, "He openeth their ears in oppression:" and sometimes he doth it by the preaching of the word; for as they who are said to be taught by the word (see note on John vi. 45), or the example of God (see note on 1 Thess. iv. 9), are said to be "taught of God;" so they who have their hearts affected with it, and opened by it, may be said properly enough to have their hearts opened by him. And here it deserveth to be noted, (1.) that the Lord is said to open the heart of Lydia, not to believe, but προσέχειν, "to attend to the things spoken by Paul," viz. to weigh and seriously to consider of the greatness of the blessings promised to believers, remission of sins and eternal life; and that attention of hers produced this faith in her. So the Lord represents himself as knocking at the door of men's hearts (Rev. iii. 20), i. e. by the preachers of his word, attended with the incitations of his Holy Spirit, but entering only when men open their hearts to receive him. And, lastly, Woltzogenius well notes, that if, in a place where no example of faith had been given, no name of Christ had been preached, some extraordinary assistance was vouchsafed towards the conversion of this woman, this single instance, in a case so extraordinary, must not be looked upon as a thing absolutely necessary in all cases. In a word, either she only was ἄξια, "worthy," i. e. prepared, disposed, and fitted to receive this influx; or if it were absolutely necessary that she might believe, and yet she alone, though no more fitted and disposed for it than the rest, received it, the other auditors, for want of this extraordinary influence, must lie under a necessity of not believing, and so it could not be blameworthy in them that they did not believe (see note on Matt. x. 11).

[8] Ver. 15. Παρεβιάσατο ἡμᾶς, She constrained us.] i. e. By her urgent desires and pressing entreaties; so Gen. xix. 3, "Lot κατεβιάζετο αὐτοὺς, constrained" the angels to come to his house; and Jacob ἐβιάζετο "constrained" Esau to receive his gift. So when Saul would not eat, κατεβιάζοντο αὐτὸν, "his servants and the woman constrained him" (1 Sam. xxviii. 25): so it is said of Christ, that the two disciples παρεβιάζοντο αὐτὸν, "constrained him to go in with them," Luke xxiv. 29.

[9] Ver. 16. Πνεῦνα πύθωνος, A spirit of divination.] For Hesychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus agree in this, that Python is δαιμόνιον μαντικὸν, "a spirit that divined, or foretold things to come." In the temple of Apollo, who was called Pytho, the organ of this miracle was always a woman, who, sitting on her brazen tripos, received her enthusiasm à secretis; their god, as Origen saith,* being delighted in nothing more ἢ τοῖς κύπτοις τῶν γυναικῶν, than in those parts; and the woman being thus† filled with the spirit, and retaining in memory the phantasms raised by the agitation of the demon, did τὸ ἐσόμενον προαγορεύεσθαι, "foretell what would be" to those that inquired of her, as did the Pythoness here; she also delivered her answers‡ "with a low voice as out of her belly," and was hence styled ventriloqua, and ἐγγαστρίμαντις; and because others who pretended to prophesy did also so, that if their answers were not true it might be imputed to men's not hearing well what they had uttered; hence these diviners are by the Septuagint not only styled ἐγγαστρίμυθοι, "speakers out of the belly" (Lev. xix. 31, xx. 6, Deut. xviii. 11, 1 Sam. xxviii. 3. 7—9, 1 Chron. x. 13, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6, Isa. viii. 19), but also said to "speak out of the ground" (Isa. xix. 3).

[10] Ver. 21. Which it is not lawful for us to receive, being Romans.] For though there was as yet no express law of the senate or the emperor against the Christians, yet was there an old law of the Romans, forbidding them, aut novos deos aut alienigenas colere,§ "either to worship new gods, or the gods of other nations;" and requiring them to worship the gods κατὰ τὰ πάτρια,‖ "of their own country," from which Christianity dissuaded them, not suffering any

---

* Hær. lxxx. p. 1067, 1068.

* Cont. Celsum, lib. vii. p. 335.

† Πύθωνας, τὰς τῷ πνεύματι πύθωνος ἐνθουσιώσας, φαντασίαν μνήσεως παρεχόντας τῇ τοῦ δαιμονίου περιφορᾷ. Suidas.

‡ Πύθων ὁ ἐγγαστρίμυθος, ἢ ἐγγαστρίμαντις. Hesych. Phavor. Πύθηδες γάρ ἐστι——οἴεσθαι τὸν Θεὸν αὐτὸν ὥσπερ τοὺς ἐγγαστριμύθους εἰρύκλειας πάλαι νυνὶ πύθωνας προσηγορευομένους ἐνδιδμενιο εἰς τὰ σώματα προρητῶν ὑποβεβηγεῖσθαι τοῖς ἐκείνων σώμασι καὶ φωνῆς χρώμενον ὀργάνοις. Plutarch. de Defect. Orac. p. 414.

§ Separatim nemo habessit deos, neve novos sive advenas, nisi publicè adscitos. Divos, et eos qui cœlestes semper habiti, colunto, et ollos quos endo cœlo merita locaverunt. Cicero de Leg. lib. ii. n. 14 et n. 27. Deos aut novos aut alienigenas coli confusionem habet religionum: ritus familiæ patrumque servanto. Ibid.

‖ Omnes enim religione moventur, et deos patrios sibi retinendos arbitrantur. Orat. v. in Verrem. Τὸ μὲν θεῖον αὐτός

22 And the multitude rose up together against them: and the [11] magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely:

24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

25 ¶ And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, [12] and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled (and so he must have borne the punishment due to them).

28 But Paul (perceiving this by the Spirit) cried out with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, 30 And brought them out (of the inner prison), and said, Sirs, (I, by this miracle, am induced to believe you are men sent to show unto us the way of salvation, ver. 17,) [13] what (therefore) must I do to be saved?

31 And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house (for that faith will bring thee and them into the way of salvation).

32 And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and [14] was baptized, he and all his (house), straightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

35 And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, (viz.) The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly (and) uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they (think to) thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed (thence).

---

of them to worship the gods of their fathers, but requiring them to turn "from those dumb idols to the living God" (1 Thess. i. 10); and hence St. Paul speaks thus to those of Lystra, "We preach to you, that ye should turn from these vanities to the living God, who made heaven and earth" (xiv. 15).

[11] Ver. 22. The magistrates rent off their clothes.] i. e. The clothes of Paul and Silas; for so it was the custom not only among the Jews, as Dr. Hammond here notes, but among the Roman magistrates, such as these were, to command the lictors, τὴν ἐσθῆτα καταῤῥῆξαι, τοῖς ῥάβδοις τὸ σῶμα ξαίνειν, "to rend open the clothes of the criminal, and to beat his body with rods," as Grotius here notes. The Roman magistrates, saith Brissonius, nudari et spoliari hominem, virgasque expediri jubent, "command him to be made naked, and spoiled of his clothes," and the lictors "to be ready with their rods;" and this, saith he, in Plutarch, is ἐσθῆτα παρασχίσαι, "to rend his garments" (De Formulis, lib. v. p. 481).

[12] Ver. 27. Ἔμελλεν ἑαυτὸν ἀναιρεῖν, He was about to kill himself.] Self-murder being common among the Greeks* and Romans, allowed by all philosophers, and practised by most of them, to avoid, or to "deliver themselves from any misery they feared, or laboured under:" this gaoler therefore would have done it for fear of a severer punishment, they who let prisoners escape being to suffer the punishment they had deserved, L. ad commentariensem cap. de custodiâ reorum, saith Grotius.

[13] Ver. 30. What shall I do ἵνα σωθῶ, that I may be saved?] Grotius saith here, that he had conceived some hope of a better life from tradition and the doctrine of the philosophers; I rather think he spake thus to them, as knowing, or conceiving from the words of the Pythoness, they were appointed to show to others the way of salvation.

[14] Ver. 33. He was baptized, he and all his.] St. Chrysostom here notes, that this goaler was that Stephanas of whom St. Paul saith, "I baptized also the household of Stephanas" (1 Cor. i. 16); but if so he must have come from Corinth, or some other part of Achaia, and have settled at Philippi, and afterward have returned thither again; for the Stephanas there mentioned by St. Paul, was "the first-fruits of Achaia" (1 Cor. xvi. 15), and an eminent person at Corinth (ver. 17).

τε σίδου κατὰ τὰ πάτρια, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους τιμᾶν ἀνάγκαζε. Mæcen. ad August. apud Dion lib. lii. Vide Liv. lib. xxxix. cap. 16.

* Sapiens non dubitat, si ita melius sit, de vitâ migrare. Torquatus apud Cic. de Fin. Bon. lib. i. Εὐλόγως τὸ φασὶ ἐξάγειν ἑαυτὸν τοῦ βίου τὸν σοφὸν κἂν ἐν σκληροτέρᾳ γίγνεται ἀλγηδόνι. Laert. de Sto. in Zeno. lib. vii. p. 195. Zeno, Democritus, Cleanthes, Aristotle, Menippus, Metrocles, Empedocles, Pythagoras, Cato.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews:

2 [1] And Paul, as his manner was (where he found synagogues of the Jews), went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening and alleging (Gr. explaining and setting

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

[1] Ver 2. And Paul, κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς, as his manner was, went in to them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them.] Here we learn, (1.) that St. Paul was not restrained from preaching to the Jews by his being an apostle of the gentiles; for as the gospel was the power of God through faith to the salvation of the "Jews first, and also of the gentiles," so Paul in preaching of it testifies to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, "repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ" (xx. 21); and wheresoever he comes, his manner is to go first into a synagogue of the Jews, and to preach to them (Acts xiii. 5. 14. 42, xiv. 1, xvi. 15, xvii. 10, xviii. 4. 19, xix. 8). At the beginning of his conversion before their eyes this doctrine), that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen (Gr. that it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise) again from the dead; and (saying) that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ (Gr. that he is Christ the Saviour whom I declare to you).

4 And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and (also) [2] of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 ¶ But the Jews which believed not, (being) moved with envy (or zeal), took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort (or wicked men loitering in the market), and gathered a company, and set (gathering a company they set) all the city on an uproar, and assaulted (Gr. assaulting) the house of Jason, and (they) sought to bring them (Paul and Silas) out to the people (to be the objects of their rage).

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying (out), [3] These that have turned the world upside down (i. e. unsettled the world) are come hither also;

7 Whom Jason hath received: and [4] these all do (what is) contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another king (besides him, even) one Jesus.

8 And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they (or who) heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other (ver. 6, to answer to the charge laid against them), they let them go.

10 ¶ And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews.

11 [5] These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they (Gr. they of them that) received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched (Gr. searching) the scriptures daily, (to know) whether those things were so (as Paul had said).

12 Therefore many of them (i. e. those Jews) believed; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of (the) men (which were so), not a few.

13 But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of (by) Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people (against him).

14 And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul to [6] go as it were to the sea (that so his persecutors might miss of him): but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

15 And (but) they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens (by land): and receiving a commandment (directed) unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him (thither) with all speed, they departed.

16 ¶ Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred (Gr. exasperated) in him, when he saw the [7] city wholly given to idolatry (Gr. full of idols).

17 Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the

---

we find him preaching Christ in the synagogues (ix. 20), and throughout all the region of Judea (xxvi. 20), his commission authorizing him to "testify what he had seen and heard to all men" (xxii. 15), to the people and to the gentiles (xxvi. 17), to the gentiles and to the children of Israel (ix. 15), which is sufficient to confound that distinction of provinces which some have imagined among the apostles.

Moreover it is observable, that Paul enters into their synagogues, and reasons with, or preacheth to, them, only on their sabbath-days; for as here it is said, "He reasoned with them three sabbath-days;" so, xiii. 14, he enters into the synagogues "on the sabbath-day," and, ver. 42, the gentiles desire him to preach to them "the next sabbath-day," and, ver. 44, almost all the whole city were assembled "on the next sabbath-day;" xvi. 13, he goes out of Philippi to a synagogue "on the sabbath-day," and xviii. 4, he discourses in the synagogue "every sabbath-day," which seems to intimate, that, whatever they did in Jerusalem, or in Judea, yet in the synagogues out of Judea they did not ordinarily meet for religious worship on the second and fifth days of the week; for otherwise why is it that St. Paul, who reasoned "daily in the school of Tyrannus," xix. 9, should only go to the synagogues of the Jews to reason with them "on the sabbath-day?"

[2] Ver. 4. Τῶν τε σεβομένων Ἑλλήνων—γυναικῶν τε τῶν πρώτων, Of the devout Greeks, and of the chief women.] So ver. 12, and xiii. 50. That by "the devout Greeks" we are to understand the proselytes among the Greeks, is evident, because they are so called, ver. 12, and are distinguished from the Jews, ver. 17, xiv. 1, xvi. 14, xxiii. 4. They were proselytes, not of justice, i. e. such as received circumcision, and observed the law of Moses, but only proselytes of the gate, who owned the true God of Israel, and went up to worship him at their feasts (John xii. 20, Acts viii. 27), and who were permitted to read the scriptures, as the eunuch did, and to hear them read in the synagogues, otherwise they could not have heard Paul there, and much less could they have compared what he said with the writings of the prophets, as we find they did, ver. 11, 12.

As for "the chief women," we learn from Josephus,* that the Jews, in many places where they dwelt, prevailed upon many of them, either wholly to embrace their religion, or to become proselytes of the gate, and many of these became Christian converts (see more of this in the note on 1 Pet. i. 1).

[3] Ver. 6. Ο ἀναστατώσαντες, They who disturb the world.] i. e. So as to unsettle things and bring them into confusion; for this they conceived the introduction of new gods tended to, as we learn from the words of the consuls* in Livy, and the Roman laws (see the note on xvi. 21).

[4] Ver. 7. These all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying, There is another king.] This, saith Grotius, was contrary to the decree of Cæsar, because the senate first, and afterward the emperor, suffered none to be called kings without their permission.

[5] Ver. 11. These were εὐγενέστεροι more noble, &c.] The Jews looked upon themselves not only as of free but noble birth, as being of the seed of Abraham (see the note on 1 Cor. i. 28). They are, saith Philo,† in the opinion of their calumniators, βαρβαρικοί, "barbarians, but in truth ἐλεύθεροι καὶ εὐγενεῖς, they are free, and of noble birth;" here therefore St. Luke shows them wherein their true nobility consisted; viz. in such a disposition of the soul as inclined them to attend to the doctrine of the gospel.

[6] Ver. 14. To go as it were to the sea.] Words being designed to represent our minds to others, we cannot deceive them with ambiguous words without acting contrary to the nature of them; but motions having no determinate signification, to use them so as to consult our safety, in such a motion as may deceive our enemies and secure us, hath nothing in it blameworthy.

[7] Ver. 16. When he saw the city κατείδωλον, full of idols.] i. e. Images, οὐ γὰρ ἦν ἀλλαχοῦ τοσαῦτα ἰδεῖν εἴδωλα, "for so many images could not be seen elsewhere," Pausanias‡ saying that they did εὐσεβεῖν θεοὺς ἄλλων πλέον, "worship the gods more than others," and exceeded all others in their diligence εἰς τὰ θεῖα, "to the gods;" and Strabo§ saying that they were hospitable to the gods, πολλὰ γὰρ τῶν ξενικῶν ἱερῶν παραδέξασθαι, "for they received many strange gods," insomuch that the comedians ridiculed them upon that

---

* De incolis Damasci dicit eos à Judæis occidendis abstinuisse, eo quòd ἐδεδοίκεσαν τὰς ἑαυτῶν γυναῖκας ἁπάσας πλὴν ὀλίγων ὑπηγμένας τῇ Ἰουδαϊκῇ θρησκείᾳ. De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 41.

* Quoties hoc patrum avorumque ætate negotium est magistratibus datum, ut sacra externa fieri vocarent: judicabant enim prudentissimi viri, nihil æquè dissolvendæ religionis esse quàm ubi non patrio, sed externo ritû sacrificaretur. Liv. lib. xxxix. cap. 16. Qui novas et incognitas religiones inducunt ex quibus animi hominum moveantur, honestiores deportantur. Paulus Sent. 5.

† Legat. cap. 792.

‡ Attic. cap. 17, 24. § Lib. x. p. 325.

Jews, and with the devout persons (of the Greeks), and in the market daily with them that met with him (or he met with there).

18 [8] Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? other some (οἱ δὲ, but others said), He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection (by him, iv. 2, or the resurrection of him).

19 And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

20 For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

21 [9] (For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing.)

22 ¶ Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things [10] ye are too superstitious.

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions (i. e. the objects of your worship), I found an altar with this inscription, To THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you (who he is, and how to be worshipped).

24 [11] God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is (he being) Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands (as one contained in, or confined to, them, by human consecrations of them); account; and all the rest cited by Dr. Hammond say the same thing; for in those times of heathenism they never worshipped a god without an image to represent him to them; and therefore, as St. Paul saith here, that they multiplied their idols; so ver. 22, that they were δεισιδαιμονέστεροι, "more prone than others to worship demons." We may here also laugh at the absurd folly of Laurinus's caution, not to believe Stephanus, saying in his Lexicon, that εἴδωλον signifies an image, and not as he would have it, a shadow, spectrum, or phantom; for would it not be ridiculous to render St. Paul's words thus,—I saw your city full of phantoms, shadows, and appearances of nothing?

---

[8] Ver. 18. Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and stoics—said, What will ὁ σπερμολόγος οὗτος, this babbler say? &c.] To show the appositeness of the apostle's discourse to these philosophers, let it be noted,

First, That the Epicureans* did not believe that the world was made by God, but by a casual conflux of atoms; nor did they own the providence of God, or think he had any care of mankind: they also held that the gods were of human shape, and that there was no resurrection, nor any punishments after death.

The stoics† held the world to be a god, that matter was eternal, and God was corporeal, and that all things were subject to fate.

Secondly, As for the word σπερμολόγος, "babbler," Eustathius gives us two senses of it, which seem to have been the occasion of their application of it to St. Paul: (1.) That Paul was "disputing with those he met with in the market," for, saith he,‡ Ἀττικοὶ τοὺς σπερμολόγους ἐκάλουν τοὺς περὶ τὰ ἐμπόρια, καὶ ἀγορᾶς διατρίβοντας, "the Attics called them σπερμολόγοι, who were conversant in the markets, and places of merchandise." Œcumenius here saith, that a little bird that gathered up the seeds scattered in the market-place was called by this name, and hence, τοὺς εὐτελεῖς, καὶ οὐκ ἀξίους λόγου, σπερμολόγους ἐκάλουν, "despicable persons, not worthy to be named, were called σπερμολόγοι:" and in this etymology Suidas, Phavorinus, the scholiast upon Aristophanes de Avibus, p. 569, and almost all the grammarians do agree. (2.) Because he pretended to some new systems of divinity, which they were not acquainted with, and which they thought proceeded from some vain opinions he had entertained; for the word σπερμολογεῖν, saith he, is used,§ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀλαζονευμένων ἀμεθόδως ἐπὶ μαθημάτων ἐκ τίνων παρακουσμάτων, "of those who, from some false opinions, boasted unreasonably of their learning."

Thirdly, They add, that St. Paul seemed to be "a setter forth of strange gods," because he preached up "Jesus and the resurrection," where Chrysostom and Œcumenius note, that being accustomed to worship female goddesses, they thought ἀνάστασιν θεόν τινα εἶναι, "ἀνάστασις to be a god;" but, as Dr. Bentley‖ saith, they too well understood the notion of a resurrection to think it a goddess, and therefore I prefer the exposition in the paraphrase, as being confirmed from ver. 32, "When they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked."

[9] Ver. 21. The Athenians spent their time in telling or hearing some new thing.] Of this see Grotius.

[10] Ver. 22. Κατὰ πάντα ὡς δεισιδαιμονεστέρους ὑμᾶς θεωρῶ, In all things I perceive you too much superstitious.] i. e. Too much addicted to the worship of demons: for δεισιδαιμονία is, saith Phavorinus, φόβος δαιμόνων, "the fear of demons." And that in this sense St. Paul doth here use the word is evident, he styling them thus superstitious, because he found their city full of images, and "an altar to the unknown God," of which Pausanias,* Lucian, Philostratus, and others, speak. It is certain from Pausanias, and confessed by St. Jerome, that they had altars θεοῖς ἀγνώστοις, "to the unknown gods," in the plural, yet it is as certain from Lucian,† as well as from Œcumenius,‡ that the altar was inscribed τῷ θεῷ ἀγνώστῳ, though that was not the whole inscription, and therefore St. Jerome§ is too bold to correct the apostle here. If the occasion of the erecting of this altar was, as some say, the complaint of Pan,‖ that he was not worshipped by them, this gave the apostle a fit occasion, by calling them to worship τὸν ἐπὶ πάντα, "that God who made the heaven and earth, and all things in them," to say, "Him that you ignorantly worship declare I unto you," he being also, as Josephus saith, κατ' οὐσίαν ἄγνωστος, unknown as to his essence," and by the heathens called deus incertus, because he would not be worshipped in an image, and so they were uncertain where to find him; and in the scripture being styled the God ὃν οὐκ ἔγνω, "whom the (heathen) world" and their philosophers "knew not" (1 Cor. i. 21, Gal. iv. 8, 9). Or if Πᾶν be, as Plato¶ saith, ὁ Λόγος, "the Word," and of whom Plutarch saith in his book De Defect. Oracul. p. 419, that there was a great cry heard in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, that he was dead, then had he also hence a fit occasion to "preach unto them Jesus."

[11] Ver. 24, 25. God that made the world, and all things therein,—is not worshipped with men's hands, as if he needed any thing.] To clear up the argument of the apostle here, it will be necessary to search a little into the principles of the heathens concerning God, and the worship of him; let it then be observed,

First, That the wisest heathens worshipped their gods in human shape; so Maximus Tyrius saith of the Greeks, "They thought God must have a body, and that body they generally held must be of human shape," and therefore such as might be represented "in an image of gold, silver, or stone, made after the fashion of a man." Thus Velleius†† in

---

* Plutarch. de Plas. Philos. lib. i. cap. 7, p. 881. Seneca, de Benef. lib. iv. cap. 4. Cicero, de Naturâ Deorum.

† Diogenes, lib. xx. p. 755.

‡ In Odyss. B. ad finem.

§ Ibid.

‖ Serm. ii. p. 1.

* Attic. lib. i. cap. 1.

† Νὴ τὸν ἀγνωστον ἐν Ἀθήναις. Philop. p. 1121, 1129.

‡ Ἔστι δὲ ἡ πᾶσα τοῦ βωμοῦ ἐπιγραφὴ τοιαύτη, Θεοῖς Ἀσίας, Εὐρώπης, καὶ Λιβύης, θεῷ ἀγνώστῳ καὶ ξένῳ. Œcum.

§ Inscriptio autem aræ non ita erat ut Paulus asseruit, sed ita, Diis Asiæ, diis ignotis et peregrinis. Hieron. in Titum, cap. 8.

‖ See Chrysost. Œcum. in locum.

¶ Cratyl. p. 280.

 Ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν Ἑλληνικὸν τιμᾷν θεοὺς ἐνόμιζε, ὕλῃ μὲν καθαρᾷ, μορφῇ δὲ ἀνθρωπίνῃ, τέχνῃ δὲ ἀκριβεῖ, &c. Dissert. xxxviii. p. 370.

†† De Nat. Deor. lib. i. n. 34.

25 Neither is (he) worshipped with (the works of) men's hands, as though he needed any thing (as needing any person's art to promote his worship), seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things (and so is able to produce these things, were they any ways needful for his worship);

26 And (he) hath made of one blood (of Adam) all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed (i. e. set the fixed seasons of the year, Gen. i. 14, viii. 22), and the bounds of their habitation (see Deut. xxxii. 8);

27 That they should (or instructing them by these means to) [12] seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him (which in that darkness in which they lie they cannot easily do), though he be not far from every (any) one of us:

28 For in (or by) him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For (they have declared that) we are also his offspring.

29 Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device (i. e. that the Creator is like man, or his workmanship).

30 And the times of this ignorance God (hath hitherto) winked at (sending them no prophets to instruct them better); [13] but now (he) commandeth all men every where to repent (of this idolatry):

Cicero, inquiring of the form of the gods, speaks thus: Ac de formâ quidem partim natura nos admonet, partim ratio docet, nam à naturâ habemus omnes omnium gentium speciem nullam aliam nisi humanam deorum, "That nature teaches they are of human shape, seeing all nations represent them in this form; nor do they ever occur to any men, sleeping or waking, in any other shape," and that men, cùm artificium effingunt, fabricamque divinam,* "when they make an image, or divine fabric, make all things in hominis figurâ, in the shape of man;" whence his conclusion is this, "Homines esse specie deos confitendum est, "It must be owned that the gods are like in shape to men."

Secondly, They held indeed that God must be αὐταρκης, "self-sufficient," and thought with Lucian† it was ridiculous to conceive ὡς ἀνθρώπων θεοὶ ἐνδεεῖς εἰσὶ, "that the gods should stand in need of men," yet they conceived those images‡ were, through the frailty of human nature, needful to the worship of the Deity, that "they might view and touch them, and have them near to them;" on these accounts they thought§ "there could be no religion without images," and objected this to the Christians, that they‖ "worshipped a god they could not show," and thought that even they used images, though they concealed them; yea, they pronounced both them and other nations, viz. Scythians, atheists, because they had no images. And upon this account they used a kind of magical consecration of their images to bring their gods down unto them: so Minutius¶ saith, Funditur, fabricatur, sculpitur, nondum deus est, ecce ornatur, consecratur, oratur; tunc postremò deus est." Here therefore is the reason why the apostle saith,

First, That "God dwelleth not in temples made with hands," i. e. as one confined to them, and who could not be addressed every where, since, as Seneca says, there is no need of going to the ædile that we may pray to the gods, or, as Lucian says jocularly,†† "Æsculapius is not deaf, that men must go near that they may pray to him." And,

Secondly, This is the reason why he saith, "He is not worshipped with men's hands," as if he could be only worshipped or spoken to in a temple, or in a consecrated image made by man. And,

Thirdly, Why he adds, that "we ought not to think the Godhead like to an image made of gold or silver."

[12] Ver. 27. That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him.] Here, first, we learn, that God framed the world with this design, that men by contemplation of it might seek after the author of it, and seeking, find him; and therefore must have made it so as to contain sufficient evidence that it was made by his power and wisdom. Now "to seek after God," in the scripture phrase, is not only to inquire whether there be a God, but so to seek him out, that we may give him that worship which is due to him; as when the apostle saith, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him" (Heb. xi. 6). To "find him," is to obtain his grace and favour, or to find him good and propitious to them: for to what other end should men so solicitously seek after him, but to obtain his grace and favour? Or why should they desire to find him, but that they may receive some benefit from him thus found? Is it not upon this account that all men come to him, and do him service? And would any one do it if they expected no advantage by it? And in this sense God saith, "If from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart," Deut. iv. 29; "If ye seek him, he will be found of you," 2 Chron. xv. 2. Note,

Secondly, That sinners cannot thus seek or hope to find God, unless they can expect to find him merciful in the pardon of those sins which they do confess and do forsake; and that this hath been a principle embraced by all nations appears from the propitiatory sacrifices which have so generally obtained among them, even from the beginning. And therefore all this must depend upon this foundation, or the knowledge of this one thing, "that God is the maker of heaven and earth, and all that therein is;" and so it evidently doth. For,

First, That which made all things must be itself unmade, and so must be eternal; it must have power over all things, and so be almighty.

Secondly, That which made all things must have all power to direct, govern, order, and dispose of all things, as he pleases, and so his creatures must depend on him for protection and the disposal of all their affairs.

Thirdly, That Being which made all things in such an excellent order and dependence on each other, in such constant and unchangeable vicissitudes, fitted with such faculties, adapted to such ends and uses, must have infinite wisdom, and must design things for those ends for which he hath thus fitted them.

Fourthly, He who hath made things so, as that they constantly in their respective seasons produce things good and useful for the preservation and comfort of those creatures he hath made, filling their mouths with food, and "their hearts with gladness," must be good to all, even "to the unthankful and the wicked," and so "his tender mercies" must be "over all his works;" which is the argument here used, ver. 26.

Fifthly, He who vouchsafeth such kindness to, and maketh such provisions for, those bodies, which we have common to us with the brutes, must have made some provision for that soul which is our better part, and which is more especially derived from him; they therefore must be capable of receiving blessings and favours from him; and if lapsed and sinful creatures, and made so as that they certainly will be subject to sin, they must be capable of finding mercy with him, when they return from their iniquity.

[13] Ver. 30. God, who overlooked the times of ignorance, τανῦν παραγγέλλει πᾶσι πανταχοῦ, hath now sent his message to all men every where to repent.] The τανῦν here seems not to refer to μετανοεῖν, to repent, as if God did not formerly require men to repent of their sins committed against the law of nature, for then they were not obliged to reform, or turn from them; but it refers rather to the word παραγ-

---

* N. 35. † Philop. p. 1121.

‡ Οὕτως ἀμέλει καὶ τῇ θείᾳ φύσει, ἐπεὶ μὲν οὐδὲν ἀγαλμάτων, ἀλλὰ ἀσθενὲς ὂν κομιδῇ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον, καὶ ἀιεστὼς τοῦ θείου ὅσον οὐρανὸς γῆς. Max. Tyr. dis. xxxviii. p. 369. Dicitis fortè præsentiam vobis quandam numinum exhiberi sub simulacris. Arnob. lib. vi. p. 195.

§ Nec ullam religionem esse putant ubicunque illa non fulserint. Lact. lib. ii. cap. 6.

‖ Deum colunt illi, quem nec ostendere possunt, nec videre. Minut. p. 10. Cur nullas aras habent, nulla templa, nulla nota simulacra? Ibid.

¶ Pag. 26.  Epist. 41. †† Dæmon. p. 718.

31 Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained (to be their judge); whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

32 ¶ And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, [14] some (of them) mocked (at it: but) and [15] others said, We will hear thee again of this matter.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

34 Howbeit (his discourse was not wholly ineffectual, for) certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which (i. e. whom) was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

γέλλει, and signifies, that whereas before he had sent no messengers, or prophets, to the heathen world, to proclaim his wrath against them for their ungodliness and unrighteousness, and to call them to repentance for those sins, he now had sent his apostles to all the ends of the earth with this message; and that by them he had given them a fresh assurance of his purpose to judge and condemn the impenitent, by the resurrection of that Son of God whom he had appointed to be the judge of all men: Mr. Dodwell therefore seems to be mistaken, when he concludes from these words, and from Acts xiv. 16, that God had not obliged all other nations, but only the peculium, to worship himself, before he had revealed his pleasure to them, and saith,* "That these words rather plainly imply the contrary, that while the supreme God was ἄγνωστος, 'unknown,' God did excuse them from that duty, on account of their ignorance of what otherwise would have been their duty, if it had been required of them, and they had known that the supreme being had required it:" for, first, this is directly contrary to the express words of the apostle Paul, who declares that, τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, "that which might be known of God was manifested to them, for God had declared it to them, to wit, his eternal power and godhead;" and also, that this was manifested to them from the beginning of the world, not by any positive revelation, but "from the visible things of the creation" (Rom. i. 19, 20), and that this manifestation rendered them ἀναπολόγητοι, "without excuse," who "did not glorify (and therefore worship) him as God, neither were thankful" to him for his benefits conferred upon them. And this is farther evident from the two places cited by him; for though God so far "suffered them to walk in their own ways," as that he sent no prophet to instruct them, nevertheless "he left not himself without a witness," that it was he who "did them good," &c. (Acts xiv. 17), and who was therefore to be thanked and worshipped as their great benefactor (see the note there): and though "he winked at the times of ignorance," yet even then he expected they should so "seek the Lord that they might find him" (Acts xvii. 17, see the note there); and it is strange, that the dreadful consequences of this assertion did not deter him from espousing it; for hence it evidently follows, first, that no man can know who is the true God, or that he is to be worshipped, by the light of nature, without a revelation. Secondly, that either idolatry or atheism must innocently obtain throughout the whole heathen world; for if they are left ignorant of the true God, and it is not their duty to worship him, they must either not be obliged to worship any God, or left free, if not obliged, to commit idolatry, by giving the worship due to the true God alone, to them who "by nature are no gods." And, thirdly, that they must either be obliged to worship the very devil, or left free to do it; "the gods of the heathens," saith the scripture, "being devils;" and seeing God is the fountain of all obligation, he must oblige them thus to worship his grand enemy. Fourthly, hence it follows, that when they had the gospel revelation imparted to them, they could not be obliged, as he saith they were, to repent of their former idolatry, in giving the worship due to the true God to idols or false gods; because he plainly here asserts, they could not know that it was their duty to worship the true God, and so the first, and second commandments must be only positive precepts, but no parts of the law of nature, or the moral law, that being of perpetual and universal obligation.

[14] Ver. 32. Some mocked.] viz. The Epicureans, who believed no resurrection nor any future judgment, here asserted by St. Paul.

[15] Others said, We will hear thee again of this matter.] viz. Stoics, who asserted a conflagration and reviviscence of the world, and allowed of something of future recompences, though with great fluctuation, and held that souls might live long, though not always, in a future state.

* P. 11, 12.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 After these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

2 And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; (because that [1] Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome:) and (he) came unto them.

3 And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought (at it): for by their occupation they were tentmakers.

4 And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath (day), and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks (that Jesus was the Christ).

5 And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul [2] was pressed in the spirit, and testified

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

[1] Ver. 2. Claudius had commanded all the Jews to depart from Rome.] Though Orosius fixeth this edict to the ninth year of Claudius, yet did it not come forth till the twelfth of Claudius; for the sedition of the Jews, mentioned by Eusebius from Josephus, happened in the eleventh year of Claudius, under Quadratus, president of Syria, and concerned not the Romans, the calamity falling only on the Jews; but after it followed another the same year, in which the thieves in Judea assaulted Stephen, "the servant of Cæsar, took away his baggage, and killed the Roman soldiers," as both Tacitus* and Josephus† do inform us: and then Claudius, causis rebellionis auditis, "having heard" from the president "the causes of this rebellion," made this edict, of which Tacitus saith nothing, because it came not from the decree of the senate, but was the edict of Claudius only; and of which Suetonius* saith thus, Judæos impulsore Chresto assiduè tumultuantes Româ expulit, "He expelled the Jews from Rome, they making continual tumults by the impulse or persuasion of Christ;" where, as he mistakes in the name, so in the thing, the Jews having had then no contests at Rome that we read of with the Christians; and the Christians to be sure causing no tumults there. The true cause of their banishment was therefore that which hath been hinted from Tacitus.

[2] Ver. 5. Συνείχετο τῷ πνεύματι, He was pressed in spirit.] i. e. Either his own or the Holy Spirit so powerfully urged and constrained him, that he could not refrain from speaking: so Luke xii. 50, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, καὶ πῶς συνέχομαι, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" 2 Cor. v. 14, "The love of Christ, συνέχει, constraineth us," i. e. it will not suffer us to rest from promoting the service of Christ. When this word is joined with

* Annal. 12, p. 263, 264. † De Bello Jud. lib. ii. cap. 20.

* In Claud. cap. 25.

(again) to the Jews that Jesus was (the) Christ.

6 And when they opposed themselves (to this doctrine), and blasphemed (Christ),[3] he shook his raiment (in token of his intention to leave them to their infidelity), and (therefore) said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean (from it): [4] from henceforth I will go (and preach) unto the Gentiles.

7 ¶ And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, (being) one that worshipped (the true) God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8 And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing (the word) believed, and were baptized.

9 Then spake the Lord unto Paul in the night by a vision (saying), Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: (speak freely,) for [5] I have much people in this city.

11 And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

12 ¶ And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat (of Gallio), 13 Saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law (of the Jews).

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews (which you object against this man), reason would that I should bear with you:

15 [6] But if it be a question (only) of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And he drave them from the judgment seat.

17 Then all the Greeks took [7] Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the (Jewish) synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat. And Gallio cared for none of these things.

18 ¶ And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; [8] having shorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow (of Nazaritism upon him, which being expired, he was to shave his head according to the law, Numb. vi.).

19 And he came to Ephesus, and left them there: but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews.

20 (And) When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not;

21 But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem: but I will return again unto you, if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

---

a passion that restrains from action, then it is to be rendered restrain, as συνέχεσθαι φόβῳ, "to be restrained by fear," Job iii. 24, Luke viii. 37; when the motive is both ways, then is the pressure so also; as when St. Paul saith, συνέχομαι ἐκ τῶν δύο, "I am pressed between two," urged to depart that I may "be with Christ," restrained from it that I may do farther service to his church (Phil. i. 23).

[3] Ver. 6. He shook his raiment, and said, Your blood be upon your own heads.] The command of our Saviour was to "shake off the dust from their feet;" and so St. Paul and Barnabas do, xiii. 51, but here Paul also shakes it off from his raiment, as a testimony to them, that he had now renounced any farther dealings with them of that place, as being a refractory people; adding, that now their blood or ruin would lie upon their own heads, that is, they only would be guilty of it (see Matt. xxvii. 24, 25, Acts xx. 26).

[4] From henceforth I will turn to the gentiles.] This at first sight seems to be a declaration that he would leave off preaching to the Jews wherever he came, and wholly apply himself to the conversion of the gentiles; but by comparing his actions with the place where this phrase, or something like it, doth occur, it appears he only did intend to say, he would no longer preach to the Jews of that place; for after this is said, we find him still entering into the synagogues, and preaching to the Jews, or calling them to him to hear the word: so he speaks to the Jews, xiii. 46, "Seeing ye refuse the word, lo, we turn to the gentiles;" and yet, xiv. 1, he enters at Iconium into the synagogue of the Jews, and preacheth to them: so also xix. 9, xxviii. 28.

[5] Ver. 10. I have much people in this city.] So they are called who are still heathens, not because of any absolute decree of their election to eternal life, but because Christ saw they were disposed to believe, and by faith become his people; as elsewhere, John x. 16, he calls them sheep, who should hereafter believe on him.

[6] Ver. 15. But if the question be περὶ τοῦ λόγου, of a word and names.] Of the word Paul preaches to you, whether it accord with your law or not (ver. 13), or, whether the name of the Messiah, or Christ, belong to that Jesus "whom Paul preacheth;" of things of this nature I will be no judge.

[7] Ver. 17. Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him.] "They beat the Jews," saith Grotius, "to chase them from the judgment-seat;" he adds, that in great cities there were more synagogues than one; every one of which had a chief ruler, as here Crispus is the chief ruler of one synagogue, and Sosthenes of another; so likewise, saith he, was it in great churches; they having at Rome, Antioch, and other places, excepting Alexandria (of which Epiphanius saith, it had but one bishop), more bishops than one at a time; but as this is uncertain, so have I shown, note on Phil. i. 1, that Epiphanius speaks not of the primitive and apostolic times, but of the times of the Meletians, saying, That though in other churches there were Meletian as well as catholic bishops at the same time, yet it was never so in Alexandria.

[8] Ver. 18. Having shorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow.] The text leaves it uncertain whether it were Paul or Aquila that made this vow; though Aquila being left at Ephesus, and not going up to Jerusalem, as St. Paul did, hence I conclude the vow was made by St. Paul; moreover, this is certain, that it was the vow of Nazaritism now finished, and which by Philo* is styled εὐχὴ μεγάλη, "the great vow," which caused this votary to shave his head; for this vow was either for a term of life, as in the instances of Samson and John the Baptist, or for a term of days, which being completed, the Nazarite was to shave his head, and bring offerings (see Numb. vi. 13, 14, Acts xxi. 26, 27). But whosoever is the Nazarite, the question is, why he shaves his head at Cenchrea, as if his hair was to be consecrated to Apollo, and not at Jerusalem, according to the commandment! What some imagine, that this votary was casually defiled, and so stood bound, according to the law, to shave his head, and to begin his vow again, answers not the doubt; because he could not begin his vow anew till he had offered his sin-offering (Numb. vi. 9—12), and that was only to be offered at the tabernacle and temple. Others say, this law of shaving at the door of the temple, and offering these oblations, obliged those only who thus vowed in the land of Judea, not those that were out of it; and if this will not satisfy, because we find so little of it in the ancient Jews, we may perhaps say, there was in the vow of the Nazarites a moral part, viz. the consecration of themselves to the service of God, and a greater degree of purity; and in this Christians might comply with it without scruple; and it had a ceremonial part, the cutting off the hair, and the offering sacrifices when it was accomplished; and as to this, St. Paul, and other Christians, knowing the law was not now obligatory, might dispense with themselves; omit, or do them, as prudence and the case of scandal did require. For though St. Paul went up now to Jerusalem, we read not of any offering that he made according to the law, nor perhaps would he have shaved his head on this account, had not some scrupulous Jews at Corinth been conscious to his vow.

---

* De Vict. p. 654, E.

22 [9] And when he had landed at Cæsarea (Stratonis), and gone up (to Jerusalem), and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

24 ¶ And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, (being) an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25 This man was (somewhat) instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently (Gr. exquisitely) the things of the Lord, [10] knowing only the baptism of John (which called the Jews to repentance, in expectation of the Messiah, who was suddenly to appear, and to baptize them with the Holy Ghost).

26 And he began to speak boldly (or openly) in the synagogue (that the time of the promised Messiah must be come): whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

27 And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren (at Ephesus) wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much [11] which had believed through (the) grace (of God):

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publickly, shewing by (the testimony of) the scriptures that Jesus was (the) Christ.

[9] Ver. 22. And when he had landed at Cæsarea, and gone up, and saluted the church.] Here the question is, whether St. Paul went up from the ship to the church of Cæsarea, or from Cæsarea to the church at Jerusalem. And in favour of the latter sense, let it be observed, (1.) that in the language of the author of the Acts, to go from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, is to go up, and to go from Jerusalem to Cæsarea, is to go down. So "Festus went up from Cæsarea to Jerusalem," Acts xxv. 1, and, ver. 5, he speaks to the rulers at Jerusalem συγκαταβαίνειν, "to go down with him" from thence to Cæsarea; and, ver. 6, καταβὰς, "going down to Cæsarea," he sits on the tribunal, and they of Jerusalem καταβαίνοντες, "going down," accuse Paul, ver. 7; and ver. 9, he asks Paul, whether ἀναβὰς, "going up to Jerusalem, he would be there judged:" so Peter ἀνέβη, "went up from Cæsarea to Jerusalem," Acts xi. 2 (see also xxi. 8. 12). So that to interpret these words of his going up from Cæsarea to Jerusalem is suitable to the phrase of the evangelist. (2.) St. Paul declares, he "must by all means keep the feast at Jerusalem" (ver. 21), and that he therefore could not tarry with them; and yet if he went not now to Jerusalem, he went not at all thither at this time: for, from this church, he goes down to Antioch in Syria, and so through Galatia and Phrygia, ver. 22, 23, and so comes back to Ephesus, xix. 1, according to his promise, ver. 21, "I will return again to you."

[10] Ver. 25. Knowing only the baptism of John.] That this Apollos had not only the gift of eloquence, but the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, by which he was made an able minister of the gospel, is evident from the epistle to the Corinthians; for he is there styled "a minister, by whom they believed according to the gift that God had given him," 1 Cor. iii. 5; he is "a coworker with God," ver. 9. But how he came by these gifts, which rendered him so fit to "water" these churches, and made him St. Paul's brother, is not easy to determine. Grotius saith that the phrase διὰ τῆς χάριτος, "by grace," belongs to him, he helping the church by the gifts he had received before baptism in the name of Christ; the grace of God preventing the hands of the apostles, but where, or by whom he was baptized he saith not. Lorinus saith he was baptized by Aquila, or some of Ephesus, but the text only saith that Aquila and Priscilla instructed, not that they baptized him. I conjecture, therefore, that he had been baptized already by those who instructed him "in the way of the Lord" (ver. 25): for in those times persons were baptized immediately upon their profession of faith in Christ Jesus, as appears from the instances of the eunuch, Lydia, the gaoler, and many others; and that when it is here said, "He knew only the baptism of John," that relates only to the knowledge he had received in Judea, before he returned to Alexandria, where he received farther instruction concerning the death and resurrection of Christ; but yet perhaps knew not why he suffered, the Jewish nation having then no notion of a Messiah that was to suffer for the sins of the people, nor that his kingdom was to be only spiritual, they all expecting that he should erect a temporal kingdom; nor that he was to be "a light to the gentiles," or to receive them into favour without circumcision or observance of the law of Moses; this being not made known to the apostles after the Holy Ghost had fallen on them, till it was revealed to St. Peter by a vision; nor seems the freedom of the Jews, from the Mosaic law, to be made known to the apostles or the disciples at Jerusalem for a long time after, as we may learn from Acts xxi. 20, 21. 24.

[11] Ver. 27. Who had believed through grace.] i. e. Through the gospel, saith Dr. Hammond, or through the favour of God, in vouchsafing them the knowledge of it (see the note on 2 Cor. vi. 1).

CHAPTER XIX.

1 And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts (of Asia Minor, to wit, Galatia and Phrygia, xviii. 23) came to Ephesus: and [1] finding certain disciples (abiding there),

2 He said unto them, Have ye received the (gift of

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

[1] Ver. 1—6. He finding certain disciples, &c.] Observe here,

First, That these disciples were converts to the Christian faith, i. e. that they believed that Jesus was the Christ, and that he was risen from the dead, is evident, because St. Paul not only calls them believers, but inquires whether they had received the Holy Ghost; which none but they who thus believed did or could receive: the gift of prophecy, which is the Jewish import of the Holy Ghost, being not given (Acts ii. 33), nor to be given till Jesus was glorified (John vii. 37—39).

Secondly, When therefore they say, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost," their meaning is, We have not as yet heard that the gift of prophecy, which, for the space of about four hundred years, had been restrained from the Jewish church, was yet restored. Now that which rendered them thus unacquainted with this new effusion of the Holy Ghost was this, that as Apollos had left Jerusalem, and gone to Alexandria before the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost on the apostles at the day of pentecost, so had they also done, and had been travelling into other parts of the world, where the gospel had not yet been planted. Observe,

Thirdly, That these persons, who were before baptized with the "baptism of John," are again baptized "in the name of the Lord Jesus," as is evident from these words, "And when they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus;" for they are manifestly mistaken who say, these are the words not of St. Luke but of St. Paul, and make the sense of the words run thus, John baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying, that men should believe in him that should come after him, that is, in Christ Jesus; and they that heard John were by his baptism baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. For, (1.) That Paul laid his hands on these persons is certain from ver. 6, and that he baptized them when he laid his hands on them, seems evi-

the) Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any (extraordinary gift of prophecy, or of the) Holy Ghost (restored again, or vouchsafed to the church).

3 And he said unto them, Unto what (baptism) then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism.

4 Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they (repenting) should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus (who would baptize them with the Holy Ghost, Matt. iii. 11.

5 And) When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

7 And all the men (that did so) were about twelve.

8 And he went into the synagogue (of the Jews there), and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing (discoursing of) and persuading the things concerning (Gr. persuading them concerning the things of) the kingdom of God.

9 [2] But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

10 [3] And this (practice he) continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

11 And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul:

12 So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13 ¶ Then certain of the vagabond Jews, (being) [4] exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth (to come forth).

---

dent from the connexion of the words, "They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus," and when Paul "laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost fell upon them;" whereas, according to the former sense, Paul must have laid his hands upon all that were baptized by the Baptist, and they who were baptized by John must have received by Paul's hands the Holy Ghost: for either these words must signify at large, They that heard John and were baptized of him; and then the words following must import that Paul laid his hands on all that heard John, and they received the Holy Ghost; or they must refer to those that heard Paul, and then they must first be baptized by him, and then receive the Holy Ghost by imposition of his hands. (2.) This is evident from the words of Peter, to all those many thousands that heard him, "Be ye baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost;" for since he spake to the men of Jerusalem in general, Acts ii. 14, and of Judea, and all Jerusalem and Judea were baptized of John, saith Matthew, iii. 5, 6, all, or at least many of those to whom he spake, must already have been baptized with the baptism of John, and yet he makes it necessary for them to be "baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Whence two things are extremely evident, and consequent from each other; viz. (1.) That he exhorts them who had been baptized with John's baptism to be "baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." (2.) That therefore they who were baptized with his baptism, were not baptized "in the name of the Lord Jesus;" and this is visible even in the words of Paul here, John said to those that came to his baptism, ἵνα πιστεύσωσιν, not that they did, but that "they should believe in him that was coming after him, that is, in the Lord Jesus;" now they were not to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, till they did actually believe in him, which they who had received John's baptism were so far from doing, that they were "musing whether John himself were not the Christ," Luke iii. 15, and asking, "Why baptizest thou, if thou art not the Christ?" John i. 25. And, (3.) As our Saviour never said openly and expressly to the Jews, that he was the Christ, so he charges his apostles to tell no man that he was so till his resurrection. But to what end should he do this, if both the Baptist and his disciples had before baptized all men into this faith, "that he was the Christ," and so had published this faith to all Judea? Only here note, that this is no ground for rebaptizing any now, by reason of the great difference betwixt the baptism of John then, and that in the name of Jesus after his resurrection; of which see the note on Matt. iii. 11. (4.) Observe, that after the imposition of the apostles' hands, these men "spake with tongues and prophesied," receiving the same gifts of the Holy Ghost, which the apostles and others had received to fit them for the ministry, which was then generally performed by such gifted men commissionated for that work by the Holy Ghost thus falling on them; whence we find these prophets and teachers λειτουργοῦντας, "ministering to the Lord" in their assemblies, Acts xiii. 1—3; and this renders the opinion of Bishop Stillingfleet very probable, viz. "that St. Paul designed these twelve men for a nursery of the churches in Asia, or persons to be sent from Ephesus to preach among them."

[2] Ver. 9. Ὡς δέ τινες ἐσκληρύνοντο, But as some were hardened.] I have shown, note on Mark viii. 17, that men are then said to be hardened, when having had sufficient evidence of what they ought to do or believe, they refuse to believe or do it: and thus were these persons hardened here, i. e. they would not believe, after sufficient evidence, that Jesus was the Christ.

[3] Ver. 10. And this continued for the space of two years; so that all that dwelt in Asia heard the word, both Jews and Greeks.] Here it is carefully to be noted, that we read not of Paul's coming to Ephesus at all, till xviii. 19, and then "he would not tarry with them," ver. 20, but makes haste up to Jerusalem; when he had saluted the church there, he goes thence to Antioch, and tarries there some time, ver. 23; then he goes through Phrygia and Galatia, "confirming the brethren," ibid., and then to Ephesus; there he disputes three months in the synagogues of the Jews, then two years more in the school of Tyrannus; after he leaves Ephesus, he goes through Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem, as he had before determined to do, ver. 21, xx. 1, not coming at all to any part of Asia till he came to Miletus, ver. 10. 17. They therefore who make him spend three quarters of a year in other parts of Asia, do not only say this without proof, or without assigning any other city of Asia, where he preached; but they say this against the account here given of him by St. Luke; his three years therefore, mentioned xx. 31, must be reckoned from his first coming to Ephesus.

[4] Ver. 13. Ἰουδαίων ἐξορκιστῶν, Of the Jewish exorcists.] That the Jews were wont to exorcise devils, or to cast them out, not only by invocation of the name of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but by skill in magic, we learn from Josephus,* who mentions one Eleazar before Vespasian, his sons, his captains, and a great number of his soldiers, τοὺς ὑπὸ δαιμονίων λαμβανομένους ἀπολύοντα τούτων, "delivering them who were possessed with evil spirits from them, and drawing forth διὰ τῶν μυκτήρων τὸ δαιμόνιον, the devil by the nose, by putting to his nose who was possessed a ring, having under the seal of it a root, of which Solomon had discovered the virtue, and adjuring him by the adjuration taught by Solomon, καὶ τὰς ἐπῳδὰς ἃς συνέθηκεν ἐκεῖνος ἐπιλέγων, and saying over him the incantations which Solomon composed:" they had also "books of enchantments, καὶ τρόπους ἐξορκώσεων, and modes of exorcising demons, συνταξομένους, composed," as they gave it out, "by Solomon; and they," saith he, "are of great use to this day." As for the root of which he speaks, he informs us that it was a very dangerous thing to pluck it up, and prescribes a very superstitious way of doing it; but being thus gathered, and brought to those that are possessed, saith he, δαιμόνια τοῖς ζῶσιν εἰσδυόμενα ταχέως ἐξελαύνει, "it quickly expels the demons out of men's bodies" (De Bell. Jud lib. vii. cap. 23, p. 981).

* Lib. i. cap. 2, p. 257, 258.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief (among the orders) of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know (to be persons having authority to command me); but who are ye (that ye should take upon you to do it)?

16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

17 And this (being done publicly) was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear (of this powerful name) fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

18 And many that believed came, and confessed (their former magical practices), and shewed their deeds.

19 Many of them also which used [5] curious (i. e. magic) arts brought their books together, and burned [6] them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

20 So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed.

21 ¶ After these things were ended, Paul purposed in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see Rome.

22 So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, (viz.) Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia (at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 8, here, ver. 26. 30) for a season.

23 And the same time there arose no small stir about that way (which Paul preached).

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, (being) a silversmith, which [7] made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen;

25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said (to them), Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.

26 Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people (Gr. that this Paul hath persuaded much people, not only of Ephesus, but of all Asia), saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands (there being no divinity residing in them):

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth (in her images).

28 And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians!

29 And the whole city was filled with confusion: and (the men of it) [8] having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not.

31 And certain of the [9] chief of Asia (Gr. of the priests or magistrates of Asia, who governed the games), which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and some another: for the assembly was confused; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward (either to plead the common cause against images, or to expose him to the people's rage, because he was turned Christian). And Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, (and so a

---

[5] Ver. 19. They that used περίεργα, curious arts.] That is, arts of magic. That this is the import of the word, Grotius and Dr. Hammond prove from the account that Irenæus* gives us of the disciples of Simon Magus, that they used amatoria et agogima, et quæcunque sunt alia parerga, l. perierga, "love charms and philtres, and all other curious arts." For Porphyry,† speaking of these magicians saith, διὰ τούτων φίλτρα καὶ ἐρωτικὰ κατασκευάζουσιν οἱ κακοδαίμονες, "They by these evil spirits make their philtres and love charms;" and it seems to have had this signification, because the magi, as Origen‡ saith, were περιεργαζόμενοι τῶν δαιμονίων ὀνόμασι, καὶ δυνάμεις, καὶ πράξεις, καὶ ἐπῳδάς, καὶ βοτάνας οἰκείας δαίμοσι, καὶ λίθους, "curiously employed about searching into the names, the forms, the powers, the actions, the incantations of demons, and the herbs, stones, and sculptures, made in them, proper to these demons; whereas," saith he, "ἀπερίεργον ἦθος, a life free from these curiosities is acceptable to God, and the Lord Christ would leave, to be vexed with evil spirits, περιεργαζόμενον δαιμονίων ὀνόματα, him that is thus curious about the names of demons, and seeks after ways of enchanting them:" hence the books here brought to be burnt are by the fathers styled γοητικαὶ βίβλοι, "books of sorcery." Nor is it to be wondered that these arts should abound at Ephesus, where Plutarch§ speaks, περὶ τῶν μάγων ἐν Ἐφέσῳ διατριβόντων, "of magicians conversing;" that city being so famous for sorcery and enchantments of demons, that the magical words used to that effect were styled Ἐφέσια γράμματα, "Ephesian letters;" and Plutarch‖ tells us, that "the magicians bid them who were possessed with devils to read and recite the Ephesian letters."

* Lib. i. cap. 20.
† De Abst. lib. ii. §. 42.
‡ Contra Celsum, lib. viii. p. 418.
§ In Vitâ Alexand. p. 666.
‖ Οἱ μάγοι τοὺς δαιμονιζομένους κελεύουσι τὰ Ἐφέσια γράμματα πρὸς αὐτοὺς καταλέγειν καὶ ὀνομάζειν. Sympos. lib. vii. qu. 5, p. 706.

[6] They burnt their books before all men.] Note also, that they sold not those books, though they were of great value, because, saith Œcumenius, they would not be gainers by such wicked arts, nor would they contribute, by selling them, to the teaching others the same arts.

[7] Ver. 24. Ποιῶν ναοὺς ἀργυροῦς Ἀρτέμιδος, Who made silver shrines for Diana.] That these shrines were κιβώρια μικρὰ, "little chapels," representing the form of a temple with an image in it, which being set upon an altar, or some other solemn place, and the leaves of the door being opened, the image stood, or sat in state, and so was represented to the spectators, see Dr. Hammond on the place, and Chrysostom.

[8] Ver. 29. Having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, Paul's companions—they rushed into the theatre.] Say some, to throw them to the wild beasts, as blasphemers of their goddess; on which account, the town-clerk seems to say, "You have brought these men here, who are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess," ver. 37, for that the theatre was the place where they did θηριομαχεῖν, "fight with beasts," see note on 1 Cor. iv. 9, and that this was done at Ephesus, see note on 1 Cor. xv. 32.

[9] Ver. 31. Chief of Asia, Gr. Ἀσιαρχαί.] Here again Grotius and Dr. Hammond note, that among the heathens there were games instituted, ad placanda bona numina, "to appease the good gods," or in honour of them; of these the pontifices or chief priests were presidents at Rome; in other provinces the priests or magistrates presided, saith Salmasius,* and these were called from their provinces, Asiarchæ, Syriarchæ, Bithyniarchæ, officers belonging to these games in those provinces. Thus in the martyrdom of Polycarp,† bishop of Smyrna in Asia, they ask τὸν Ἀσιάρχην Φίλιππον, "Philip, the ruler of the games" there, to let out a lion upon Polycarp, which he declares he could not do, because the games were ended; whence it appears that it belonged to these Asiarchæ here mentioned, to let loose the professed enemy to their religion and to image-worship, they) all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians!

* Exercit. p. 865, et Vales. H. Eccl. lib. iv. cap. 15.
† De Martyr. Polyc. Ep. Smyr. Eccl. §. 12.

35 And when the [10] townclerk (or register) had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, [11] what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly (in punishing those men ye have now laid hold on).

37 For ye have brought hither these men (for that end), which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess (and so not worthy to be thrown to the wild beasts).

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter (of complaint) against any man, [12] the law is open, and there are deputies (Gr. there are judicial days of pleading, and the proconsuls are present): let them implead one another.

39 But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters (than those relating to your private injuries), it shall be determined [13] in a lawful assembly (and ought not to be prosecuted in this tumultuous manner).

40 For we are in danger to be called in question (by the Romans) for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41 And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the assembly.

wild beasts upon malefactors; accordingly, they are here present, and being kind to Paul, send to him not to come thither.

[10] Ver. 35. Ὁ γραμματεύς, The town-clerk.] This word is rendered by Budæus, "the chancellor;" he was an officer chosen by the people to preside over the games, saith Dominus, cited by Johannes Antiochenus, and so the fitter to appease their tumults.

[11] Who knows not, τὴν Ἐφεσίων πόλιν νεωκόρον οὖσαν, that the city of the Ephesians is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana?] After all the learning our critics have spent upon this place, I see no reason to change our translation; for though the city or people of Ephesus may have this title in the coins, it cannot here be an epithet of the city, for then it should be νεωκόρων, as it is in the coins. Again, it being plain from Julius Pollux,* that the νεωκόροι were οἱ τῶν θεῶν θεραπευταὶ, "the servants, ministers, and worshippers of the gods;" and from Phavorinus, that νεωκόρος was ὁ τοῦ ναοῦ ἐπιμελούμενος, "one that took care of the temple;" and from Hesychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus, that he was one who did adorn and beautify it, it may be very reasonable to bestow this title on the Ephesians, who were so peculiarly addicted to her worship, who had there that temple of Diana which was accounted the miracle of the world, and who had expended so much in the beautifying and adorning of it, and in this sense only could they be styled neocori of "the image which fell down from Jupiter."

[12] Ver. 38. Ἀγόραιοι ἄγονται, The law is open.] i. e. "Court days are kept," for so the word with an accent in the antepenultima signifies, ἡμέραι being understood; for ἀγόραιος, say Suidas and Phavorinus, is ἡ ἡμέρα ἐν ᾗ ἀγορὰ τελεῖται, "a day in which a court is kept."

[13] Ver. 39. Ἐννόμῳ ἐκκλησίᾳ, In a lawful assembly.] Three days in every month, saith Œcumenius, were appointed for assemblies to hear causes, of which this being none, it was an unlawful assembly.

* Lib. i. cap. 1, §. 16, p. 5.

CHAPTER XX.

1 And after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece.

3 And there abode three months. And when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to sail into Syria (to carry alms to Jerusalem), he purposed (or resolved) to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia (without going from him) Sopater of Berea; and (but) of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

5 These (were persons who) going before tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread (were ended), and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 [1] And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread (i. e. to celebrate the eucharist), Paul preached unto them, (being) ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his discourse until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together (for religious worship: see the note on i. 13).

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX.

[1] Ver. 7. Ἐν δὲ τῇ μιᾷ τῶν σαββάτων, And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples were gathered together to break bread.] These words seem fairly to evince, that it was the custom of the first Christians, and of the apostles, to keep the Lord's-day holy, or as a day appointed for religious worship: for,

First, That μία τῶν σαββάτων, "the first day of the week," was the Lord's-day, is fully proved, note on 1 Cor. xvi. 1.

Secondly, Observe, that on this day the disciples were not summoned extraordinarily to come together, that St. Paul did not μετακαλεῖν "call them together," as he did the assembly of the elders of the church, ver. 17, but the disciples were themselves συνηγμένοι, "met" in their synaxis, or assembly; the text informs us, that "Paul tarried with them seven days," and in none of them have we any mention of an assembly to this purpose, but only "on the first day of the week."

Thirdly, Observe, that they then met together, "to break bread;" which phrase doth signify the sacred actions performed in celebration of the holy sacrament, which it was the custom of the primitive Christians to receive in all their church assemblies on the Lord's-day: this the apostle intimates when he complains of his Corinthians, 1 Cor. xi., that they "came together for the worse, because, when they came together in the church, there were divisions among them," so that they did not eat together of the table of the Lord. Now thus "to come together in one place," saith he, "is not to eat the Lord's supper;" i. e. it is not so to do it as that sacred action ought to be performed: this therefore when they came together in the church they did, and therefore, what is "coming together," ver. 17, "coming to the church," ver. 18, "coming to one place," ver. 19, is "coming together to eat," ver. 33. Accordingly, it was the custom of the church from the apostles' times thus to communicate upon the Lord's day: for Pliny, in his epistle* to the emperor Trajan, tells him, that he found nothing to allege against the Christians, "but their obstinacy in their su-as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up (as one) dead.

* Soliti sunt stato die ante lucem convenire. Ep. lib. x. ep. 97.

10 And (but) Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves (more about him); for his life is (safe) in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had [2] broken bread, and eaten (i. e. had celebrated the sacrament of the Lord's body and blood), and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed (as he had designed to do on the morrow, ver. 7).

12 And they brought the young man (up) alive, and were not a little comforted (at it).

13 ¶ And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he [3] appointed (Gr. so he was disposed), minding himself to go (thither) afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus (ten miles distant from Ephesus).

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus (not touching there), because he would not spend the time in Asia: for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.

17 ¶ [4] And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you (what was necessary to be known) publickly, and from house to house, 21 Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, (that they should exercise) repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ (i. e.

---

perstition; and that it was their custom to meet together on a set day before it was light, and to bind themselves by the sacrament to do no evil." Now this epistle was writ only six years after the death of the evangelist St. John. And Justin Martyr,* who wrote but forty years after his death, thus speaks, "On Sunday all the Christians in the city or country meet together, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection, and then we have read unto us the writings of the prophets and apostles; this done, the president makes an oration to the assembly, to exhort them to imitate and do the things they heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the sacrament, and they that are willing and able give alms," &c.

[2] Ver. 11. And had broken bread.] Though here be mention only of breaking bread, yet that the cup was also consecrated and distributed, is evident from the doctrine of the church of Rome; for they agree with the protestants in this, that the priests always ought to consecrate the eucharist in both kinds, and say, that if one species be consecrated without the other,† sacrilegium committitur, "it would be sacrilege;" and yet if this place prove any thing for communion in one kind, it proves as much for consecration in one kind, and for the sumption of one kind only by the priest that consecrates, though they hold it necessary for him to receive both. And hence it was declared in the council of Trent,‡ that "these places, and the reasons from them, must be laid aside, because by them it would be concluded, that it was not sacrilege to consecrate one kind without the other; which is contrary to all the doctors, and the meaning of the church, and overthroweth the distinction of the eucharist, as it is a sacrifice, and as it is a sacrament."

[3] Ver. 13. For so he had appointed, οὕτω γὰρ ἦν διατεταγμένος, for so he was disposed.] Here is an evidence, that the ward τεταγμένοι, used xiii. 48, may there signify disposed, as here apparently it doth.

[4] Ver. 17. And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.] From these words, compared with the twenty-sixth verse, where the same persons are called "bishops," who are here styled πρεσβύτεροι, "elders," Chrysostom, St. Jerome, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, have inferred, that the same persons, were in the first ages of the church styled bishops or presbyters indifferently: Dr. Hammond, on the contrary, and others do contend, that the word πρεσβύτεροι, "elders," here signifies only bishops; and because there lies this obvious objection against this interpretation, that then there must have been many bishops in the church of Ephesus, since all these elders were called from Ephesus; he answers, that those elders were all the bishops of Asia, and saith that Paul, sending to the metropolis of Asia, by that means gave notice to the bishops of Asia to come to him: this he confirms (1.) from the testimony of Irenæus, who saith, they were called* ad Epheso, et reliquis proximis civitatibus, "from Ephesus, and the rest of the cities that were near;" (2.) from the words of the text, for "the flock," saith he, "was not the Christians of one city, but the Christians of all Asia; those with whom Paul had been from the first day he came to Asia, ver. 18, all among whom he had gone preaching the kingdom of God, ver. 25." But to the first argument it may be answered,

First, That Chrysostom, St. Jerome, Theodoret, Œcumenius, and Theophylact, knew nothing of St. Paul's sending to any other bishops besides those of Ephesus, for otherwise they could not have argued as they do from this place, that those persons could not be bishops, properly so called, because there could only be one bishop of one city. Bishop Stillingfleet also saith, that St. Paul was in so great a haste, that he would not so much as go to Ephesus, nor send any whither but to that city; and yet those to whom he committed the whole flock then in Asia, came from Ephesus to Miletus. But (2.) let it be granted that he sent to other cities also, though it be plainly contrary to the text, which mentions Ephesus only, yet it is evident, both from Irenæus and the text, that the same persons are called "presbyters" in the seventeenth verse, who are called "bishops," ver. 28; for, from ver. 18 to the twenty-seventh inclusively, he continues his discourse to those presbyters whom he had called, and in ver. 28 bids them take care of the church, "over which the Holy Ghost had made them bishops:" this is also plain from Irenæus, for he saith expressly that, convocatis episcopis et presbyteris, "having called the bishops and presbyters," he gave them charge of the church,† in quo eos Spiritus proposuit episcopos, "in which the Spirit had made them bishops."

Secondly, To the second argument the answer is evident from the note made on xix. 10, that St. Paul, from the second time he came to Ephesus, stirred not thence, till he, in prosecution of his purpose, mentioned there, ver. 21, went from thence to Macedonia, in order to go to Jerusalem; whence we learn, how he had been with them of Asia, from the first day he came to Ephesus, preaching to Jews and gentiles, viz. by disputing daily in the school of Tyrannus in Ephesus, "so that all they that dwelt in Asia heard the word, both Jews and Greeks," xix. 10, and by disputing thus, "he persuaded much people," οὐ μόνον Ἐφέσου, ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν πάσης τῆς Ἀσίας, i. e., not as we have the words rendered, "not only at Ephesus, but throughout all Asia," but, "not only of Ephesus, but of all Asia."

---

* Τὴν δὲ ἡλίου ἡμέραν κοινῇ πάντες τὴν συνέλευσιν ποιούμεθα, ἐπειδὴ Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ ἡμέτερος σωτὴρ τῇ αὐτῇ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀνέστη. Apol. ii. p. 98, 99.

† Valentia de Usû Sacram. cap. 13.

‡ History of the Council of Trent, lib. vi. p. 486.

* Lib. iii. cap. 14.

† Lib. c. cap. 14.

that they should turn to God, doing works meet for repentance, and should believe in the Lord Jesus).

22 [6] And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit, (i. e. foreseeing by the Spirit that I shall be bound) unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there:

23 Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me.

24 But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

25 And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that [6] I am pure from the blood of all men (i. e. not guilty of their ruin if they perish).

27 For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God (the whole Christian doctrine, which if you keep in memory and practice, ye shall be saved, 1 Cor. xv. 3).

28 ¶ [7] Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, [8] to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

29 For I know this, that [9] after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing (to tear) the flock.

30 [10] Also (out) of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

31 Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one (of you) night and day with tears.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up (in your holy faith), and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.

33 I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.

34 Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to (the necessities of) them that were with me.

35 I have shewed you all (these) things (to instruct you), how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, [11] how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

36 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37 And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him, 38 Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.

---

[5] Ver. 22. And now, behold, I go δεδεμένος τῷ Πνεύματι, bound in the Spirit.] i. e. Not resolving in his own spirit, but as Grotius saith truly, foreseeing by the Spirit that I shall there be bound; for so it follows, ver. 23, "The Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me."

[6] Ver. 26, 27. I am free from the blood of all men, for I have not shunned to declare to you all the counsel of God.] Hence we learn, that it is necessary for a pastor to declare to his people all that is necessary for them to believe and do, in order to salvation, that the guilt of their ruin may not lie upon him.

[7] Ver. 28. Take heed therefore to yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers.] I have shown in the note on 1 Cor. xii. 8—10, that in those times the Holy Spirit did enable the apostles to discern who were fit to be governors of the church, and accordingly by this afflatus of the Holy Ghost they were chosen for that work; and to this the words of the apostle may refer. But it is also to be noted from xix. 6, 7, that, at Ephesus, Paul having laid his hands upon twelve men, "the Holy Ghost fell on them, and they spake with tongues, and prophesied;" and Bishop Stillingfleet conceives, these were men kept at Ephesus as a nursery, to be sent forth as occasion served, to preach and preside among the converts of Asia; and if so, these words may more peculiarly relate to them.

[8] Ποιμαίνειν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, To feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.] If this be the true reading, it follows unavoidably that Jesus Christ, who shed his blood for us, is here styled God; now this reading is confirmed by the Vulgar, Arabic, Ethiopic, by Chrysostom and Œcumenius on the place. It is true, indeed, that in Irenæus, lib. iii. 14, in the Alexandrian MS., and in the Syriac we read, τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Κυρίου, "the church of the Lord," which may be construed, the church of the Lord Jesus, but it may also be construed from the Arabic, and other MSS., "the church of our Lord God;" if we consider that "the church of God" is a phrase very frequent in the New Testament (see 1 Cor. i. 2, x. 32, xi. 22, xv. 9, 2 Cor. i. 1, Gal. i. 13, 1 Tim. iii. 5), but "the church of the Lord," is a phrase never used in the New Testament.

[9] Ver. 29. After my departure shall grievous wolves enter in, not sparing the flock.] Such were Cerinthus who set up in Asia, see the note on Col. ii. 10, and other false apostles and deceitful workers of the Jews, of whom see note on 1 Tim. i. 7, on iv. 2, 3, on vi. 21, on 2 Tim. i. 15, and on iii. 2—4.

[10] Ver. 30. Also of yourselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things.] Such as Hymenæus and Alexander were, who "made shipwreck of the faith," 1 Tim. i. 20; Hymenæus and Philetus, who taught "that the resurrection was past already," 2 Tim. ii. 17; for these epistles being written chiefly for the Ephesians, it is reasonable to think he speaks of men dwelling there who dispersed these doctrines among them.

[11] Ver. 35. How he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.] This saying of Christ we find not in the gospels, but yet these and the like words are so far from giving any patronage to unwritten traditions, that they are a demonstration against them, it being certain that we had never known any such thing, had not St. Luke recorded it.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 And it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them (of Ephesus), and had launched (into the sea), we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

3 Now when we had [1] discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed

---

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

[1] Ver. 3. Ἀναφάνεντες δὲ τὴν Κύπρον, And discerning or discovering Cyprus.] So ἀναφαίνειν γῆν τινα, is "to discover such a land;" and therefore both Stephanus, and from him Schmidius render these words thus, Quum cernere Cyprum cœpissemus, all other readings or conjectures being by Schmidius confuted.

at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who (being endued with the gifts of the Holy Ghost) said to Paul [2] through the Spirit, that (if he regarded his safety, ver. 11) he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with (their) wives and children, till we were out of the city: and (then) we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned home again.

7 [3] And when we had finished our course (Gr. and finishing our sail) from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cæsarea: and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven (deacons mentioned ch. vi.); and abode with him.

9 And the same man had [4] four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy (according to the prophecy mentioned ii. 17).

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judæa a certain prophet, named Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands (first) and (then afterward his) feet (with it), and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, [5] So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard these things, both we (that were with him), and they of that place, besought him (with tears) not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? (Gr. τί ποιεῖτε κλαίοντες, why do you this, weeping and breaking my heart?) for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased (our importunity), saying, The will of the Lord be done.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cæsarea, and brought with them one [6] Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17 And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 And the day following [7] Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders (of Jerusalem) were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe: [8] and they are all zealous (for the observance) of the law (by all that are Jews):

---

[2] Ver. 4. Who said to Paul by the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.] If this had been said absolutely by an afflatus of the Holy Ghost, St. Paul could not have acted contrary to it without sin, in opposing what the Holy Ghost required, and doing what he did forbid; seeing then Paul persists in his resolution, after what both they here, and the prophet Agabus had said, ver. 11, these words must admit of the limitation mentioned in the paraphrase, that if he would not be there bound, and evilly entreated, he should not go up thither; and this was only what the Spirit had before told him; for, saith he, "I go bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem," xx. 22. Or, they said to him, the Spirit revealing to them what he was to suffer there, "they would not have him go up," as also did the disciples of Cæsarea, and they that came up with him from Troas on the same account.

[3] Ver. 7. Διὰ διανύσαντες τὸν πλοῦν, And when we had finished our course.] There is no need to read here διανύσαντες, or to think that this phrase signifies only, having sailed; it truly imports, that finishing our voyage by sea, we came from Tyre to Ptolemais; for from thence they went by land to Cæsarea, and from thence to Jerusalem, and so were then finishing their navigation, or their course by sea.

[4] Ver. 9. He had four daughters.] Hence Œcumenius observes, that τῷ κοινωνήσαντι γάμων διακονεῖν ἔξεστι, "one that useth matrimony may be a deacon."

[5] Ver. 11. So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind this man.] Not so as to the girdle, for he was only bound with chains; nor so as to the binding of his feet, for St. Paul seems only to have the chains fastened to his hands; but so as to be as truly and as much bound as Agabus was, not personally by the Jews, but by the Romans at their instigation, and on their account.

[6] Ver. 16. One Mnason, an old disciple.] Converted by Paul and Barnabas when they were at Cyprus, say Grotius and Dr. Hammond, but very improbably; for that they were at Cyprus we find, Acts xiii. 4, but there is not a word of him, or any other convert that they made there: the words, "an old disciple," rather induce us to conceive he was one of the disciples or followers of Christ.

[7] Ver. 18. And Paul went in with us to James, and all the elders were present.] "All the bishops of Judea," saith Dr. Hammond, without one word to prove it; for there is nothing of this matter in his note on Phil. i. b, to which he refers; and without all probability: for if there were then any other bishops constituted in Judea, of which we read nothing in scripture, or primitive antiquity, how came they all, unsent for, to be absent from their flocks, and present at Jerusalem, especially when all the apostles except James seem to be absent? More probable and modest is the observation, that here we find "James bishop of Jerusalem, οἱ πρεσβύτεροι, his presbyters, or elders," with him, and his seven deacons, mentioned ver. 18, and so have reason to believe that other celebrated churches conformed to this model, having bishops, presbyters, and deacons.

[8] Ver. 20. And they are all zealous of the law.] The zealots among the believers were urgent for the circumcision of the gentiles, and for requiring them to observe the law of Moses (Acts xv. 1. 5). But the whole body of the converted Jews, bishops, and elders, as well as the laity, were zealous for the observation of their laws and customs by the Jews, and that because they knew the law to be of a divine original; and therefore thought they could not throw off the observance of it without apostasy from God, as is insinuated in these words, "Thou teachest ἀποστασίαν, apostasy from Moses" (ver. 21). Thus Philo* doth inform us, that they believed their laws to be λογία θεόχρηστα, "divine oracles," and "this doctrine they being taught from their infancy, they are so afraid of offending against them in the least, that they will rather suffer the loss of all human blessings than be guilty of it; yea," saith he,† "they are wont willingly to suffer death as the way to immortality, rather than permit their rites to be violated." Josephus‡ saith the same, that "they are taught from their cradle to call them θεοῦ δόγματα, the doctrines of God, and therefore continue in the observance of them, not adding any thing to them, or taking any thing from them, and when it is necessary, dying freely for them." And again, "We," saith he,§ "think it our only

---

* Καὶ πεφρίκασι μὲν ἕκαστον τῶν διηγορευμένων οὕτως, ὡς ἅπασαν τὴν παρ' ἀνθρώποις εἶτε αὐτυχίαν, εἴτε εὐδαιμονίαν χρὴ καλεῖν, μηδέποτ' ἂν ὑπὲρ παραβάσεως καὶ τοῦ τυχόντος ἂν ὑπαλλάξασθαι. Legat. ad Caium, p. 791.

† Εἰωθὸς ἑκουσίοις ἀναδέχεσθαι θανάτοις, ὥπερ ἀθανασίαν, ὑπὲρ τῶν μηδὲν τῶν πατρίων περιδεῖν ἀναιρούμενον. Ibid. p. 780, F.

‡ Πᾶσι γὰρ σύμφυτόν ἐστιν εὐθὺς ἐκ τῆς πρώτης γενέσεως Ἰουδαίοις ὀνομάζειν αὐτὰ Θεοῦ δόγματα. Contr. Apion. p. 1037, A.

§ Ἡμεῖς δὲ τοὐναντίον μίαν εἶναι καὶ φρόνησιν καὶ ἀρετὴν ὑπειλήφαμεν, τὸ μηδὲν ὅλως ὑπεναντίων μήτε πράξαι, μήτε διανοηθῆναι τοῖς ἐξ ἀρχῆς νομοθετήσασιν—ἡμῖν δὲ τοῖς πειισθεῖσιν ἐξ ἀρχῆς τεθῆναι τὸν νόμον κατὰ Θεοῦ βούλησιν, οὐδ' εὐσεβὲς ἢ ἢ τοῦτον φυλάττειν· τί γὰρ αὐτοῦ τις ἂν μετακινήσειεν, ἢ τι κάλλιον ἐξεύροι. Ibid. p. 1073, D.

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither (ought they) to walk after the customs (of our forefathers).

22 What is it therefore? (τί οὖν ἐστι; what is therefore to be done? seeing) the multitude (which have been thus informed of thee) must needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: (to wit,) We have four men which have a vow on them;

24 Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them (making provision of sacrifices for them, as the law requires), that (when the days of their purification are ended) they may shave their heads: and (by this practice) all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing (have no truth in them); but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from (things) strangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them (i. e. beginning the separation of a Nazarite) entered into the temple, to[9] signify (when would be) the accomplishment of the days of purification, until (ἕως οὗ, even to the time) that an offering should be offered for every one of them (as the law required at the close of them, Numb. vi. 13).

27 And when the seven days (i. e. the time designed for the separation) were almost ended (or were about to be accomplished), the Jews which were of Asia (where Paul had preached three years, xx. 31, with great opposition from the Jews, xix. 9, xx. 19, 1 Cor. xvi. 9), when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him,

28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: (for) this is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people (of the Jews), and (against) the law, and this place: and further (or also hath) brought Greeks also into the temple, and (by so doing) hath polluted this holy place.

29 (And this they said,) For (because) they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

30 And all the city was moved (at these words), and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple (that it might not be defiled with his blood): and forthwith the doors were shut.

---

wisdom and virtue neither to do nor think any thing contrary to our laws; and being persuaded from the beginning that they are suitable to the will of God, we think nothing else so holy as to keep them, for who can remove any thing of them, or find any thing better?" He also frequently declares that they were thus addicted to the observation of their laws, "from an opinion of the eternal punishments they must expect to suffer, who even for fear of death durst violate them, and from a firm assurance of eternal happiness if they were faithful to the death in the observance of them."* It is not therefore to be wondered that men who had imbibed such opinions of them from their infancy, that they derived from God, and knew of no revelation made by him that they were to cease after the death of their Messiah, should be still zealous for them; or that they, who thought they could not be removed, or that any better laws could be given, should think them fit to be observed; or that they, who feared such dreadful evils if they did forsake them, expected so great blessings from being faithful to them to the death, should be averse from any doctrine, which taught them to apostatize from, or to forsake the law of Moses; and yet it pleased God as yet not to convince them of this error by any revelation, or any afflatus of that Spirit which many of them had received; partly because he saw this might have obstructed the faith even of the little remnant which belonged to "the election of grace;" partly because he knew the time would shortly come, when the destruction of their temple, and their exclusion from their own land, would render it impossible for them to observe this law, and the severity of divine judgments on them would convince them, as it did some, that† "God had utterly cast off that nation" from being any more his people.

[9] Ver. 26, 27. Διαγγέλλων τὴν ἐκπλήρωσιν τῶν ἡμερῶν τοῦ ἁγνισμοῦ, Signifying the accomplishment of the days of purification.] i. e. Not signifying that those days were already accomplished, for, that is contrary to the following verse, which shows that Paul was apprehended in the temple, before the seven days were ended, or, as the Greek may be rendered, "as they were about to be acomplished;" but, as Grotius well notes, signifying by that action that he would accomplish seven days of purification, even to the time that the sacrifices were to be offered for them, with whom he had thus joined in this purification; for whereas some would evade this, by saying that the seven days, mentioned ver. 27, were the seven days wherein those sacrifices were to be performed; that is contrary to the law, which appoints the same day in which they shaved their heads, and so concluded their purification, for the oblation of their offerings (Numb. vi. 13, 14).

But here it may reasonably be inquired, how the apostle, who knew that our Saviour by his death had "abolished the hand-writing of ordinances, and taken it out of the way" (Eph. ii. 15, Col. ii. 14), that Christians were "dead to the law by the body of Christ" (Rom. vii. 4), that the Jewish sacrifices were only to continue till "the time of reformation" (Heb. ix. 10), and that Christ had taken away these sacrifices by the sacrifice of himself (x. 9), should yet submit to these rites, and make provision for these sacrifices. To this it may be answered, (1.) that the vow of Nazaritism being only a stricter sort of separation of themselves from all pollution to the service of God, and to be holy, and free from all kind of defilement, seems very well consistent with the design and spirit of Christianity. (2.) Observe, that the offerings of the temporary Nazarite, at the completion of his vow, being a burnt-offering, a sin-offering, and a peace-offering (Numb. vi. 14), and two of these being not sacrifices appointed to expiate sin, but offerings of thanksgiving to God, who had enabled them to perform their vow, and of acknowledgment of God's sovereign dominion; and the advice here being not personally to make or present these offerings, but only to "purify himself, καὶ ἁπανὰν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, and to help" the Nazarites in bearing some part of the charges of these offerings; which, saith Maimonides, others might help the Nazarites to do; this action seems to have little or nothing inconsistent with the doctrine of St. Paul. But, thirdly, though St. Paul knew these constitutions were not now obliging in themselves, yet seeing they were rites belonging to that temple, which was yet standing, and God had not, by any express declaration made to the Jews, prohibited the continuance of them, St. Paul might lawfully submit to this compliance with them, to prevent the scandal of the unbelieving Jews, which might divert them from that Christianity they had embraced, and to promote their salvation by his preaching Christ unto them; for upon this account he circumcised Timothy (Acts xvi. 3) and "to the Jew became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jew; to them that were under the law, as under the law, that he might gain them that were under the law" (1 Cor. ix. 20). Whence we may learn, what great condescension in lesser matters may be used for the promotion of the salvation of others.

---

* Γενέσθαί τε πάλιν καὶ βίον ἀμείνω λαβεῖν ἐκ περιτροπῆς, p. 1076, A. Μὴ φοβηθῶμεν τὸν δοκοῦντα ἀποκτείνειν τὸ σῶμα, μέγας γὰρ ψυχῆς κίνδυνος ἐν αἰωνίῳ βασανισμῷ κείμενος τοῖς παραβαίνουσι τὴν ἐντολὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ. De Maccab. p. 1097, D.

† Ἔδει γὰρ——τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ γνώμης στοχάζεσθαι καὶ γινώσκειν ὅτι τὸ πάλαι φίλον αὐτοῦ φῦλον Ἰουδαίων ἀπωλεία κατέγνωσται. Eleaz. apud Joseph. de Bello Jud. lib. vii. cap. 34, p. 990, A, B.

31 [10] And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band (of Romans), that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

32 Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done (to incense them so against him).

34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for (i. e. by reason of) the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle (of Antonia).

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him, (let him not live, xxii. 22.)

37 And as Paul was (about) to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

38 [11] Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people (to be silent). And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying,

[10] Ver. 31. And as they went about to kill him.] To wit, with the "rebels' beating," which, saith Dr. Lightfoot here, was "stripes without measure, even unto death, and that, without judicial proceeding;" and this they did, either as presuming that he had brought an uncircumcised person within the step of the temple, with was, saith Philo,* present death; or, because they conceived he had spoken against the law and the temple, for which cause they before had stoned Stephen.

[11] Ver. 38. Art not thou that Egyptian that before these days leddest out four thousand men which were murderers?] It seems to be a mistake in Grotius and others, to say, the Egyptian mentioned by Josephus was later than these times: for it is apparent from Josephus, both in his Antiquities, lib. xx. cap. 6, and his History of the Jewish Wars, that this Egyptian did this in the first or second year of Nero, whereas Paul came not to Jerusalem till the fourth of Nero. But whereas here are mentioned only "four thousand," and by Eusebius in his Chronicle, "three thousand;" Josephus, and out of him Eusebius, say, that he gathered περὶ τρισμυρίους, "about thirty thousand:" to this some say, that in the wilderness they increased to that number; others, that of this number only four thousand were sicarii, "murderers." I had rather say, that τρισμύριοι, in Josephus, only signifies "three thousand;" for he tells us, De Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 23, that the Egyptian "fled with a few;" and that πλεῖστοι τῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ, "most of those that were with him were taken," and yet saith that only "four hundred of them were killed, and two hundred were taken," Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6.

* Θάνατος ἀπεραίτητος ὥρισται κατὰ τῶν εἰς τοὺς ἐντὸς περιβόλους παρελθόντων. Legat. p. 791.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Men, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you (Gr. my apology to you for my change from a zealous Jew to an assertor of the Christian faith).

2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them (i. e. as a Hebrew of the Hebrews, Phil. iii. 5, and not as a Hellenistic Jew: see note on vi. i.), they kept the more silence: and he saith,) (i. e. spake to them thus,)

3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, [1] born (indeed) in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet (but) brought up in this city [2] at the feet of Gamaliel, (a pharisee, and celebrated doctor of the law, Acts v. 34,) and (was) taught (by him) according to the perfect manner (Gr. ἀκρίβειαν, the exactness) of the law of the fathers (i. e. delivered from our fathers to us), and was zealous toward (or for the observance of the law of) God, (in the same manner) as ye all are this day.

4 And I persecuted (the men of) this way (i. e. the Christians) unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women (professing Christianity, that they might be punished with death as blasphemers of the law, Acts vi. 13).

5 As also the high priest [3] doth bear me witness (Gr. will, I suppose, if asked, bear me witness), and all the estate (or senate) of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went (Gr. receiving letters went) to Damascus, to bring (Gr. καὶ

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII.

[1] Ver. 3. Born in Tarsus.] The metropolis of Cilicia; where they applied themselves so much, saith Strabo,* to the study of philosophy, and all the liberal sciences, ὡς ὑπερβέβληνται καὶ Ἀθήνας καὶ Ἀλεξανδρείαν, as that they excelled the men of Athens and of Alexandria, "and of all other places dedicated to the study of those sciences."

[2] At the feet of Gamaliel.] It was, saith Pseud-Ambrosius,† "the tradition of the synagogue to dispute sitting; the seniors in dignity, in chairs; those next to them on benches; and the last on the pavement upon mats." For the disciples, saith Buxtorf,‡ "sat at the feet of their masters," and therefore, by way of advice to others, to become disciples of their "wise men," they used to say, Pulveriza te pulvere pedum sapientum, "Put thyself in the dust of their feet." Accordingly we find Mary sitting at the feet of Christ, Luke x. 39. Note also, that this Gamaliel was so far from being well affected to Christianity, that some of the Jewish writings say, he added to their daily prayers that which they used in their synagogues against the progress of Christianity, called "the prayer against heretics" (see Lightf. Hor. Hebr. in Matt. vi. 9). By this Gamaliel, saith he, was I taught according to the exactness of the law of our fathers, being by sect a pharisee, and very well skilled in the traditions pretended to be delivered to us from our forefathers (Gal. i. 14, see note on xxvi. 5): and I was, saith he, ζηλωτὴς Θεοῦ, "zealous towards God, as ye all are." Now they being not all of the sect of the zealots, which obtained then among them, this phrase cannot necessarily import that Paul was of that sect.

[3] Ver. 5. Doth bear me witness.] Μαρτυρεῖ here being not of the present tense, but the second future, should be rendered "will witness," as in the paraphrase.

* Lib. xiv. p. 673, D.

† Hæc traditio synagogæ est, ut sedentes disputent, seniores dignitate in cathedris, sequentes in subselliis, novissimi in pavimento super mattas,—in 1 Cor. ch. xii.

‡ In voce אבן Pirk. Avoth, cap. i. §. 4.

ἀξων, and was about to bring) them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

6 [4] And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey (on this errand), and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me (and them that journeyed with me, xxvi. 13).

7 And (through the terror of it, both) I (and they that were with me) fell unto the ground (xxvi. 14), and (I) heard a (-n articulate) voice saying unto me (in the Hebrew tongue, ibid.), Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And they that were with me saw indeed the light, (and heard a voice, ix. 7,) and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be (farther) told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do (and suffer for me, ix. 16).

11 And when I (being risen) could not see for the glory of that light (which shone upon me), being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12 And one Ananias, (a Christian indeed, but still) a devout man according to the law, (and) having a good report of (from) all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and stood (by me), and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight, (for the Lord Jesus hath sent me to thee for that end, ix. 17.) And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, (designing) that thou shouldest know his

[4] Ver. 6. And it came to pass as I made my journey, and was come nigh to Damascus, &c.] I have in the notes on ch. ix. of this book given the exposition of this history, and shall here establish the truth of it, and consequently of that faith to which he was converted. In order to this end, let us consider,

First, Who St. Paul was before this wonderful conversion; and here the scripture doth inform us, that his education was in the schools of Tarsus; from thence he came to the university at Jerusalem for the study of divinity and of the Jewish law: his tutor was Gamaliel, a man of special note among the people; he was, by his profession, of the most strict and most exact sect of the pharisees, a sect of all men most estranged from, and enraged against, Christianity: and for the truth of this, St. Paul appeals to the whole Jewish nation in these words: "My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews, which know from the beginning, if they would testify, that, after the most strict sect of our religion, I lived a pharisee;" by practice and employment he was an early, zealous, and industrious persecutor of the professors of the Christian faith. When Stephen, the first martyr, perished by law, or by judicial sentence, Saul was consenting to his murder; being inflamed by this zeal, he instantly proceeds to make "great havoc" in the church, "entering into every house, and haling men and women into prison, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord;" he obtains letters from the high-priest and elders of Jerusalem, or a commission, "if he found any of this way, whether men or women, to bring them bound to Jerusalem," to be there sentenced by the Sanhedrin (ver. 2); and in pursuance of this commission he persecutes Christians to the death, "binding and delivering up" unto it "men and women;" he "punished them oft in the synagogues, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceeding mad against them, he persecuted them to strange cities." And for the truth of these particulars, he solemnly appeals to those chief priests and elders from whom he had received his commission; for of this, saith he, "the high-priest can bear me witness, and all the estates of the elders:" yea, it was a thing notorious to all that heard him "preach that faith which he had formerly destroyed;" for they were all amazed at it, and said, "Is not this he that destroyed them that called on this name in Jerusalem, and who came hither for this intent, that he might bring them bound to the chief priests?" so that he was by education, by profession, by employment, as fully prejudiced against the Christian faith as any of the Jews could be. And therefore, though he was not, as St. Austin and some others say, converted by an irresistible force, of such a violence as took away the freedom of his will, for then he could not have been "disobedient to the heavenly vision," since there can be no disobedience to, where there is no resistance of, the will of God; yet was it wrought in that stupendous manner, and with that signal evidence, which could not be resisted without wilful sin and obstinate perverseness: for,

First, This scene was opened with a heavenly light, transcending that of the meridian sun: now this was by the Jews still looked on as the symbol of a divine and glorious presence, and is in scripture often styled shechinah, the majestic presence and the glory of God; wherefore both Saul and his companions fell on their faces, not only through the terror of this light, but also as it were an indication of the appearance of some divine and glorious person to them, it being usual both for the patriarchs and Jews to fall flat on their faces at such a glorious appearance; for so did Abraham, Gen. xvii. 3, so did the Jews, Lev. ix. 24, so did Moses and Aaron, when the glory of the Lord appeared to them, Numb. xxix. 6, so did Balaam, Numb. xxii. 21, Joshua, Josh. v. 14, Manoah and his wife, Judg. xiii. 20, David and all the elders, 1 Chron. xxi. 16, Ezekiel, i. 1, and Daniel, viii. 17.

Secondly, He hears a voice directed from this shining cloud, and saying to him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" and giving him assurance that it was Jesus of Nazareth who then appeared to him, and who complained that he was persecuted by him in all the cruelties which he inflicted on the living members of his body; so that he could no longer question either the resurrection or ascension of the holy Jesus, or his advancement to the right hand of glory.

Thirdly, He by the glory of this light is struck stark blind, and so continues till one of Christ's disciples comes and lays his hands upon him, and in the name of Jesus restoreth his lost sight unto him: he prays to him he had so lately persecuted, and doth in answer to that prayer receive a vision of that very person who should restore unto him his lost sight: he lastly is baptized in the name of Jesus, and with that baptism receives a plentiful effusion of the Holy Ghost: so that he had the greatest evidence imaginable, both of the presence and the power of the holy Jesus, and of the glorious things which were performed in his name, and were vouchsafed to the professors of the faith of Christ. Now for the truth of these particulars, that in his journey to Damascus that glorious light appeared, and a voice spake unto him, all his companions, whose eyes beheld that light, and whose ears heard that voice, could testify: that for a season he was blind, both they who led him to Damascus, and the whole family of Judas where he lodged, must be sufficient witnesses: that he was afterward restored to his sight the same persons could attest: that he was thereupon converted to the Christian faith, all they who, to their admiration, heard him preach that faith, which before he had laboured to destroy, must know. Moreover, had not this persecutor been turned to a promoter of the Christian faith, why were the Jews so vehemently incensed against him? Why do they lie in wait to kill him even in the place of his conversion? Why do they watch the gates continually that he might not escape their bloody hands? Why were the Hellenists of Jerusalem still thirsting for his blood? Why do even forty of them bind themselves under a curse that "they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul?" Why do they with such violence cry out, "Away with such a fellow from the earth; it is not fit that he should live?" Why was it that the chief priests and elders, and all the multitude of the Jews, were so desirous of his death, crying out before all will, and see that Just One (who appeared to thee), and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth.

15 For (this being done) thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

16 And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized (Gr. arising, be baptized), and (so) wash away thy sins, [5] calling on the name of the Lord (Jesus, who thereupon will consecrate thee to, and enable thee for, this work, by filling thee with the Holy Ghost, ix. 17).

17 And (accordingly) it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, (Gr. and it happened to me returning to Jerusalem, and praying in the temple, that) I was (Gr. to be) in a trance (or ecstasy);

18 [6] And saw him (Gr. and to see, i. e. to perceive him,) saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19 [7] And I said, Lord, (it is wonderful that they should not receive my testimony, seeing) they know that (formerly) I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee:

20 And (that) when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21 And (but) he said unto me, (Argue not, but) depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 And they gave him audience unto (i. e. until) this word, and then (they) lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.

23 And as they cried out, and [8] cast off their clothes, (as persons ready to stone him, v. 57,) and threw dust into the air (to show their rage against him),

24 [9] The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that (by his confession) he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25 And as they bound him with thongs (in order to the scourging of him), Paul said unto the centurion the Roman governors, that "he ought not to live any longer?" This sure is evidence sufficient, that he whom they commissioned to persecute the Christian faith was now become a convert to, and an industrious promoter of it; and hence also it must be evident, that he who spake unto him was no other than the holy Jesus; that upon his conversion he received the gifts and the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost, must be apparent from the tongues he spake, the miracles he did for confirmation of that faith; that his sight was recovered by the name of Jesus, as it depends upon the testimony of Ananias, so is that Ananias declared to be "a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews that lived at Damascus," and so a witness against whom those Jews could make no just exception. And surely the conversion of a person so fully prejudiced against the Christian faith, to that faith he did so vehemently oppose and persecute, by such a visible appearance of this very Jesus to him, with such glorious circumstances, the sight which was restored to him by one of his disciples, the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon him when baptized, whereby he was enabled to preach the gospel with "demonstration of the Spirit, and with power," must give sufficient demonstration not only of the truth of his conversion, but also of that doctrine which he preached, viz. that "Jesus was the Son of God."

---

[5] Ver. 16. Ἐπικαλεσάμενος τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, Calling upon the name of the Lord.] Here Grotius would have us read αὐτοῦ, "his name," and refer this, not to Christ, but to God the Father, mentioned ver. 14; whereas even Woltzogenius here saith, we are to understand Jesus Christ, of whom here mention is made both in the antecedent and subsequent words; and this is evident from the interpretation of Ananias, who, to prevent such a mistake, saith, ὁ Κύριος, "The Lord, even Jesus, who was seen of thee, hath sent me to thee" (ix. 17); and having told us that Christians were persons who "called upon the name" of Christ, ver. 14, we have reason to conceive that he adviseth Paul thus to profess, and show he was a Christian; and hence the inference of Chrysostom* from this place is this, that "by these words he shows that Christ was God, because it is not lawful to invoke any besides God."

[6] Ver. 18. Καὶ ἰδεῖν αὐτὸν, And to see him.] That is, saith Grotius, "an angel instead of Christ;" but this is plainly contrary to the text, both here and ch. xxvi., for here the promise made to him is, that he "should see that Just One, and hear the words of his mouth," ver. 14, and there it is said, that he would "appear to him to teach him what he was to preach," ver. 16, and therefore here Paul calls him "Lord," ver. 19, and elsewhere saith, "Am I not an apostle, have I not seen the Lord Jesus Christ?" 1 Cor. ix. 1.

[7] Ver. 19. And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed in thee.] i. e. Lord, my former zeal against those that believed in thee is so well known to them all, by so many remarkable instances shown among them, that sure they must be convinced that it is upon some certain and irresistible grounds of persuasion that I am now become a preacher of that faith I formerly destroyed and persecuted with so great zeal; and so I am apt to think they should more diligently attend to the narrative I give of my wonderful change, and to the reasons I now offer to confirm the truth of the Christian faith.

[8] Ver. 23. And as they cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air.] They cast off their clothes, as in the instance of St. Stephen, vii. 58, that they might be the more ready to stone him; and they threw dust into the air, to show their rage against him, and their abhorrence of him, as of a person not fit to be conversed with any longer, it being usual to testify this by shaking the dust from their feet (Luke ix. 5, Acts xiii. 35).

[9] Ver. 24. The chief captain commanded μάστιξιν ἀνετάζεσθαι αὐτὸν, to examine him by scourging.] Ἀνετάζειν is to examine by way of torment, to find out, or cause men to confess, a crime; so in Hesychius and Phavorinus ἐτάζεσθαι is κρίνεσθαι καὶ βασανίζεσθαι, "to be punished and tormented," and ἐξέτασις is βασανισμὸς, torment: so Gen. xii. 17, καὶ ἤτασεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Φαραὼ ἐτασμοῖς, "God plagued Pharaoh with great plagues;" and Esth. ii. 22, "The king ἤτασε, examined, or tormented, the two eunuchs:" so the wicked say of the righteous, βασάνῳ ἐτάσωμεν αὐτὸν, "Let us try him with torments," Wisd. ii. 19, and the author of that book, vi. 6, "that the mighty δυνατῶς ἐτασθήσονται, shall be mightily tormented;" and in the son of Sirach, xxiii. 9, οἰκέτης ἐξεταζόμενος, is "a servant that was beaten." This examination was used by the Romans, and by other nations, to force them who were thus scourged to confess what they had done, why, and who were conscious to the fact; as Tacitus* saith of Herennius Gallus, that he received stripes that they might know, quo pretio, et quibus consciis prodidisset exercitum, "at what price, and with what confederates, he betrayed the Roman army." (3.) They who were thus scourged had their arms extended, and their bodies tied to a pillar, as Lipsius† shows; and thus here they seem προτείνειν, "to stretch out Paul's body to the whip and scourge." (4.) This punishment of scourging, not with rods, but μάστιξι καὶ ἱμᾶσι, "with whips and thongs," as here, was not used to a Roman, but to strangers only; on which account Cicero, in his oration pro Rabirio, speaks against Labienus thus: Porcia lex virgas ab omnium civium corpore amovit; hic misericors flagella retulit, "the Porcian law permits not a citizen to be whipped with rods; but he hath done it with scourges;" and upon this account Paul here saith, "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?" ver. 25.

---

* Ἐπικαλεσάμενος τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Χριστοῦ· τοῦτο δεικνύντός ἐστιν αὐτὸν Θεὸν ὄντα· οὐ γὰρ ἔνι ἕτερόν τινα ἐπικαλέσασθαι εἰ μὴ τὸν Θεόν.

* Hist. lib. iv. p. 573.

† Tr. de Cruc. lib. ii. cap. 3.

that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and (is) uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that (this), he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? (And) he said, Yea.

28 And the chief captain answered, [10] With a great sum (of money) obtained I this freedom (of a citizen of Rome). And Paul said, But I was free born (viz. in a city which had this privilege, and so needed not to acquire it by money).

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and (he thus feared) because he had bound him (in order to the scourging him).

30 On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down (from the castle), and set him before them.

[10] Ver. 28. With a great sum of money obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.] Dion* and Tacitus inform us, that about the time of Claudius the rights of a Roman citizen were bought with little money; but it is more difficult to show how St. Paul came to be free born; Grotius and Le Clerc will not have it to be on the account of his being born in Tarsus, that being no Roman colony; but it makes fair for the opinion of those who think Tarsus had obtained this freedom through the favour of some emperor, that Dion Cassius† says, that they so favoured Julius Cæsar in the civil war, and afterward Octavius, that it obtained the name of Juliopolis, and was honoured with the greatest privileges; and that Dio Chrysostom in his oration saith, it received from Cæsar all that honour and power which one could give to his friends and companions: but Carthusianus, and the gloss upon 2 Tim. iv. 12, say more fully, that they received this freedom because they met the Roman ambassadors with peace and crowns, and that then the father of Paul, going out with them, received the penula or cloak which St. Paul sent for, as an ensign or mark of a Roman citizen.

* P. 148. † Lib. xlvii.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, [1] I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

2 And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

3 Then said Paul unto him, [2] God shall smite thee, thou whited wall (i. e. thou hypocrite): for sittest thou (as a magistrate) to judge me after the law, and (yet) commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

(which saith, Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment, Lev. xix. 15.)

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?

5 Then said Paul, [3] I wist (or knew) not, brethren, that he (who commanded me to be smitten) was the high priest: (the knowledge of that might haply have restrained me from speaking thus,) for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXIII.

[1] Ver. 1. I have lived in all good conscience to this day.] Not as a good conscience signifies a conscience void of error and offence, for he owns himself to have been guilty of great sin in persecuting the church of Christ, 1 Tim. i. 13. 15; but as it signifies a conscience acting according to his persuasion that he ought to act; and in this sense, when he blasphemed against Christ and persecuted his church, he did this even through a persuasion that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus," Acts xxvi. 9, 10. Moreover, by saying that he lived in all good conscience, whilst he professed Judaism, and was, "as to the righteousness of the law, blameless," Phil. iii. 6, he gives them to understand that he left not the religion of the Jews, out of any hardships which it did require, or any prejudice he had against the precepts of it; and by adding, that he also had lived unblameably in the profession of the Christian faith, he intimates that he became and continued a Christian out of a full conviction that he was bound in conscience so to be and so to act, and that he still served God from a pure conscience (2 Tim. i. 3).

[2] Ver. 3. God shall smite thee, thou whited wall.] He elegantly compares him to a whited wall, because, as that had a fair outside, but nothing but dirt, sticks, or stones within, so he had an outward appearance of a righteous judge, sitting as one that would pass judgment according to the law, and yet commanding him to be punished for speaking the truth, and so condemning the innocent against the law of nature and of Moses, which saith, "Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment," Lev. xix. 15. And he foretells that God shall smite him, by that gift of prophecy which God had given him, which came to pass, he being slain, saith Chrysostom; he perishing in the siege of Jerusalem, saith Dr. Lightfoot; he being deposed, and sent bound to Rome, saith Josephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5, p. 692, E.

Καὶ σὺ κάθῃ κρίνων με κατὰ τὸν νόμον, καὶ παρὰ νόμον κελεύεις με τύπτεσθαι; For sittest thou to judge me according to the law, and yet commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?] Here Stephanus makes two easy emendations, κρινῶν and παρανομῶν, and so renders the words thus; "Sittest thou as one about to judge me according to the law, and yet, violating that law, commandest me (uncondemned) to be smitten?" The first I think unnecessary, because Ananias was then actually on the seat of judgment, and executing the office of a judge; the second seems not to be an emendation, but the more common reading of the text.

[3] Ver. 5. Οὐκ ᾔδειν ὅτι ἐστὶν ἀρχιερεύς, &c. I wist not that he was the high-priest: for it is written, &c.] I am not willing to own that Paul, who doubtless was filled with the Holy Ghost, and had a share in the promise of his assistance and direction, when they came before governors, should here be guilty of a transgression of the law, especially when I suppose him acted by a prophetic impulse; and yet it is not easy to put any likely sense upon these words by which we can avoid it. We cannot do it according to our translation, or the observation of some critics, that οὐκ ᾔδειν signifies, "I considered not;" for that seems plainly to insinuate, that if he had well considered or weighed his words, he should not have uttered them, as being contrary to the precept not to speak evil of the ruler of the people; which surely is to confess, that he had by them violated that command, had he considered to whom he spake. Nor (2.) according to the exposition of Dr. Hammond; for though he saith he was not truly the high-priest (note on Luke iii. c), yet he confesseth that Ananias was then "ruler of the people," and so makes Paul to say in his paraphrase, "I confess I did amiss." Dr. Lightfoot and Grotius thinks as I do, that Paul does not go about to excuse his mistake, but rather saith, I know well enough that God's high-priest is not to be reviled, but that this Ananias is a high-priest I know not, i. e. I do not own him as such, who hath procured this title by bribery: our celebrated rabbins* having do-

* Talm. Tr. de Synedrio.

